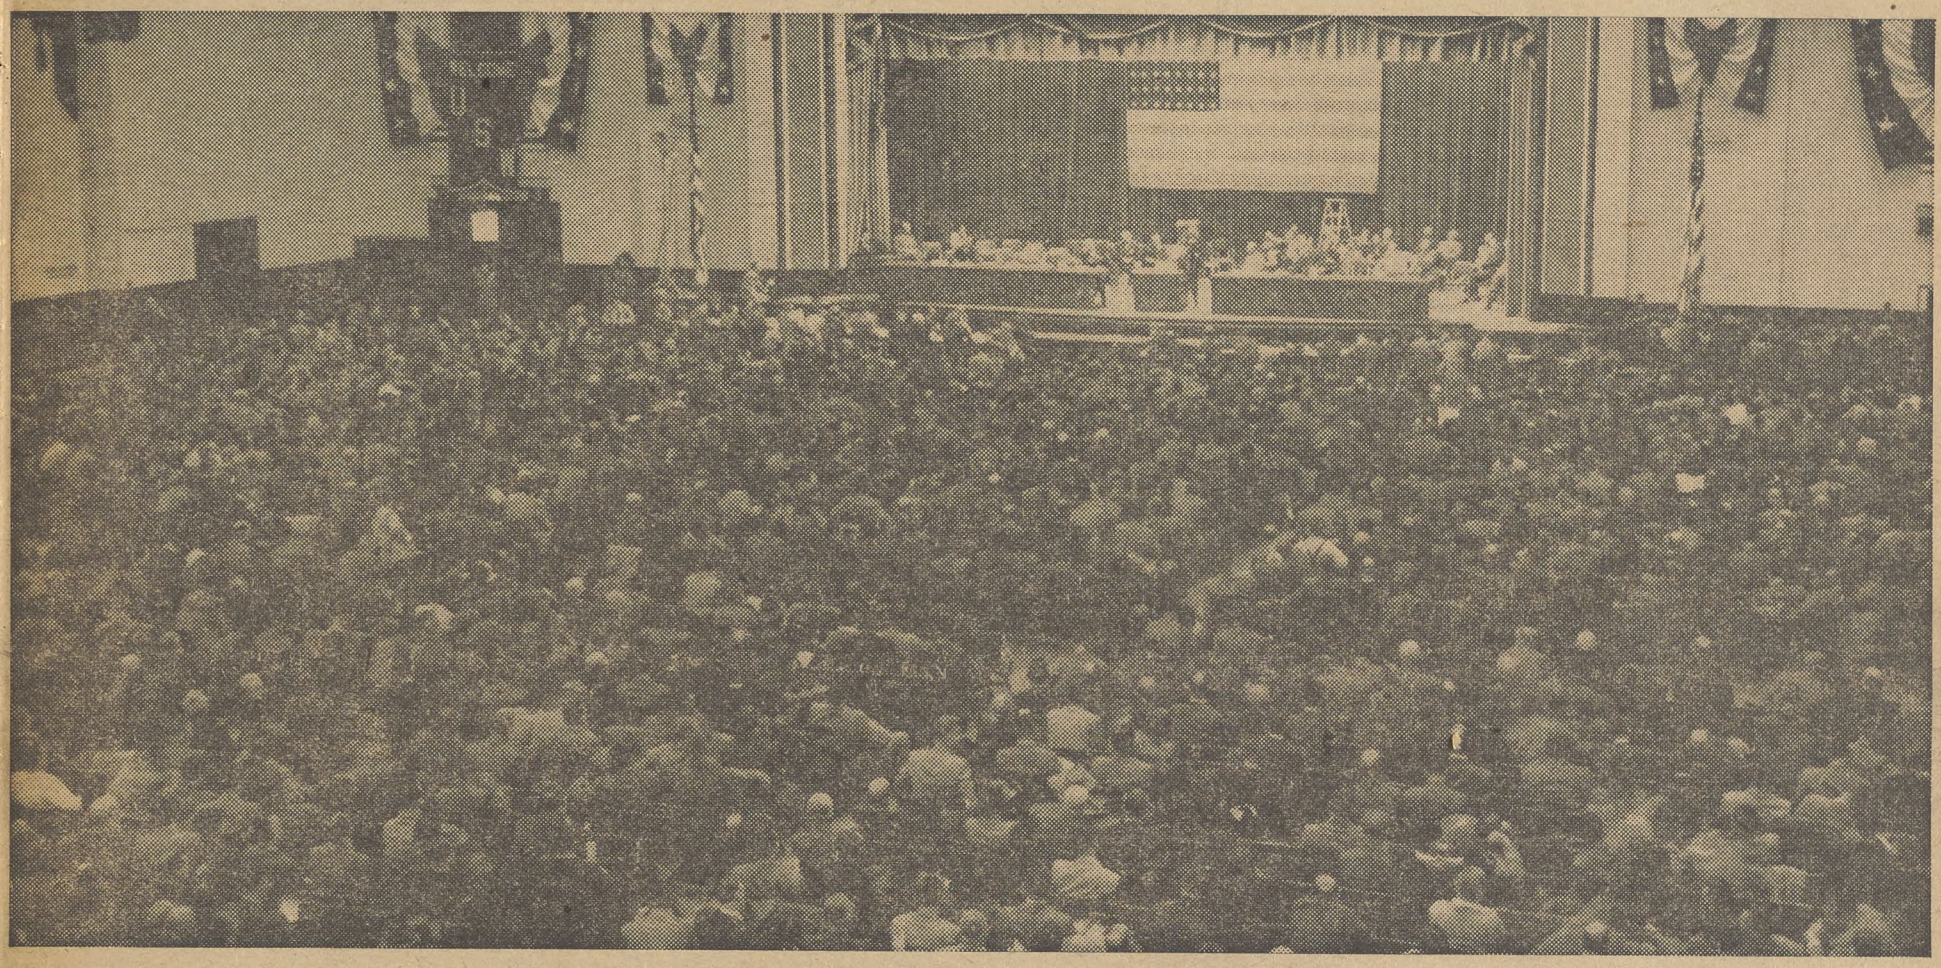
45-Day 'Truce' Set In Steel

—STORIES ON PAGES 2 & 3



SPECIAL CONVENTION—Here's general scene of Atlantic City Convention Hall as CIO Steelworkers meet, agree to 45-day "truce" in wage dispute.

PRICE GOUGING demands of U. S. Steel Corp. and other big producers, who refuse to bargain with CIO Steelworkers, are assailed in president's report read by Sec. Treas. David McDonald to USA-CIO convention. Listening are Pres. Philip Murray (center) and Vice Pres. James Thimmes.

UAW Fights Cutback To End Jobless Crisis

—STORY ON PAGE 8

Union Statement—

'Steel Industry Is On Sitdown Against Bargaining'

WE ARE ASSEMBLED in special convention—the first in the history of the United Steelworkers of America, CIO .

This convention was called by Pres. Philip Murray because the International Wage Policy Committee deemed it essential that the membership of the organization should have the final voice in deciding the grave issues confronting the Union as a result of the expiration of our old agreements and the refusal of the industry to negotiate new contracts.

The present crisis has arisen through no choice or fault of this Union.

Our collective bargaining contracts with the companies in the steel industry expired on Dec. 31, 1951. For weeks the union diligently and earnestly sought to negotiate new agreements with these rich and powerful corporations. We presented to them our reasonable proposals for improving the economic and working conditions of their employees. The companies responded only with delays and filibustering.

The steel companies not only showed no inclination to accept our proposals; they refused even to bargain with us about them. They conducted a virtual sitdown strike against collective bargaining. They showed no desire to avoid a stoppage of work when the contracts expired. They showed no concern for the effect of such a stoppage on the country's welfare. On the contrary, they determined to force a crisis in steel.

The U. S. Steel Corp. rejected our proposals even before they were made. On Nov. 15, Benjamin F. Fairless, president of the United States Steel Corporation, in a speech at Cincinnati, Ohio, made it clear that his company would refuse to negotiate an agreement with us. The negotiations which followed demonstrated that Mr. Fairless spoke for all of the steel companies and that not one of them had any intention of negotiating an agreement with the Union.

What was the reason for this refusal by the industry to engage in collective bargaining and for its callous disregard of the consequences to the country of a shutdown of our basic industry?

Certainly there is no warrant in the law or in the provisions of our mobilization program for such a course of action. The National Labor Relations Act requires employers to bargain collectively with the unions which represent their employees. No act of Congress and no Executive Order has suspended that legal obligation.

Indeed, the statutes which established our defense mobilization program, the executive orders issued under that statute and the resolutions of the Wage Stabilization Board itself have all declared that, particularly in this time of emergency, every effort must be made to settle disputes between management and labor by way of the genuine give-and-take of collective bargaining.

The ulterior motives of the industry have now become clear. The steel companies are demanding that the government give them an advance guarantee that they will be allowed to increase their prices as a condition of bargaining with this Union on wages. They have sought by the threat of provoking a shutdown of the steel industry to pressure the government into granting their demands for a price increase.

They have sought to achieve this despite the fact that, under the standards established by the government, the profits of the industry are more than sufficient to permit the granting of a substantial wage increase without any increase in prices. Their position is simply that special exception must be made for the steel industry or they will refuse to bargain with the union, provoke a steel shutdown, and rely on the country's need for steel to extort a price increase.

They carried this principle so far that they refused to negotiate seriously with us on improvements in our contracts involving no substantial elements of cost.

Our entire contracts have expired. We made many reasonable proposals concerning the non-economic provisions of those contracts. But the companies refused to make any concessions even on these non-economic issues. Agreement even on non-economic matters would bring total agreement closer. And they were determined not to conclude any agreement until they had extorted their pound of flesh from the public.

The Government, however, refused to yield to the industry's blackmail. They refused to give the industry advance assurances as to any price increase. The industry then, through Mr. Fairless, made a grandstand play. They "offered" to forego a price increase in steel if the Union would give up all its proposals for economic improvements.

This "offer" was a simple fraud. The U. S. Steel Corp. and the rest of the industry have been desperately seeking to obtain price increases. The Government's stabilizers had turned them down because of the industry's tremendous profits. Government economists had estimated the industry's 1951 earnings at two billion, six hundred million dollars. This is one billion, two hundred million dollars more than the fair profit level used by the Government to determine whether any price increase is warranted.

At the same time, it is clear (and begrudgingly recognized in Mr. Fairless' statement) that steel workers' real wages have declined during the past year and that a wage increase was justified. He said: "Undoubtedly, the Union is entitled under the existing wage stabilization formula to ask for some increase in wages . . ."

Mr. Fairless offered, in short, to give up a price increase to which he was not entitled if the steelworkers would give up the wage increase which they clearly had coming to them. He, and the industry, wanted something for nothing.

Equally "phony" is the alleged concern of the industry about inflation. The industry did not show this concern until the Government turned down their request for a price increase. The industry did not show this concern when Congress was considering genuine control over prices.

The Steelworkers union on the contrary has really been concerned with inflation throughout this emergency. We fought for real controls. The business lobby, including the steel industry, opposed and defeated them. The wage requests we are making today are a defensive measure against the inflation which has occurred due to the very absence of such controls.

'Arrogant Refusal'

Faced with the industry's hypocritical attitude and its arrogant refusal even to negotiate about new agreements, the steelworkers of this nation had every moral and legal right to strike when the old agreement expired. Ordinarily, we would have, immediately on the expiration of our contracts, accepted the industry's challenge to fight out the issues on the picket lines.

But the President of the United States, in the light of the Soviet-inspired threat against our nation, has issued an appeal to the Union to remain at work pending a hearing on the merits of the case before the Wage Stabilization Board.

President Truman, in his appeal, recognized that the companies in fact had refused to bargain with the Union on its wage and other economic demands, and that the industry was insisting upon prior price guarantees before even talking wages. The President rejected the companies' request for advance assurances as to prices. He thus confirmed the substance of the Union's charge that the industry has been refusing to bargain with the union in the attempt to hi-jack a price increase out of the Government.

By asking us to postpone our strike, the President of the United States is asking that we show a higher sense of public responsibility than the steel companies. The companies have flouted their obligation under the law of the land to bargain with the Union. The steel companies have consistently ignored the repeated admonition of the Congress, the President, and the Wage Stabilization Board that labor and management should make every effort to settle their disputes through genuine collective bargaining. The steel companies have made no effort to avert a shutdown in steel.

This Union, unlike the steel companies, recognizes its responsibilities. We are a great union not only because we are strong but because we are conscious of the responsibilities which our strength gives. Those responsibilities include the duty to protect our membership; they also include the patriotic duty to protect our country and its insitutions. Every citizen and every organization must give most careful consideration to any request made in the name of the national interest by the President of the United States.

Conscious Of Duty

This convention is the supreme legislative body of the Union. It has been specially convened so that the members of our organization can democratically make their determination concerning the serious situation confronting our country and our Union. With full consciousness of our responsibilities and our duties, this Special Convention of the United Steelworkers of America therefore declares and resolves:

1. To the President of the United States, we say: We accept your request and agree to postpone the effective date of our strike so that the Wage Stabilization Board may consider the case promptly on its merits and recommend fair and equitable terms of settlement.

2. To the steel companies, we say: You shall not profit from your high-handed refusal to bargain with the representatives of your employees. If you had bargained with us, a contract could have been executed prior to Dec. 31. You refused to bargain and as a result, there was not settlement at that time. We will insist that your failure to conclude agreements shall not inure to your special profit, and that the final settlement shall be fully retroactive to Jan. 1, 1952.

The President has said that the Wage Stabilization Board will consider the case promptly on its merits. We well know your talent for filibuster. We do not propose to permit you to use that talent to prevent the Board from discharging the duty imposed on it by the President. We are postponing our strike, not foregoing it.

3. To our officers and our membership, we say: We are authorizing postponement of our strike. This postponement shall be for a period of 45 days from the day on which the Wage Stabilization Board begins its hearings. We are not foregoing our right to strike. This we will not do in the absence of satisfactory agreements.

We further direct President Philip Murray to convene a meeting of the International Wage Policy Committee at the end of this 45-day period so that it can, at that time, determine what action by the Union may then be appropriate.

We re-affirm our determination to achieve our goals. Our cause is just. We seek only that which is our due. We ask for no more; we will take no less.

Wrong Role!

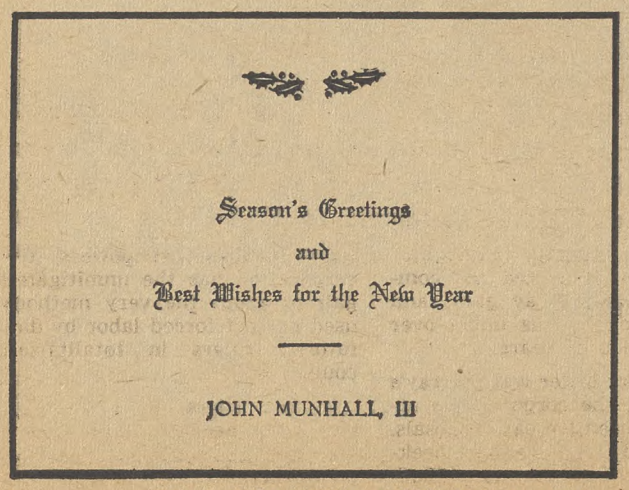
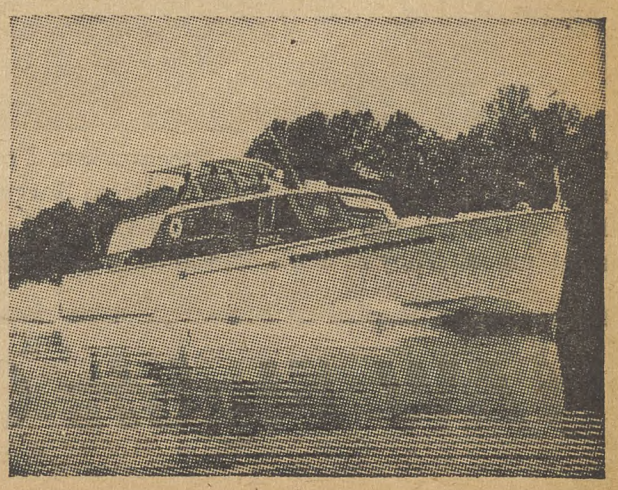
CIO Steelworkers Pres. Philip Murray said that Olds was miscast—that he should have played "Scrooge."



And Belated Greetings To You, Too, Mr. Munhall!

SEASON'S GREETINGS as John Munhall III, high-paid Washington public relations director for U.S. Steel Corp., sent them to employes of the firm a few days before an expected strike call consisted of a card with this picture of his yacht, Croydon, illustrating the "rewards" of loyal service to Big Steel. The luxurious boat, which Munhall's employes say belongs to him, is estimated by yachtsmen to have cost somewhere between $50,000 and $100,000, depending upon its equipment and furnishings.



Steel Union Gives WSB 45 Days To Act

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

ACTING at specific request of President Truman, a special convention of the CIO Steelworkers last week agreed to postpone for 45 days a strike in the nation's basic steel industry.

Meeting at Atlantic City, N. J., some 2300 delegates from every steel-making center in the country voted to present their case to the Wage Stabilization Board.

Pres. Philip Murray and other officers of the steel union will meet with a special six-man WSB panel in Washington, with hearings beginning on Jan. 7.

The Steelworkers convention — in an angry blast at stalling by the U. S. Steel Corp. and other steel companies—made clear it will demand that every feature (including wage increases) of the new contract be made "fully retroactive" to Jan. 1, when the old agreement expired.

The resolution, approved unanimously, pointed out that the USA-CIO action in delaying a walkout was based only on the union's recognition of the need for uninterrupted defense production. It said:

"Faced with the industry's hypocritical attitudes and its arrogant refusal even to negotiate about new agreements, the steelworkers of this nation had every moral and legal right to strike when the old agreements expired. Ordinarily, we would have, immediately on the expiration of our contracts, accepted the industry's challenge to fight out the issues on the picket lines.

"But the President of the United States, in the light of the Soviet-inspired threat against our nation, has issued an appeal to the union to remain at work pending a hearing on the merits of the case before the WSB . . .

"By asking us to postpone our strike, the President of the United States is asking that we show a higher sense of public responsibility than the steel companies . . . This union, unlike the steel companies, recognizes its responsibilities."

The Atlantic City convention on Jan. 3-4 heard a succession of bitter criticism of the conduct of the steel companies during the recent bargaining sessions.

Murray lashed out at Ben Fairless, head of U. S. Steel, and other top management executives for seeking to extort high price increases from the government while refusing to bargain seriously with the union during a six-week period.

Murray, in a speech before passage of the resolution, hit hard at the claims of Fairless as to the amount of the increase sought by the union.

Murray estimated that a 1c an hour increase would cost the company $4 million, and he derided Fairless' claims that the union's demands either total 50c an hour or $1 billion a year. He accused Fairless of "extravagent exaggeration" and charged that "Ben has become sort of a self-confessed liar."

The steel union president renewed his attack on weak price controls which he said have totally failed to keep living costs down.

"The steelworkers have to catch up for what they have lost," Murray said. "Steelworkers need meat. They have to get enough to provide decent standards of living for our people.

"It ought to be known in Washington, in Wall Street, and in the House of Morgan that American workers are not going to take these things lying down. The people responsible for inflation are the big interests—and there is no question whatsoever about that."

Voicing contempt for all forms of totalitarianism, Murray said the union must make "an important decision at the behest of the President.

"But we are not abjectly lying on our faces to surrender to any steel interests. We are never going to forego our right to strike."

Murray refused to predict what the union might win from the WSB when the 45-day peace period is over, but he made clear that the union will not stop fighting for its legitimate demands.

The union, in a series of 22 demands, had asked for 15 cent an hour wage increases; elimination of georgraphical differentials; ending of wage inequities; severance pay for employes whose jobs are terminated; a guaranteed annual wage; the union shop; improved vacations; and holidays with pay.

It was obvious, from the speeches both of the national officers and rank-and-file delegates to the big convention, that there was bitter feeling against the companies' do-nothing bargaining; and concern about the fate of the defense program in the event of a necessary strike.

As one delegate put it:

"Perhaps, President Truman should write one of his famous letters to Ben Fairless of U. S. Steel."

Shortly after the convention opened, Murray read a reply from Fairless to the union's invitation that he address the sessions.

Fairless maintained that in the "atmosphere" of the convention, "it seems clear there is nothing I could say to you delegates which would change (their) opinions."

Fairless' telegram also charged that the USA-CIO "has yet to explain satisfactorily to the many anxious people comprising the American public" how the country can have "round after round" of wage increases. Fairless claimed these would lead to continuing inflation.

That paragraph brought sharp and angry reply from Murray in a detailed analysis of steel industry economics.

He noted that U. S. Steel Corp. profits before taxes had jumped from $88 million in 1945 to $573 million in 1951, a raise of 551%.

He showed that profits after taxes for the big corporation had soared from $58 billion in 1945 to $179.6 million in 1951—a rise of 209.7%.

U. S. Steel Corp. dividends rose from $4 per share of stock in 1946 to $10.75 in 1950—a rise of 166%.

It would be difficult, Murray commented sarcastically, for Fairless to prove his case that wages have been responsible for the inflationary increases of recent years in the light of those figures.

And, he pointed out, Fairless' concern about inflation seemed a latter day phenomenon—since neither in 1950 nor 1951 had U. S. Steel Corp., or the steel industry generally, done anything to promote a stronger anti-inflation law in Congress.

Rather, he said, the steel corporations joined with other industry lobbies to promote a law that would spare the wealthy and hurt the small consumers.

Showing that unions and their members have been hit hard by the Defense Production Act, Murray said:

"It is, as the President has described it, a bad law.

"It is, as (Charles E.) Wilson has described it, a discriminatory law.

"It is, as the President has described it, a law designed to protect the interests of business and to operate to the detriment of American labor and the American consumer.

"The very essence of the law is designed to create confusion, cause disorder and provoke strikes.

"The record of the steel industry damns itself, and when the American public gets to know the facts, the American public will damn them, just as this convention is going to do."

Along with the 45-day extension of the basic steel contracts, pending WSB hearings, the steel union earlier last week agreed to a one-month extension of contracts covering 30,000 workers in 15 plants of Aluminum Co. of America (Alcoa) and Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. These contracts were extended to Jan. 31.

Meantime, the WSB in Washington set up a special panel which on Jan. 7 was scheduled to begin hearing the steel dispute.

Chairman of the panel is Harry Shulman, Yale Univ. professor, mediator and arbitrator, while the other public member is Ralph Seward, a former arbiter under the Big Steel-USA contract.

Labor members on the panel are Arnold F. Campo, CIO Steelworkers representative, and Eli Oliver, economist, who represents the AFL. Industry members are John C. Bane, Jr., Pittsburgh lawyer and director of several steel fabricating companies, and Admiral E. W. Mills, New York, president of the Foster Wheeler Co.

Truman Writes 'Dear Phil' WSB Will Act 'Promptly'

In a "Dear Phil" letter to USA-CIO Pres. Philip Murray, the Chief Executive voiced recognition of the fact that a "decision to continue work despite the expiration of a contract is a major decision—not one to be lightly undertaken. Nevertheless, I believe that the national interest requires such a decision by your union at the present time."

President Truman's letter commended Murray and the other steel union officers for holding off a walkout until the convention could consider the issues. That step, he said, was "good" and "patriotic."

The President suggest that the disputes machinery of the Wage Stabilization Board offers a "practical substitute for a test of economic strength."

The board, he said, "will consider the case promptly and on its merits, and make recommendations for a fair and equitable settlement . . . If both parties make full use of the board, a costly shutdown can be avoided and a fair settlement worked out."

Any Titos Can Step Forward And Sign Now!

There's a "party line" in steel management circles, Arthur J. Goldberg, counsel for the Steelworkers Union and for CIO, explained to convention delegates.

U. S. Steel—biggest firm in the nation's Number One industry—sets the "party line" of management attitude, Goldberg said in reviewing the recent contract negotiations.

This time, he added, the "line" was not to give up a thing. And all the other companies in the industries, like obedient "fellow travelers," followed the line, Goldberg said.

"Well," he concluded, "what our union wants is a fair contract. If there are any 'Titos' in the steel industry, who will reject the 'line,' we'll sign a contract with them."

A Big Job—But It Clicked

It was on Dec. 17 that the union's Intl. Wage-Policy Committee instructed Pres. Philip Murray to call the convention to discuss the breakdown of contract talks with U. S. Steel and other firms.

Fifteen days later, the convention—a mammoth affair—was under way in the cavernous Convention Hall at Atlantic City, with more than 2200 delegates on hand from all parts of the nation.

It was a terrific job, harried union staff officials admitted.

It was necessary to rush through an order for delegates' badges; to prepare the required credential papers for members from the locals; to print copies of the president's report; to establish facilities for the score or more of newspapermen who came from New York, Washington and major steel centers to cover the convention.

But the convention ran like a charm—and those who know how much work is involved in setting up convention arrangements could realize that a monumental accomplishment had been rung up by the Steelworkers.

'Big Steel Wants 19th Century Back'

A 27-PAGE report by Pres. Philip Murray to the special convention of the CIO Steelworkers reviewed in detail the history of 1951 collective bargaining with the steel industry—and recorded the "no" response of management.

On wages, shift differentials, overtime premium pay, holidays, vacations and other union proposals, "they said no," Murray reported to the delegates.

Only on non-economic matters did the U. S. Steel Corp. submit counter-proposals, he stated.

None was acceptable to the union, the report said. In fact, "they were designed to turn the clock of labor relations in the steel industry back to the 19th century, when the jobs and working conditions of the employes were at the sole mercy of employers."

The union president's report charged flatly that U. S. Steel's proposal on "management rights" would have permitted the company to sweep away gains and benefits won by the union over a long period of years.

Even more bitter was Murray's reaction to the corporation's attitude on incentive pay proposals. He charged U.S. Steel with seeking to abandon mutual union-management efforts to work out satisfactory incentive proposals in favor of "management-only" decisions. Murray added:

"The corporation's proposals constituted no more or less than a diabolical scheme to sovietize the loyal workers in the steel industry.

"In its greedy lust for profits and for absolutist powers, the corporation has the unmitigated gall to adopt the very methods used against forced labor by dictatorial rulers in totalitarian countries.

"Steelworkers of America will never accept the Stakhanovite working conditions imposed on workers behind the Iron Curtain."

Late-Blooming Crocus

For all Americans there is much comfort in this fact. We are proud of our representative legislature, despite our frequent criticism, and are always determined to continue to nourish and cultivate it to the best of our ability.

On the basis of its record last year, the present Congress is not one of our better horticultural specimens.

But as Americans, we realize that the faults of the Congress are in large part due to our own failures as gardeners. Carlessness in sowing its seeds during the 1950 elections is probably the chief cause of our present disappointment.

When November comes, and the sap of this "Horsemeat" Congress has returned to the (grass) roots, it won't hurt to remember that oftentimes a healthy pruning is the best possible way to cure an ailing specimen.

Too Many Commercials?

CBS Television has announced a deal through which Westinghouse Electric—for a reported three million dollars—will sponsor TV airing of the national political conventions, a series of campaign speeches and the election night results.

The CBS announcement will do nothing to cheer the hearts of the millions of Americans who have been complaining that the commercials threaten to run away with television.

Even more serious, however, is the wisdom of bringing national political issues into the homes courtesy of a big business corporation—even if both CBS and Westinghouse lean over backwards to be neutral. But American political life is not, and should not, be the "property" of any corporation.

It may also be suggested that CBS Television, which prides itself on its public service shows, has done the public a dis-service through its contract with the electrical manufacturing company.

Perhaps it is time for the Federal Communications Commission—which has not done a particularly noteworthy job of protecting the interests of the radio listener and the television viewer—to study the issue and suggest some new ground rules. They're needed!

Atomic Energy—And Peace

In a small brick and concrete building on the Snake River in southeastern Idaho, atomic energy was used for the first time to produce useful electric power.

An Atomic Energy Commission spokesman said that the ultimate aim of the experiment was to find a way to make more fissionable material than was put into the reactor.

Although what happened in the little building in Idaho did not attract the attention of the atomic blasts at Frenchmen's Flat in Nevada—or at Hiroshima—it may herald a new era in the history of mankind, provided we have peace.

A Minister Looks At Steel

(A minister looked at the issues in the steel wage deadlock in a broadcast last week sponsored by the Ohio State CIO Council over two Columbus stations. He was Rev. Joseph Merchant, Congregational minister and executive secretary of the National Religion-Labor Foundation. Here are excerpts from his broadcast—The Editor.)

I APPRECIATE the opportunity of speaking on this vital issue because I feel there are moral implications in every economic issue.

Well, I happen to believe they do. I am sure the facts will bear out that conclusion.

The Union has had no opportunity to present its case to the public, nor for that matter have the companies presented a rebuttal. As a matter of fact, the companies seem to imply that they have no argument with the need of their employes for a wage increase. They just want to pass that increase—and, perhaps, a bit of profit for themselves—on to their customers, who, in the final analysis, are all of us.

But there are other items in the Union's proposal . . . 21 more items to be exact. Many of these have no connection with operating costs. And one of the most important of these items, from the Union's standpoint, is, I am thoroughly convinced, anti-inflationary in character.

That item is the so-called "guaranteed annual wage," the guarantee that workers can bank on a certain stipulated income each year. This may seem as an unimportant matter. Actually, to workers in production and maintenance units of any manufacturing industry, this is a vital consideration.

Few of us realize the frequency with which plants are shut down. Oh, there are a variety of reasons . . . plants are shut down for retooling . . . plants are shut down because management wants to cut down inventories and build up the demand, and thus the price, of the articles they manufacture . . . plants are shut down because of shipping difficulties and for a number of other reasons.

But the point is, regardless of the reason, the income of the worker stops entirely during those periods of shutdown.

Management, it seems to me, can so readjust its production schedules that such shutdowns will not be necessary. Viewed solely from the point of economic justice, there is no moral defense for a production schedule which causes undue hardships on workers . . . simply so that high prices and high profits can be maintained.

And now to Point Number Two—whether or not the companies are justified in their demands for unspecified price increases if the employes receive wage increases.

Is it true that wage proposals are the real cause for the companies asking a price increase? The answer to that is flatly "no."

AND ARE THE steel companies deserving of a price increase, which unquestionably will start a new inflationary trend? Well, you be the judge in the light of the following economic facts:

U. S. Steel Corp. reports that its earnings before taxes were up 18.6% in the first nine months of this year. That company's earnings were running at an annual rate of $572 million.

Since the end of World War II, the cost of living in America has risen 46.1%. During this same period, steel prices have increased 69.2%.

One more economic fact of importance, from the Office of Price Stabilization. Economists for that agency estimate the steel industry's 1951 earnings at 2 billion, 600 million.

And that is 1 billion, 20 million in excess of the earnings standard used by the government to determine whether price ceilings for an industry are "generally fair and equitable." Does that sound like steel needs a price increase?

I do not think the steel industry is entitled to a price increase. I do think the workers are entitled to a wage increase.

And if, as a result of the jockeying and compromise which seems to be in the air . . . The industry does receive a price increase, the blame for the resulting inflation must fall squarely on the shoulders of the industry.

Behind The Headlines—

It's Bad For Labor But, Presto, Okeh For Steel Industry

By BRADFORD V. CARTER
For Labor Press Associated

WHEN UNIONS insisted that the taxes workers pay should be included in the consumer price index as part of living costs, business sneered. So did their pet economists. And the Bureau of Labor Statistics turned the unions down.

But what was bad economics then has suddenly become good economics, for the steel companies are making exactly the same argument—now. And they're making it because government economists insist that the earnings of the industry show steel can pay a sizeable wage increase without needing to increase prices.

They cannot deny the earnings figures. They cannot deny that earnings on net worth were 19.8% in 1947; and 29.3% in 1948; and 17.1% in 1949 and 28.3% in 1950; and an estimated 32% for 1951.

So they have taken refuge in attacking even the phrases "earnings before taxes," and "net worth."

A spokesman for U. S. Steel Corp. has actually declared that "there is no such thing as earnings before taxes," because taxes are a cost of doing business. That, in effect, is what the unions argued when pleading with the government to include income taxes in compiling the consumer price index, popularly known as the cost of living index.

The unions argued that it's not what a worker's rate of pay is, but what he takes home, after all deductions, that constitutes his real income. And with income taxes taking an ever-increasing chunk of income, the unions insisted they should be a factor in compiling the cost of living index.

When the unions made the argument, the business economists laughed. Now that the steel industry is being harried by cold statistics, it comes around and makes exactly the same argument.

What business has been careful not to point out is that it can pass on, and does, all taxes to the ultimate consumer—the worker—as evidenced by the high dividends business has been able to pay despite the steeper taxes. The worker cannot pass on his income taxes. He takes the beating.

"When the Office of Price Stabilization refers to so-called profits before taxes it conceals the fact that about two-thirds of these so-called profits are actually paid to the government in the form of corporate income taxes so far as the steel industry is concerned.

"Therefore, any squeeze upon earnings before taxes, such as would result from a wage increase without a compensating price increase, for instance, would result in a sharp decline in federal revenues and in loading an additional tax burden, or mounting debt, upon the general public."

Book Review—

An Old Doctor's 2 Sons And Conflicts On Medical Care

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

TWO OF OLD Dr. Samuel Towne's sons followed in their father's footsteps and took up the study of medicine. But there the likeness between them ended.

For Sam junior became a wealthy, conservative doctor who believed in the ideas espoused by the American Medical Association, and bitterly hated what he and others call "associated medicine."

His younger brother, Alan, on the other hand, organized a group hospital, fought stubbornly to bring the cost of proper medical service and preventive care within the reach of low-income families, and argued vehemently in favor of National Health Insurance.

AROUND THE conflict between the brothers, Alice Tisdale Hobart has woven a novel, "The Serpent-Wreathed Staff," which brings to life the violent controversy now raging over the proposed public health insurance program.

Mrs. Hobart's latest novel, it's good to note, is now on the best seller list. Her earlier books, "Oil for the Lamps of China," The Cup and the Sword," "The Cleft Rock," and others, are also still popular.

On the mantel in old Dr. Samuel Towne's home, a pair of candlesticks were displayed — his most prized heirloom. The candlesticks once stood on a shelf over the big fireplace in the kitchen of his Quaker ancestress, Rebecca Towne, who was executed 250 years ago in Salem as a witch—60 years after Harvard College was founded.

In a note to the reader at the end of her book, Mrs. Hobart mentions that she also had an ancestress who was executed as a witch and "died refuting hysteria." It is upon the hysteria of the days of belief in witchcraft that Mrs. Hobart superimposes her story of the hysteria of today—such hysteria as Dr. Alan Towne aroused among opponents in his struggle to advance the cause of low-cost medicine and health insurance.

Many evil deeds are done to wreck Alan's life work. A nurse who once loved him when they met overseas during the war, and vainly tried to get him to leave his wife, writes anonymous letters smearing him as a "Communist."

A doctor's wife who hoped to advance her own husband's career stirs up dissention against him. Some of his associates betray him through weakness or fear. Patients whom he has returned to health desert him.

AS MRS. HOBART creates them, these people are not bad at all. She gives them the kind of human weaknesses and follies which explain why they fall for the hyterical charges against Alan, each for his own personal reasons. Even Alan's brother the domineering Dr. Sam Towne who stabs him to the heart, believes he loves his younger brother and is acting for his own good.

A few stick by Alan—in part at least—also for mixed motives. After Alan is ousted as head of the hospital he organized, the wealth industrialist, Gunsaulus, who raised the money for it, said bitterly, "I could have saved you if you weren't such a stubborn old goat, standing up for what you believe."

And Palosky, a member of the board who had defended Alan's views against the charge that they meant "socialized medicine," said: "I've heard that till it's stale. We have government subsidies for beesiness, subsidies for farmers. Why not for sick folks?"

YET LATER HE votes to put another doctor in Alan's place because "it is goot beesiness. I like Dr. Towne, but beesiness is beesiness," he says, now convinced that the smearing of Alan, although untrue, will make the hospital lose "business."

"The Serpent-Wreathed Staff" is the first attempt, I believe, to tell the story of the fight for group health and health insurance plans in fiction form. It does it competently and interestingly, and should do much to bring understanding of the real issues in the fight for better medical care for all the American people and the campaign being waged to defeat it.

Inadequacy Of Hospital Plans Told

INADEQUACY of limited, private sickness insurance was revealed in a report last week by the U. S. Social Security Administration.

Such insurance—as for example in Blue Cross, Blue Shield and various private insurance company programs — met only about 10% of the cost of sickness in 1950, the government agency reported.

During 1950, it was estimated, private expenditures for all types of medical care were $8.4 billion.

Yet benefits by all kinds of medical and hospitalization insurance totalled less than $1 billion.

In other words, 88% of medical costs are not being met by private insurance programs.

AMA Refuses To Aid Health Need Study

THE RECALCITRANT attitude of the American Medical Association was exposed last week when President Truman named a commission to determine within a year the nation's "total health requirements."

The commission's head is Dr. Paul B. Magnuson, former medical director of the Veterans Administration. Labor members are Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers and Pres. A. J. Hayes of the AFL Machinists.

In naming the commission, Mr. Truman apparently was attempting to meet the criticism of the AMA, which through assessing its members raised a huge war chest to fight the President's health insurance plan.

The President named Dr. Gunnar Gundersen, an AMA trustee, to the commission. Gundersen charged that the commission was a political "masquerade" and said that his name was released without his approval.

The White House said that Mr. Truman named Gundersen to the body after being notified that he was willing to serve. The AMA's president, Dr. John W. Cline, charged that the creation of the commission was a "political" move designed to influence the 1952 elections and that it represented a "brazen misuse of defense emergency funds."

The adamant attitude of the AMA was made more apparent by the fact that Gundersen is opposed to national health insurance. He is the author of a health program based in general on local diagnostic clinics, charging, in general, what the patient can afford. Likely losses of the clinic would be met by federal, state and local governments, and private organizations.

IN HIS executive order setting up the commission. Mr. Truman cited not only the need for a healthy public but also the responsibility arising from additional problems of military security, defense production, civilian defense and the care of veterans.

"Many vital problems remain unanswered," he continued, "such as insuring an adequate supply of physicians, dentists, nurses and allied personnel.

"Developing local health units throughout the nation;

"Making more hospital and hosiptal beds available where needed;

"Meeting the needs of the chronically ill and aged;

"And providing adequate diagnotistic, rehabilitative, and other services to all income groups."

The commission was empowered to recommend ways for meeting the nation's "total health requirements" in the immediate and distant future.

Auto Unemployment—

Reuther Urges U.S. Ease Cuts, Block 300,000 Layoffs

A WARNING was sounded by Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers that unemployment in the nation's auto production areas will rise to almost a third of a million—300,000—if a proposed cutback for the second quarter of 1952 is put into effect.

Reuther issued this warning during a conference held with Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson in Washington in an effort to halt growing auto unemployment, which has reached 150,000 in Michigan alone, most of it in the Detroit area.

Although the UAW will cooperate with steps Wilson said he would take to alleviate joblessness, the union made it plain it is not content with government officials' promises.

It is going ahead with plans for a Washington conference of presidents of locals from all over the nation wherever unemployment exists or is foreseen. The meeting will be held Jan. 13-14, a week after Congress returns.

The UAW has been constantly aware of the imminence of unemployment in the industry. Shortly after the outbreak of the Korean fighting, the union warned government and industry that there would be widespread unemployment because of material shortages unless production of basic materials and civilian production curtailment were coordinated with defense production increases.

While the UAW has taken an aggressive and constructive stand, Wilson was skeptical about what could be done. Asked what he had to tell an estimated 125,000 unemployed in the Detroit area, he replied:

"We haven't a thing to tell them. That's a serious thing, 125,000 people out of work, but we don't want to hold out any false hopes. We will do the best we can, that's all I can say."

"The best we can" was Wilson's promise that he would see if he could "shave" from other programs to allocate more scarce materials to the auto industry, and to name a task force to determine whether more defense contracts might be placed quickly in Detroit.

The task force will consist of representatives of independent government agencies and military departments.

Reuther pointed out—at a press conference—that a step forward was taken at the meeting. He said that for the first time two important manufacturers — General Motor's Pres. Charles E. Wilson and Ford Executive Vice Pres. Ernest R. Breech—had declared that they could and wanted to make defense goods while making fewer autos.

THE UAW president also recommended to the conference a number of actions to relieve the copper scarcity—a big bottleneck in auto and defense production. He proposed the creation of a task force to pool all available knowledge on how to get a substitute for copper.

Reuther was critical of the demands of the military for scarce materials. "We all know," he said, "that the military has a tendency to demand more of everything than is absolutely necessary just to get a safe margin."

He recommended that the auto industry be allowed more scarce materials than are now in prospect for the second and third quarters of 1952 while conversion to defense production be completed. As part of that plan, he said, sharp cuts could be made later in scarce materials allocated for auto production.

UPWA Meets On 'Big Four' Strike Move

THE CIO Packinghouse Workers called a national conference in Chicago Jan. 6 for the purpose of authorizing strike action against the nation's meat packers to enforce the union's wage demands.

UPWA Pres. Ralph Helstein said the conference, which was to be attended by approximately 400 union representatives would "discuss the wage situation and work out a future course of action." A strike vote recently was approved by the membership.

The union was continuing negotiations with representatives of the "Big Four" packers—Armour, Swift, Cudahy and Wilson.

UPWA proposals, in addition to a guaranteed $3000 minimum annual wage, call for time and one half for Saturday work, elimination of geographical wage differentials, correction of job inequities and elimination of wage differentials based on sex.

Blacklist Is Streamlined Against IUE Ohio Strikers

REMEMBER the old time blacklist which made it almost impossible for a worker fired for union activity to get a job?

The 1100 members of the CIO Electrical Workers Local 721, who have been on strike at the White Sewing Machine Corp. in Cleveland O., for the past 19 weeks, have come up against a streamlined version of it.

White's personnel director, R. D. Williamson, sent out a letter recently to the major manufacturing plants in the area, promising never to hire employes from a struck plant and offered to open confidential personnel files to any company.

It is an obvious anti-union attempt to get other employers to blacklist White workers seeking temporary jobs elsewhere.

"It has always been the policy of the White Corp. not to hire employes from a struck plant, but there are indications that a number of our employes have found local employment," Williamson wrote.

"We believe it would be distinctly to the advantage of any concern which might have hired some of these workers to get a strictly factual employment check on them from us."

In other attempts to break the strike, according to IUE officials, the company has hired scabs, written misleading letters to strikers, used supervisory employes as production workers, and has refused to bargain with the union since before the walkout began.

Here's That Man Again!

Latest job of the one-time general counsel of the National Labor Relations Board —who was named when Taft-Hartley took effect and later fired—has turned up near Milwaukee.

He's representing the Kearney-Trecker Co. of West Allis, Wisc., in an effort to block organization by the CIO Auto Workers.

Denham, according to the Wisconsin CIO News, will represent the company in an NLRB hearing brought by the UAW. His fee, reportedly, is some $50,000.

The Auto Workers won a representation election at Kearney-Trecker months ago, but the company has refused to recognize the union or bargain with it, so unfair labor practices charges have been filed.

Walter Cappel, UAW international representative, said "the public, in the end, has to pay for these shenanigans. Kearney-Trecker is working primarily on government contracts and the more money the company wastes trying to break the union, the more it costs the taxpayers."

Job Insurance 'Kitty' Hits New Record

THE NATIONAL unemployment insurance kitty —the fund out of which the country's jobless draw their benefits — reached an all-time high on Sept. 30, 1951.

It stood at $7609 million, according to a report to Sec. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin by the Bureau of Employment Security. This was $6 million higher than the previous quarterly tops set at the close of 1948. Its estimated aggregate at the end of 1951 was $7800 million.

ONE OF THE reasons the fund increased during the year was that payments into it were at about twice the rate of withdrawals.

Another, not mentioned in the report to Tobin, was that in many states employers have successfully fought for legislation restricting eligibility for benefit payments and making it harder for the jobless worker to obtain them. It would have increased still further but for other state laws which cut employer payments into it.

The report showed that after reaching the previous peak at the end of 1948, the fund dropped because of relatively high payments to unemployed workers during 1949 and early 1950. But between June 30, 1950, and Sept. 30, 1951, its income exceeded benefits paid by $920 million.

ROBERT C. GOODWIN, bureau director, warned that "the risk of unemployment still is significant" in spite of the build-up. Claims filed during the three-month period ending Sept. 30 were greater than in the comparable quarter of 1950, he said, but payments were "substantially less" because duration of unemployment was shorter.

"Although the general level of unemployment was low," he said, 'benefit expenditures were relatively high in scattered industrial areas where cuts in civilian output were not quickly replaced by defense production.

"In Detroit, for example, unemployment has moved up sharply due to materials cutbacks in the production of civilian goods and the absence of sufficient defense-connected job opportunities to absorb workers who have been laid off."

Trujillo Frees 7 Jailed Seamen

After a public protest by the Inter-American Organization of Workers (ORIT), western hemisphere organization of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, seven seamen jailed by the Trujillo dictatorship in the Dominican Republic after the seizure of the Guatemalan ship "Quetzal" have been freed.

The imprisoned Cuban and Guatemalan seamen were sentenced to 20 years in prison on fake charges of conspiring against the Dominican Republic. Their release under public pressure was described as "an event of major importance and . . . a major victory over the kind of tyranny of which Trujillo is a symbol" by Dr. Ernst Schwarz, secretary of the CIO Latin-American Affairs Committee and an ORIT assistant regional secretary.

"IT'S A BEAUT"—That's what Sec. General J. H. Oldenbroek of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions likely said as he accepted a gold watch presented to him by the CIO for his appearance at the CIO Convention. Victor Reuther, CIO's European Representative, who gave him the watch on behalf of the CIO, is happy too.

L. A. Bows To Landlords, Kills Housing Project

THE LOS ANGELES city council, under pressure from the city's landlords lobby, has suddenly decided there is no need for a $110 million Government-sponsored housing project for low income families.

By an 8 to 7 vote, the Council recently cancelled the city's contract for the 10,000-unit project. As a result, 1481 families which had vacated their substandard homes to make room for the undertaking are now homeless.

Not only that, but the city fathers now face the prospect of having to double the present sales tax to repay the $12½ million the federal government advanced for the purchase of land, site clearing and other expenses.

The landlord lobby was aided and abetted in the fight to scuttle the program by realty groups, contractors' organizations and the local Chamber of Commerce.

Following the council's action, the Los Angeles Housing Authority promptly filed court action to compel the city to proceed.

The Los Angeles CIO Council, and also the AFL Central Labor Council, have demanded a federal investigation by the U. S. District Attorney of what they term a conspiracy to sabotage the public housing program. The two labor groups have the backing of the American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars, League of Women Voters and various church and civic groups.

In addition to reimbursing the federal government, the city has left itself open to suits totalling millions by owners whose property was purchased or condemned for the project.

The federal government has indicated it would insist upon prompt repayment of the money advanced for interim financing. John Taylor Egan, Public Housing Commissioner, in Washington said the U.S. could seize and sell property owned by the city or obtain payment from "all unappropriated funds."

THE HOUSING Authority charged that behind the opposition to the program was "the vicious, irresponsible and misleading propaganda campaign carried on by the local and national real estate lobby and the local press."

Mayor Fletcher Bowron, who supported the undertaking originally, introduced another complication. He raised the question as to whether council could cancel the program without having funds in the city treasury to repay the federal government for expenditures already made.

In reply to the landlord's lobby claim that there is adequate privately-built housing available, Howard Holtzendorff, executive director of the Los Angeles Housing Authority, declared that rents in most of the available privately-built houses "are too high for low income groups for which public housing is designed."

He pointed out that many landlords refuse to house Negroes and Mexicans who make up a large segment of present public housing tenants.

Welsh Named As UCDS Aide

Appointment of Welsh, first of four CIO and AFL representatives to be named by the UCDS, was announced by Leo Perlis, CIO-CSC national director.

Welsh, of Washington, D. C., formerly was an assistant editor of the CIO News.

New Washington CIO Council Is Going After More PAC Records

By GERVASE N. LOVE

THE WASHINGTON State CIO Council is not one of the largest in the family and it's less than two years old, but it has hung up a record of political activity that its larger and older cousins might well shoot at.

The old Evergreen State council was one of those dominated by the Communists back in the days that, fortunately, are gone beyond recall. Members of the Woodworkers loyal to the CIO and its principles spearheaded a fight to clean it up.

On April 7, 1950, John Brophy, then CIO director of councils, held a hearing in Seattle, revoked the old charter and chartered a new pro-CIO, anti-Communist body.

The 1952 election campaign may seem a long way off. But in the State of Washington, CIO members know it will be upon them soon—and they've already taken steps to return to office, at every level, candidates who will represent all the people.

The State is entitled to six congressmen from districts and one at large. The State Council, acting as the Political Action Committee, has set up PAC organizations in each.

Under the general direction of Sec.-Treas. Harold Slater, an old Woodworker himself, with an assist from CIO Reg. Dir. Roy Atkinson, they're activating county and block committees dormant since the 1950 election and spreading the word among the voters that if they're not registered, they cannot cast their ballots.

IN 1950, some 600,000 pieces of data on the records of congressional candidates were distributed. In 1952, the council expects to do better.

In 1950, it helped return Sen. Magnuson (D.) and Rep. Mitchell (D.), from the Seattle district, for additional terms. A good organization in the Spokane district worked hard but could not defeat Rep. Horan (R.), though it threw a scare into him and his supporters. The council expects to do better along these lines, too, in 1952.

There are 15 CIO members in the current State Legislature—and here also the CIO expects to do better in 1952.

One of the things that will help is a copy of the legislators' journal, a publication rather hard to come by. Among other things, it gives all roll call votes.

The record on some of the measures that the CIO and other liberal groups fought for or against during the 1951 sessions indicates the Legislature needs a lot of new faces, according to Slater.

"We're impressing that on the minds of the voters," he said. "Copies of the roll call votes will be put in the hands of every CIO member in the State, and we expect to be involved—deeply involved—in the 1952 election from now on."

The council established a legislative bureau at Olympia a year ago and made its presence felt at all times.

One of the bills the CIO sponsored and helped guide to passage, Slater said, forced the State Dept. of Industrial Insurance, which deals with unemployment compensation, to end its stalling on processing claims.

THE CIO fought not one but TWO battles to block an increase in the 3% State sales tax and a flat State income tax of $12 per month.

The first fight came during a tumultuous regular session of 71 days that saw a budget established and a tax bill passed.

A few weeks later the State Supreme Court ruled the tax laws were unconstitutional. Ten days later the Legislature convened in special session. Again the higher sales tax and the flat income tax levy were offered. Again the CIO delegations went to the legislators.

"We told them, too," said Slater, "that there would be CIO people in the galleries taking roll count votes . . . No laws were passed putting additional burdens on the people."

Union Men Set PAC Record In Pacific County

All but three of the top officials in Pacific county, in Southwest Washington, are members of the CIO Woodworkers, according to Sec.-Treas. Harold Slater of the Washington State CIO Council.

In fact, practically everybody in the county employ—and mayors of most of the communities — belongs either to the IWA or to an AFL union. Even the sheriff and his aides and the county police carry cards and pay their dues regularly, Slater said.

Voters Watching Congress On Price Controls: Haywood

AMERICAN voters will watch what Congress in the coming session does about repealing the Capehart, Herlong and Butler-Hope price-boosting amendments to the Defense Production Act "with next November's elections very much in mind," Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president, told a nation-wide audience over the NBC network on Jan. 6.

His address opened a new NBC program entitled "Viewpoint U.S.A." which will be heard over the network each Sunday from 12 noon to 12:15 p.m.

He declared that "the scandalous record of incompetency, blind partisanship and subservience to special interests which the 82nd Congress made during its first session leaves no room for optimism."

Reiterating that the CIO 1952 legislative program is based on the principle of "equality of sacrifice," Haywood said:

"This means that the mobilization profiteers of big business must not be permitted to continue to grow fat while the cost of the mobilization program is shifted entirely to the backs of the consuming and working public."

Asked by NBC Announcer Ray Scherer to explain the CIO position on wage controls in the light of the current steel negotiations, Haywood said that labor was willing to submit to them "temporarily so long as they are necessary to make our country secure."

"A defense program based on the principles of equal sacrifice for all, however, means that if wages are controlled, prices and profits also must be controlled," Haywood said.

'Rotten Egg' Hatched 5 Years Later Perils Wage-Hour Law

AMERICAN workers—more and more dependent for their livelihood upon government defense contract work—last week were left virtually without any legal protection from employers who want to chisel on minimum wage and fair labor standards on work done under public contracts.

Full blame for this mess rests upon the Republican-controlled 80th Congress. And it's all due to the obscure fact that the big-business - controlled legislature wrote into the Portal-to-Portal Law a two-year limit for government prosecutions of contract violations.

Chief supporters of this law were the National Association of Manfacturers and the Chamber of Commerce. Their Congressional agents in the fight to bring about its enactment were Sen. Wiley (R. Wis.), Sen. Capehart (R. Ind.) and former Sen. Donnell (R. Mo.).

The CIO strongly opposed inclusion of the two-year statute of limitations as going far beyond the declared intent of the Portal-to-Portal Law of 1946 and warned that wages and hours cases would be undermined. Now, five years later, that dire prediction has "come home to roost."

The rotten egg of big business was hatched in this way:

The Supreme Court recently refused to review two appeals court decisions holding that the two-year limit applies to actions to enforce the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act. Thus, in effect, the lower court rulings were upheld.

What this means to American labor was made clear last week by Sec. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin. He warned of the "serious consequences" that will result from the Supreme Court's action.

Tobin pointed out that the Walsh-Healey Act sets basic labor standards, including minimum wage rates, hours of work, prohibition of child and convict labor, and safety and health provisions, for work done on all government contracts above $10,000 in value.

Enforcement against chiseling employers has always been difficult because Congress has steadily refused to vote sufficient funds for adequate investigation. Many violations do not come to light for a year or more after they take place.

Government attorneys argued that the two-year statute of limitations started as of the day when the government decided to bring a suit—that is, after necessary investigation and preliminary hearings had been held.

They point out that adequate preparation of a case often requires more than two years because of the limited staff that the Labor Dept. has available to process complaints.

There are only two hearing officers in the entire department to handle Walsh-Healey cases!

But under the new court rulings, the government must bring suit within two years of the suspected violation. The effect is to make prosecution, in all but a handful of cases, virtually impossible.

The Labor Dept. points out that the "tremendous increase" of employers under contract to produce goods for the government at the present time greatly complicates the problems of enforcement. On top of this, administrative practices of some 15 years will be disrupted by the decision.

John Edelman, Washington representative of the CIO Textile Workers, who was active in the fight against the Portal-to-Portal Law in 1946 when it was pending before Congress, said last week that the new ruling "makes enforcement impossible." He said that lack of appropriations, and the resultant shortage of inspectors, plus the long, drawn-out proceedings involved, would virtually nullify the Public Contracts Law.

Labor has urged a five-year statute of limitations, Edelman said, pointing out that most state laws allow at least three years or more for prosecution. The employers guilty of Walsh-Healey violations are hard to detect, he added, because "they represent the most unscrupulous kind of chiselers—those employing child labor and failing to provide minimum standards of health and safety."

Rosenblum Warns Of 'Creeping Fascism'

GUILT by insinuation, innuendo and gossip is making a mockery of American jurisprudence, Sec.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum of the CIO Clothing Workers declared last week in an address at Minneapolis, Minn.

"A wave of legislation, beginning with the Taft-Hartley and Smith Acts, and embracing the McCarran Act and similar measures, has created, in effect, a parallel legal system superseding the Bill of Rights, the Constitution and our traditional body of law."

He cited as "the latest illustration of our departure from decent, American procedures" the case of John Stewart Service. Service was ousted from his State Dept. job by the Civil Service Commisison on the ground that there is a "reasonable doubt" of his loyalty. This action was taken although the State Dept. Loyalty and Security Board had exonerated him six times on charges of subversion.

"This menace, this creeping fascism," Rosenblum continued, "must be fought at home with the same zeal with which we seek to stop Communist aggression abroad.

"The America we wish to save is the America of Washington and Jefferson, Lincoln and Franklin Roosevelt.

"It is the America of the Declaration of Independence, the Bill of Rights, the Constitution, the Emancipation Proclamation, the New Deal and all those other institutions in the great American tradition which made us strong, admired and respected all over the world."

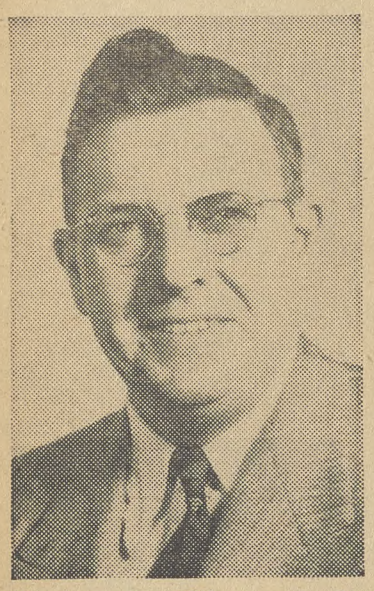
THE STRUGGLE for men's minds and hearts is never lost, Rosenblum stressed, "If we keep on fighting for the best in man and the best for man."

"It calls for increased and more intense political activity on the part of labor, especially in 1952, a presidential year," he said.

"Men of courage, programs platforms, and their conscientious enforcement, will determine how we pull out of the dark night that now engulfs the world.

"It calls for effective political participation on a ward and precinct level. We must raise the level of politics in this country so that men of talent, men of principle and conviction, represent us in Congress, in the administration, in world councils.

"Let us recharge our democratic spirit and our democratic dream. Let us demonstrate, as I know we can, that neither communism nor fascism can flourish where democracy is practiced daily, where it is a living proof that no system springing from the minds of men can successfully contend with it, or surpass it."



Manley J. Wilson of St. Helens, Ore., editor of the CIO International Woodworker and an Oregon State Senator, died last week of complications following an operation in St. Vincent's Hospital, Portland. He was 46, and is survived by his widow and three children.

2 CIO Unions Join Demand For U.S. Action In Bomb Murder

CIO UNIONS have joined in the swelling chorus of protest over the Florida anti-racial violence which reached its climax in the Christmas night bomb-slaying of Harry T. Moore, state coordinator of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the Auto Workers, and Pres. Morris Pizer and Sec-Treas. Fred Fulford of the Furniture Workers urged the federal government to use its full resources in the search for Moore's murderers.

Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, as chairman of the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination, earlier had urged President Truman to take all necessary action "to restore law and order in Florida."

In a wire to Attorney General J. Howard McGrath, Reuther referred to a earlier telegram in which "I said there were clear indications of an intensification of terroristic aggression against Negroes in Florida."

"Surely it is fair," the wire continued, "that this assassin (of Moore) took encouragement from the fact that other crimes against Negroes have gone unpunished.

"Are we to expect still more murders and maiming of Negroes in Florida?

"Will this evil be allowed to spread to other parts of our country? The UAW-CIO demands that our government protect its people. We demand that you use the total resources of the Dept. of Justice in the search for the Moore killers."

In another telegram asking NAACP Executive Sec. Walter White to extend the UAW's sympathy to the members of Moore's family, Reuther pledged the UAW's cooperation "in order that the perpetrators of this foul crime may be apprehended and punished."

The UFWA officers wired the President a demand that the government take "positive action to end terrorism in Florida."

The telegram said that Mr. Truman's subordinates gave the impression of being totally indifferent by the manner in which they treated the Groveland killing of Ernest Thomas in 1949, the murder of Samuel Shepherd just two months ago and the repeated bombings in Miami during the past year.

Cincinnati Council Re-elects Grainger

Walter Grainger, Amalgamated Clothing Workers' business agent, has been re-elected president of the Cincinnati CIO Council.

Leo T. O'Leary, Auto Workers, was named vice president, and Ernestine Locknane, Communications Workers, financial secretary.

$5000 Reward Is Offered In Bombing

A $5000 REWARD has been offered by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People for information leading to the arrest of the murderer or murderers of Harry T. Moore, NAACP's Florida coordinator, who was killed by a bomb in his Mims, Fla., home, Christmas night.

Moore's wife, Mrs. Harriet Moore, also died Jan. 3 of injuries suffered in the blast. She had been improving until Jan. 1, when she disobeyed her physician's orders and left a Stanford, Fla., hospital to view her husband's body at a funeral home.

Announcement of the reward was made by NAACP Executive Sec. Walter White who asked Attorney General J. Harold McGrath to receive a delegation of representatives of national and Florida organizations "to discuss what steps must be taken to end these outrages."

A reward of $2000 also was offered by Gov. Fuller Warren of Florida in the Moore murder, but White reiterated his charge that Warren "has consistently refused to take steps to uphold law and order in that state."

Meanwhile, White turned over to FBI agents the names of three persons he suspected of complicity in the bombings.

THE FLORIDA branch of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith proposed the enactment of local ordinances controlling the sale, distribution, transportation and use of explosives. It also urged a survey of local areas to determine religious and racial "tension spots and community projects to combat racial and religious hatreds."

Federal intervention in the Moore murder has been urged by a number of organizations, including the CIO, American Civil Liberties Union, The National Council of Churches of Christ in the U. S. A. and the American Veterans Committee.

The Americans for Democratic Action said that the Florida bombings are being used as powerful propaganda weapons against democracy."

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

WE ARE ENTERING into another New Year. It can be a year of great decisions for our great country and our great movement. It is a year in which decisions of world-wide importance will be made. The peace negotiations in Korea will in 1952 in large part determine world peace.

In our country, industrial expansion will continue. The rapid development of the atomic field will mean increased production and increased industrial life. The atomic energy field as well as other developments offer wide avenues of organization among the workers of industry. We must grasp our opportunities and continue to move forward and organize the unorganized. We must all rededicate ourselves to increased efforts organizationally and politically.

The Steelworkers in their fight for gains for the membership have the full backing of the entire CIO. They are waging a battle that will affect workers throughout the country. They are united and strong, and will fight until their objectives are gained.

Let us all go forward into this new year with the determination to fight for common betterment throughout the world. Let us help bring happiness and security to all workers. Let all of us work together to bring about the objectives of our great movement.

NLRB Finds Razzing Editor Not Cause For Demotion

RHEA CUMMINGS was demoted from society editor to reporter on the Montgomery, Ala., Journal because of her union activities and not because she called the assistant managing editor an "s.o.b.," the NLRB has ruled.

The NLRB ruling upheld its trial examiner and ordered Miss Cummings reinstated to her former job. The NLRB did not find that she and several other members of the CIO Newspaper Guild had been discriminatorily assigned extra work without extra pay.

The trial examiner pointed out:

"Cumming's remark concerning Shelnutt (the assistant managing editor) could not have been taken too seriously by the respondent, taking into consideration that she later was made church editor. Also, it is undisputed that Shelnutt used the same language during conversations with Ozmore (another employe), as related above."

Overtime Pay Boost Sought By NMU-CIO

WITH THE 40-hour week at sea and a 6.2% wage increase tucked securely in their belts, CIO Maritime Union officials have set their sights on increased overtime rates and other benefits.

Pres. Joseph Curran said the next step in the NMU's program would be a demand for time and a half for overtime and double time for overtime work on Saturdays, Sundays and holidays at sea.

He said the aim is to win conditions which compare with those of shore workers. Rates sought by the union will add about $1 hourly to the existing rate in lower working categories at time and a half and considerably more on a double time basis.

Other union demands, Curran said, will include $50 a month extra for men who stand no regular watch but are on call at any time of the day.

He said the NMU will continue its fight to get the 1.8% wage increase that the Wage Stabilization Board cut from the increase won from the operators last July, plus a 1.6% cost-of-living increase.

Another union proposal would double the 25c a day per seaman the shipowners pay into a pension fund.

Police Drive Renewed By TWU In N.Y.

THE CIO TRANSPORT Workers have renewed an organizational drive among the 19,300 member of the New York City police force.

TWU Pres. Michael J. Quill, called on Police Commissioner George P. Monaghan to bargain with the union for a 40-hour week and salary increases of $1000 yearly for all patrolmen.

In a letter to Monaghan last week, Quill declared he was prepared to prove through an election that the police local chartered by TWU last August now represents 80% of the police dept.

Quill offered to produce "signed application cards, individual letters and thousands of signed petitions" to support his membership claims.

Trials In Satellites Sign Of Opposition To Russ—ICFTU

THE "SHOW" trials of leading Communists in the satellite countries indicate the extent to which internal opposition to the Russians has grown in the last year, according to Spotlight, the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions' monthly account of life behind the Iron Curtain.

"In Hungary," it recounted, "during the last 12 months two members of the Communist Central Committee have been executed after trial and one without trial; at present 17 ex-ministers and members of the central committee, as well as several army generals, are in prison.

"In Bulgaria eight members of the central committee, together with five army generals and other officers, are under arrest awaiting trial.

"Apart from these trials of former trusted Communists, the frequency of which has ceased to astonish the outer world, massed trials too numerous to list in detail are proceeding all the time. Sixteen people from the village of Starapatitza in Bulgaria, for instance, were sentenced—six of them to death—for underground activity and relations with Yugoslavia, while 40 people from the village of Pazardjik are awaiting trial on a similar charge.

"Many are shot without trial, particularly in the frontier regions, for infringements of the curfew regulations. During the summer, six young people from the Bulgarian village of Osogovo and two from Berkovica were shot and killed in this way."

Spotlight reported guerilla bands of anti-Communists are operating in the mountains of Bulgaria and make frequent raids on the Reds. In Rumania, sabotage was reported growing although the country is believed the second largest forced labor "camp" in the world because of manpower demands in construction of the Danube-Black Sea Canal.

Guild Gets First Pension Contract

First newspaper in the U. S. to sign a pension agreement with the CIO Newspaper Guild is The Michigan Catholic, weekly publication of the Catholic diocese of Detroit.

Under the noncontributory plan, monthly benefits for those retiring at 65 after 20 years' service will average $135 a month, including social security, with a maximum of $160.

Jersey CIO Warns Of New Commie Front

JOINING with other CIO state organizations, the New Jersey State CIO Council has warned all affiliates that the National Negro Labor Council is a "Communist front" and "inimicable to the best interests of CIO and its program."

All Jersey CIO locals were warned by Arthur Chapin, the CIO council's civil rights director, to discourage any participation in the party-line group. Chapin said in part:

"CIO does not favor segregation or discrimination and will not support organizations within the trade union movement which have a segregated basis, which seek to create conflict between the races where none may exist, or which advocate policies or programs at variance with CIO policy.

"CIO has established at the national, state and local levels committees on civil rights and civil liberties, whose duty it is to carry out CIO policies against discrimination and segregation.

"National CIO and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People have both denounced the Negro Labor Council as a Communist front organization whose prime efforts will be 'the use of Negroes and the Negro question in jurisdictional disputes with established unions, and use of the council as transmission belt for Communist political propaganda among Negro workers, their families and friends'."

Congress Returns—But When Will It Get To Work?

By MILTON PLUMB

THE 82ND CONGRESS, back in Washington after a two-and-a-half-month recess, begins its second session tomorrow.

This year a new and all-important factor will enter into the legislators' deliberations and actions: All members of the House and 33 Senators will be called to an accounting in the election next November.

No Congress ever had a greater opportunity to rise to greatness than this one will have in the months ahead. Upon its decisions will rest in large part the future course of history, including perhaps even the survival of the free and democratic world.

Despite this fact, there is not much room for optimism over the prospects that the 82nd Congress will enact a sound legislative program. As CIO Pres. Philip Murray has said:

"The indifference of the conservative Republican - Dixiecrat group controlling the 82nd Congress to the nation's peril has already been demonstrated. We can expect little relief in the second session."

For the 82nd Congress, even with all the new vacation suntans and new clothes that may be in evidence, is still the same coalition - controlled body that ducked most of its responsibilities during the first session.

Indeed, Congress faces again virtually the same major problems that confronted it a year ago. By now many of those problems have only been aggravated and made more serious by the failure of Congress to act to solve them properly in 1951.

The most pressing questions facing the lawmakers today are inflation, defense mobilization, mutual security, appropriations and taxes. The "Horsemeat" Congress ducked these issues in its first session by passing halfway measures, all of which fell far short of meeting President Truman's goals.

THE THREAT of being unseated next fall will undoubtedly make many legislators a little less willing to serve the special interests as openly as they did last year.

But the chance that the men who in the last session produced what CIO Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood calls that "scandalous record of incompetency, blind partisanship and subservience to the special interests" will now suddenly reform and put through a sound legislative program is certainly no more probable than it is likely that the proverbial leopard will change its spots.

Even before the second session gets under way, there are signs that the coalition of conservative northern Republicans and conservative Southern Democrats will once more try to hide their legislative failures behind a smokescreen of costly "probes" at taxpayers' expense.

Among other investigations scheduled and in the offing, Sen. Wiley (R. Wis.) has called for a probe of the Alien Property Office and Sen. Lodge (R. Mass.) wants a commission to probe his party's favorite target, the much abused State Dept., all over again.

"SCARE" headlines which these and other investigations always get in the press are being counted on to hide the serious failure of Congress in its most important responsibility of legislating.

Some 8000 bills and resolutions introduced at the last session had not been acted on when Congress adjourned last October. All of these are carried over into this session and constitute a formidable backlog of work to be done at the very outset.

A key test of the Dixiegop coalition's power in an election year may come in connection with an administration drive to get action on President Truman's civil rights program.

In return for shelving anti-lynching, anti-poll tax and anti-filibustering bills in 1951, the Republican minority again managed to get enough Dixiecrat support to enable it virtually to take over control of the Congress. This will happen also this year unless the working coalition is split by a forced vote on civil rights matters.

There is some likelihood that, in an election year, enough northern Republicans will be unwilling to go before their constituents right after having voted to kill civil rights so that the coalition might be broken.

If this happens, however, the GOP congressmen who support civil rights will have to break with the Republican leadership in Congress, which has consistently shelved the issue despite GOP platform promises to the contrary.

On the domestic scene, the major debate will center around economic controls, the defense production program and taxes. This is made inevitable because Congress only extended the Defense Production Act until June 30, 1952, and because the "rich man's tax law" which it enacted at the last session will not raise enough money to pay for all the government's budgeted expenses.

Repeal of the inflationary Capehart, Herlong and Butler-Hope Amendments to the DPA was demanded by President Truman in the last session, but Congress failed to take action before adjourning. The continued rise in prices which these amendments have caused since their enactment, and the growing resentment of American consumers, may force even the reactionary Congress which made them law to vote their repeal in an election year.

THERE is little likelihood, however, that Congress will take action to make the many other changes in the Defense Production Act that are necessary for a really sound anti-inflation program. In fact, unless Congress enacts new legislation before June 30, the nation will be left without any controls over runaway prices.

The decision which Congress makes about taxes will affect its decisions about many other important matters. Congressional leaders are insisting upon pay-as-you-go financing, which means that all appropriations probably will be determined not on the basis of the need, but on the basis of government tax revenues.

Although the 1951 tax law hiked small and middle income taxes sharply, it raised only half the additional revenue requested by the President. This was because the law was written to provide many loopholes enabling corporations and individuals with large incomes to escape paying their fair share of increased taxes.

President Truman is certain to ask Congress to close these loopholes, including certain capital gains, depletion allowances, family partnership and other provisions.

IN FOREIGN affairs, Congress will be asked to take action on the Japanese Peace Treaty, continued foreign aid, and legislation imposing penalties upon the big farmers who hire illegal Mexican "wetbacks" at low wages. The mutual security program will face tough going in the face of mounting Congressional isolationism and criticism urging further cuts in economic aid.

The so-called "economy" bloc will probably gain in power because it is unlikely that Congress will vote another tax increase in an election year. This will mean even rougher sledding for many government agencies which have already been severely crippled as the result of the success of the self - named "wrecking crew" in hacking away funds for many essential services.

While there may be a few "token" gestures aimed at misleading the voters, no legislation in the fields of labor, education and social welfare is expected to be of major significance.

The prospect for labor and the American people in the second session seems from this vantage-point to be little better than it was in 1951.

Once more, most of the energies of the CIO Legislative Dept. will go into waging a battle to "hold the line against still further reaction."

Prices, Taxes, Defense—Here's Digest Of Issues In Congress

Here is an outline summary of what the 82nd Congress did in the first session and what it still has to do in the second session which opens Jan. 8:

ECONOMIC CONTROLS

Passed legislation extending the old, inadequate Defense Production Act with several crippling amendments until June 30, 1952.

Now must act on legislation to repeal the Capehart, Herlong, and Butler-Hope Amendments which wrote further inflation into the old law. It also must pass new legislation if price-rent-wage controls are to continue after June 30.

TAXES

Passed a "rich man's" tax law hiking taxes on low and middle income families and providing additional loopholes for profit-gutted corporations and high-income individuals—which fell about $5 billion short of the additional revenue requested by the President.

Will probably have to act on a request for higher taxes, particularly for additional revenue raised by closing the loopholes through which special interests escape paying a fair share of the tax burden.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

Voted considerably reduced appropriations for foreign military and economic aid in fiscal 1952 and severely limited the use of funds for the latter program.

Will be called upon to authorize more funds for military and economic aid for the next fiscal year.

The Senate will be asked to ratify the Japanese Peace Treaty.

The House will act on a Senate-approved bill authorizing a contribution of $12 million to the International Children's Emergency Fund.

CIVIL RIGHTS

Shelved all civil rights legislation in order to establish a Dixiecrat-Republican coalition to control the Congress.

Will be asked by President Truman to act on his civil rights program. Administration suporters will press for consideration of the comprehensive bipartisan program developed in the last session providing for an effective FEPC law, outlawing of the poll tax, protection from lynching, and stronger federal guarantees of civil rights.

The Senate will be asked for a showdown on new rules making it possible to stop filibusters—by which Southern Senators have prevented civil rights legislation from coming to a vote.

LABOR

Enacted the first change in the Taft-Hartley law which validated union security elections won by CIO unions before the CIO officers signed affidavits and eliminated the need for elections to authorize the union shop.

Will be asked again by the CIO in conjunction with the AFL, railway brotherhoods, United Mine Workers and all other important labor groups to vote outright repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act.

Will be called upon to keep its promise to President Truman when he signed the Ellender-Poage Bill to enact supplemental legislation establishing fines and other penalties for employers who use illegal Mexican wetbacks. Such legislation will be necessary if the Mexican government is to continue to permit the entry of legally hired workers.

EDUCATION AND SOCIAL WELFARE

Turned back the clock to the days of the old poor laws by adopting the Jenner rider to the tax law which permits the payment of federal welfare funds to states making public the names of persons on their relief rolls.

Passed a discriminatory bill granting aid to schools in critical defense housing areas, which was vetoed by the President because it would have promoted segregation.

Will be asked to repeal the Jenner Amendment and thereby check the growing use of "shame lists" by the States.

Will again be called upon to enact a fair and just program of federal aid to schools, especially in critical defense areas.

RENT CONTROL AND HOUSING

Voted limited federal rent control in areas designated "critical" but made 20% increases in rent mandatory in areas already under control.

Will consider pending bills of Sen. Hennings (D. Mo.) to prevent rent gouging of military personnel and defense workers and to assist the construction of defense housing near military establishments and defense plants.

POWER DEVELOPMENT

Failed to act on all pending proposals, despite the serious power shortage resulting from the expansion of defense production.

Will have a last chance to participate with Canada in the development of the defense-essential St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project.

Will be asked to vote approval of the Columbia and Missouri Valley Authority projects and the Niagara Falls Development Plan.

Will be asked to decide the fate of the oil-rich "tidelands," including both the House-approved bill to turn them over to the oil interests through relinquishing federal claims to the states and a pending Senate measure which would make the billions of dollars in royalties available for a federal program of aid to all of the nation's schools.

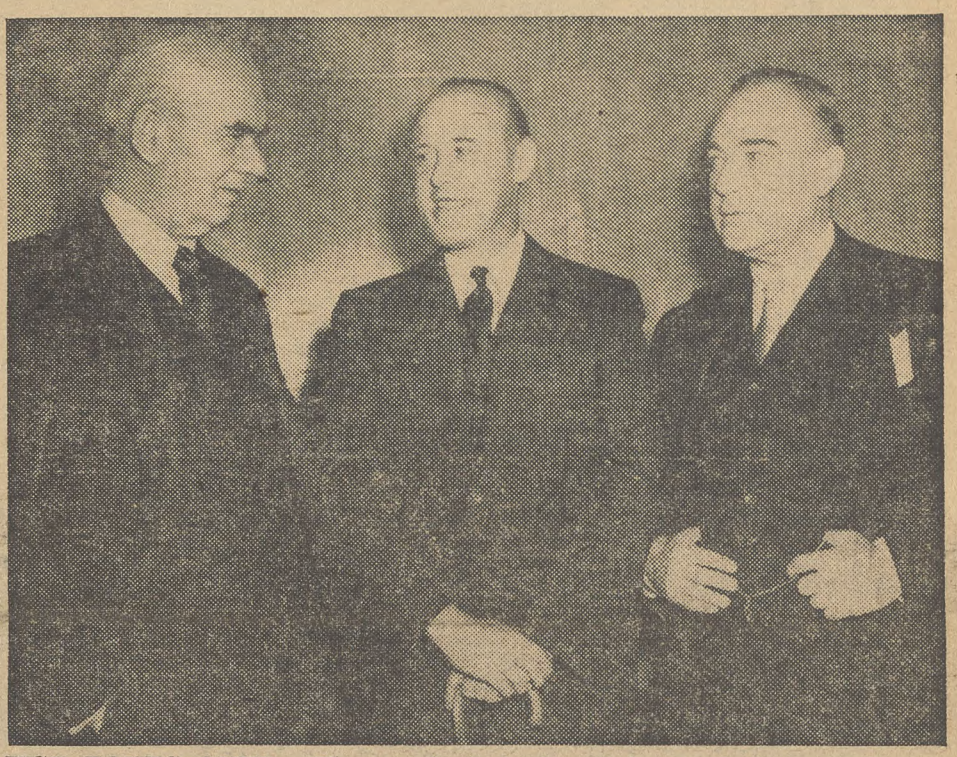
ON THE SHELF, TEMPORARILY.—Delegates from Baltimore Local 2609 to the CIO Steelworkers' special convention tear up strike picket signs, as union agrees to 45-day "truce" on steel contracts. But, said USA Pres. Philip Murray, "we are never going to forego our right to strike."



WSB TAKES OVER.—Three principals in steel negotiations confer as Wage Stabilization Board opens hearings in Washington. From left are USA-CIO Pres. Philip Murray, WSB Chairman Nathan Feinsinger, and John A. Stephens, vice president of United States Steel Corp.

'Deal' To Boost Prices, Profits Hinted

Drive Against Controls—

Putnam Hints Weakening Of Profit-Price Boost Formula

THE DEVELOPING campaign by big producers, big wholesalers, big retailers and big farmers to wipe out present price controls—weak as they are—received direct and indirect support last week from two top Administration mobilization officials.

In contrast with the repeated requests of President Truman—supported by CIO, labor generally and consumers—that Congress wipe out the price-boosting amendments it wrote into the Defense Production Act, and strengthen that law, were these developments:

1. Roger L. Putnam, recently-appointed economic stabilizer, said he may revamp current basic profit-price boost policy to make it more flexible and "fair" —fair to industry, that is.

2. Charles E. Wilson, mobilization director, denied that he will seek repeal of the Capehart and Herlong amendments, two of the biggest inflationary features of the production act. This denial came despite Wilson's statement, in a quarterly report, that "it is important that the price-control legislation be improved by the Congress."

ROGER L. PUTNAM
A "better" yardstick

In the background is a pressure campaign to wipe out entirely such price controls as now exist — despite the month-by-month increase of consumer living costs to successive new records.

For example, Business Week trade magazine reports. "get ready for the coming crisis in price controls." It even claimed that "prices, viewed broadly have shown as little change over the last year as has the general level of business activity." And it predicted renewed efforts in Congress to wipe out price ceilings.

Last week Putnam—who as economic stabilizer is over both the Office of Price Stabilization and the Wage Stabilization Board—gave some of his views on his job.

He said stabilization policies are not "rigidly and unalterably fixed," that he's "not completely satisfied with the current policy" laid down by his predecessor, Eric Johnston, and that he may change that policy to make it "better," more flexible, and "fair."

What Putnam referred to was the 85% profit-price increase formula of OPS. Under this basic policy, OPS supposedly permits price increases only when an industry's earnings before taxes fall below 85% of its average earnings in the three best years from 1946-49.

This formula is of importance, for example, in the current demands of the steel industry for price increases even before they will negotiate on wages with the CIO Steelworkers.

Putnam said the 85% formula has been "vulnerable to criticism as profit control . . . and I don't think profit control is American."

(Formula or no formula, U. S. corporations paid out $6.2 billions in dividends in the first 11 months of last year, an 8% increase over 1950, according to the Commerce Dept.)

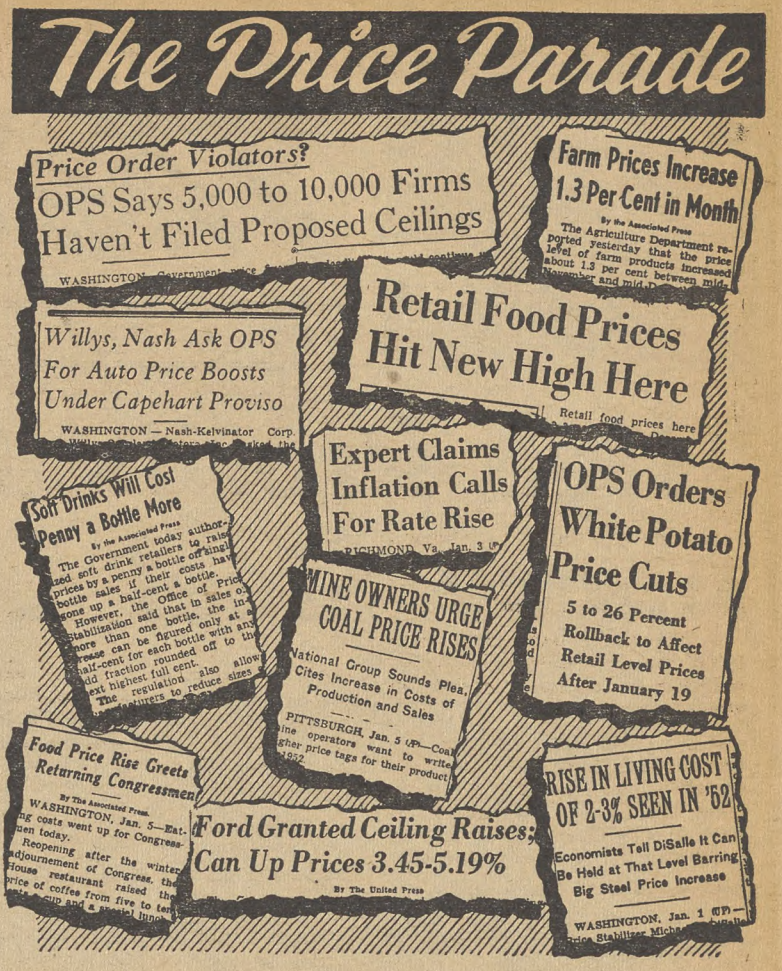
PUTNAM'S "trial balloons" on "fair and flexible" price-profit policy, plus the wipe-out-price-control campaign, is in contradiction to predictions that the heaviest inflationary pressure from the defense mobilization program is yet to come.

Wilson in his quarterly report spelled this out:

"The factors making for inflation will in all probability grow stronger, making the task of stabilization more difficult. Federal expenditures for national security will increase during the next 12 months to an annual rate about $20 billion higher than at present.

"Price control will be made more difficult also by the (Capehart and Herlong) amendments to the Defense Production Act . . . It is important that the price-control legislation be improved by the Congress."

The Price Parade



TWUA Fights Big Wool Firm To Keep Contract

SOME CORPORATIONS — like some people — never learn. The American Woolen Co.—bellwether of the woolen and worsted industry—has embarked on a campaign to lower the living standards of its workers by having them work without the protection of union contracts.

Twenty-nine thousand AWC employes in 21 plants belong to the CIO Textile Workers. AWC has three other plants which are under contract with the AFL Textile Workers.

Just before TWUA held a Jan. 6 conference in New York City of its woolen and worsted division, AWC notified the union that it was going to cancel its contract.

THE agreement expires Mar. 15 and is automatically renewed unless either party decides otherwise at least 60 days before the expiration date. AWC also said it was going to cancel its AFL contract which expires Feb. 1.

The TWUA conference—which represented 70,000 workers in the woolen industry—reacted in characteristic militant fashion. The 350 delegates told AWC and other companies that the union would not permit any reduction in wages, security or working conditions guaranteed by its present agreements.

The industry's giant has doubtless forgotten that last February it precipitated a month's strike which won for TWUA a 12c hourly increase — which the Wage Stabilization Board months later pared down to 9½c —and other benefits.

The TWUA delegates also declared that TWUA "bitterly resents the apparent attempt by the American Woolen Co. and other employers to take advantage of an industrial slump, largely of their own making to add to their own profits."

One of the reasons that the industry is depressed is its loss of a large part of the men's summer suit market, according to TWUA. At one time tropical worsted was used in about 75% of the summer suits, but now—through failure to meet the competition of lower cost rayon—it is doubtful if it supplies 35% of summer suiting used.

He said that AWC wanted an increase in the work load and pointed to lower "unit costs" in the Pacific, M. T. Stevens and Arlington mills in the Lawrence, Mass., area where AWC has two plants.

The three mills Montgomery referred to have substandard contracts with the AFL Textile Workers, according to TWUA-CIO.

John Chupka, TWUA's woolen and worsted director, said: "The company is free under the work load clause to make any fair and reasonable change."

AWC is making noises about moving some of its plants to the South, where it is now setting up an experimental factory at Raleigh, N. C.

AN AIR of unreality shrouds AWC's attitude in the light of TWUA's attitude at the conference and during the strike last year, and the company's profit position.

During the first nine months last year, AWC profits before taxes were over $21 million and almost $11 million after taxes, compared to over $3 million before taxes and over $2 million after taxes in the corresponding period of 1950.

A day prior to the meeting of TWUA's woolen and worsted conference, 700 delegates representing 95,000 union members on the northern cotton-rayon industry voted not to reopen wage discussion Mar. 15 under the present contract.

UPWA 'Strike Strategy' Unit Gets Power To Call Walkout

FED UP with the stalling tactics of the nation's major meat packers, the CIO Packinghouse Workers executive board last week set up a "strike strategy" committee fully empowered to call a strike in the industry.

During the week, thousands of union members staged "skip strikes" lasting a day or two against packing plants in South St. Paul, Minn.; Omaha, Neb.; DesMoines, Ia.; Oklahoma City, and Milwaukee, Wis. They were not authorized by the UPWA international.

At a Chicago meeting delegates from 250 UPWA locals, representing more than 80,000 members of the union, criticized the AFL Amalgamated Meat Cutters for accepting the 6c offer, but said individual workers belonging to the AFL union were "free to join us in a fight for a better deal."

A nationwide strike had been voted previous to the Chicago meeting "if necessary" to enforce the CIO union's demands. No formal strike date has been set, however.

Union negotiators were continuing talks with representatives of the "Big Four" packers—Armour, Swift, Cudahy and Wilson.

UPWA proposals, in addition to a guaranteed $3000 minimum annual wage, call for time and half for Saturday work, elimination of wage differentials based on sex and other changes.

'Complete Victory' Won In Mobile Shipyard Strike

THE CIO SHIPBUILDING Workers Union has won a complete victory in settlement of a 167-day strike against the Alabama Drydock & Shipbuilding Co. at Mobile, Ala.

IUMSWA Pres. John J. Grogan said the strike, which began last July 23, was the longest in the history of the South.

Approximately 500 workers returned to their jobs last week and others were scheduled to resume work as jobs reopened.

The major points at issue had been IUMSWA's demand for a 25c hourly wage increase, double time for overtime, dues checkoff, maintenance of membership, a $200 vacation credit and various fringe wage benefits.

All the above were granted upon settlement and in addition, 18c of the hourly increase was made retroactive to July 23.

Grogan hailed the agreement, which was ratified by IUMSWA Local 18 membership, as "an outstanding victory and a tribute to the determination of the Alabama Drydock workers."

The wage increase brings the average wage rates for first class mechanics to $1.80 an hour which is the current scale for East Coast Shipyard Workers.

Rep. Maude Kee To Run Again

Rep. Maude Elizabeth Kee (D. W. Va.), who last July was elected with CIO Political Action Committee backing to succeed her late husband, Rep. John Kee, has decided to run for re-election next November. She represents West Virginia's fifth district.

The CIO Voting Guide on the first session of the 82nd Congress credits her with "right" votes on all three of the important questions which came up after she was sworn in July 26.

'Rebellion' Of Steelworkers Faces WSB

AGAINST a background of a "spirit of rebellion" developing in the mills, the CIO Steelworkers last week took to the Wage Stabilization Board their case for "substantial" improvements in wages and working conditions for 700,000 workers in the nation's basic steel industry.

Led by Pres. Philip Murray, the steel union told a special panel of the WSB:

- That the union's demands for a 15c hourly general increase and other improvements are "economically right . . . economically feasible . . . justifiable during this period of national emergency and international crisis."
- That steel management's belated and professed concern over inflation is "arrant, blatant, obvious hypocrisy."
- That the USA-CIO is "determined to win back in some small fashion, at least, the losses they have undergone during the past year or more—losses in buying power, in unrewarded productivity, in advances in working conditions and terms of employment that have become standard throughout much of American industry today."
- That "the present high profit margin of the steel industry is so great that it could easily grant this union's demands without raising prices at all."

Facts On Steel

Profits after taxes of Big Steel, in the same years, jumped by 209.7%

But average hourly earnings of steel workers from 1946-50 rose only 56.8%.

But running through the Steelworkers' case—beyond the facts and figures in support of the "22 in '52" demands—time and again were bitter expressions of the anger of the men in the mills.

This anger of the steel workers—against "pushing around" on the job, against cold-blooded time-study programs, against management's refusal to bargain—dominated the USA's special convention at Atlantic City 10 days ago.

That convention, at the request of President Truman, had granted a 45-day truce (running to mid-February) for the WSB to attempt to reach a settlement for basic steel. But it emphasized:

"We are postponing our strike, not foregoing it."

This anger and determination of the steel workers was reflected in the 46-page statement with which Murray on Jan. 10 introduced the union's case to the WSB panel. Heading the six-man panel is Harry Shulman.

Time and again, Murray struck out at Ben Fairless, head of U. S. Steel Corp., and other "high-salaried" steel executives.

He said they would "like to ignore human values" and would "prefer a steel industry without workers, but composed only of robots." But, he added, "America is not a country of robots."

Murray said the steel workers "are in a state of rebellion" because of "a continued pushing around, a studied arrogance, a host of unfair, petty, mean discriminations which no decent American will accept for much time longer."

SO HE urged the wage board to give equal weight, along with the "telling mass of economic data," to "the vast human problems that lie behind those statistics."

Following up Murray's opening presentation, the union's case was continued by Arthur J. Goldberg, USA general counsel, who detailed the union's specific contract demands. The "economic data" in substantiation of the steel union's demands was to be presented in a comprehensive report by Stanley Ruttenberg, CIO director of education and research.

'A State Of Rebellion . . .'

Warning that it is the steel workers—not steel management—"who will swing the balance between adequate production and lagging production goals," CIO Steelworkers Pres. Philip Murray said:

"They are in a state of rebellion at the treatment they have received from these industry gentlemen, who talk so blithely of profit increments and time study systems.

"The Steelworkers want to serve their nation to the fullest in this year of great decisions. But they are in rebellion, I say, because they have accepted from the U. S. Steel Corp. and other companies a continued pushing around, a studied arrogance, a host of unfair, petty, mean discriminations which no decent American will accept for much time longer."

The full course of the Steelworkers' attempted negotiations with the various basic steel companies — in which management refused to bargain, finally forcing Truman to send the case to the WSB on the eve of a strike deadline—was reviewed in Murray's statement.

He charged that the steel industry "cannot demonstrate that there is any direct or necessary relationship between wage increases and price increases."

"No statistics, no propaganda appeals by the steel companies to the public, can hide the fact that the present profit margin of the steel industry is so great that it could easily grant this union's demands without raising prices at all," Murray said.

Murray called the "sudden interest by the heads of the U. S. Steel Corp. and other steel companies in the problem of inflation is a demonstrable and amoral sham." He went on:

"Obviously, there is a problem of inflation in America—and every housewife recognizes that problem. Obviously, we must discuss that problem in these hearings. But it should be considered in the light of the national interest, in the range of the needs of the great majority of Americans—not in the narrow and greedy interpretation with which the top management of the steel industry has sought to bamboozle the public and the employes of the industry.

". . . Wage increases are in no way responsible for the price increases which have taken place in this country during the last 18 months. What is responsible is profit-gouging by industry and the weak inflation-control program twice voted by Congress.

"INDUSTRY is just as responsible for the weakness of the government's inflation controls as it is for its own profit gouging. Both are the children of big business."

Murray ridiculed as "absurd and irresponsible" a number of estimates by Fairless of the union's wage demands. He said that Fairless had first estimated the union's demands as costing 50c an hour—a figure "not in any way believable"—and then had proceeded to estimate such a demand would cost Big Steel alone a billion dollars a year.

Murray charged that the corportation's "preposterously inflated" estimate of the cost of the union's demands may perhaps rest on an estimate of resulting automatic increases in the cost of materials—an increase which "presumably occurs by reason of the operation of some mysterious but immutable law of economics which no one, including the industry, understands. The industry has never demonstrated that there is any such relationship between wages and materials cost."

"LIKEWISE, the industry cannot demonstrate that there is any direct or necessary relationship between wage increases and price increases," he added.

"In the past, there has been no casual relationship between increased wage costs and increased prices."

To amplify that point, Murray referred to 1949, when a government fact finding board reported that the company could pay substantial wage increases without increase in prices.

No wage increase was granted by the company until December, 1950 when, Murray said, "the industry promptly raised its prices . . . not only to cover the costs of the wage increase but also an additional profit for itself."

The Answer Is Still 'No'

Steel management still says "no" in 18 dozen languages to decent wages for its workers—whether prices are going up or coming down!

In 1951-52, U. S. Steel Corp. Pres. Ben Fairless turns down the union because of a professed unwillingness to contribute to inflation.

In 1949, U. S. Steel Corp. turned down the union because of "the downward trend in cost of living."

As CIO Steelworkers Pres. Philip Murray commented to the WSB:

"Evidently any change in the cost of living—it is immaterial whether the change be upward or downward, inflationary or deflationary—arouses in the steel corporation a deep, though always 'public spirited,' reluctance to discuss wage increases."

'Our Case Is Sound, Our Demands Are Justifiable'—Murray

Here are highlights of the statement of CIO Steelworkers Pres. Philip Murray to the special panel of the Wage Stabilization Board:

OUR CASE for higher wages and better working conditions for the workers of steel is based, of course, on economics—sound economics.

This union believes, and will prove beyond reasonable doubt, that our demands are economically right and economically feasible. The wage increase and the other monetary improvements we seek are justifiable, whether one regards them from the viewpoint of the workers, the companies or the entire national community.

They are justifiable in terms of normal, peacetime life . . . they are equally justifiable during the period of national emergency and international crisis. For no man, whether he be friend or foe of the men and women employed in the steel industry, can say that steel workers are too highly paid, or that their working conditions have kept pace with industrial progress . . .

The members of the United Steelworkers of America have suffered much from profiteering-inspired inflation. Through the strength of their union and the justice of their cause, they are determined to win back in some small fashion, at least, the losses they have undergone during the past year or more—losses in buying power, in unrewarded productivity, in advances in working conditions and terms of employment that have become standard throughout much of American industry today.

Our country needs steel. Steel is the basic ingredient in our whole defense program. Without steel, the free world would fall easy prey to the filthy aggressive plots of the Communist rules of the Kremlin.

But steel is made by men, not by automatons. If we are to produce the steel we need, in the time we need it, in the quantity we need it, in the quality we need it—then America cannot for a moment afford to ignore the needs, the deep-seated human needs of the steelworkers and their families . . .

MR. BEN FAIRLESS of the U. S. Steel Corp.—and all other members of that high-salaried group of executives who control this multibillion dollar industry—would like to ignore human values. They would prefer a steel industry without workers, but composed only of robots—for robots do not talk back; robots do not make demands for wages or improved working conditions; robots do not grumble when over-worked; robots do not resist each new act of in-plant aggression by cold-hearted management.

But America is not a country of robots—let us thank God for that.

The steel workers of this country will not allow Ben Fairless, or any other steel company tycoon, to deprive them of their God-given rights, to deny them of their human dignity.

On the record, it is clear that neither the U. S. Steel Corp. nor any other company in this whole great industry is giving real consideration to the human needs and aspirations of the people who work in the mills. They care not whether steel workers' families can clothe themselves in decency or keep their children in school, or put a new coat of paint on the walls. They just aren't interested, apparently, in those things.

Well, gentlemen, we of the United Steelworkers are.

We don't intend to keep on getting the back of the hand from these corporation executives, who are interested only in dollars and dividends, in stock market profits and souped-up annual bonuses.

Steel Industry Economics

Every so often, a learned professor of economics publishes a book to "prove" that wages would have risen just as high as they have if there were no unions in existence.

Before the next book on the subject is written, we hope the authors will take time to study the curious behavior of U. S. Steel Corp. and other steel companies. They afford Exhibit Number One of a series of corporations which simply don't like to give wage increases to their workers.

Pres. Philip Murray of the steel union, in an eloquent presentation to the wage board, took note of the fact that U. S. Steel has so far refused to offer pay increases because of the company's alleged worry about inflation.

But the same company, when negotiating with the union only two years ago, refused to offer a pay increase because of alleged worry about deflation.

Whether prices happen to be going up, or going down, makes little difference to U. S. Steel or the other companies in the steel industry. It's the principle of the thing that counts, in the companies' view, and the principle is obviously not to give the workers a break.

Without their union, steelworkers would be in a sorry state—and no books of economic theory would be able to help them out.

Whose Scrambled Eggs?

Some high defense mobilization officials are in need of understanding the simple fact which CIO Steelworkers now are impressing on the Wage Stabilization Board.

That fact is that American workers are not "robots," that they deserve and will get fair treatment as human beings, that they won't take the back of the hand from anybody.

A few months ago, when unemployment first became serious in many industries because of defense cutbacks, Fleischmann delivered himself of the opinion that in an emergency "somebody's eggs have got to be scrambled."

Last week, Fleischmann avowed that labor must accept growing unemployment as one of the "prices" of defense.

From our point of view, Fleischmann is trying to make the workers pay for the "too little, too late" lethargy and confusion of defense officials who slash away at civilian industry and employment—with no apparent consideration for sending defense orders to those industries or for getting fast production from those orders.

No, Mr. Fleischmann, workers are people, not "robots" —and it's time somebody else's "eggs are scrambled."

General "Ike" says he'll let himself be drafted as GOP candidate for President.

During this winter season, drafts have strange medical effects. Just the talk of a draft on Ike has already given Senator Taft a pain in the neck.

A Revolution In Bread

(There is considerable hope that the quality of bread will be improved in 1952, according to James Rorty, an authority on consumers' problems. He told about this probability in a New Leader article on "The Coming Revolution in Bread," excerpts from which follow.)

CONVERGING scientific and technical developments are likely to make 1952 the most revolutionary year in the history of the milling and the baking industries—not even excepting the years, back in the 1870s, when our Northwest millers set up the first steel roller mills in Minneapolis. . . .

The effects of this revolution—unless it is aborted by counter-revolutionary forces, of which more later—will be:

First, to provide the American people and the world with an unbleached white, or cream white, flour that contains all the mineral, vitamin and hormone values of the wheat germ, plus some determinable fraction of the outer layers of the wheat berry.

This flour has extraordinary keeping qualities. Its availability, at the cost of approximating the going price of ordinary white flour plus the extracted 2% of germ, deprives the milling industry of its last excuse for using the dangerous, vitamin-destroying bleaches that have cursed the industry and debased its products for the last half-century.

Second, to reverse the trend of per capita flour and bread consumption, which has drifted downward for the past 30 years.

Bread made from white-germ flour is white, or sufficiently so to satisfy the popular demand for whiteness in bread. But it is so much more flavorful than ordinary white bread that its general adoption may well make our staff of life again a nutritious and appetizing food in its own right, instead of a starchy and tasteless carrier for butter, oleomargine, jam and the countless synthetic ersatzes and adulterants turned out by the chemical and pharmaceutical industries.

Third, to make pigs and cows move over and give human beings a greater share of the nutritionally precious germs and "middlings" yielded by the milling process.

At present about 70% by weight of our wheat harvest goes into human consumption in the form of white flour, white bread, rolls, cake, breakfast cereals, spaghetti and so on.

The other 30%, which includes the germ and most of the vitamin, mineral and hormone elements of the wheat berry, is fed to cattle, sheep, swine, poultry and dogs. Use of white-germ flour in the standard commercial white loaf, which constitutes 95% of the bread now consumed in this country, would immeasurably improve the nutritional state of the American population.

Fourth, to make obsolete and eventually supersede the white flour and white bread "enrichment" program adopted during World War II over the protests of the more disinterested and pressure-free nutritionist, and since then legislated by 26 states over their continuing protests.

Fifth, to smoke out our industry-pressured Food and Drug Administration.

THE AGENCY has announced tentative "standards of identity" for white bread and enriched white bread, the effect of which would be to freeze the quality of white bread at its prsent debased level, to put pressure-dictated ceilings on its content of wheat-germ and soy flour, and to prohibit the sale in interstate commerce, as white bread, of loaves containing nutritionally adequate amounts of these valuable ingredients.

In its report, issued last August, the Delaney Committee investigating chemicals in food, insecticide and fertilizers remarked: "Certainly in such an important matter as standard bread hearings, maximum amounts should not be placed on the quality of bread."

The committee also recommended that the Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act be amended to ban the addition of non-nutritive elements to bread or other food products unless their addition should serve some useful purpose to the consumer and first be certified by the Food and Drug Administration to be non-injurious; that consideration be given to an amendment requiring a minimum fat content for bread, and that bread and rolls be labelled with the qualities of the ingredients they contain.

Behind The Headlines—

Big Steel Shells Out To Get In Good With Public

THE STEEL INDUSTRY, which during the last two years has raked in the highest profits in its history, is engaged in a gigantic spending campaign to get in good with the public.

Hundreds of high-paid public relations "counsellors," whose sole job is to see that only favorable things about the steel manufacturers get said in the press and over the radio, are employed by the industry.

A good part of their time is devoted to keeping the full facts about the industry's unprecedented profiteering from reaching the American people.

The size of the steel industry's "huckstering" operation is indicated by the figures for the U.S. Steel Corp. alone. Big Steel's latest "Public Relations Residence & Telephone Directory" lists 96 press agent employes working in 16 offices throughout the nation.

The New York office alone has 22 employes. That is more—for example—than the entire information staff of the U.S. Labor Dept. in the entire nation.

Since other steel companies have similar public relations staffs, the total number of the industry's ballyhoo artists runs into the hundreds.

New and costly publicity methods are being employed.

A new technique being developed by the Republic Steel Corp. for influencing American economic thinking is described in glowing terms by Modern Industry, a magazine for business executives.

The Republic plan, in common with similar methods developed by Inland Steel Co. and Borg-Warner Corp., the magazine says, is "costly to the firm undertaking it, but warranted by the conviction that old methods do not meet today's conditions."

Actually, American taxpayers pay for most of this and other industry propaganda firms since the firms deduct their cost as business expenses before filing tax returns.

All of these programs, according to Modern Industry, are based on the premise that a gap "has developed between the thinking of management and that of the employe."

Republic Steel's program is said to have cost more than $100,000 already. It involves giving a course in "classic American economics" on company time to foremen and supervisors, and then using them to indoctrinate workers in the mills.

What those "classic" concepts are—in the thinking of steel management—may be indicated by the following reported results of the effect of the course upon Republic's foremen:

1 Before being indoctrinated, 28.5% believed that inflation hurt the employed wage earner more than any other group in the country; after the course, only 15.9% still thought so.

2 Before the course, 39% believed that capital is not productive; only 13.4% thought so afterwards.

3 Before, 50% didn't think consumers played a major role in determining prices; after the company's persuasion only 4.5% remained unpersuaded that current price increases aren't due to the influence of consumers themselves.

On one proposition, however, the company's indoctrination met with only relative success. Before the course 57% believed that it was socially desirable to keep rates of profit under 15c on each sales dollar, and despite efforts to change their minds 48% still thought so afterwards.

The report notes that "union stewards in a control group also improved their scores on the tests, but not as markedly as foreman." In other words, union leaders just refused to be receptive to Republic's kind of economic thinking.

As a result, Republic's program now is aimed at supervisors. They are referred to as "the vital link (of management) in communication with production workers." But another revealing reason given is that "as foremen, they have standing outside the plant that gives their opinions weight in the community."

"A group of trained conference leaders and speakers has been developed," the report says, "many of whom are already being used for community talks by Republic speakers bureaus."

As for costs, that is no concern to Republic's management in its effort to propagandize Big Steel's peculiar economics. Movies, tape recordings, lavish charts, drawings, slides and other visual aid materials are supplemented with a costly binder and 15 booklets given to each person taking the course.

Of course, the cost for this material and other costs of the program are written off as business deductions from money the company otherwise would have to pay in taxes.

'Cafeteria Education'

'Blue Chip' Firms Dish Out Facts Via 'Blue Plate Special'!

"BLUE CHIP" corporations—and other companies that want to become "blue chips" — may now "educate" their workers at the cost of $5 to $7.50 per week per 100 employes.

This education is offered by Good Reading Rack Service, a New York City outfit. The service consists of a reading rack—which has been described as the "cafeteria-like" method of education—and of pamphlets and booklets for it.

"Good Reading Rack Service booklets, on general subjects, are the same as those selected by General Motors for their employes with few exceptions."

GM — which originated the "cafeteria-like" system of education four years ago—reported recently that 450,000 employes had read 34 million copies of 178 booklets covering company policy and operation, home gardening and many other subjects.

The CIO News some months ago took a good look at "cafeteria education." A new report by Bernard J. Schuck, editor of The Lampmaker, publication of Local 663 of the CIO Auto Workers, in General Motors' Guide Lamp Division at Anderson, Ind., took the roof off of GM's schoolhouse and found out what made it tick.

A large number of GM pamphlets are "come-ons" covering such subjects as Vegetables in Your Garden, Better Bowling, Popular Music USA. These slick, gayly colored pamphlets, said Schuck, are the "sugar coating for the ill-tasting pills which are the real gimmick of the GM propaganda mill."

OTHER pamphlets try to sell workers on "what a great place GM is to work and how the mainstay of the nation are GM and corporations like it." Still other pamphlets—the really vicious ones — contain propaganda of the type "used by the American Medical Association, Committee for Constitutional Government, Foundation for Economic Education and similar anti-labor, anti-Fair Deal tub thumpers."

One such pamphlet said:

"You have heard it said that 'human rights are more important than property rights.' This sounds good, but is actually nonsense."

Perhaps GM thinks that having softened up its workers by "cafeteria education," it can turn the love for GM it believes it has generated to the corporation's advantage.

The "follow-up" consists of a movie, "We Sell Our Time," which GM shows only to foremen and other supervisors.

Schuck reports that this movie is "used in classroom study for GM foremen explaining work standards or time study designed to make the most money out of the time GM workers spend in the factory."

Unions have no quarrel with increased production provided that some of the increased profit is passed on to the workers. But "the GM worker," Schuck says, "loses his identity in the film and becomes part of a mathematical equation which when solved according to the GM formula adds more profits to the giant GM coffers.

"The worker in the film is dissected in motion, right hand, left hand, right foot, left foot, eye movement, standing, sitting . . . 'increasing the work load' by checking for idle time seems to be the theme of the film study."

BUT, Schuck finds, GM in the film is forced to recognize that after all, the worker is a human being.

The film's hero says the effects of fatigue "are not readily measurable and fatigue varies over a wide range between individuals doing the same kind of work."

'CIO To Push Organizing'

THE CIO will intensify its organizing efforts during 1952, Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president and director of organization, told a national raido audience over the American Broadcasting Co. network on Jan. 12.

"The work of organizing is a continuous task," Haywood declared. "No union can abandon or neglect it without running a serious risk of decay and stagnation."

Haywood blamed the Taft-Hartley Act, and "the vicious anti-unionism which that law has engendered among employers," as the chief reason why more than two-thirds of American workers are still unorganized and badly in need of unionism.

On Jan. 19 CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey will be heard on the ABC network at 7 p.m. EST. His subject will be civil rights.

'Them That Has Still Gits' From U. S. 'Tax Bonanza'

THE NATION'S industrial giants, having received millions from Uncle Sam under what the Wall St. Journal has called the "tax bonanza," have been back for more.

Latest batch of 148 "certificates of necessity" totals $114 million, and brings the grand total handed out to more than $10.6 billion.

Under the rapid amortization plan, the corporations are permitted to write off the cost of new plant or equipment in five years instead of the usual 20 to 25 years. That brings enormous tax savings. And what the corporations save in taxes, the ordinary taxpayer has to make up.

Largest amount on the new list was $43,832,833 for Niagara Mohawk Power Co. for electric power projects at Bethlehem, Oswego and Hadley, N. Y., with 30% write-offs on about two-thirds of that amount and 20% on the rest. Next highest was National Petro-Chemicals Corp., calling for write-off of more than half of $14,304,725.

Kaiser Aluminum got a 65% write-off on $5,277,600 for two California projects. Nash-Kelvinator Corp. was allowed the same proportion on $6,876,115 to produce aircraft engines. Monsanto Chemical was given half of $8,530,000 for plants in Texas and Massachusetts.

Aluminum Co. of America was allowed to write off 65% of $1,333,800 to turn out aircraft parts, while Republic Steel tapped the U. S. for half the cost of $1,038,090 for metallurgical coal.

Added to the large number of firms allowed enormous amounts to produce gasoline was Pan-Am Southern Corp., with $2,985,000, ranging up to 90%. (LPA)

Runaway Shops—

Flight Of Industry Threat To All U. S. Security

(Second of three articles.)

By MILTON PLUMB

BIG BUSINESS domination of defense mobilization and the plot to use the nation's needs for plant dispersion and greater industrialization as a cover for widespread relocation of industry in low-wage, non-union areas at the taxpayers' expense are threatening America's military and economic security.

This new runaway shop movement is part of a definite blueprint. It was drawn up by big business leaders, including Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson, for the expressed purpose of offsetting "the growing power of labor."

Ostensibly, the new plants are being erected in small towns and rural areas for two fundamentally sound purposes:

- To disperse U.S. factories as defense against atomic attack.
- To strengthen the nation's over-all economy through greater industrialization of so-called "backward" areas.

Wanted: A Plan

Actually, neither goal is being realized. Except for the anti-union conspiracy behind the runaway shop movement, the business leaders dominating the mobilization program have failed miserably at developing an over-all plan for the defense production economy.

Leading plant location consultants—whom these same business men pay high fees for private advice—say that almost no effective plant dispersal for defense is taking place.

According to one recent study, 19 prime industrial target areas in the U.S. which in 1949 produced more than half the nation's industrial output today are producing an even higher percentage.

Nearly 75% of the total U.S. steel capacity is concentrated in four states. The same proportion of the machine tool industry—the most critical defense bottleneck—is located in the 19 cities comprising prime target areas. Five places account for virtually all aircraft production.

A survey of the sites of new war plants and facilities being built under certificates of necessity indicates that over two-thirds are in cities of 100,000 or more.

On the other hand, the lack of intelligent planning in the mass relocation of industry has already proved harmful not only to defense production but to the entire national economy.

Consider these facts:

1. During the last six months of 1951, factory workers were laid off at the highest rate in the last 10 years.
2. At the same time, hiring sank to the lowest rate in more than a decade.
3. As prices skyrocketed to the highest point in history, the work week has dropped steadily to the low average of only 40.3 hours. That means reduced earnings for millions of workers.
4. Three months ago, Sec. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin warned that there were already 22 industrial areas with "substantial levels" of unemployment.
5. The Joint Congressional Committee on Defense Production say that even rougher times are ahead and that "business failures will increase."
6. This year's cutbacks in civilian goods industries—chief focus of current unemployment—will amount to at least half of 1951 production.
7. Small business is being steadily frozen out of its share of defense work and monopoly is growing. In fiscal 1950, only 24.5% of the total dollar value of military contracts went to small business firms; by the first quarter of fiscal 1952 the amount had dropped to 18%.
8. Despite this great economic dislocation, the defense program is behind schedule. Production goals have been cut or the time to attain them extended.

Other signs that our nation is suffering serious economic ills despite the defense boom are multiplying. Some industries, notably textiles and furniture, in 1951 experienced the worst depression since the '30s.

And just last week, the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, one of the titans of the rapidly expanding rail industry, announced it was laying off 844 employes "because of a business slowdown."

Unemployment among Michigan auto workers is threatening to reach 250,000. The siege is so acute that Gov. G. Mennen Williams has called for additional unemployment compensation, both as to amount and duration. Sen. Moody (D. Mich.) is sponsoring legislation to provide increased federal unemployment aid.

All this is happening when business is raking in the highest profits in history. And despite growing unemployment, business right now is pouring more money into new plants and equipment than ever before.

With hundreds of factories already idle and many more operating at half capacity or less, the Security and Exchange Commission and the Commerce Dept. report that the plant and equipment outlay planned for the first three months of 1952 amounts to $5.7 billion. This is 18% more than the previous record in 1951.

U. S. Pays Bill

Last year spending for new plants and equipment totalled $23 billions, compared with $17.8 billion in 1950. Approximately $11 billion of the 1951 figure, however, was actually contributed by taxpayers in the form of rapid tax amortizations.

All of this means a greatly intensified movement of industry to plants in new locations, Unquestionably, much good to the nation will result from a large portion of the present expansion.

But, as the National Security Resources Board points out:

"An industrial dispersion policy that would weaken any single region or section would weaken our over-all strength."

That weakening has already taken place.

Runaway factories have already struck severe blows to New England, Michigan, Indiana, Pennsylvania, New York and other industrial centers where unemployment is growing.

These are areas which, because of their great factories and pools of highly skilled labor, contributed most to the production behind America's victory in World War II.

In the main, they are also areas of strong unionization and higher wages. While scarce materials are being used to build new runaway plants in other non-union sections, these older factories and experienced workers are idle.

Tank and airplane production are far behind schedule. This equipment is badly needed in Korea, but the great industrial potential that made Detroit the "arsenal of democracy" in World War II faces still further cutbacks.

In sharp contrast, the South is literally unable to absorb all of the increased industrial activity being thrust upon its more than willing shoulders.

A serious labor shortage exists there. As industrialization of this region grows, agricultural labor particularly is so short that the rest of the nation is paying a heavy price in government subsidies.

Greedy Farmers

The Labor Dept., for example, is importing thousands of Mexican workers to man the farms of Texas and other southern states. Moreover, the greed of southern farmers for cheap manpower has blocked legislation imposing penalties on illegal "wetbacks."

Half a million Mexican farmhands steal across the border each year. The degraded conditions in which they must work because of their illegal status make them a serious threat to American labor standards.

For nearly 100 years the South stood lowest in all indices of economic progress.

Ten years ago, its per capita income was less than half the national average. Today it is 70%. Even more significant, it is growing at a faster rate than the total national income!

No one can begrudge this long overdue progress. It means a better standard of living for the people of a section long denied its fair share of America's riches.

There are, however, real dangers for this region, as well as for the nation, in the haphazard way in which southern development is taking place.

The fact is that the South is still largely at the mercy of absentee owners, who control the capital that is being invested.

Even more significant is the indisputable fact that the present boom is greatly—if not almost entirely—dependent upon the billions of dollars for rearmament being spent by the government.

Under this impetus, southern industrial cities have doubled in population within a few years. This has meant much unnecessary congestion and hardship.

Housing is in short supply—and expensive. Municipal sanitary and other facilities are inadequate, and slums are spreading.

Conditions are being created which will have to be remedied later at a cost of millions of dollars.

The flight of capital from the North has been so fast that an average of seven new plants has been completed in the South on every working day of the past 10 years.

Already a power shortage is threatening. The Tennessee Valley Authority, once thought to be an inexhaustible source of electricity, has just announced it has neared the end of possible sources of power.

Great inroads are being made into other natural resources of the South—forests, oil, gas and others—without adequate plans for their replacement or economic use.

Trek To South

And still more northern industries — beguiled by the fiction that they can get cheaper labor —are rushing into the South without sufficient thought of the consequences. The Southern Association of Science and Industry predicts a further industrial expansion of at least 25% in the next five years.

The South's greatest growth has been in textiles, apparel, paper, rubber, and other industries.

In New England, textile, shoe, rubber and paper plants today are employing 18,000 fewer workers than a year ago.

(Next: How specific firms and industries are using the anti-union runaway shop racket.)

Gravy Train Touring South

A breakdown of the geographical distribution of certificates of necessity for new plant construction shows that nearly 25% of the total approved was for facilities in the South. By contrast, New England got only 4.3%.

The certificates permit rapid tax write-offs of the cost of construction. That means American taxpayers really pay for a large proportion of the cost of each new plant built by these fugitives from organized labor.

"He gained three more ounces, Dear!"

Keep Uncle Sam Poor—

Workers: Get A Good Firm Grip On Your Wallets!

By GERVASE N. LOVE

THE KEEP UNCLE SAM Poor Club is going back into action after a few months of getting its breath.

It is on the verge of launching a major drive to enact a Millionaires' Relief Amendment and improverish the wealthiest nation on earth.

Its aim is an amendment to the U.S. Constitution limiting the federal government's taxing power to 25% of income.

If it wins, the government will lose at least $16 billion in income, according to a Treasury Dept. estimate. This would more than wipe out all tax increases enacted since hostilities started in Korea; these totalled an estimated $15.7 billion.

The result would be to make Uncle Sam a poor relation of the country's wealthiest individuals and corporations. Without enough money to pay for the kind of government Americans have clearly shown they want, a lot of services now provided by the federal government would have to be ended.

The ones that would go all too obviously would be those that benefit the great mass of citizens. They undoubtedly would include many functions of the Dept. of Labor, housing aids, river valley developments, health and education aid, relief and non-military appropriations to help the rest of the world fight communism.

They also would include enforcement of legislation that protects the average American from unprincipled individual and corporate greed which would steal the people's natural resources, adulterate their food or load it with chemicals, lie about the composition of textiles—or combine into trusts and cartels for unhindered exploitation along other lines.

The fight for the amendment has been going on for 13 years. It has been waged in the states, and only now has popped up in Washington.

It apparently was the brainchild of the Committee for Constitutional Government, whose executive secretary, Dr. Edward A. Rumely, a few months ago was convicted of contempt of Congress. He had refused to answer questions about the CCG's income put to him by the House Lobby Investigating Committee headed by the late Rep. Frank Buchanan (D. Pa.).

The American Taxpayers Association, Inc., claims to have been carrying the ball over the years, with the Western Tax Council also in the picture. The ATA has Washington offices from which the campaign in Congress will henceforth directed. It operates partly through the Small Business Economic Foundation, a front for little fellows like U.S. Steel and the huge oil companies.

D. E. Casey, ATA vice president and secretary, claims his group originated the idea.

Proponents of the amendment include just about every would-be exploiter of the average citizen that ever raised an ugly individual or corporate head out of the trough.

They include all the old line enemies of labor, the New Deal and the Fair Deal; the people who promote hatred of Negroes, Jews, Catholics or liberals; the owners of the voices that were raised in favor of Naziism and fascism—and sometimes still are; the capitalists whose idea of free enterprise is the right to run rough-shod over anybody with less money or influence.

The background for the stepped-up drive was laid down on Columbus Day in 1949 by former Rep. Sam Pettengill, the Indiana Pinwheel. Pettengill served eight years in the House as a Democrat. Then he went over to the Republicans. Three years later he had advanced so far in the councils of its reactionary leaders that he was appointed chairman of the GOP National Finance Committee.

He also is an old CCG wheel horse and a former payroller. His Columbus Day speech was entitled "The Grand Strategy of Freedom." Copies were sent to all members of Congress by the CCG and the Gold Standard League, another aggregation of Tories.

His "grand strategy" for the over-all fight against what the CCG and those like it choose to call "socialism" (the Millionnaires' Relief Amendment is only one phase of the struggle) was simplicity itself—

"Cut off the money supply—and the power to borrow—and you stop them in their tracks."

Then he added:

"Reduce taxes and spending especially at the federal level. Keep government poor and remain 'free'."

He urged that all the special interests with rows of their own to hoe to get together for a grand fight to keep Uncle Sam's purse empty. Then, he indicated, the rest would be easy.

Apparently it worked. At any rate, eight reactionary Republican Congressmen were hosts at a luncheon in Washington's Statler Hotel on Feb. 27, 1950—less than a year ago—at which the National Committee to Limit Federal Taxing Powers was organized.

Toastmaster was Rep. Gwinn (R. N.Y.), one of the CCG's handiest tools in Congress and one of its most used. Gwinn is a Grade A screamer about keeping down the cost of government, but his idea is to let others do it.

At any rate, his zeal for economy wasn't great enough to keep him turning over his free mailing frank to the CCG for the mailing of millions of pieces of anti-administration, anti-labor propaganda. This excursion into petty larceny cost the taxpayers several thousand dollars—and saved the CCG a corresponding sum.

With Gwinn and the CCG smiling on, the American Medical Association and the National Association of Real Estate Boards provided most of the officers for the new committee. Other anti-liberal, anti-administration organizations were represented at the luncheon—such as the National Tax Equality Association, Gold Standard League and Southern States Industrial Council.

The technique that has been used by those pushing the amendment has never been tried before in the history of amending the Constitution.

The normal method is to institute a proposed amendment in Congress, then send it to the states, at least 36 of which must ratify it before it becomes effective.

A second method also is provided, and it is this that the Keep Uncle Sam Poor Club has given a trial run.

If 32 state legislatures request, according to the Constitution, a convention must be called for the purpose of considering amendments. If such a convention approves a proposed amendment, it is sent back to the states for action and becomes part of the country's basic law if ratified by 36 states.

Over the years, the backers of the Millionnaires Relief Amendment have pushed their measure through the legislatures of 25 states. Three have since reversed themselves, but constitutional experts are doubtful if the recission is legal.

States that have approved the amendment are Wyoming, Rhode Island, Mississippi, Iowa, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Arkansas, Indiana, Pennsylvania, Delaware, New Hampshire, Illinois, Texas, Wisconsin, Alabama, Kentucky, Montana, Nevada, Kansas, Florida, Utah, New Jersey, Nebraska and Louisiana.

Arkansas, Illinois and Wisconsin later repealed the resolution.

The plot to use the scant pockets of the workers to keep those of the wealthy lined lushly is discussed in the Reporter magazine in an article by Mina Post Peyser.

She found that in some states where legislatures have acted favorably the amendment was fought by CIO councils and the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen. There has been little other organized opposition except sporadically, she found, but added that the AFL has now joined the fight.

You Guess Who Makes Up Loss!

Who benefits if the amendment to limit the federal taxing power to 25% becomes law?

Less than 1% of the country's taxpayers, according to a Treasury Dept. study —about 400,000 of the 42 million who pay. And the wealthier the taxpayer the greater the benefit, the Treasury showed.

A married couple with two dependents would have to have an income of at least $20,000 a year before getting relief. If the income were $25,000, they would save $750 in taxes. If the income were $50,000, they'd save $8600, or 41%. But if it were $1 million, they'd save $621,000, or 71%.

Who'd make up the difference? Guess . . .

Sen. Taft Gets In On The Act

Sen. Taft of Ohio, aspirant for the Republican presidential nomination who is ever ready to clip the workers to help the wealthy, said Jan. 8 that he favors limiting taxation to 25% of the national income. Anything further, he maintained, is "unduly burdensome."

Harold E. Stassen, another GOP presidential aspirant, has been quoted as saying income tax rates should be limited to 50%. Politicos wondered if his views also reflect those of Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, some of whose friends are trying to push him into the Republican nomination.

East Africa Workers Ask ICFTU Organizing Help

AN INTL. Confederation of Free Trade Unions delegation has returned to Europe after a two-months survey of the needs and prospects for free unionism in East Africa.

Their report will not be made available until next month, but the delegates said they found deplorable living standards and widespread illiteracy, with recognition by many workers that unions could help them. They found little familiarity with union techniques but a desire for ICFTU help and guidance.

East Africa is more primitive in every way than West Africa, which another ICFTU delegation visited last spring. Most of the areas are only on the verge of economic development and political consciousness.

The ICFTU team found communism only a potential danger although Cominform propaganda is pouring into the territory and may be effective in view of the fertile soil offered by substandard living conditions and racial discrimination.

IUE Wins For Third Time At GE's Lynn Plant

THIRTEEN CIO Electrical Worker candidates for trustees of the Lynn, Mass., UE Local 201's assets made a clean sweep of a recent court-ordered election.

Their victory was the third straight election that the IUE-CIO has won over the UE in Lynn in three years.

The UE candidates were afraid to run under the UE label and campaigned as "independents." Among UE leaders defeated were Tim Daly, president of UE "paper" Local 201; James Vasi, business agent; Felix Ditto, executive board member; Charles Craven, former vice-president, and Walter McCabe, former UE staff member.

The IUE-CIO has improved its position in every election at the General Electric Lynn plant. It won the first election on May 25, 1950, by a vote of 6099 to 5312, with 110 no union, a percentage for IUE-CIO of 52.9.

August 16, 1951, the IUE-CIO won by 6927 to 5867, with 206 no union votes; the percentage for the IUE-CIO was 53.3.

The court election this year showed the IUE-CIO polled 5512 votes and the UE candidates 3162. The IUE-CIO took 63.5% of the vote. The Honest Ballot Association conducted the election.

The IUE-CIO officers, who led the disaffiliation movement in 1949, were denied the right to run or to vote in the election. There were 13,000 persons eligible to vote. Eligibility was based on membership in UE-CIO Local 201 in November 1949, and present employment in the plant.

Civil Rights Bills Introduced By Javits

THE FLORIDA bomb-murders of Harry T. Moore, state director of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and his wife almost certainly will make civil rights legislation a "red hot" issue in Congress.

On the opening day of Congress, Rep. Javits (R.-L. N. Y.) introduced an omnibus rights measure which includes a Fair Employment Practices Commission with enforcement powers, anti-lynching and anti-poll tax sections and bans on discrimination in federally-aided housing or education.

Javits also called on FBI Dir. J. Edgar Hoover to ask Congress "to give the FBI necessary powers to make arrests and support prosecutions" in such cases as the Florida bombings and the earlier housing riots in Cicero, Ill.

While the FBI is now conducting an investigation in Florida. Javits said he understood the FBI role is "now largely that of supplying evidence to the state authorities, while the people of the country are entitled in such a situation, I believe, to consider the offenses as crimes against the United States."

Rep. Heller (D. N. Y.) earlier had announced that he would introduce legislation to provide "the most severe penalties for acts of vandalism perpetrated against racial or religious groups."

Prior to the murder of the Moores, there were bombings or attempted bombings of a Negro housing project, Jewish synagogues and centers, and a Catholic church in the Miami area.

Civil rights advocates in the Senate are backing a drive to change the cloture rule and end filibusters on their bills. Civil rights bills, including a bipartisan measure, have been bottled in Senate committees for years.

Truman Action In Bomb Case Urged By CIO Store Union

The executive board of Local 1-S, CIO United Department Store Workers, New York City, wired to President Truman "to record its shock and horror at the outrageous murder" of Moore, and other attacks on Negroes, Jews and Catholics "elsewhere in that state."

"We call on you," the wire continued, "to use all federal civil rights laws to assure the arrest and the conviction of the guilty. We urge you to direct Attorney General McGrath to take the responsibility for seeing that justice is done."

The CIO National Maritime Union was among the organizations that have offered cooperation and assistance to the NAACP in bringing about the arrest and conviction of the murderers of Moore and his wife, Mrs. Harriet Moore, who subsequently died of injuries suffered in the blast.

Arthur B. Spingarn and Dr. Louis T. Wright, respectively president and chairman of the board of directors of the NAACP have called upon President Truman "to invoke all the powers of the federal government to the end that Harry T. Moore may vindicate in death those principles and practices he sought in life."

Florida Pays Off Con Who Backed Shooting Sheriff

SHERIFF WILLIS MCCALL of Lake County, Fla., is making certain that he will not face charges resulting from the slaying of Samuel Shepherd and the wounding of Walter Irvin, both Negro prisoners.

Last Nov. 6 McCall shot the two Negroes, defendants in the alleged raping of a Groveland, Fla., woman, while he was taking them to retrial ordered by the U. S. Supreme Court. He declared that they were trying to escape, but Irvin declared they were shot in cold blood.

Sheriff McCall was cleared by a coroner's jury which ruled that he shot in self defense.

But McCall apparently wasn't satisfied with that. He told Gov. Warren that a convicted murderer, Merlin James Leiby, had overheard Shepherd and Irvin plotting to escape from the sheriff.

Now the Governor has granted Leiby a temporary stay of execution without a time limit.

The Groveland prisoners' shooting has been linked by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to the recent bomb-blast murder of Harry Moore. As state NAACP director, he had led organized protests against the Groveland case.

Carey Named To Anti-Bias Unit

President Truman last week named CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey to serve as one of six public members of a special committee to police the enforcement of non-discrimination clauses in contracts with the government.

Carey also is president of the CIO Electrical Workers and chairman of the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination.

Labor also will be represented on the committee by George Meany, AFL secretary treasurer.

Background To Murder—

In the background to the murder of Harry T. Moore, NAACP leader in Florida, was the smear and fear campaign which began in the 1950 primary election, comments Political Action of the Week, CIO-PAC bulletin. The PAC report pointed out:

THE MURDER of Moore was the peak of a siege of terror that has been building up in Florida for more than a year—ever since the reactionary backers of Sen. Smathers (D. Fla.) poured millions of dollars into the state to pay for a smear campaign against Sen. Pepper in the Democratic primaries in 1950.

The fight on Pepper put McCarthyism on a statewide, mass production basis. With trainloads of slick paper propaganda the reactionaries started out with slanders, and followed up with racial and religious incitements.

The aim of this campaign was to beat Pepper and send Rep. Smathers to the Senate. With this done, the propogandists packed up and moved on North Carolina, Utah, New Hampshire and other states—to wage the same ugly battle . . .

But the fires of hate and violence that were planted in Florida burned on and month after month new dynamite blasts thundered warnings of the mischief that was afoot. Explosions shattered two Jewish synagogues, (dynamite was found outside) a Catholic church, a Jewish community center, a Negro housing project, a Jewish school. Other blasts were set off in the open, for purposes of sheer terror.

Then an editorial in the PAC bulletin emphasized:

The real murderers of Harry Moore are not merely the men who set off the blast under his home. They are those who deliberately adopted intolerance—racial, regional and religious—as a political creed. The men who spread the lies, the men who started whispers against the Negroes, the Jews and the Catholics, the trade unions—these are the killers.

Behind the bombings, burnings and killings in the South are "respectable" politicians and state officials who say segregation will be maintained "regardless of the costs," says The Nation. In an editorial "No Day of Triumph," the magazine emphasized:

THE BOMBING murder of Harry T. Moore was part of a clear pattern of open force directed against the struggle of racial minorities to win full rights as citizens.

Moore was a symbol of this struggle. So was John Lester Mitchell, one of three Nero plaintiffs in a suit to win voting rights in Louisiana, who was shot by a deputy sheriff on Nov. 19. So was the Rev. J. A. Delaine, chairman of the parents' committee in the Clarendon, South Carolina, school case, whose home was recently burned to ground by way of reprisal.

These crimes cannot be understood as senseless acts of depraved or prejudiced individuals. On the contrary, they were essentially political crimes, crimes deliberately committed for a purpose.

The struggle for full civil rights for Negroes . . . entered upon a new phase with the filing of the suit which sought to end segregation in the public schools of Clarendon, South Carolina. Coming in the wake of a series of important civil rights victories in the Supreme Court, this suit threatened the entire edifice of segregation and white supremacy, since it involved not a few individual Negroes, but all Negroes of school age in almost every Southern state.

The Dixiecrats were quick to see that if the trend of which this suit was part was not reversed, the existing social pattern in the South would be seriously undermined. It was not the crackpots but the Bourbon leaders who voiced the first threats and thereby revived the always present danger of mass violence.

GOV. JAMES BYRNES of South Carolina . . . sounded the first alarm. "In Reconstruction Days," he said, "a carpetbag government tried to do it and failed. A Democratic Administration cannot now do what a Republican Administration could not then do."

In Georgia, Gov. Herman Talmadge introduced a constitutional amendment that would turn the school system over to private individuals should the courts ever order integration of Negro and white schools. A major political aide, Roy Harris, threatened that if segregation should be outlawed, Negroes would be driven forcibly from 50 Georgia counties, and Talmadge himself said that integration "would create more confusion, disorder, riots, and bloodshed than anything since the War Between the States . . ."

Gov. Fielding Wright announced that Mississippi would enforce segregation "regardless of the costs or consequences." The Alabama legislature warned: "We will not submit to the intermingling of races in the public schools."

No clearer declaration of defiance of law and provocation to violence could be possible than these statements. What they mean, and were intended to mean, is that the South will never voluntarily abandon the system which has kept Negroes "in their place" these many decades.

Segregation is part of a strategy of dominance, the ultimate sanction of which is force. It is absurd, therefore, to condemn the unknown and perhaps demented individual who placed the bomb under Harry Moore's home without condemning the pattern of "force and violence" upon which the structure of white supremacy rests. It is equally absurd to inveigh against "racial prejudice" or KKK hoodlums without condemning the elected public officials who incited the violence which, for special reasons, has broken out in Florida but may soon spread throughout the South.

Talmadge Wants Jim Crow on TV

Now he wants to put Jim Crow on television.

In his political paper, The Statesman (that's what he calls it), Talmadge urged extension of the South's segregation laws to national TV shows.

Talmadge called for a boycott of products of TV sponsors who don't have what he called the "good taste" to refrain from presenting Negro and white actors together.

'Jim Crow' Party-Line Group Opposed By CIO

"THE CIO is opposed to segregated, Jim Crow organizations of any sort," Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey declared in condemning the "National Negro Labor Council."

Carey, as chairman of the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination, charged the party-line group was "organized . . . by discredited political opportunists."

"The CIO will not support any groups like the so-called National Negro (Labor) Council which seeks to use our fellow American Negroes to further the foreign policy of the USSR," he said. "As usual, the initial drive of the Communists is directed at members of labor organizations."

"The so-called National Negro Labor Council was convened by individuals whose political and social philosophy has been rejected by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, by the Urban League, the CIO and by all the American people.

"In the crusade for peace through justice, the CIO will continue to fight for civil rights of all persons, regardless of race, creed, color or national origin. We will not permit those rights to be belittled and abused by foreign agents who set up front organizations to create propaganda material for international communism."

"Peace! Peace!"

'Genuine Disarmament' Plan Urged By ICFTU To UN

AN APPEAL for an enduring peace, with an outline of the political, economic and social conditions necessary to achieve it, has been filed by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions with the General Assembly of the United Nations, meeting in Paris.

The statement was signed by General Sec. J. H. Oldenbroek. It pointed out that while free labor supports present armament programs as a defense against aggression, the world's workers prefer "the establishment of an unarmed world peace which would free all peoples from the heavy burden of armaments and would restore peaceful economic relations between them."

All trade unions, it added, would support "a genuine disarmament program and a constructive development program for the underdeveloped parts of the world."

Immediate steps needed for the preservation of peace were listed as follows:

An early armistice in Korea, with international control of its conditions; an end of threats against the freedom of Yugoslavia; an Austrian peace treaty; free all-German elections under international control; removal of trade barriers between East and West; revision of the Italian peace treaty to provide equal rights for the Italian people, and guarantees from Hungary, Bulgaria and Rumania that they will fulfill their obligations under their peace treaties.

Negro Soldier Buried After 6 Weeks' Stall

A PHOENIX, Ariz., cemetery last week changed its Jim Crow policy to permit the burial in its veterans' plot of Pfc. Thomas C. Reed, Negro soldier killed in front-line fighting in Korea.

The soldier's body had lain almost six weeks in a Phoenix mortuary.

Greenwood Cemetery, which is a private corporation owned by Arizona Lodge No. 2, Free and Accepted Masons, would not bury a Negro veteran unless three veterans organizations wrote special letters of request.

The soldier's father, George E. Reed, didn't think he should ask for clearance to have his son buried with the other veterans.

After the Arizona Council for Civic Unity took up the case, the cemetery trustees decided on the new policy. The trustees now require only proof of the military status of veterans to permit burial in the cemetery.

16c Won At Plane Plant

A WAGE BOOST package worth 16c hourly has been won by 5000 CIO Auto Workers at the Hagerstown, Md., plant of Fairchild Engine & Airplane Corp.

The new three-year contract provides a 9c hourly general increase, retroactive to Oct. 22, and 7c hourly in fringe benefits, including additional insurance, sick leave pay, night shift premiums and adjustment in job inequities.

Approval of the Wage Stabilization Board is required for all but a 4c cost of living boost.

The UAW-CIO represents production, maintenance, engineering, technical, office and clerical workers in the plant.

UAW Gains Partial Victory In Fight To Stop Job Cutbacks

THE CIO Auto Workers last week won a partial victory in its fight against growing unemployment in auto production centers due to defense cutbacks.

Manly Fleischmann, Defense Production Administrator, testified last week before the Senate-House "watchdog" committee on defense production that the auto industry may make 930,000 cars in the second quarter of this year—if it can stretch allocated materials that far.

He explained that enough copper and aluminum will be allocated for 800,000 cars and enough steel for 900,000 units. The NPA office said production of 240,000 trucks will be permitted in the second quarter.

Sen. Moody (D. Mich.) translated these figures into human terms when he said that production of 900,000 cars meant that 70,000 jobs would be saved.

It was widely reported earlier in Washington that the NPA was planning to cut passenger car production to 800,000 and truck production to 200,000 for the quarter. That would have pushed auto job layoffs to a total of 300,000 workers.

In a wire to Fleischmann, Reuther urged that the second quarter metal allotment figures which the NPA head gave the committee should be reconsidered. He asked that copper be alloted sufficient for 850,000 passenger cars and aluminum sufficient for 900,000 cars and steel for a million cars.

HE POINTED out that the copper for the additional 50,000 cars would take only .18% of the supply.

"Since the auto industry is using secondary aluminum," Reuther wired, "the additional allocation of aluminum is possible and justified.

"In view of the fact that the steel supply had eased, allocation of steel should be made for a million passenger cars.

"I urge also the same basic considerations and adjustments in the allocation of copper, aluminum and steel to maintain truck production on the 250,000 level for the second quarter."

"In the face of the continued allocation of critical materials to non-essential plant construction and for other purposes not directly of a military nature, I suggest that it is unnecessary and unwise to reduce automobile production schedules below the million level and trucks below the 250,000 level until such time as defense work of sufficient volume is placed in the civilian plants of the auto and truck industries to take up the slack in employment.

"Further unemployment resulting from reduction in auto and truck schedules will cause additional untold economic hardships on the part of thousands of families and will rob our mobilization effort of millions of productive man-hours which can never be recaptured."

The UAW has kept the issue alive by other means. On Dec. 28 it ran ads in 18 Michigan newspapers giving its program for ending the unemployment crisis.

The program was again set forth in ads appearing last week in the Washington Post and New York Times. Presidents of UAW locals where there is unemployment or the threat of layoffs were scheduled to meet Jan. 13 in Washington. The next day they planned to tell the UAW story to members of Congress.

Addressed to congressmen, the UAW ad said:

"The warnings that the UAW-CIO sounded 18 months ago were not heeded nor were the practical proposals we advanced accepted. Nothing that we do now can recapture the loss of valuable months of time, but we can act now to prevent the situation from becoming more serious and thus minimize economic hardships to families and economic loss to the defense program."

Job Layoff Crisis Grows In Jersey, N.Y. Area

BELTS are being pulled tighter in thousands of American homes as the specter of unemployment casts its widening shadow over many areas of the nation. Several states have felt the brunt of the jobless crisis, but last week New York, New Jersey, Ohio and Michigan—particularly the Detroit area—were in the news.

The U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics—whose figures lag behind current unemployment conditions—reported that for the fifth month in a row layoffs of factory workers in November were at one of the highest rates for the season in a decade.

Between October and November, layoffs went up 14 to 16 per 1000, almost 50% higher than a year earlier. In the textile, apparel, paper, clay and glass industries November layoffs were at a postwar peak for the season.

In New York State, Milton O. Loysen, executive director of the Division of Placement and Unemployment Insurance, predicted that the state may have one-quarter of the nation's jobless workers by July 1.

He said there are now an average of 275,000 jobless in the state, but that he expected the figure to rise to 300,000 before mid-year.

In New Jersey, the State CIO Council's new executive board, at its inaugural meeting at Newark, predicted that unemployment will reach 130,000 by the end of this month, with prospects for further layoffs.

A resolution introduced by Council Pres. Carl Holderman declared that "there are about 90,000 unemployed men and women in New Jersey today, of whom about 60,000 are collecting from $10 to $26 weekly in unemployment benefits, and that the total number unemployed may reach nearly 130,000 by the end of January."

"Particularly hard hit by layoffs and shutdowns," the resolution continued, "have been textile, garment, automobile, construction, metal goods, toy and novelty and mercantile industries.

The board called for "emergency" federal, state and local action. It asked U. S. procurement agencies and state, county and local governments to let contracts in areas of high unemployment.

The New Jersey Legislature, which met last week, was asked by the council to extend the coverage of unemployment legislation to all employers in the state and to increase the maximum benefits to at least $35 a week, plus $3 for each of three dependents.

Additional unemployment compensation will be received by the jobless if Congress passes a bill which Sen. Moody (D. Mich.) and Rep. Dingell (D. Mich.) introduced last week.

The bill would allow the federal government to add 50% to state unemployment compensation and to match dollar for dollar dependency payments in states where critical unemployment exists.

Sec. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin has named labor-management committees to examine mounting unemployment in the Detroit and Canton, O., areas and to recommend measures to provide more jobs.

Unemployment Is 'Price' Of Defense, Says DPA Head

A cold-blooded approach to unemployment resulting from failure to plan properly for the transfer from civilian to defense production was taken last wek by Defense Production Authority head Manly Fleischmann.

In a thinly-veiled reference to union spokesmen, he warned against "voices already heard in the land demanding changes in defense policies to offset some of the mass unemployment in industries converting from peacetime to war production.

"The whole (defense) effort can be frustrated during the coming year," Fleischmann said, if the nation does not accept temporary civilian unemployment and other dislocations as the "price" of mobilization.

'Backdoor' Brewery Contracts Tossed Out

THE CIO Brewery Workers scored a major victory last week when Anheuser - Busch, Inc., and two AFL unions which purported to represent employes of the firm's new Newark, N. J., plant agreed to tear up their contracts.

The stipulation was entered into before the National Labor Relations Board on the basis of charges filed by the Brewery Workers.

It was incorporated into a decision and order by the board, with the consent of the company and the AFL unions, and is as legally binding as any other NLRB decision. The parties, however, agreed not to exercise their right of appeal.

The stipulation and order marked a milepost in the fight of the Brewery Workers to regain their rightful place in the industry in New Jersey. The AFL Teamsters Union conducted statewide raids in 1946.

THE AFL unions signed "backdoor" contracts with the company before the Newark brewery, which began operations in January, 1951, was anywhere near full production. They are Beer Drivers, Helpers, Loaders, Unloaders and Washers Local 153, and Bottle Beer Drivers, Bottlers, Warehousemen and Helpers Local 843.

An AFL federal union, stooge for the Teamsters, was given a contract in the brewing department. It was kicked out by the Brewery Workers in an NLRB election last April. A contract providing for substantial wage increases has been negotiated.

The stipulation of the company and the AFL locals and the NLRB order goes a lot farther than throwing out the "backdoor" contracts.

The company also agreed that the board should order it to withdraw all recognition from the two locals; not to bargain with any union on behalf of its employes unless the union is certified by the NLRB; not to encourage membership in either Teamsters' local or any other union, nor to discourage membership in the Brewery Workers or any other union, by discriminatory hiring or continued employment, and not to interfere with, restrain or coerce its employes in the exercise of their right to organize.

The Teamsters' locals agreed —and are required under the NLRB order—not to cause or try to cause the company to encourage membership in them, or to discourage membership in the Brewery Workers or any other union, except as membership may be required under a union shop clause in a valid contract; trying to get the company to recognize them as representatives of any employes until they may have been certified by the NLRB, and not to restrain or coerce Anheuser-Busch employes in their right of self-unionization.

All three parties in addition were required to post the usual notices on plant bulletin boards.

The NLRB order was signed by Chairman Paul M. Herzog and Members Abe Murdock and Paul L. Styles.

Labor Fights Rule On Jobless Pay

CIO and AFL unions throughout Illinois are waging a campaign for revision of the unemployment compensation law so workers who refuse to cross picket lines can collect benefits.

The Illinois Supreme Court recently ruled that failure to cross a "peaceful picket line" constitutes participation in the labor dispute or voluntary unemployment. Such persons are denied benefits by the law.

The court's decision "takes away the liberty of a worker," said Frank Annunzio, director of the Illinois Dept. of Labor. "It should be the individual's right to decide whether he wants to cross a picket line."

Maybe Dixiegops Could Use This Bird As Emblem

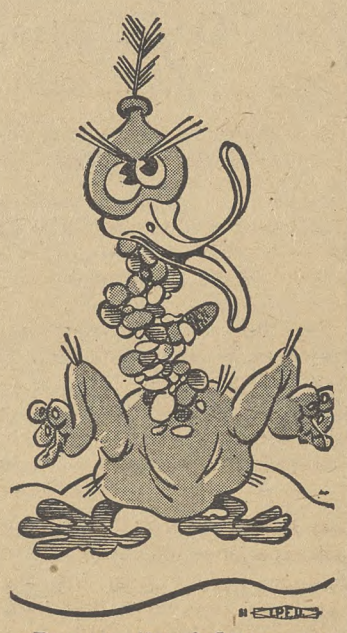
A YOUNG laundry delivery driver in Jackson, Minn., has an 18 cubic foot home freezer to present to his bride when he marries in the spring.

The American language has a new frightening word; and the Minnesota State CIO Council is being congratulated for doing a bangup job in farm-labor relations.

First the word: it's inflagoon. That a combination of inflation and goon, the most undersirable type of character in man, bird or beast.

It's the name given by Glen B. Olson to a "bird" displayed at 46 county fairs throughout the state under auspices of the Council's farm-labor relations committee. The freezer was his prize.

Of the thousands of names submitted in a "Name the Bird" contest, the State CIO executive board decided inflagoon was the most expressive.



Beware the inflagoon, as the author of "Alice in Wonderland" would have said, had he thought of it. (LPA)

CIO Action Halts Saginaw Income Tax

CIO officials in Saginaw, Mich., have won a battle not only for labor but for most of the city's population.

As a result of a suit brought by Malcom House and Edward Carson—two CIO Auto Workers officials—Circuit Judge Harry Boardman has ruled that the city's 1% income tax is unconstitutional.

The judge said that he would issue a permanent injunction against the levy — which the UAW officials requested — as soon as a proper petition is filed.

The tax was approved at an election last May, despite a ruling by the state's attorney general that such a levy would be unconstitutional. The battle will continue, as the city officials said they will appeal to the state supreme court.

Gas, Coke Seeks Boost

PRES. MARTIN WAGNER of the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers last week pledged the union to continue in 1952 the fight to win the employes of those industries a fair wage for their efforts.

The Chemical Workers, he said, will not lag behind other employes groups where wages and other benefits are concerned. Industry leaders, he added, have a "clear-cut moral obligation" to share their record profits with their workers.

In another statement, Wagner denounced universal military training as "a poorly camouflaged attempt to disguise a fascist-type piece of legislation under the cloak of an emergency."

1.5 Million Gain From Rent Lids

More than a million and a half Americans have benefited from new or stricter rent controls ordered into effect since last September, according to Tighe E. Woods, U.S. rent control chief.

Woods reported that 400,000 dwelling units have been covered by rent lids ordered in 58 critical defense housing areas.

CIO Position On MSA Given To Harriman

CONCERN lest the free world's rearmament plans depress still further the already too low living standards of the workers of western Europe was expressed to W. Averell Harriman, administrator of the Mutual Security Agency, by a CIO delegation at a recent luncheon.

Meeting with Harriman were Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president; Jacob S. Potofsky, chairman of the CIO International Committee and president of the Clothing Workers; Joseph N. Curran, a member of the committee and president of the Maritime Union; Michael Ross, committee secretary, and Robert Oliver, labor advisor to the MSA.

The CIO group and Harriman also had a pleasant exchange of views on other European problems, with emphasis on foreign economic and military aid under the Mutual Security Act. They likewise discussed U. S. trade union participation in the program.

Harriman agreed with the CIO group on the importance of the free trade unions in combatting communism in Europe.

The CIO views were left with Harriman in a memorandum that reflected serious concern that the emphasis on defense be without regard to economic problems and standards of living. The greatest possible stress, it said, must be placed on the economic and morale factors.

"IF OUR effort to help Europe save itself is to succeed," said the memorandum, "it must continue to have the fullest possible support of the workers and their free trade unions.

"To achieve this, clear and definite polices which help the workers to improve their standards and strengthen their free unions, particularly in France and Italy, will have to be established by their governments . . .

"We must encourage by all means at our disposal the development of free trade unions which can offer the workers the hope they need, and give them some place to turn when the Communist machine in which they are now trapped is destroyed."

The memorandum expressed the view that U. S. spending in Europe should be directed toward social and political objectives as far as possible without destroying the major objective of procuring materiel.

"But we would emphasize," it added, "that military items do not mean military strength if not backed up by the economic and spiritual support of the population . . .

"It is our opinion that equal recognition and concern should be held for the economic problems which the mass of the people within these countries will face as a result of inequitable sharing of national income, reduced civilian production, raw material shortages and inflation.

"AT THE same time, in certain countries — notably France and Italy and, to a lesser extent, Germany—we must place maximum pressure on governments to develop programs that will indicate to the mass of the people that out of this whole armaments program will come an opportunity for them to progress toward a more acceptable standard of living."

The Mutual Security Act itself contains the means, it said—the Benton Amendment, which says funds must be spent in such a way as to encourage free trade unions and discourage cartels.

To implement it, the memorandum proposed the transfer of funds within MSA sub-appropriations as authorized in the act for steps such as "attacks on restrictive practices, raising wage standards, developing low-rent housing programs and in other ways for the general strengthening of the free trade unions."

Joseph Cannon Is Dead At 80

Joseph D. Cannon, a veteran of the U.S. labor movement, died last week in New York City. He was 80.

Cannon had served as CIO regional director in Kentucky until his retirement six years ago. Son of a coal miner, he had been active in the labor movement for more than 50 years, beginning in the Western Federation of Miners.

During the 1920s, Cannon represented several AFL unions in Pennsylvania and also was a Socialist candidate for governor and U.S. Senator.

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

THE LABOR MOVEMENT lost one of its pioneers when Joseph D. Cannon passed away this week. Joe started his life long work in the labor movement as a member of the old Western Federation of Miners in the era of Moyer, Pettibone and Haywood.

His interest from the very earliest days was to help improve the living standards and welfare of working men. Joe joined the CIO in its initial stages. He favored industrial unionism and he lived to see the advantages it has brought millions of workers. In his memory we shall carry on.

The writer was in Newark, N. J., this past week and attended the executive board meeting of the New Jersey State CIO Council. Carl Holderman was obligated for another term as president of the council. The officers and members are to be congratulated on an outstandingly fine job done in New Jersey.

I also had the honor of attending the William Pollock testimonial dinner in New York. It was a fine affair honoring a man who has done much for his own union, the Textile Workers, and for the CIO.

THE UNITED STEELWORKERS of America are still battling the steel corporations to obtain those benefits the workers are entitled to. The case is now before the Wage Stabilization Board. The corporations are showing a complete lack of cooperation and interest in holding up their end in the defense effort that our country is faced with in this trying period.

Assistant Reg. Dir. Fullerton Fulton reports that in a representation election at the McQuay Norris Manufacturing Co., Navy Div., St. Louis, Mo., the workers favored the CIO Auto Workers by a vote of 161 to 100 for no union. Intl. Rep. Walter Shye was in charge of the election.

Reg. Dir. George Craig reports that in a representation election at the Jewish Family Service, Philadelphia, Pa., the CIO won out over the discredited DPOWA by a vote of 21 to 15.

Reg. Dir. John Easton reports that the Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union won a representation election at Borden's Dairy, Huntington, W. Va., by a vote of 21 to 11 for no union. There were 35 eligible.

ACTING REG. DIR. Henry Henry reports that in a representation election at the aircraft division plant of the Whirlpool Corp., Laporte, Ind., the workers favored the Auto Workers by the following vote: UAW-CIO 260, FE-UE 99, IAM-AFL 17, no union 1, challenged 11. Reps. Larue Lenard and John Hartsburg headed this UAW organizing drive.

Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports that the CIO Glass Workers won a representation election at the Heirlooms of Tomorrow Co., Manhattan Beach, Calif., by avote of 25 to 23 for no union. CIO Field Rep. Syd Rose handled the campaign.

Reg. Dir. Charles Cowl reports that in a representation election at the Florida Mattress Co., Tampa, Fla., the workers favored the CIO Furniture Workers by the following vote: eligible 94, UFWA-CIO 46, no union 38, void 1. Credit for this victory goes to Marvin Helm, president of UFWA Local 276, at Tampa, who conducted the campaign single-handed.

Evansville CIO Council Is 'On The Ball' On Welfare

THE EVANSVILLE, Ind., CIO Council has a committee that does battle for its members on the welfare and insurance front.

The aim of the joint welfare and insurance committee is to set up a workable welfare program for all CIO members in Vanderburgh County, according to Chairman Floyd Moss.

The council has adopted the new 120-day comprehensive Blue Cross-Blue Shield Plan which provides for expensive drugs and hospital professional services, and covers non-surgical cases.

The committee cooperates with doctors and local hospitals in raising the standards and in providing full services under prepayment plans.

The committee holds monthly meetings at which the problems range from workmen's compensation cases to hospital and surgical cases.

Each Evansville local also has its own welfare-insurance committees which serve its members in a multitude of ways.

An example of the work of the council committee is the arrangement which has been worked out with the Indiana Univ. Medical Center, Indianapolis. CIO members from the Evansville area formerly either were charged for blood transfusion or drew on the blood bank which Indianapolis union members were called on to replenish.

Under the plan, the center notifies the committee when blood is required, and the Deaconess Hospital, Evansville, draws blood from Evansville CIO members without charge—provided the blood does not have to be typed—and forwards it to the center.

IUE-CIO Ask Barkley To Head Bowling Green Lockout Inquiry

PRES. JAMES B. CAREY of the CIO Electrical Workers has asked 10 prominent Kentuckians, including Vice Pres. Alben Barkley, to act as a citizen committee to investigate the Westinghouse Electric Corp.'s lockout of 190 employes at Bowling Green, Ky.

"The Westinghouse Corp. illegally locked out its employes in Aug. 15," Carey said. "They followed this action by announcing on Dec. 4, during sessions sponsored by the U. S. Mediations and Conciliation Service that the plant would be closed permanently."

IUE Local 740 officers said recent developments include "a cruel hoax" by the company to mislead Bowling Green "into the false belief that the company would reopen the plant Jan. 2, if union members agreed to stop work stoppages during negotiations. In order to test the company's sincerity, our members signed the statements.

"Company officials, who had been using vague intermediaries to arrange this maneuver, then revealed that they had no intention of reopening the plant. Unsatisfied by its efforts to starve the Bowling Green workers into submission," the spokesman said, "Westinghouse is now using psychological warfare against the workers it has treated so shamefully for the past six months."

Carey said he believes the fact-finding report of the 10 Kentuckians will be helpful in clarifying responsibility for the Bowling Green dispute.

"IF 190 IUE-CIO members in Bowling Green were wrong to fight for the same contract provisions and working conditions enjoyed by other Westinghouse workers in IUE-CIO, then it is well that we in IUE-CIO learn that fact now," Carey declared.

"If Westinghouse management was arbitrary in violating its contract, locking out its employes illegally, and, finally shutting down its plant in the face of U. S. Mediation and Conciliation Service pleas for settlement, then I believe it would be proper that the public know the facts from a Kentucky Citizens Committee."

IUE-CIO has asked mobilization officials to refuse further rapid tax write-offs to Westinghouse in view of its abandonment of a usable plant, Carey said. The Defense Production Authority's Facilities Review Board has been asked to help locate a defense plant in the abandoned $1 million plant in Bowling Green.

"SPRUNG BY TWUA!" Simon Saller (left) manager of the CIO Textile Workers Central Jersey Joint Board, and Rudy Cammarata, business agent were bailed out of a make believe jail in New Brunswick by contributions of TWUA members to the town's Community Chest goal. High Court Plans McCarran Review

The part the high court will study is a provision that aliens against whom deportation orders could not be enforced, because the country of origin would not accept them, be required to go to some other country. It set jail terms of not more than 10 years for aliens who wilfully refuse to leave, or who fail to apply for the proper travel documents, within six months.

NMU Appeals WSB Paring Of Pay Hike

AUTHORITY of the Wage Stabilization Board over maritime wages is being challenged by the CIO National Maritime Union in the courts.

The NMU asked Federal District Court in Washington to set aside a WSB ruling which reduced a pay hike won by the union from Atlantic and Gulf ship operators last year.

The wage board, in a ruling last Sept. 19, cut a wage increase of 8% reached in collective bargaining down to 6.2%.

In appealing to the court, Herman E. Cooper, NMU-CIO counsel, argued the WSB should not have jurisdiction over seamen's pay because ships in foreign commerce "are not part of or within the United States or its territories and possessions" under the Defense Production Act.

A reversal of the WSB's ruling also would benefit other CIO and AFL maritime unions which had reached wage settlements similar to that of the NMU.

Jersey Firms Gyp Workers

Wage-hour investigators in the New York - New Jersey region found during 1951 that 21,119 workers had not been paid $1,429,446 rightfully due them, according to the annual report of Reg. Dir. Frank J. Muench.

By basing its investigations on past experience indicating where violations might turn up, the area found that more than 57% of the firms whose records were examined were guilty of violating the minimum wage, overtime or child labor requirements of the Wage-Hour Act, the report showed.

UWUA Wins 19c Package In NYC Area

THE CIO UTILITY Workers and the Consolidated Edison Co. Inc., reached agreement last week on a new contract giving a 19c an hour package to 23,000 members of three locals in the New York City area.

The agreement provides for a general wage increase of 11c an hour, a 10% boost in pension payments which will benefit some 4000 presently retired workers as well as future pensioners, and other concessions. Cost to the company was estimated at $10.25 million.

The pay boost will jump the average hourly wage of the physical and clerical workers who will receive it to $1.89 an hour, according to Patrick J. McGrath, regional director of the union and chairman of the negotiating committee. It puts Consolidated Edison employes "way out in front in the utility field," he said.

"We have won new gains for our members," he added, "keeping in mind their need to meet the increased cost of living and improvements of their standards. We are pleased to have set new goals for other utility company employes through real collective bargaining."

Most of the Consolidated Edison workers—23,000 of them—are members of Local 1-2. The others are in Local 1-3, representing New York Steam Co. employes, and Local 1-4, representing a group of subway and telegraph workers.

Strike Total Drops Sharply In 1952

Man-days lost in strikes last year dropped 40% under 1950, according to the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics. The number of walkouts declined by 5%.

Congress Returns To The Same Old Stand!

LIKE RIDERS on a noisy and giddy merry-go-round, the members of the 82nd Congress last week took up the reins where they had dropped them last October.

Except for a little more open politicking, the opening week of 1952 looked pretty much like the opening week of 1951's session. Even before the Congress has reconvened, its leaders were pressing for an early adjournment.

Its drab opening ceremonies—in which the long-winded Senate outtalked the House by 35 minutes—were appropriately marked with a repetition of last year's chronic absenteeism. Nearly 100 members of the House stayed away.

On the first day, too, the Senate Republican Policy Committee got in a political shot by voting unanimously against any increase in taxes. Dixiecrat leaders like Chairman George (D. Ga.) of the Senate Finance Committee dutifully supported this stand and came out against a tax boost.

Chairman Taft of the Senate GOP Steering Committee also announced that the group went on record in support of the much-needed legislation along the lines of the McClellan Bill which would improve congressional procedures.

He didn't refer to the fact that it was the opposition of his Republican colleagues which had blocked action on this measure at the last session. But he did say Republicans would offer amendments to it when it came up for action.

Taft's statement, and the Republican group's stand, followed a lambasting given Congress the day before by the National Committee for Strengthening Congress.

Robert Heller, Cleveland business engineer and chairman of the committee, said that the Dixiegop-controlled Congress lacks effective organization, leadership and fiscal policy. He accused it of wasting and "misusing" time.

On the second day of the session, President Truman again outlined for Congress the grave responsibility and heavy duty before it.

Since the legislators had ignored completely his warnings of a year ago, the President was placed in the position of once again having to call for practically the same program that he had requested in 1951—and in earlier years.

In grave and statesmanlike tones, Mr. Truman once again called for a "fair deal" for all Americans and described 1952 as a "crucial year."

He spoke deliberately and in a way which emphasized the great importance he attaches to the need for prompt enactment of a sound legislative program.

Congress applauded enthusiastically when the President promised to hand out firm punishment to government employes guilty of misconduct. But it remained silent when he added:

"I also intend to see that the honest majority of workers are protected against partisan slander and malicious attack.

"Congress can do a great deal to strengthen confidence in our institutions by applying rigorous standards of moral integrity in its own operations."

He suggested that Congress join him in a house-cleaning job by:

1. Finding an effective way to control campaign expenditures.
2. Protecting the rights of individuals in Congressional investigations.

Despite congressional plans to restrict the military budget to the size of present federal revenue, the President said that he would recommend further increases in the size of the military force, because they are essential to national security.

He indicated that he later would ask for the closing of tax loopholes by saying that "we must see to it that taxes are shared among the people as fairly as possible."

On the domestic front, the President warned that "we must continue to make progress if we are to be a strong nation in the years ahead."

He renewed his plea for the enactment of his civil rights program and attacked the Taft-Hartley Act as having "many serious and far-reaching defects."

Other recommendations included:

- Natural resources and power development.
- Decent housing and fair rents for defense workers.
- Federal aid to education and help in the construction of schools in defense areas.
- Aid to medical education, expansion of local public health services and national health insurance.
- Improvements, including increased payments, in the social security laws.
- Home rule for the District of Columbia and statehood for Alaska and Hawaii.

On the subject of inflation, the President said that he was holding the line on prices just as tightly as the law allows.

He said that Congress had made the stabilization law "full of holes" at the last session and reminded it that it has a "tremendous responsibility" for rising prices.

When he had finished, members of the Congress responded in expected style. Administration supporters praised the speech; Republicans and Dixiecrats were critical, calling the President's program "political."

For the rest of the week, Congress devoted itself to more politics.

"FAIR DEAL" program was modified in State of the Union message presented by President Truman (above) to joint session of Congress. He said "a very critical part" of the defense program still is "to keep down inflation."

'Come And Get Me!'

That, in effect, is what Gen. Dwight Eisenhower said last week about the 1952 presidential campaign.

—He's always been a voting Republican.

—He'd accept a "clear-cut call to political duty" if the G.O.P. convention nominates him.

—But he won't participate in a pre-convention campaign.

'Action—Not Timidity!'

Americans for Democratic Action welcomed Congress back with a warning that all members of the House and one-third of the Senate will be "on trial by election" this November.

ADA Chairman Francis Biddle called for roll-call votes on 12 specific measures. He said that "the American people have the right to demand that necessary legislation be enacted before the elections and not delayed by political timidity."

Watch What This Congress Does To You, Not For You!

By IRVING FAGAN

For Labor Press Associated

THE 82nd CONGRESS is back for its second session, having stuck you with $30 billion worth of inflation in the Defense Production Act, and $5 billion in tax dodges written into the 1951 tax law.

The Defense Production act expires June 30. There will have to be more revenue. Sen. George (D. Ga.), head of the Senate Finance Committee, has announced any more funds must come from a sales or transaction tax.

Rep. Doughton (D. N.C.), chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, has declared income and corporation taxes can't be boosted much more. Sec. of the Treasury Snyder has testified added revenue must come from "some new form of taxation." All these spell "sales tax"—which will hit the ordinary taxpayer.

During debate last June on renewal of the Defense Production Act, Sen. Lehman (D. N.Y.) said "it makes me feel we were betraying the people who sent us down here . . . that we are not devoting ourselves to protecting the great masses of our people, but we are moving to pass legislation which, far from reducing the cost of living, will inevitably increase and advance the cost of living."

Lehman then said "I do not believe the American people are going to permit us to be supine or satisfied. They are going to feel that we have not properly represented their interests; they are going to rise, I believe, with such a chorus of criticism of what we have done that it will force the Congress to take note of it."

Here is what the 82nd Congress did in the first session, to you instead of for you:

Instead of strengthening the 1950 Defense Production Act, it worsened the law with the Capehart and Herlong amendments, assuring higher profits for the manufacturers, wholesalers, and retailers.

So the 10% increase in the cost of living since June 1950 has cost consumers $2 billion for each 1% rise. Of the $35 billion authorized as of last May for defense, $7 billion was the cost of inflation.

With prices rushing up and wages merely creeping up, consumer goods sales dropped, inventories backed up, civilian production dropped, and more and more people lost jobs. That was made worse by poor planning in defense production.

Forecasts are that the cost of living will rise 2 to 5% this year. That's another swipe at your pocketbook, unless the Defense Production Act is strengthened, and a decent tax law is written.

The 1951 tax law handed more than $5 billion to the well-to-do, at your expense. Taxes went up for all—but for the average wage earner they went up 11.5%, while for the family with a $300,000 income the increase was only 3%. The Wall Street Journal admitted there were tax cuts in the law—for the wealthy—and that the law hit the little man much harder than the rich man.

The record was almost as dismal on defense and foreign relations. Congress was too late with too little. The penny-pinching on economic aid abroad, and especially on Point IV, may ultimately be recorded as the most terrible blunder the 82nd Congress made.

That's some of the record of the first session of the 82nd Congress. It was a betrayal of the people, Lehman said. He also predicted the people would not take it lying down.

The people—that's you.

—SEE PAGES 2 & 3

CONGRESS HAS ACTED TO PROTECT CORPORATIONS DURING DEFENSE EMERGENCY IT MUST ACT TO PROTECT WORKERS FAMILIES AGAINST HARDSHIP

BANNER SETS THEME: The banner (at the top of the page) sets the theme for the CIO-UAW Conference on Defense Unemployment at Washington. In the center photo, delegates are considering their eight-point program at the Statler Hotel, and the next day (lower photo) they went to Capitol Hill, where UAW Pres. Walter Reuther explains to congressmen the bill to aid the unemployed which the UAW is backing. At Reuther's right, Sen. Ferguson (R. Mich.); at his left Sen. Moody (D. Mich.). Stories and more pictures on Pages 2 and 3.

By FRED ROSS

It's that union train a-coming . . . coming . . . coming!

The CIO Auto Workers' union train called "End Unemployment" was on schedule pulling into Washington.

It started on time and it kept its schedule.

Delegates, staff members and visitors—eventually 800 strong—started to arrive on Saturday, Jan. 12, for the UAW's Conference on Defense Unemployment.

They came from hundreds of UAW-CIO locals all over the nation—from all the locals where there's an unemployment crisis now, or in prospect, because of production cutbacks and job layoffs in the auto industry due to defense demands, without parallel defense contracts for the auto plants.

The auto workers were on hand promptly at 10 a.m. Sunday for the opening session at the Statler Hotel. They were there promptly for later meetings that afternoon and evening and the next morning with congressmen in the Senate Caucus Room.

They were prompt because they were determined to use their time to get what they wanted—jobs for auto workers.

They wanted to adopt—and did adopt—an eight-point program (see adjoining column) to end unemployment in auto production centers which has thrown about 200,000 out of work already and threatens to make a total of 300,000 workers idle.

The government apparently was impressed by their determination. Three things happened while they were in Washington:

1. Comptroller General Lindsay C. Warren ruled that defense contracts could be awarded in the national interest to bidders in the areas of greatest unemployment—even though the bid were not the lowest.

(That was a long time in the making. Last September defense procurement officials were saying that it could not be done under the law—and was not in the national interest. Last October UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther urged the mobilization officials to put work where the workers are—irrespective of the highest bidder—and that policy was approved by the National Advisory Board on Mobilization Policy.)

2. A defense task force finally was set up. Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson said on Dec. 29—during a meeting with Reuther — such a group would be named to channel defense work into unemployment-stricken areas such as Detroit.

3. There was increasing bi-partisan support for the bill written by Sen. Moody (D. Mich.) and Rep. Dingell (D. Mich.)

This bill provides that if a governor certifies that there is a critical unemployment situation, federal financial help can be advanced to a state.

They listened patiently to the reading of Ford Local 600's substitute resolution—the heart of which was a demand for 40 hours' pay for 30 hours' work. Reuther said that was Communist-inspired at this time. He called it a good idea but not practical during this national emergency.

Then the delegates defeated it, with only 13 voting approval. Having got over that hurdle, they passed the administration's program without a dissenting vote

They also listened patiently to the explanation of Henry H. Fowler, National Production Administrator, and Arthur Flemming, manpower assistant to Defense Mobilizer Wilson, of the use of scarce materials in the defense economy.

They knew what they wanted when they arrived on schedule at the Senate Caucus Room at 9 a.m. last Monday. Their determination must have gotten around in the rarified air which is Washington. More than a score of congressmen—Republicans as well as Democrats—were on hand to face the crowd of determined UAW local leaders that filled the room to overflowing.

They got pledges of support for the federal aid bill from congressmen on both sides of the political fence and even those congressmen who did not want to commit themselves were careful to choose their words.

Up In The Wild, Blue Yonder!

The use by the Air Force of picture frames made of stainless steel containing an 8% nickel content was cited by UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther as an example of military waste of critical materials.

The frames are used in planes to instruct bomber technicians, Reuther said. He pointed out that nickel is highest priority material and the scarcest in the defense program.

U. S. Jobless Pay Bill Tops UAW Program On Layoffs

1. Enact a Federal Unemployment Compensation Bill: Defense mobilization policies are responsible for layoffs. Congress has acted to protect corporations—it must act now to protect laid off workers and their families.

2. Continue Essential Civilian Production Until Defense Jobs are Available: Keep people at work making the things we need. Rush defense jobs into civilian production plants to balance cuts in civilian production.

3. Dovetail Defense and Civilian Work in Existing Plants: Make defense jobs available earlier. Minimize the need for new machines and new plants by fully utilizing existing civilian plants for both defense and civilian production.

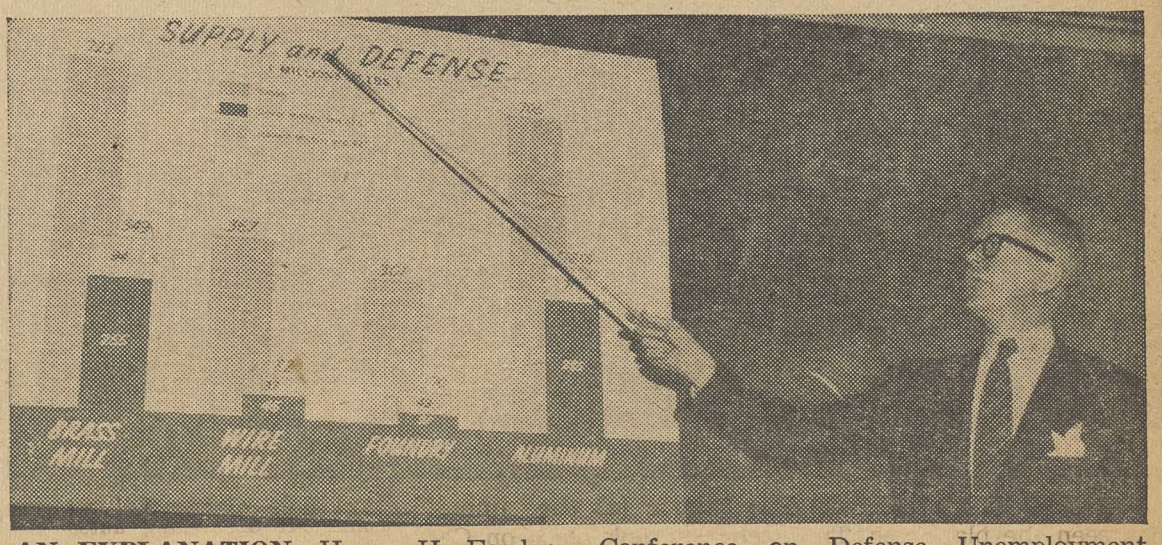
4. Place Defense Contracts on a Negotiated Basis: Stop saving pennies by competitive bids wasting millions of lost productive man-hours through unemployment. Put the defense jobs where the trained workers are available and waiting for work.

5. Break the Machine-Tool Bottleneck: Use the tools we have to make the tools we need. The automobile, truck and agriculture implement plants can build Bullards, mills, lathes, and other machine-tools.

6. Establish a Technical Task Force on Critical Materials: Stop the waste of critical materials which is robbing workers of their jobs. Save critical materials by finding satisfactory substitutes.

7. Initiate Nation-Wide Scrap Campaign: Collection of copper, aluminum and steel scrap in the backyards and alleys of America means putting people to work in the plants of America.

8. Free The American Economy From the Stranglehold of Monopoly and Scarcity: Expand basic productive capacity of copper, aluminum, steel, and other scarce metals. Stop wasting critical metals by non-essential plant construction.



AN EXPLANATION: Henry H. Fowler, National Production Administrator, uses a chart to show the delegates to the UAW Conference on Defense Unemployment where scarce materials go. Arthur Flemming, ODM manpower aide, also spoke.

'Stop Layoffs!'—Auto Workers Tell Congress

TALKS UAW LANGUAGE: Rep. Dingell (D. Mich.), who is such a favorite with the UAW that Pres. Walter P. Reuther said that he was going to propose that he be given a UAW honorary life membership card, addresses the conference delegates in the Senate Caucus Room.

ABSORBED: So absorbed were the delegates to the UAW Conference on Defense Unemployment that there were few smiles when the cameraman "shot" the picture. The conference was attended by the leaders of local unions where there is unemployment or the threat of layoffs.

'Take-It-Easy' Defense, Industry Chiefs Denounced By Reuther

INDUSTRY, the defense mobilization agencies and the military were castigated last week by Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers for mounting unemployment in the nation's auto production centers.

The UAW head said that efforts to get the government and the auto industry to be prepared for a defense emergency date back to 1945.

Reuther said that at that time he proposed a program to keep war plants on a stand-by basis, producing civilian goods but quickly adaptable to defense production.

Buttressing his speech with the pamphlet, "The Record of the UAW-CIO on the Job Front," especially prepared for the conference, Reuther recalled that the UAW also took a series of steps aimed at assuring the country of an edequate supply of basic materials.

He said that immediately following the outbreak of Korean hostilities, the UAW told "the auto industry that there was going to be unemployment. When we asked to sit down with industry, the latter refused."

Typical of the industry response, Reuther said, was a letter from Pres. George W. Mason of the Nash-Kelvinator Corp., which said:

"It does not appear that present military requirements will involve more than nominal cuts in steel supplies for the automobile industry. I do not believe it will seriously reduce production or employment . . . As for steel, I feel that the steel industry has done a remarkable job of production and expansion."

Reuther had no kind words for the machine tool industry.

"The machine tool industry," he said, "likes the bottleneck in machine tools, which the government procurement agencies aided in creating.

"The Air Force needs 90,000 jet engines, but orders have been placed for only half that number because of the lack of machine tools."

Reuther said that when he met with Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson, Dec. 29, he reminded him that nothing had happened to the offer of Intl. Harvester to make machine tools.

"It took eight months to clear the paper work for making machine tools at General Motors," Reuther added.

HE SAID he told Arthur S. Flemming, manpower assistant to Wilson, that he should make the military procurement agencies put work where the workers are.

But, Reuther continued, Chairman John D. Small of the Munitions Board had told him last Sept. 24. that placing defense work where the workers are "would not be in the interest of government." Reuther also quoted Small as saying that "under the law there was not much that could be done to make a contractor place jobs where the workers are."

Reuther said that he has continued to insist that sufficient material be alloted by the National Production Authority for a million passenger cars and and 250,000 trucks during the first three quarters of this year.

Drastic cuts of scarce materials needed in auto production could be made when defense production begins, he added.

He charged that during the past 18 months the "auto industry wanted to make autos as usual and get the profits that come out of making autos as usual."

The UAW head attacked the allocation of scarce materials to new plants.

'2 Governments In Washington'

"Shoulder patches don't give you the right to waste materials," Pres. Walter P. Reuther told the CIO Auto Workers' Conference on Defense Unemployment.

"There are two governments in Washington—the civilian and the military," Reuther said. "The military government does things the way it wants to do them.

"The military has a status that makes people reluctant to take it on. I tell you now that the UAW is going to call the shots as they are, and we're going to fight the military when it is wrong."

35 Bucks A Week Doesn't Go Far With 6 Youngsters!

IT'S TOUGH to be out of work—particularly in the Detroit area where there are no loose jobs around.

Tales of hardship told by local officers of the CIO Auto Workers attending the union's Conference on Defense Unemployment included that of Roosevelt Tiner, who was laid off by Plymouth Motors Dec. 17.

With six children—four of them at home—Tiner, a member of UAW Local 51, draws $35 weekly unemployment compensation, according to Pres. William Gerbe and Vice Pres. John Gibson of his local.

He has to pay $20 weekly for his living quarters, which leaves him $15 to support his wife and children. He had to go on welfare rolls to get additional money to provide for his family.

Tiner had difficulty in establishing claims for compensation and relief because shortly before he was laid off, he had moved from Detroit to Ferndale, which is in a different county.

To add to his troubles, he lost his Social Security card—which made it hard for him to establish his identity. For one week, Tiner was penniless and had to borrow from relatives and friends.

Multiply his case by 4200 who have been laid off since June 30 at this Plymouth plant, which normally employs more than 12,000 workers, and you get some idea of the problems, Gerbe and Gibson said.

How About It, 'Trud'?

The United Nations voted last week, by 33-15, to give its thousands of New York headquarters employes a pay raise of 7.5%.

The raise was recommended by Sec. Gen. Trygve Lie, in light of the sharply rising cost of living for UN employes. As every American union member knows, a wage boost to catch up with higher living costs is certainly justified—a fact which the Wage Stabilization Board has always recognized.

So it comes as a surprise and a disappointing shock that the United States vote was cast against the 7.5% raise. The U. S., it was pointed out, favored only a 5% increase for UN employes, and accordingly opposed the bigger increase.

While the matter of pay raises for UN headquarters staff may be a small item in relation to the bigger problems of the world, we feel that the U. S. delegation to the UN and the State Dept. itself rate a sharp reprimand for their penny-pinching attitude on this question.

But the U. S. delegation, unfortunately, was not alone in opposing a fair wage boost for UN workers. Great Britain and the Soviet Union also voted against.

Such a stand is to be expected, perhaps, from Britain's Conservative government. To some, however, it comes as something more of a surprise to find the Soviet Union—whose propaganda hails its regime as the spokesman for the workers of the world—opposing the interests of the UN workers on this specific issue.

We think the vote of the Soviet delegate to the UN against it was as bad as the vote of the American delegate against it. At the same time, we wonder whether the government-controlled unions of the Soviet realm disapprove their delegate's vote against a fair pay raise.

"Trud," the official organ of the Soviet trade unions, is not bashful in its criticism. That paper has repeatedly attacked the CIO and its leaders—most recently Pres. Philip Murray—and argued that American unions have no freedom of criticism in our democratic society.

Well, we have criticized the action of the American delegation at the UN.

We wonder when—or if—"Trud" will similarly criticize the similar action of the Soviet delegation. We're not going to hold our breath waiting, however, for "Trud" to bite the government hand that feeds it.

One Ward Heard From!

The GOP ward south of the Pyrenees has been heard from Gen. Franco's Radio Madrid, in a broadcast to the U.S.A., has come out for Sen. Taft for President. "True Republicans," said the fascist radio station, "want a fight."

Now all we need to know is how many delegates and how many votes the island of Formosa will have at the GOP convention.

The New Virginian!

'The Black Silence Of Fear'

The rejection of new ideas has been termed "an ominous trend in this nation" by U. S. Supreme Court Associate Justice William O. Douglas. Excerpts from an article by Justice Douglas in the New York Times Sunday Magazine follow:

THE DEMOCRATIC way of life rejects standardized thought. It rejects orthodoxy. It wants the fullest and freest discussions within peaceful limits, of all public issues. It encourages constant research for truth at the periphery of knowledge.

There have been areas of intolerance when the views of minorities have been suppressed. But there probably has not been a period of greater intolerance than we witness today.

This is alarming to one who loves his country. It means that the philosophy of strength through free speech is being forsaken for the philosophy of fear through repression. We are drifting in the direction of repression, drifting dangerously fast.

The drift goes back to the fact that we carried over to days of peace the military approach to world affairs. Diplomacy, certainly in our relations with Asia, took a back seat. The military approach conditioned our thinking and our planning. The military, in fact, determined our approach to the Asians and their problems. That has been a great tragedy in Asia. And the tragedy to us at home has been about as great.

We forgot that democracy in many lands is an empty word; that the appeal is hollow when made to illiterate people living at the subsistence level. We asked them to furnish staging grounds for a military operation whose outcome, in their eyes, had no perceptible relation to their own welfare.

Those who rejected our overtures must be Communists, we said. Those who did not fall in line with our military plans must be secretly aligning with Russia. This was the result of our military thinking, of our absorption in military affairs. In Asia it has brought us to the lowest prestige in our existence.

The concentration on military means has helped to breed fear. It has bred fear and insecurity partly because of the horror of atomic war. But the real reason strikes deeper.

Fear has many manifestations. The Communist threat inside the country has been magnified and exalted beyond its realities. Irresponsible talk by irresponsible people has fanned the flames of fear. Character assassinations have become common. Suspicion has taken the place of good will.

Fear has driven more and more men and women in all walks of life either to silence or to the folds of the orthodox.

This fear has sterotyped our thinking, narrowed the range of free public discussion, and driven many thoughtful people to despair. This pattern of orthodoxy that is shaping our thinking has dangerous implications. No one man, no one group can have the answer to the many perplexing problems that today confront the management of world affairs.

The mind of man must always be free. The strong society is one that sanctions and encourages freedom of thought and expression. When there is that freedom a nation has resiliency and adaptability. When freedom of expression is supreme, a nation will keep its balance and stability.

When we view this problem full face we are following the American tradition. The times demand a renaissance in freedom of thought and freedom of expression, a renaissance that will end the orthodoxy that threatens to devitalize us.

A Matter Of Language

Twenty Sarah Lawrence College students, including two Negroes, crossed the Mason-Dixon line to study present social, economic and racial problems in the South.

"The owners of five hotels in Knoxville advised us they could not accommodate the colored girls if they were avowed 'American Negroes' but that they would be accepted as 'foreign students,'" Prof. Edward C. Solomon, faculty adviser, reports.

Unwilling to compromise their anti-discrimination principles, the girls found a sixth hotel where Negroes not only were welcomed but where the management urged Prof. Solomon to "send us more business like this."

Behind The Headlines—

From Steel Labor

WELL, THE DEAR OLD American Iron and Steel Institute is at it again, handing out puffed-up figures about the average hourly earnings of Steelworkers—to fool the public at a time when your union is in collective bargaining negotiations.

Maybe you saw in the papers the other day that the Institute reported that as of September, 1951, the average hourly wage was $1.974.

And they do it without mirrors—but not without a little sleight-of-hand with a pencil therein!

First of all, you know, the American Iron and Steel Institute gathers all kinds of reports from 114 companies representing 95% of the iron and steel industry. Maybe it also gathers in the Top Brass of the industry to give the union a going-over—but that's another matter.

When not distorted, like that $1.97 hoax, their reports are valuable because they contain information about (1) the average number of employees; (2) average hours worked per employee; (3) total earnings of employees; (4) vacation payments; (5) average earnings per hour—and lots of other data, as the economists would say.

We will have to assume that the figures supplied by those 114 companies to the Institute are reasonably accurate, but the conclusions put out by the Institute are open to serious questions on several grounds.

Let's see if we can prove that charge. It apparently includes everything but the kitchen sink (all earnings on hourly-rated jobs, incentive earnings, overtime, night-shift premiums, holiday premium pay, reporting allowance and severance pay).

And also a figure said to represent vacation payments.

Let's say you make $1.81 an hour. You work the first two weeks of the month—that's 80 hours. You multiply 80 hours by $1.81 and your pay envelope will have in it $144.80. Right!

Now, let's say you are entitled to two weeks' vacation and you take the next two weeks of that month, maybe to take the family on a trip. Your vacation pay will be 80 hours multiplied by $1.81, or another $144.80. Right!

So you are paid a total of $289.60 for the month.

You're dead certain your rate is $1.81 an hour, but there, son, is where you are so wrong!

Here's the way the American Iron and Steel Institute figures your rate: Your total "take" for the month is $289.60. But you actually worked only two weeks—80 hours. The Institute divides only 80 hours (not 160 as it should) into the total of $289.60—and, now watch closely, your hourly rate is $3.62!

No, son, don't tear out your hair in amazement. We warned you that Institute sure knows the tricks.

Let's carry this example out for a year. Suppose the mill worked 52 weeks, 40 hours each week. That makes a total of 2080 hours. Multiply 2080 hours by your rate of $1.81 and the total is $3764.80. You were on the job every day, except for those two weeks' vacation.

You still know your rate is $1.81 an hour.

But the American Iron and Steel Institute drops those two weeks' vacation from its so-called calculations and divides by 2000 hours—50 weeks, 40 hours a week.

Now, let's suppose you were entitled to three weeks' vacation.

The Institute would drop those three weeks in its calculating—and now your hourly rate is $1.92!

See how easy it is to raise that average hourly rate by a little sleight of the pencil? For public consumption?

Naturally, we are going to let you explain to the Little Woman that you haven't been holding out on her.

A flood of letters from Steelworkers and their wives started us digging and our Research Dept. came up with the answer—exposing a shameful propaganda trick.

For instance, Mrs. W. M. Thurston of Portsmouth, O., wrote:

"Our local paper snipes at the CIO every chance it gets. A few weeks ago it said the average Steelworker's pay was $1.92. Last week it said it was $1.95 and tonight it was $1.97. My husband works at the Detroit Steel plant here in Portsmouth and has for 26 years. There must be some mistake.

"I know my husband makes $1.86, $1.90 and $1.92 according to the turn he has. He is an inspector and has nearly 27 years in the plant. Surely $1.97 cannot be the average."

Now you see, son, how easy it is for the American Iron and Steel Institute to arrive at almost any figure it wants?

How Far From Slavery?

'Jim Crow Is On The Run, But The Goal Is Too, Too Far Away!'

"Segregation still means more to much of the South than democracy," says Carl T. Rowan, reporter for the Minneapolis Tribune after a 6000-mile tour of the South. Excerpts from his article, "How Far From Slavery?", in Look magazine, reprinted by permission, follow:

I WAS BORN in the South, reared in the South, and but for a war that I was called away to help fight, I might have spent all my days in the South. But that war came, and I, a green, small-town Negro youngster from McMinnville, Tenn., got out of the kingdom of Jim Crow.

A few months ago, I returned to the South, where the color of my skin would count above all things. I knew that I would find the Negro better off in some big and some small ways.

AIDED by the federal courts, he has made great progress toward educational opportunity. Negroes now vote in tens of thousands. But complete equality of educational opportunity is still far away.

Still, the social and economic changes that were evident or looming had evoked talk of a "New South." I wanted to see if there was a New South for the Negro; and I hoped there would be, for this would mean new unity to bolster American democracy, caught in the shadows of its gloomiest hour.

But, on every hand, I found the dismal squalor that was ever present in my childhood.

Basically, this was the South that I had left. Sure, the democratic ideal was making headway. But I could see the confusion in children and the agony in old men, and I knew that the goal still was too, too far away.

I found that the South is gripped by an "inner conflict," an outgrowth of the Southland's "great debate" on the issue of racial segregation. Jim Crow is on the wing—fleeing the legal buckshot of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and other groups working for the cause of freedom. Jim Crow is dying, and all Dixie knows it. But there is conflict because evil men—wily men, with untold wealth behind them—have risen for a last-ditch fight.

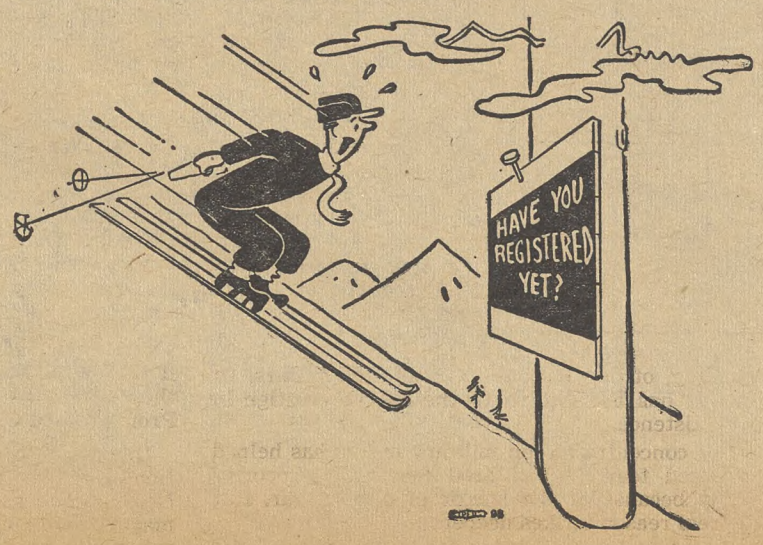
Segregation has been the South's god, and it has allowed no other god to come before it. But the federal courts have dealt mighty blows to this idol. Because of the courts, I could ride a railroad coach unsegregated from Miami, Fla., to Macon, Ga.

But there was so much that I still could not do. I had to get out of Macon because I tried to buy a paper in a white waiting room. There I learned that segregation still means more to much of the South than democracy.

In Washington, the nation's capital, I was told that I must stand to eat at a five-and-dime store counter, simply because I was colored and American. Had I been colored and of some foreign country, I could have sat.

In Birmingham, Ala., I found that I had been swept out of the main stream of American life. In that city, the capital of Jim Crowism, I found a steel curtain of hatred and fear created by a police force . . . with Gestapo-like efficiency.

From what I saw the barrier to a New South and a new life for the Negro lies in that "great debate": Is segregation to continue? The Talmadges, Byrnes and other spokesmen for the Old South say it must, that all this nation's bayonets cannot abolish it. I left the South doubting that the people of Dixie are so lawless.



WSB Puts Off Steel Hearing For 3 Weeks

ON REQUEST of steel management, the Wage Stabilization Board has put off for three weeks the special panel hearings on CIO Steelworkers' wage and contract demands.

A three-day comprehensive presentation by the union of its wage case wound up in Washington on Jan. 12.

The Office of Price Stabilization has called steel management to a meeting Jan. 29 to discuss possible price increases under the Capehart amendment.

Resumption of the hearings in New York was put off until Feb. 1, when the USA-CIO will wind up its case with a presentation by Murray Latimer, pension and social security consultant and former Railroad Retirement Board member, on the steel union's proposals for a guaranteed annual wage.

ON FEB. 4, steel management is expected to begin the case it told the WSB panel it would take three weeks to prepare.

Because of the lengthy recess, the 45-day "truce" granted by the Steelworkers' recent special convention in Atlantic City will be more than halfway gone by the time the WSB panel hearings begin again. That "truce" runs out on Feb. 24.

At the recent sessions in Washington, the introductory statement by USA Pres. Philip Murray that the Steelworkers' proposals for a 15c hourly general wage increase and other improvements are "economically feasible . . . and justifiable during this period of national emergency and international crisis"—was followed by:

• A comprehensive examination of "Wage Policy In An Expanding Economy," by Stanley H. Ruttenberg, CIO director of Education and Research. He said "higher wages drawn from ample profits or based on rising productivity cannot justify price increases." (For details on this report, see Pages 6 and 7.)

• A point-by-point presentation by Arthur J. Goldberg, union general counsel, of the union's "22 in '52" proposal, with emphasis that the WSB could approve all of them and still stay within limits of its present stabilization policies.

• A report by Otis Brubaker, the union's research director, that the steel industry could pay "reasonable and justifiable" wage and other economic improvements out of present profits without following its "customary practice of passing on the wage cost—and more—to steel consumers in the form of higher prices.

In the case of U. S. Steel Corp., Brubaker said, it would pay all of its 300,000 employes a 50c hourly increase, and still pay the cost out of its "excess profits."

Brubaker pointed out there has been a "continuing growth" of the steel industry with respect to capacity, production, productivity, net worth, sales and profits—but this growth has not been reflected in the real wages of steel workers.

Strike Warning Faces Alcoa

A warning that CIO Steelworkers will strike 10 plants of the Aluminum Co. of America on Feb. 1 was voiced last week by James G. Thimmes, union vice president.

The union represents 18,000 Alcoa workers.

America's Economy Is In Its Biggest E

Share In Gains Denied Labor

By GERVASE N. LOVE

A BROAD PICTURE of the expanding American economy in a period of transition was painted for the special panel of the Wage Stabilization Board hearing the demand of the CIO Steelworkers for a wage increase in basic steel.

It was etched by Stanley H. Ruttenberg, CIO director of research and education. It was highlighted by a detailed dissection of the factors influencing the economy which are making the lot of the average worker increasingly unenviable.

Ruttenberg's testimony could be boiled down to a few words: The average worker just isn't getting enough of the wealth he helps to produce.

His attack on the problem was made along six main lines. These were cited in an introduction and developed later, one by one. They were:

1. "A dynamic wage policy is essential to the continued growth of a dynamic American economy.

2. "Government expenditures for national security will continue high in the period ahead; but even at their peak, it is anticipated that the percentage of the nation's output required for national security will be less than half of the level of World War II.

3. "Wage policy in times of emergencies, as well as during normal times, must permit a flow of purchasing power sufficient to insure a balance between the nation's continuing ability to produce goods and services for domestic consumption and the ability of the families of the nation to buy them.

4. "Wage policy must not only permit wage rates to increase with the rising cost of living; it must also permit wage earners to share in the rising productivity of the American economy.

5. "No wage increase is inherently inflationary. On the cost side, higher wages drawn from ample profits or based on rising production cannot justify price increases. On the demand side, only the expenditure of income on goods in short supply has an inflationary effect.

6. "The inflation which has followed the Korean invasion was not generated by a 'wage'-price spiral. Prices spiralled, although wages lagged. The unrestrained operation of speculation and profiteering shot prices upward and wages have had difficulty catching up ever since. If inflationary pressures are to be effectively controlled, our economic stabilization program must be reenforced and the principle of equality of sacrifice must be fully applied."

In discussing the expanding economy, Ruttenberg asserted that an American wage policy "must be firmly rooted in the basic trends already manifest in the nation's economic life."

'Dominant Trend'

The "dominant trend" of the last few years, he continued, has been growth, a factor which is continuing into the future. The trend started in 1945. Its tempo has increased sharply in the last 18 months —a move the CIO finds belated, he pointed out, because it has been demanding such growth since 1946.

The growth is reflected in several ways, his testimony showed. These include the expansion of the gross national product and industrial production, expansion of basic industries, and record outlays for new plant and equipment.

They constitute an increase in U. S. resources, he went on, which cannot be used "fully or wisely" unless we develop a wage policy "which will assure the nation levels of consumption and distribution high enough to sustain full production and full employment in the years ahead."

"Whether we make full use of our economic resources to build a better life for ourselves and other peoples of the world," he explained, "will depend upon the general economic environment we shape during these critical years.

"It goes without saying that a vital feature of this environment will be its wage policy. For unless all those who work for wages and salaries have the wherewithall to help spur these vast resources into action, the promise of a great economic future will not be fulfilled."

Ruttenberg produced facts and figures for the panel which showed conclusively that the inflation bedevilling the country is not the result of wages or wage demands.

"For nine months from Korea to February-March, 1951, prices soared rapidly," he said.

"Scare-buying, hoarding, speculation and profiteering—financed to a significant extent by the relatively easy extension of bank credit—fired the engines of inflationary pressures. In anticipation of future shortages, businessmen engaged in large-scale inventory accumulation, betting on continued price rises and thereby creating artificial shortages.

"Prices started to jump immediately after the outbreak of the Korean War—long before any real shortages appeared and despite the rapid increase in industrial output. Price rises were compounded one on top of another, all along the line from the raw material level to the retailer. Most sections of the business community partook in this orgy of price boosts and profiteering."

There was a spiral of price rises after the start of the Korean action, he said, but no wage-price spiral. Wholesale prices of manufactured products soared, the hourly earnings of industrial workers "merely crept upward."

Prices, relatively quiescent between March and August, 1951, are on way up again with the help of a De Mobilization Act that does not co them—and any gains workers have have been lost, he explained.

And while business boomed in workers were losing ground, manufa ing profits both before and after were either setting new records or proaching previous peaks—far abov either instance, Congress' concept of mal profits." Dividends are following same trend, he said.

"The figures reveal that the ave worker in manufacturing industries not shared in the benefits of indu progress and productivity," Rutte stressed.

"Maintenance merely of the bu power of wages—especially in a peri rapidly rising output and productiv would mean that workers would not in the fruits of increased industrial ciency . . .

"Unless workers are permitted to in the fruits of industrial progress, share of the national income will de while the business and management will rise.

"Failure to allow wage adjustm based on industrial progress would, t fore, represent government interventi the distribution of national income t detriment of the worker and for the b of business."

Ruttenberg carefully analyzed cons

ncome, spending and savings and showed that the amount of money the average American in the low or middle income groups has to spend has grown less since prices started to go up.

This, in turn, has resulted in a lower volume of consumer purchases since the spring of 1951, he said, and comes about in the face of a record-breaking increase in personal income.

But the business boom and the jump in personal spendable income show an entirely different face when they are reduced to terms of constant dollars instead of current dollars, Ruttenberg said:

Less Spending Money

"Despite the higher levels of employment and economic activity during the first nine months of 1951 compared to the second quarter of 1950, the real rise in the total disposable income personal of the American people, measured in actual buying power, hardly exceeded 2%, only slightly more than the rate of rise in the population.

"The real volume of consumer purchases during the first nine months of 1951, despite the buying bulge of the first quarter, was more than 1% BELOW the volume of consumption of the second quarter of 1950, just preceding the Korean invasion."

Liquid savings, about which so much is said, are not in the hands of the great mass of people. They are largely concentrated in the bank accounts and safety deposit vaults of the people in the upper income levels, Ruttenberg showed.

How Inflation Can Be Cured

INFLATIONARY pressures are likely to become more intense in some parts of the economy this year, but wage increases which compensate for price rises and productivity increases will not be among them, the Wage Stabilization Board's special steel panel was told by Stanley H. Ruttenberg.

These pressures may develop, the CIO director of research and education explained, if military expenditures increase and civilian production is cut back further. If they do develop, he went on, "an adequate stabilization program, more effective than our present undertaking, is a prerequisite."

CIO Program

The CIO believes at least eight factors must be included in such a program, he said. They are.

Price control: Must include dollars-and-cents ceilings and eliminate automatic adjustments permitted by the Defense Production Act through the Capehart and Herlong amendments; repeal of the Butler-Hope amendment prohibiting cattle slaughtering quotas; restoration of ceilings on farm prices, and return to the Office of Price Stabilization of the right to insure production of low-price line consumer goods and to control commodity markets.

Taxation: Federal expenditures on a pay-as-you go basis at the contemplated present level of spending, with elimination of tax loopholes, a higher excess corporate profits levy, and higher income tax rates in the upper income brackets. ("The top 10% of our American family spending units—five million families—earned more, even after taxes, and spent more than the bottom 50%—25 million families.")

Rent control: "We must have a . . . program which maintains rent controls on all existing housing as long as the currently existing housing shortage continues."

Consumer credit controls: They must be flexible to permit varying down payments and installments, and must contain procedures to make essential consumer durable goods available on the basis of need should extreme scarcities develop.

Bank credit control: Legislative restrictions to stop expansion of bank credit when inflationary pressures build up.

Productive capacity: More expansion so we can supply all needs, civilian and military, with wage and price stabilization programs no more than temporary barriers safeguarding the economy until production catches up with demand.

Allocations and priorities: Continued authority to control critical materials to insure military production on schedule and to readjust the balance between military and civilian needs.

Savings: Not only as an anti-inflation weapon, but to broaden the public holding of government bonds.

Copies Available Of Report

Charts and reports on these pages are from the report "Wage Policy In Our Expanding Economy," which was part of the CIO Steelworkers' case presented to the Wage Stabilization Board hearing in Washington.

The report was presented by Stanley H. Ruttenberg, director of the CIO Dept. of Education and Research, and represented a joint effort by the department's staff.

Copies of the report are available at 50c each, with reduced rates for quantity orders, from the CIO Dept. of Education and Research, 718 Jackson Place, Washington 6, D. C.

Productivity Of Industry Climbs

THERE HAS BEEN a lot of talk lately about the increase in the productivity of American workers—an increase due to men as well as to machines.

How much has it increased?

Stanley H. Ruttenberg, CIO director of education and research, gave the answer to the special panel of the Wage Stabilization Board hearing the steel case.

It was an answer which insisted, too, that if higher productivity is not reflected adequately in pay envelopes, "the wage-earner's share of national income will drop, and there will be danger of recession if government expenditures diminish."

Ruttenberg showed that although long-range estimates of the increase are generally 2 to 3% a year, they usually include the retarding effects of great depressions and exclude the period of rapid expansion since 1941.

Actually, he demonstrated, the real gross product per manhour in private industry rose at the rate of 3 1/8% per year from 1933 to 1950, compounded annually, and for the years 1933-45, the annual increase was 4%—the same as for 1947-50.

". . . Productivity in 1952 can be expected to follow the above-normal increase of the last few years . . . This current trend should be reflected in wages," he told the panel.

Why Wait Longer?

The increase in 1950 alone, he said, was 6%. The 1951 figures are not yet available but indications are that they too will be above the long-term trend. And the current trends—what is happening now rather than 10 or 20 or 30 years ago—are the important ones, he maintained.

What factors have contributed to this increase?

"Advancing scientific knowledge," Ruttenberg said, "an improved labor force and expanded capacity have contributed to current productivity increases, both those that are reflected in recent figures and those that can be expected in 1952."

Neither employers nor the government, Ruttenberg warned, should underplay the potential and actual rate of productivity increase.

"If workers are not permitted to share in the gain," he said, "it will tend to be appropriated by the owners and not passed along to consumers in a period of shortages such as the present one.

NET RESULT of runaway prices, runaway profits and lagging wages for millions of Americans is that they can't make ends meet, that they turn to consumer credit which has ballooned from under $6 billions in 1945 to a level of nearly $20 billions today.

Profits High—

Textile Mill Owners Must Be Smoking 'Reefers' As They Moan!

THE SAD TALES of "shrinking profits" put out by the textile industry have been labelled as figments of the imagination by the latest economic report of the CIO Textile Workers.

Compiled by the TWUA research department and offered as a "basis for sound appraisal of the industry's policies," the report predicted 1951 profits will likely equal those of 1950, which were in excess of $1.3 billion.

Securities & Exchange Commission and Federal Trade Commission estimates were quoted as showing profit increases for the first half of 1951 of 64.5% before taxes and 30.2% after taxes over 1950.

Not only that, but the report also showed that the typical textile executive listed by the Securities and Exchange Commission in 1950 received as much salary in two weeks as the average textile worker earned in wages for a full year's work.

In scanning SEC's top management salary lists for 64 textile firms, TWUA found that 38 of 258 executives for those firms received $100,000 or more in 1950, with compensation going as high as $382,210 for Jacob W. Schwab, president of United Merchants and Manufacturers, Inc.

Each of the 258 individual executives was listed by SEC because his salary amounted to $25,000 or more and because his company's stock was listed in the New York exchanges, the report pointed out.

"In addition," the report said, "most of these executives enjoyed the benefit of substantial company contributions on their behalf into retirement funds."

Such contributions, according to the report, "frequently amount to more than $10,000 per person and are not included in compensation figures."

"These payments stand out sharply in contrast to the failure of the large majority of textile firms to adopt pension plans for their production employes," the TWUA report said.

The report showed, in contrasting workers' wages and company profits, that average hourly earnings of workers rose only from $1.189 in 1949 to $1.236 in 1950, while company profits (before taxes) on each man-hour of work almost doubled from 32c to 63.6c, equalling the post-war peak reached in 1947.

In showing the industry's profitability, the report pointed out the ratio of profits (before taxes) to net worth jumped from 12.6% in 1949 to 23% in 1950.

The amount of sales income spent on wages fell to 22.3% in 1950. That was well below the pre-World War II mark, 23.8% in 1939. But the stockholders' take jumped from 4.4% of sales in 1939 to 9.9% in 1950, before taxes, and from 3.4% to 5.3%, after taxes, the report said.

As for gains since the outbreak of the Korean war, and the resultant boom, the report showed spectacular gains in all branches of the industry.

"While all branches of the industry partook in the post-Korea profit-taking, the rayon, woolen and worsted, knit goods, dyeing, and finishing groups enjoyed the sharpest gains," the report concluded.

'No Contract, No Work,' TWUA Tells 20 Firms

THE CIO TEXTILE Workers last week served notice on some 20 woolen worsted firms that no contract means no work.

Led by the American Woolen Co.—the giant of the industry with 24 plants—the score of mills have notified TWUA that contracts which expire Mar. 15 would not be renewed.

Thirty northern cotton and rayon companies operating 45 mills and employing more than 35,000 workers will attempt to cut wages by reopening their contracts Mar. 15, Mariano S. Bishop, the union's cotton director, said last week.

American Woolen two weeks ago—just before TWUA held its woolen and worsted conference—notified the union of its intention to cancel its contract.

"It is hardly necessary for me to repeat what I said at our woolen and worsted conference in New York—that any attempt to reduce the wages or other benefits won for the workers by our union is doomed to fail," said John Chupka, the union's woolen and worsted director.

Chupka said, "the mills that have cancellation notices employ less than half of the workers who are under TWUA contracts in the industry. Woolen and worsted mills employing at least 35,000 workers have assured us that they intend to allow the present agreements to renew for a year."

The conference voted at its meeting Jan. 6 to allow all contracts to renew for a year.

A strike is not as likely in the cotton and rayon industry because the contracts which have another year to run provide a wage reopener Mar. 15—with the issue to go to arbitration if the parties do not agree.

"Needless to say, our union will not consider for a moment any reduction is wages," Bishop said. "I am shocked that these employers are trying to push the earnings of their workers down, while everything else is going up.

"It is true that employment has been poor, during the last few months, in the industry as whole. Yet workers have been the principal sufferers; the employers, as their annual statements reveal, have earned substantial profits for the year."

The TWUA's northern cotton and rayon conference — representing 95,000 workers—voted on Jan. 5 not to reopen contracts Mar. 15.

Prison Labor Contracts Hit In Congress

TWO NEW ENGLAND members of Congress acted last week to support the recent protest of the CIO Textile Workers against the use of prison labor to fill government textile needs while serious unemployment exists in the industry.

Rep. Nelson (R. Me.) introduced a bill (H.R. 5947) to prohibit federal officers and agencies from entering into contracts which are to be performed by prison labor.

On the same day Rep. Seely-Brown (R. Conn.) inserted in the Congressional Record the text of the resolution on Prison Industries, Inc., which the Executive Council of the CIO Textile Union had adopted.

"It seems incredible to me," he declared, "that the textile workers of my district, who are presently facing a very slack period, should be forced into this unnatural competition with a government corporation."

Florsheim Shoe Strike Settled

More than 2500 members of the CIO Shoe Workers went back to work last week in plants of the Florsheim Shoe Co. in Chicago and Danville, Ill., after approving a settlement that ended a 72-day strike.

Union officials in Chicago said the agreement provided a wage increase of 6c an hour and included a provision giving union members 400 hours vacation credit for the strike period. The contract runs for two years with a wage reopener in nine months, they said.

Security? That's What They Sold . . . And Lacked!

INSURANCE AGENTS who work for the Citizens Life & Casualty Co. of Los Angeles have been selling security to policyholders for years.

Recently however, they discovered—at least seven of them did—that they had no security themselves.

They became aware of the fact when they joined the CIO Insurance & Allied Workers Organizing Committee and asked for company recognition. Result: they were all fired.

The company has refused to comply with any rulings of the National Labor Relations Board in the matter and the district office, the home office and the business office of the company are now being picketed.

As a result of the intervention of the NLRB's general counsel a formal hearing has been scheduled in Los Angeles Jan. 23. The pickets are being assisted by IAWOC Local 83.

U.S. Snafu, Business Greed Hit For Copper Shortage

THE SERIOUS copper shortage "typifies government ineptitude and corporate greed and narrowness," James B. Carey, president of the CIO Electrical Workers, charged last week in a conference called by the National Production Authority of unions whose industries use copper.

The continuing shortage was blamed by Carey on "the failure of the government to push vigorously for a program of expansion in production, and the narrowness and greed of the big copper producers in demanding outrageous conditions as the basis for their expansion."

The situation is aggravated by "the lack of attention given this problem by the Office of Defense Mobilization," he said.

Commenting on the drop in production by Anaconda Copper Mining Co., Carey said, "we have the strange spectacle of the company getting valuable tax privileges of more than $50 million, not to expand copper production, but to go into the production of aluminum."

Because mobilization agencies are considering abandonment of allocations on the basis of usefulness and necessity, Carey said, "several of the less essential industries" will receive more copper—but new regulations will cut the amounts of copper allocated to makers of household appliances such as ranges, refrigerators and sewing machines.

Carey called for assignment of defense contracts in copper-using industries to prevent dislocations in employment.

Other recommendations: negotiated contracts to speed up contract allocation; more direct consultation with affected unions; multi-product companies required to shift to defense work, and the Small Plants Corp. should establish working arrangements with unions.

Runaway Shops—

An Industrial South And An Agricultural North?

(Last of three articles.)

By MILTON PLUMB

INDUSTRY by industry, and big company by big company, American business is using defense mobilization as a gravy train for financing new runaway factories built chiefly "to offset the growing power of labor."

This anti-labor blueprint for the defense economy, which Charles E. Wilson helped other industrialists draw up three months before he became Defense Mobilizer, today is being applied even more intensively despite mounting criticism.

Some segments of business itself now recognize the many harmful effects that the big industry plot is having upon both defense production and the nation's over-all economy, and are openly opposing it. Nevertheless, the abuse of this union-fighting racket last week reached a new high.

An emergency convention of CIO Auto Workers officials met in Washington to demand that the government do something about unemployment in Detroit and other auto centers.

UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther criticised the lack of over-all planning in defense production and the failure of mobilization agencies to follow President Truman's directives to place defense orders in areas with idle plants and workers.

Assailing the granting of certificates of necessity for the construction of non-essential plants, Reuther cited several examples. One was a new factory built by General Motors in Louisiana, where skilled labor is so scarce that shrimp fishermen are being trained to do the technical work.

Many Jobless

Meanwhile, many thousands of GM's skilled—and union—workers are unemployed.

But even as Reuther spoke, the Defense Production Administration released a list of new certificates of necessity allowing rapid tax write-offs on new facilities costing more than $909 million.

On this list were 15 certificates awarded to GM for $40,629,288 worth of additional new factories!

The Ford Motor Co. got three certificates for facilities costing $27,265,959. Only $485,000 of this will be used for new facilities at the main Dearborn, Mich., plant, where Ford's payroll has shrunk by 20,000 in the last year.

Announcement of these awards followed strong protests by leaders of the auto industry that it was being discriminated against in the placing of defense orders.

To provide the steel and other scarce materials needed to build the new runaway plants, DPA cut auto production sharply this year.

The new certificates will more than offset the blow of the cutback—profitwise—for the firms involved.

In response to union protests about growing unemployment, DPA Administrator Manly Fleischmann, whose agency approved the certificates, saw fit to warn against the "voices heard in the land" demanding changes in defense policies.

The nation should "accept temporary civilian unemployment and other dislocations as the 'price' of mobilization," he indicated.

Except for the comparatively minor expansion at Dearborn, the more than $86 million worth of new plants the auto firms will build under the new certificates are all outside the Detroit area and mainly in small communities.

Move To Texas

These grants come on top of many others made earlier. GM, for example, previously had set up a large new factory in Arlington, Tex.

The runaway shop aspect was underscored by Michigan's Gov. G. Mennen Williams. He pointed out that the industry earlier had obtained steel and copper priorities by pleading that they were needed to relieve unemployment in Detroit.

But the material obtained in this way actually was assigned to out-of-town plants at New Orleans and Newark, Del., the Governor said.

By June, one out of every 10 workers in the Detroit area is expected to be unemployed. And last week, a report to the State Industrial Commissioner of New York said that unemployment is rising so fast that the State would have a fourth of the nation's jobless by midyear.

Other industries besides auto with serious unemployment problems have also used the runaway shop racket to build new plants in low-wage, non-union areas. The lumber, shoe and clothing industries have also intensified their migrations, although they have not been able to work the tax write-off racket to any considerable degree.

The textile industry has been granted 43 certificates for new plants worth more than $28 million. But New England plants are being rapidly shut down.

Last month, for example, A. D. Juilliard & Co., Inc., announced the closing of a mill near Utica, N. Y. The company now has three mills in the South.

Then, with even more skilled textile workers unemployed in Utica, the Utica Mohawk Cotton Mills prepared to move to Clemson, S. C., where it will have to train unskilled workers.

Prompt action by the CIO Textile Workers was all that prevented DPA from assigning scarce materials to Textron, Inc., for three new southern plants.

Textron, which embarked on a $12 billion expansion and relocation program in the South and Puerto Rico in 1948, said last month that it would close mills at Nashua, Manchester and Suncook, N. H., to move to Meridian, Miss.

The chemical industry, too, has followed the runaway shop pattern in its use of rapid tax write-offs to build new plants. A study of certificates awarded to chemical companies having contracts with the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers up to the time of the moratorium last fall showed that nearly $125 million were for new plants in the South.

North Gets Few

In contrast, New England got only one new plant costing a pitiful $23,800 and the western states got less than $19½ million. All of the other certificates for the East and Middle West—amounting to $110 million—were for plants in small, out-of-the-way places.

The paper industry, which has worked the tax write-off racket for more than $50 million, also is locating nearly all of its new plants in the South.

The International Paper Co., which had a net profit of $60 million last year, has just opened a new $1 million plant in Atlanta, Ga. The Inland Container Co., now operating four plants north of the Mason-Dixon line, has also obtained certificates for new facilities in Georgia.

Note the totals by industry: Textiles $28 million, chemicals $2 billion, and paper $500 million.

Then consider the corresponding totals of certificates granted these defense industries: Explosives (a separate classification not included under chemicals) less than $3 million; ammunition, except small arms, $23 million; small arms ammunition, $2 million; small arms $11 million, and guns, howitzers, mortars, etc., $9 million.

The only justification for the granting of these rapid tax write-offs is that they are intended to bring about the defense expansion necessary to make America secure.

Yet, if you've read those totals carefully, you'll realize that the business men dominating the defense program have approved more certificates for new runaway factories in the already over-supplied textile industry than they have for each of these industries producing war material.

And that total of $500 million for new paper plants compares with a mere $77 million for factories to make tanks and tank components and only $64.5 million for machine tool expansion.

The lack of machine tools is probably the most serious bottleneck in the defense production picture. And tank production, despite the urgent need for tanks in Korea, is far behind schedule.

While they were bringing about this fiasco by fostering the runaway shop movement, the business men staffing the defense agencies have screamed at every strike threat, despite the fact that there were fewer walkouts in 1951 than in any year since the war.

By their own strike against labor, however, these business men have brought about an unemployment crisis which in Detroit alone will cause more time lost in the first six months of 1952 than strikes are likely to cost the entire country in the next three years.

'Tax Bonanza' Still Flowing

A jump of $909 million in the total of certificates of necessity awarded by the Defense Production Administration announced last week brought the total "tax bonanza" to more than $12.5 billion.

The total includes the fast tax write-offs granted on 5443 new or expanded facilities amounting to $11,514,186,743. Other certificates which DPA has approved without specifying a definite amount for costs are estimated to total another billion.

American taxpayers will foot the bill for most of this.

Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson's own industry—electrical manufacturing—has led in the use of certificates of necessity to get new runaway plants at the expense of American taxpayers.

Wilson's own company—General Electric—had obtained more than $62 million worth of such certificates up to last Aug. 18. Nearly all, of course, were for plants located in smaller towns.

At the same time, GE had requests for additional certificates pending on new facilities estimated to total $85 million.

Not a single application from the company had been denied.

The strike of CIO Auto Workers at GE's Carboloy plant in Detroit over the runaway shop issue is continuing.

Earlier articles have told how Westinghouse, with $100 million worth of such certificates for new plants, had closed down a modern factory at Bowling Green, O. in a dispute with the CIO Electrical Workers, and how eight new battery plants are being built at a time when workers in existing battery plants are being laid off for lack of work.

What The Governor Of Rhode Island Said To Various, Assorted Dixiecrats

WHAT THE GOVERNOR of Rhode Island said recently to the Governors of various southern states was really something!

In his annual message to the General Assembly, Gov. Dennis J. Roberts charged that raids are being made on New England industries by "certain states" and warned that New England was prepared to "fight back with all the skill, energy and resources at our command."

Declaring that his proposal for raising $1 million for the construction of modern industrial plants in the state "means war," the Governor said the state must "be prepared to invest whatever amount necessary to make Rhode Island payrolls and profits strong and secure in the years ahead."

"We do not like the conditions of competition under which we are forced to fight," he said, "but fight we will, and win we will."

He called his proposal "the first shot in an economic counter-attack against the raids being made on our industries by certain states."

"These states, by one means or another have been luring manufacturing plants which in the long run will flourish best in the skilled industrial climate of New England in general, and Rhode Island most particularly," he said.

The Governor's action was looked upon as the direct result of efforts by the CIO Textile Workers and other New England labor groups to alleviate the serious unemployment problems arising from Rhode Island firms moving into runaway mills provided by southern states and municipalities.

Gov. Herman Talmadge of Georgia answered Gov. Roberts by declaring that "if he wants war we'll be glad to give him war."

CIO Appeals To High Court On Chiselers

THE CIO IS seeking to have the Supreme Court review appellate court decisions under which more than 50 alleged violators of Walsh-Healey Act escaped fines aggrevating hundreds of thousands of the dollars.

The Walsh-Healey Act provides for the minimum pay and prohibits employment of girls under 18 and boys under 16 in contracts with the government. Under the lower court rulings the employer goes scot free if the government is unable to bring him into court within two years.

The government contends that the two-year limitation should begin only after the cases reaches the court, but the Supreme Court has refused to review the lower court decisions. Because the Labor Dept. is short-handed, years are required to bring a case to court.

This loophole has enabled many chiseling employers to employ under-age children.

The government has asked the high court to reconsider, and Arthur Goldberg, CIO general counsel, has requested the right to file a brief in the case as a friend of the court.

CWA Asks General Wage Hike As Talks Open With A.T.T.

CIO COMMUNICATIONS Workers last week opened 1952 bargaining with the Bell System to "restore some rightful balance" in wages and working conditions for the nation's telephone workers. CWA began contract talks covering about 50,000 phone workers under six contracts with Western Electric, manufacturing subsidiary of the Bell System, and two operating companies, Michigan Bell and Ohio Bell.

A "reasonable wage increase" heads the proposal presented by CWA, announced Joseph A. Beirne, union president and a CIO vice president.

Such a boost, he said, is necessary to offset "drastic and widespread price increases," to provide telephone workers some of the benefits of increased productivity in the industry, and to restore "some rightful balance" to the economic position of Bell employes.

As the talks began, Beirne said he hoped that the Bell System (formally the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., the nation's biggest monopoly) would drop "the kind of hostile bickering which has characterized their past record in labor relations" and "sit down with CWA in straightforward, constructive negotiations."

Along with the general increase, the phone union also seeks improvements in seniority rights, grievance and arbitration machinery, discharge and demotion items, and certain local conditions.

The contracts now under bargaining expire on Feb. 15, except the Ohio agreement which runs to Feb. 25. By mid-year, CWA-CIO will be in negotiations for all of the 314,000 Bell employes which it represents.

JOSEPH A. BEIRNE

In support for the negotiators, the telephone union has begun a nation-wide "build the membership" campaign aimed at signing up free riding non-members.

On the organizing front, CWA has petitioned the National Labor Relations Board for a representation election at the Kearney, N. J., plant of Western Electric.

SEVEN thousand of the 10,000 Kearney workers have signed CWA cards. A contract at the Kearney plant is held by the AFL Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, a building construction craft union which at various times has opposed CIO telephone workers, utility workers, electrical workers and broadcast engineers.

CWA last year defeated the IBEW in two Western Electric plants in Indianapolis, and was recently certified as bargaining representative after futile protests by the AFL union.

In New York City, CWA has petitioned for a vote among 4600 local employes of Western Union Telegraph Co. It is challenging the American Communications Association, which was expelled from CIO as Communist dominated.

Jeff Hickman Of Texas CIO Dies In Crash

JEFF HICKMAN, secretary of the Texas CIO Council and a veteran leader in the CIO Oil Workers, was killed in an auto-train crash at Sealy, Tex., Jan. 16.

Hickman had been secretary of the state CIO council for more than four years. During that time it almost doubled in membership.

He joined OWIU-CIO in 1933 and was one of the key leaders for many years in that union's Pasadena, Tex., Local 367, which long has been recognized as one of the largest, strongest and most militant in OWIU. He served the local as president for a year and as secretary for three years.

Hickman became executive secretary of the state council in 1947 and devoted most of his attentions to building a strong political action movement in Texas, where 100,000 CIO members are scattered over a 1000-mile-wide area.

Potofsky Named

For the second year, Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers has been named co-chairman of the National Labor-Management Organizations Committee for Brotherhood Week, to be observed Feb. 17-24.

GOP Demands Probes As Usual; 'Home Rule' Filibuster In Senate

THE SECOND ROUND of what Sen. Moody (D. Mich.) has called the "'52 fang-and-claw political fight" really got under way in Congress last week.

Highlights of the week's "action" in Congress.

1. The Senate spent nearly all of the week listening to a half-hearted Dixiecrat filibuster against a bill providing home rule for the District of Columbia.

2. The House beat back the efforts of the Dixiegop "wrecking crew" led by Reps. Taber (R. N.Y.) and Cox (D. Ga.) to prevent a vote on a bill granting a flat 10% pay boost for the armed forces, and finally passed it by a 269-68 margin.

President Truman, meanwhile, continued to press without compromise for action on his "Fair Deal" and "mutual security" programs when he submitted his annual economic report to Congress (see Page 12). He again insisted upon a fair tax law that would bring in about $5 billion more revenue, chiefly by closing present loopholes.

The President acted on charges of corruption in government by submitting a plan to reorganize the Internal Revenue Bureau and place collectors under civil service. But Congress was cool to the loss of patronage involved.

Other politicking which made the headlines last week:

- Dixiecrat Senators met in the office of Sen. Byrd (D. Va.) and drew up plans to prevent any change in the rules which permit them to filibuster to death all civil rights legislation.
- Republican leaders announced that they would continue to oppose any change in the Defense Production Act that would make it easier for the President to control inflation.
- Taber, ranking Republican on the House Appropriations Committee, said, without waiting for a look at President Truman's 1953 budget, that the government payroll should be cut "much deeper" than 10%.

The week also brought a host of Republican proposals for new "investigations." These included:

SEPARATE proposals by Rep. Kean (R. N.J.) and Rep Keating (R. N.Y.) for investigations of Atty. Gen. J. Howard McGrath, who has been placed by Truman in charge of a drive against racketeers. One other Republican, Rep. Curtis (Mo.) demanded that McGrath be impeached.

A resolution by Rep. Meader (R. Mich.) for a 10-member committee to investigate the executive branch of the government.

The investigation to end all investigations was proposed by Rep. Sheehan (R. Ill.) He wants a special committee to explore the possibility of annexing Canada to the U. S.

(Most of the men making these proposals for more probes at considerable expense to the government are in the group screaming for "economy" and opposing tax increases.)

CIO Plans New PAC Push In Connecticut

DELEGATES to the 14th annual Connecticut CIO convention, representing more than 125,000 CIO members in the state, laid out an intensified political action program for 1952.

Speakers headed by Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers hammered home the point that labor, in Connecticut as in every other state, has its work cut out if the forces of reaction are to be defeated in the coming elections.

Reuther declared that 1952 will be the decisive year in the battle of democracy versus communism and said the struggle "cannot be won by the free world unless America has leadership with vision."

"The labor movement is the bulwark in the defense of freedom against communism because we wage the fight where it counts —on the bread and butter line," he said.

Sen. McMahon (D. Conn.) critized the techniques employed by the Republicans in their efforts to highlight corruption in the federal government. He pointed out that the wild accusations hurled at the administration were trivial compared to the scandals of the Harding administration.

Referring to the campaign for Gen. Eisenhower, he said:

"Those who long to save the Republican party from itself must face the hard and uncomfortable fact that a Republican occupying the White House, no matter who he is, could not control his party without bowing to the wishes of the dominant wing—without yielding to the Jenners, the Tafts, the Capeharts, the Cains and the Malones."

Sen. Benton, Connecticut's other Democratic senator, who has introduced a resolution calling for the expulsion of Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.), told the delegates he would continue his efforts to unseat the Wisconsin Republican.

He pledged to work for a stronger Defense Production Act in Congress that will control inflation—"one that does not have a built-in Capehart inflationary booby trap."

MITCHELL Sviridoff, who was reelected to his fifth consecutive term as state CIO president, declared the reelection of Sen. Benton would be "our Number One job in 1952."

State disability and sickness legislation were called for, in addition to improvements in Connecticut's minimum wage, unemployment compensation and workmen's compensation laws.

On the federal level, delegates voted to join the national CIO in urging workable price control, amendments to the "soak-the-poor" tax law, and changes in defense mobilization to bring "real and actual equality of sacrifice into the defense effort."

Another resolution voiced opposition to publishing the names of persons on relief roles.

The convention lauded the past action of the state AFL in cooperating in various phases of labor unity and called for continued joint action in the future.

John Driscoll was relected to his 13th consecutive term as secretary-treasurer and Joseph Peraro was named assistant president.

Conroy Named Labor Attache

Pat Conroy, former secretary-treasurer of the Canadian Congress of Labor, last week was appointed labor attache at the Canadian embassy in Washington, a new post.

Conroy resigned in an inter-union political dispute during the CCL convention in Vancouver, B. C., last September.

By Allan S. Haywood

THE CIO again last week received sad news of the deaths of two men who had contributed much to furthering the cause of the CIO. Gola Whitlow, CIO staff representative for 12 years, passed away at his home in Benton, Ill. Gola, from his earliest years, was connected with the labor movement. He was an ex-miner, and despite long sieges of illness, did much to help make CIO bigger and stronger.

The other death was that of Jeff Hickman, secretary-treasurer of the Texas CIO Council who was killed in an automobile accident. Brother Hickman was a capable man and had done much to further the cause of the workers and CIO in Texas. Our sympathies go to the families and friends of these two men.

THE BATTLE against unemployment in industry continues. The defense program has caused cut-backs in materials that have caused unemployment among our members of the Auto Workers, Textile Workers, Clothing Workers and others. If further cut-backs and shortages occur, they will cause more widespread hardship among the workers. The CIO is doing everything it can to help in this situation.

The writer met with Dir. John Riffe and his associate officers in Atlanta, Ga., to review the accomplishment of the CIO Southern organizational drive and to make plans for more and more organizing in the South. Dir. Riffe and the organizing staff have performed a good job in a very difficult situation.

Reg. Dir. Patrick McGrath, CIO Utility Workers, reports great gains made in an agreement with the Consolidated Edison Co. of New York. This agreement was a package job of 20c an hour and included a cost of living increase of 11c an hour. It increased the pensions of those people retired in 1951 to $175.48 per month from $130.15 under the 1944 pension plan.

There is no substitute for hard and diligent effort in furthering a cause such as ours:

Brave men who work while others sleep,
Who dare while others cry;
They build a nation's pillars deep,
And lift them to the sky.

NATL. DIR. RIFFE of the CIO Organizing Committee reports that the following representation elections have been won in the South: Key Manufacturing Corp., High Point, N. C., CIO Furniture Workers 16, no union 3; American Furniture Co., Martinsville, Va., Furniture Workers 533, no union 500; Wilmington Linen Service, Wilmington, N. C., CIO-Local Industrial Union 43, no union 10.

At Alumni Trim, Inc., Rome, Ga., the company recognized the CIO Auto Workers without an election.

Reg. Dir. Ben Henry reports that in a representation election at the Cardiff Gypsum Co., Fort Dodge, Ia., the workers favored the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers by a vote of 11 to 5 no union. The election in this small plant is important, in that it is the first of the four to be held in plants in Fort Dodge where UMUA District 50 has been the bargaining agent for the past several years. The overwhelming majority of the members of District 50 in these four plants have requested the CIO to take them over.

Reg. Dir. Frank Bender reports that the CIO Steelworkers won a representation election at the American Can Co., Baltimore, Md., by a vote of USA-CIO 103, AFL Pulp and Sulphite Workers 63, and no union 39.

Reg. Dir. Michael Mann reports that the CIO Auto Workers won the following representation elections: Potter Mfg. Co., Waukegan, Ill., UAW-CIO 151, no union 12, with UAW Intl. Rep. Harvey Pearson conducting the campaign; United Specialties, Chicago, Ill., UAW-CIO 234, no union 15; Ideal Industries, Petersburg, Ill., UAW-CIO 16, no union 7. Intl. Rep. Charles Fortune directed activities in the last two elections.

Carey Says Civil Rights Foes Fight Losing Battle

DESPITE THE wave of violence in Florida and other parts of the South, real progress has been made in the field of civil rights during the last five years, James B. Carey, CIO secretary-treasurer, told a nationwide radio audience Jan. 19.

Speaking over the ABC network, Carey declared that "the desperate lengths to which the enemies of civil rights are prepared to go indicates clearly that they are losing the battle."

He named three main objectives of the CIO program in the civil rights field. These are:

(1) The establishment of economic equality for all men and women without regard to race, creed or color,

(2) Political equality, and

(3) The right of all Americans to participate equally in the services afforded by a community.

CIO Textile Workers Pres. Emil Rieve is scheduled to speak on this week's program to be broadcast at 7 p. m. EST Jan. 26.

IUE Urges Joint Labor PAC Policy

THE EXECUTIVE board of the CIO Electrical Workers at a meeting last week asked CIO Pres. Philip Murray to consider getting together with other labor and liberal organizations in a common political front.

The resolution was passed unanimously at a three-day board session in Washington.

Specifically, it recommended that Murray weigh "the feasibility of proposing to the AFL and other democratic organization the establishment of a 'Political Policy Committee' which would review and evaluate the qualifications of persons seeking election to public office."

"SUCH a review and evaluation, we are convinced, would greatly serve to assist American wage earners, and the public generally, in their selection by ballot of those leaders best equipped to achieve national and international unity and advance the public welfare.

"Our nation's leadership must be equal to the exigencies of the times and the needs of the people. It is our responsibility, as representatives of the nation's wage earners and consumers, to insure that such leadership is found and chosen for democracy's service."

In other resolutions, the IUE board rapped the Wage Stabilization Board for delays in processing cases and branded as "intolerable" its failure to act on the long-since negotiated agreement covering 70,000 General Electric Co. workers.

The board also voted solid support to efforts of the CIO Steelworkers to win substantial wage increases and other contract improvements, and launched a comprehensive six-month organizing drive.

Hart's Hate Group Uses Name Like ParentsCommittee

The old trick of subversive organizations in using names similar to reputable groups is working an unintended hardship on the American Parents Committee, Inc., as a result of the recent expose by The CIO News of "hate groups" warring against the nation's schools.

Ada B. Stough, executive director of APC, Inc., has asked us to make clear that this organization, formed in 1947, has no connection whatever with Merwin K. Hart's American Parents Committee on Education, which was included in the CIO list.

The American Parents Committee, Inc., on the other hand, is a wholly respectable "child welfare organization working for more and better schools and for adequate health and social welware services for the nation's 50 million children."

IWA Names Holcomb

The CIO Woodworkers have named George B. Holcomb as acting editor of the International Woodworker. He succeeds the late Manley Wilson.

Joe Louis Throws Punch At Lily-White Pro Golfers

JOE LOUIS, former world heavyweight champion, last week teed off on the lily-white rule of the Professional Golfers Association which bars Negroes from tournament play.

Declaring the PGA ban of Negroes at the San Diego, Cal., Open "the first time I have personally experienced racial discrimination in sports," Louis termed the ruling "un-American" and denounced PGA Pres. Horton Smith as "another Hitler" for enforcing it.

He declared he had long been aware of the PGA rule and said "it's been causing Negro players trouble for years." He said he came to San Diego "to bring it into the open."

Local tournament officials said the discriminatory rule would bar Louis and two other Negroes, Bill Spiller and Eural Clark, Los Angeles professionals.

Louis pointed out that golf was the last sport with a color line. He called the incident "the biggest fight of my life," and warned he intended to keep the issue alive "until justice is done."

While PGA finally allowed Louis to play as an amateur, the organization's lily-white policy was strongly condemned by CIO vice presidents, meeting last week in Washington. The CIO officers urged PGA to call a special meeting to rescind its Jim Crow policy.

NEWARK, N. J. isn't located in the South but recently more than 1000 members of the CIO Paperworkers there got a bitter taste of the type of justice usually dispensed to union members south of the Mason-Dixon line.

Down South it's not unusual for a CIO member or representative to be arrested for union activity at a non-union plant and then to discover when he is brought to trial that the attorney for the company and the county prosecutor are one and the same.

They call it "Southern Justice" and have come to expect the inevitable results.

When the same thing happens in New Jersey, however, it's news.

Ten UPA members were fined for "contempt of court" on charges of violating an injunction against mass picketing. They have been on strike against three paperboard mills owned by Anthony Desiderio since last September.

UPA Dist. 11 Dir. Anthony Adamo denies there was any mass picketing.

"Every one of the workers was on strike," Adamo declared. "There were no scabs attempting to enter the plant, so why should we have installed mass picketing"?

When the 10 UPA members came to trial in Superior Court, they discovered that the company attorney, Charles Handler, was the prosecuting attorney for the state. As Desiderio's lawyer he had obtained the injunction in the first place.

Under New Jersey law, the Newark Corporation Counsel (Handler) is permitted to engage in private practice also.

The 10 UPA members were fined $100 each.

Cartels Sharply Curbed By New Austrian Law

A NEW LAW regulating private trusts and cartels, believed the only one of its kind enacted recently by any European country, has become effective in Austria.

The new legislation does not prohibit trusts and cartels, but requires that they be registered with a special "cartel commission." The commission has the authority to refuse registrations, with the applicant having the right of appeal to a "higher cartel commission."

However, the law sharply restricts their operations, according to the Austrian Trade Bulletin published by the Austrian trade delegate to the United States.

The Bulletin said the formation or maintenance of cartels will not be permitted:

"If the cartel agreement is likely to increase or to prevent the decrease of prices for goods and services covered by the agreement.

"If the cartel agreement is likely to limit the production or sale of goods or services covered by it to an extent not justified by general economic or operational conditions.

"If the cartel agreement contains clauses which may prevent persons willing to comply with its terms from joining it.

"If the agreement does not provide for a period of notice enabling a party to withdraw."

Firms disobeying the law may be fined or their officers jailed, and dissolution of the cartel may be ordered. The act does not apply to agreements covering foreign markets, banks, insurance companies, government-operated transporation, cooperatives and provident societies, and some phases of the publishing industry.

Murray Rejects Proposed Bill To Bar Commie-Line Unions

CONGRESS was cautioned by CIO Pres. Philip Murray last week against "unnecessary and unwise" legislation which could infringe on the right of American workers to organize in unions of their own choice.

Murray rejected suggestions for "a legislative program to deal with Communist-dominated unions" in defense industries.

"We believe that if the government undertakes to determine what unions can represent workers in this country," he warned, "it will have embarked upon the long trail toward government control of unions."

Murray's statements were contained in a letter to Sen. Humphrey (D., Minn.). Humphrey is chairman of a Senate Labor subcommittee which has announced hearings on operations of Communist - controlled unions in defense industries. According to recent press reports, suggestions have been made that such organizations be denied collective bargaining rights.

Moreover, the CIO president pointed out, the Defense Dept. has adequate authority to deal with "security risks" in defense industries.

Highlights of Murray's letter follow:

"It is the position of the CIO that legislation in this field is both unnecessary and unwise.

"AS A BASIC philosophy, we in CIO believe that the right of American workers to choose their own collective bargaining representatives as fundamental to our democratic way of life as the right to speak, to worship, and to assemble freely . . .

"Encroachments upon this fundamental right to choose collective bargaining representatives should never be undertaken except after a showing that such encroachments are vitally necessary to our national safety. We do not believe any such showing has been made.

"We in the CIO yield in no group in our opposition to Communism. We have demonstrated this feeling by our actions in expelling from the CIO those unions whose leaders have sought to aid the program and purposes of the Communist Party . . . These unions have been brought into disrepute in the eyes of the workers of America and they have been losing ground since their expulsion.

"We believe that if the government undertakes to determine what unions can represent workers in this country, it will have embarked upon the long trail toward government control of unions. In the dictatorships of the world, unions exist at the sufferance of the State. We in America do not want to take a single step in that direction."

Concerning possible "dangers against which the Congress might seek to legislate," Murray pointed out the government now has "adequate power to screen out of defense plants" any individuals who seek to aid the Communist Party or the Soviet Union by committing espionage or sabotage.

As to the possibility that a Communist - controlled union might seek to organize a political strike against the nation's defense program rather than "to rectify the just grievances of the workers," Murray pointed out:

"There has been no evidence of a single such stoppage despite a year and half of the war in Korea and an even longer period of the cold war."

The reason, he added, is that "American workers are sufficiently aware of the dangers of Communism and sufficiently aroused against Communists that they would not follow those who sought to take them down the road to political work stoppages."

"LET ME SAY," Murray continued, "on behalf of the CIO that we will be alert to expost any false labor leaders who might bring about stoppages of work for political purposes and we will make common cause with all those who seek to prevent or terminate such stoppages."

Citing the "easy ways" with which party-liners have evaded the Taft-Hartley affidavits, Murray concluded:

"Just as surely as the Taft-Hartley Act has failed in its efforts to deal with the Communist problem in American unions, just so surely have we the CIO succeeded in dealing with the problem in the market place of trade union ideas.

"The Communists are on the run in the labor movement; their influence is declining day after day."

EL C.I.O. Y LA A.F.L. SON AGENTES DEL IMPERIALISMO CAPITALISTA

ESTADOS Unidos de Norteamérica se halla ante el complejo problema de la renovación de autoridades de la C. I. O., sindical que como se sabe, hace dos o tres lustros interpretaba el sentir de la clase trabajadora yanqui y se había constituído —dado su poderío e ideales— en un grave obstáculo para los intereses imperialistas y capitalistas norteamericanos.

El problema aludido no sería tal para el Departamento de Estado norteamericano si no se hallara actualmente ante el gran descontento imperante en las mismas obreras con los dirigentes de las dos centrales (A. F. L. y C. I. O.) y en consecuencia con la dirección que estos le han hecho tomar a las mismas.

Los trabajadores norteamericanos anhelan volver a ver una C. I. O. tal como la anunciaba ser en 1936, una institución que se dedicara a los problemas propios de la clase trabajadora y no a los de la política imperialista del gobierno y de los intereses de los consorcios anudados a él. Por tal motivo censuran agriamente a los hombres que ataron de pies a cabeza (Green y Murray) a las dos centrales obreras convirtiéndolas en un instrumento político, del cual se sirven cómodamente el Departamento de Estado para su acción imperialista y el dictador Truman para sus propósitos de dominación mundial. (La Secretaría de Estado norteamericana costea elevado presupuesto oficial de sueldos para sus dirigentes en el C. I. O. y A. F. L.).

Por tal motivo, el problema actual del gobierno norteamericano es hallar el hombre que pueda sustituir a Phil Murray en la C. I. O. —para el caso que este se aleje— y que preste los mismos servicios que él a la camarilla imperialista.

Siendo su reelección peligrosa, como insinuamo lo ha comprendido el mismo Murray, recientemente ha expresado sus deseos de retirarse de la "Dirección" del C.I.O. dando esto motivo a una serie de comentarios y cálculos de nombres para sustituirlo, pero muy pocos obreros norteamericanos creen sincera la declaración de Murray, pues anteriormente también amenazó con su retiro por razones de salud y siguió no obstante desempeñándose, con el perjuicio conocido para el obrero, durante cinco años más.

Para mejor información del lector lo llevaremos al propio terreno de los hechos, y nada mejor al respecto que "hacer hablar" a la propia prensa que publicó el "The Worker Magazine" (la revista de los obreros) de los Estados Unidos el 23 de noviembre de 1951, escrito por uno de los observadores de mayor prestigio del movimiento [illegible] a que nos referimos a George Morris, firmante aludido.

The paper accuses CIO and AFL of being "agents of imperialist capitalism." And the source? None other than George Morris of the Communist Daily Worker!

Truman To Congress: 1952 Will Be Tougher

PRESIDENT Truman reviewed the nation's economy last week in his annual economic message to Congress.

He found that 1951 was "marked by great gains in our basic economic strength" which "enabled us to move forward toward our security objectives with far less strain upon the economy than would otherwise have been possible."

Now, he went on, "we face a period during which the burden of the defense program will increase greatly—both in absolute terms, and relative to the total size and strength of the emonomy."

"This increasing burden, while indispensable to our security," he continued, "will place an additional strain upon our manpower, our physical plant, our natural resources, and our standards of living."

With it, the President said, will be the continued danger of the inflation he held was "contained" in 1951.

To meet the danger, he asked Congress for higher taxes, a two-year extension of stronger price controls, continued controls on credit, rents and wages, and a more liberal program to help the unemployed. Specifically, he proposed:

1. A new tax law to raise about $5 billion additional a year, with elimination of "loopholes and special privileges" enjoyed by the wealthy.

2. A two-year extension of controls over prices, wages, rents and credit, with elimination of price-boosting sections of the Defense Production Act.

3. Revision of the Taft-Hartley Act so the nation's "basic labor-management relations law will not hamper sound and healthy labor relations and uninterrupted production."

4. A uniform and extended unemployment insurance program, accompanied by increased aid to the aged and needy.

5. More federal aid for education, local public health services and small business.

Congress Pal Comes To Aid Of Joe Kamp

IT TOOK four years for the federal government to get Joseph P. Kamp, operating head of the notorious Constitutional Educational League, into a jail cell after Congress cited him for contempt in 1947.

Now it looks as if it might take Uncle Sam that much more time to get him behind the bars again on another contempt citation, this one voted over the screaming protests of tory Republicans in 1950.

Kamp was cited on both occasions for the same offense—refusing to tell a congressional committee investigating lobbying where he got the money to pay for the anti-labor, anti-Semetic, anti-New Deal and neo-fascist propaganda his CEL has been dumping on the country.

Kamp fought his first conviction all the way to the U. S. Supreme Court. He was aided in his stalling, according to rumors, by wealthy and highly-placed friends who couldn't see anything wrong with his pro-Nazi vocalizing for big business and reaction.

He was convicted of the second offense last June.

And last week Rep. Hoffman (R. Mich.), one of the average American's bitterest enemies in Congress, sponsored a resolution to rescind the second contempt citation. Kamp, he explained, has been granted a new trial.

The citation itself, he piously maintained, "resulted from an inquiry initiated at the instance of subversive elements," which he failed to identify.

SPONTANEOUS WALKOUTS and demonstrations by CIO Packinghouse locals across the country was the union reply to the six cent wage offer that was accepted by the rival AFL meat cutters union. The UPWA turned down the offer saying it did not cover other union demands including an annual wage, premium pay for Saturday work, elimination of wage differentials between geographic areas and between men and women workers, union shop and other benefits. Shown here are some of the 6000 workers from Chicago Local 347 walking out of the large Armour plant.

PICTURE STORY — President Truman may well be telling Budget Dir. Frederick Lawton that this chart tells the story of the federal budget Mr. Truman requested. Note in the dollar "pie" at the right all of the money, except 15c, go for past or present defense. In the other dollar, 36c would come from taxes on individuals, compared to only 32c from taxes on corporations. The President urged that additional taxes come from plugging "loopholes." Critics in Congress screamed "economy." Story Page 2.

TO A CONGRESS already off to the political wars, President Truman last week submitted a record peacetime budget to finance the fight for security and peace in the fiscal year 1953.

The budget called for the expenditure of $85.4 billion. It broke all peacetime records for size not only of expenditures but of receipts and prospective deficits.

Even with a $5 billion tax increase, which Mr. Truman said should come from plugging loopholes, the government still would operate in the red until 1954. If Congress approves the budget but fails to increase taxes, the government will spend nearly $14.5 billion more than it takes in during the fiscal year beginning July 1, this year.

The budget called for the expenditure of 85c of every dollar on the cost of defense, past and present, and only 15c for other government operations—including all welfare and social service items.

Only 32c of the budget dollar would come from corporation income taxes, compared to 36c from individual income taxes, the President proposed. Borrowing and new taxes would bring in 17c, excise taxes 11c, and custom and other taxes 4c.

"The price of peace is preparedness," said the President. "In terms of sacrifices which it involves it is a heavy price, but when freedom is at stake, it is a price which all of us will be glad to pay."

Congress barely had received the budget before "economy advocates"—of both parties—issued statements.

Rep. Mahon (D. Tex.), chairman of the House Military Appropriations subcommittee, said: "We're going to have to pare down military requirements."

Seven House Republicans led by Minority Leader Martin (Mass.) issued a similar statement. Several Senators called for cuts in expenditures of from $5 to $6 billion.

Mr. Truman asked $52.3 billion for building the nation's military strength to new goals. Not included in the budget were plans announced separately for a $5 to $6 billion expansion of atomic energy facilities over approximately the next five years.

The President stressed that the "mutual security program is a vital element in building security for the free world as a whole and for this country. Under this program, friendly nations overseas will be able to obtain the military or economic aid they need in order to develop rapidly their own potentials of strength against subversion."

"We cannot," he said "as two wars have proved, isolate ourselves from threats to other free men. This nation cannot stand by and see free people overrun. In the end, that could only mean isolation of this country in a world organized against it by Soviet masters.

"Our mutual security program for these areas (the Middle East and Asia), as compared with Europe, will place proportionately more emphasis on economic aid and technical assistance than on supplying military equipment," he said.

On the domestic scene, Mr. Truman urged Congress to extend Social Security coverage to include members of the armed forces, public employes and farmers and to increase average old age benefits by about $5 a month, which he pointed out, could be done "without in any way increasing the contributory rates."

He also asked that the Social Security taxable wage base be raised to $6000. At present, an employe pays 1.5% on the first $3600 in wages, with the employer contributing a like amount.

Moreover, he enthusiastically called for an education and general research program totalling $624 million, compared with $238 million this year. It included a recommendation that Congress vote $300 million for grants to the states for operation and maintenance of local schools.

In line with his recent messages, Mr. Truman again urged the extension of controls over prices, wages and rents beyond the June 30 expiration date.

The President called for higher taxes, increased restraint on credit and more voluntary savings—as a means to protect the economy—and for "more effective direct controls." Additions to the staff of the Office of Price Stabilization were asked.

Kefauver Enters Race To Finish

Kefauver said he is proud of "economic and social gains made in the past 20 years" and "we still have far to go before our people will achieve the standards of education, of housing, of social security, and health and resources development to which the most productive nation in the world is surely entitled."

Also last week, Price Stabilizer Michael DiSalle announced he will resign soon to seek the Democratic nomination for U. S. Senator from Ohio.

JERSEY JUSTICE—Striking members of three locals of the CIO Paperworkers huddle around fire near Whippany Paper Board Co. plant at Newark, N. J. A thousand UPA members have been on strike since July. Recently 10 of the strikers were fined $100 each for contempt of court after an anti-picketing injunction was issued. The prosecuting lawyer also was lawyer for one of the struck firms!

'Maginot Line' Theory Of UMT Hit By CIO

LONG-STANDING opposition of CIO to Universal Military Training was reaffirmed last week by Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey.

Carey testified against a pending UMT bill before the House Committee on Armed Services after representatives of the National Farmers Union, Grange, and Farm Bureau Federation had voiced similar opposition to the proposal for six months of basic military training for all men at age 18.

At the same time, Cary recounted the support the CIO has given the draft over the years, and asserted that "present circumstances obviously require the continued operation of selected service." UMT will not contribute at present, to the nation's security, he claimed.

Carey testified that the investigation of the feasibility of UMT, which has been going on irregularly for more than four years, was inadequate, and that the plan before Congress is "not well thought out."

Some of Carey's heaviest fire was directed toward earlier testimony of two members of the National Security Training Commission who stressed the effect of UMT as "a great moral force" and "character-building instruction" which will teach youths "discipline, loyalty and a will for selfless service."

"Frankly, testimony of this kind makes my organization immediately suspicious," he said.

"The Army . . . the Air Force, the Navy and the Marines . . . have a military function to perform, and let's not glamorize their functions. Character and moral training in our country, thank God, still centers in the home and in the local community, and let's not confuse them with the Armed Forces.

"I am not casting aspersions at the armed services. Moreover, I respect the efforts of the armed services to pay heed to the morals o fthe men entrusted to their training.

"But certainly, no one should try to sell UMT or any military service on its moral contribution. The day our families and our local communities fail to do their basic job of character and morals training, America will be on the downgrade, and all the military training and service, be it UMT, regular Army or what have you, won't avail us."

CAREY held that UMT cannot even be considered intelligently until many of the basic issues concerning it are resolved.

"For all we may be doing," he went on, "is insuring that every youngster will be entrusted into the care of the military for a period of six months, without any accompanying guarantee that out of this will come a really trained armed service, or genuine overall security for the nation.

"We may, indeed, become victims of a Maginot Line psychology and wake up to find we do not have a highly trained army that military security demands in time of emergency today."

Leary Named ICFTU Representative At UN

JAMES J. LEARY, CIO regional director for Western Missouri and Kansas, with headquarters in Kansas City, Mo., has been named representative of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions to the United Nations.

The appointment was made on the recommendation of CIO Pres. Philip Murray. O'Leary will work in New York and succeeds John Brophy, former CIO director of industrial union councils, who is now a member of the Wage Stabilization Board's Appeals Board.

The ICFTU represents the free trade union movements of 70 countries with a total strength of 53 million workers. It has official status at the UN, and has the right to press its fight for better living standards and working conditions and against totalitarianism there.

"I am honored at my appointment," Leary said.

"To me, the ICFTU is an important international organization of trade unionists which has in the two years of its existence done an outstanding job of resisting the spread of Communist and fascist dictatorship.

JAMES J. LEARY

A. R. KINSTLEY

"What is equally outstanding is the fact that the ICFTU has also undertaken a battle against poverty and exploitation in the underveloped areas of the world, notably Asia and Africa.

"We of the CIO and the American labor movement realize that to beat communism we must give the people a stake in society. The ICFTU stands for this kind of democratic philosophy."

Leary is succeeded in the Missouri-Kansas CIO post by A. R. Kinstley, for 11 years vice president of the Oil Workers, who becomes acting regional director.

Taft Snubbed By Auto Worker

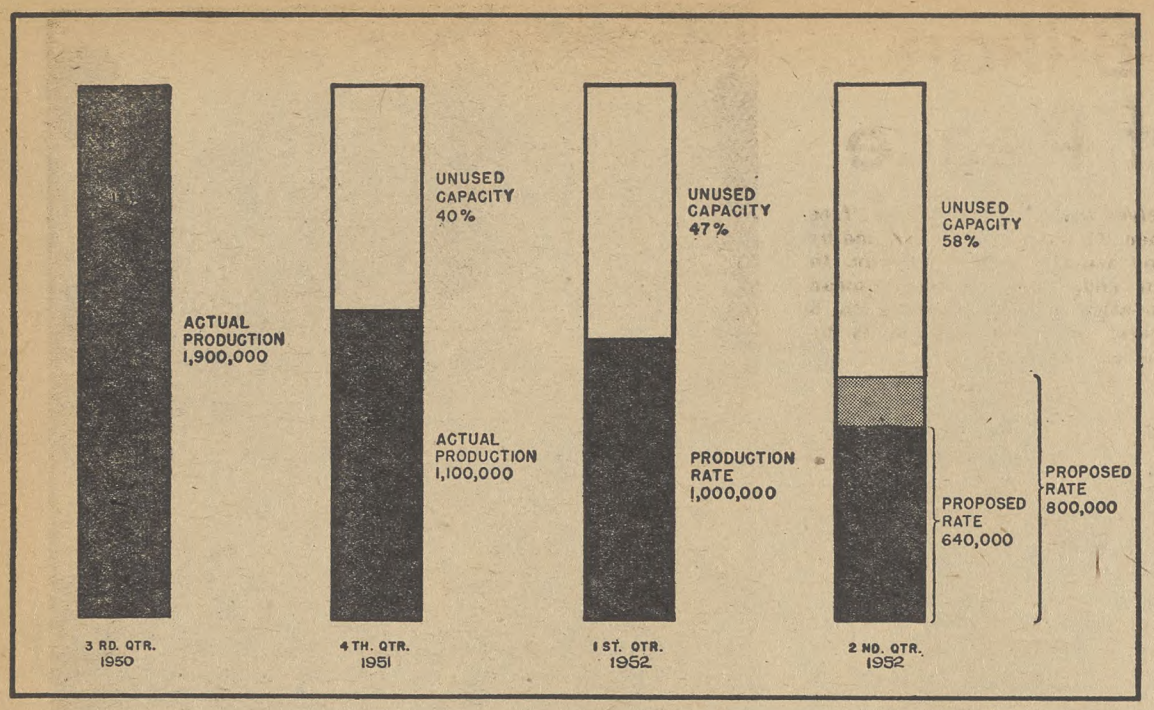
Sen. Taft (R.O.) last week got a glimpse of what American workers think of him.

Barnstorming through Wisconsin in his third try for the GOP Presidential nomination, Taft stopped in Janesville to tour a Chevrolet plant—a plant organized by CIO Auto Workers.

As he walked down the assembly line, Taft tried to gladhand Al Heinke. Heinke declined and told him:

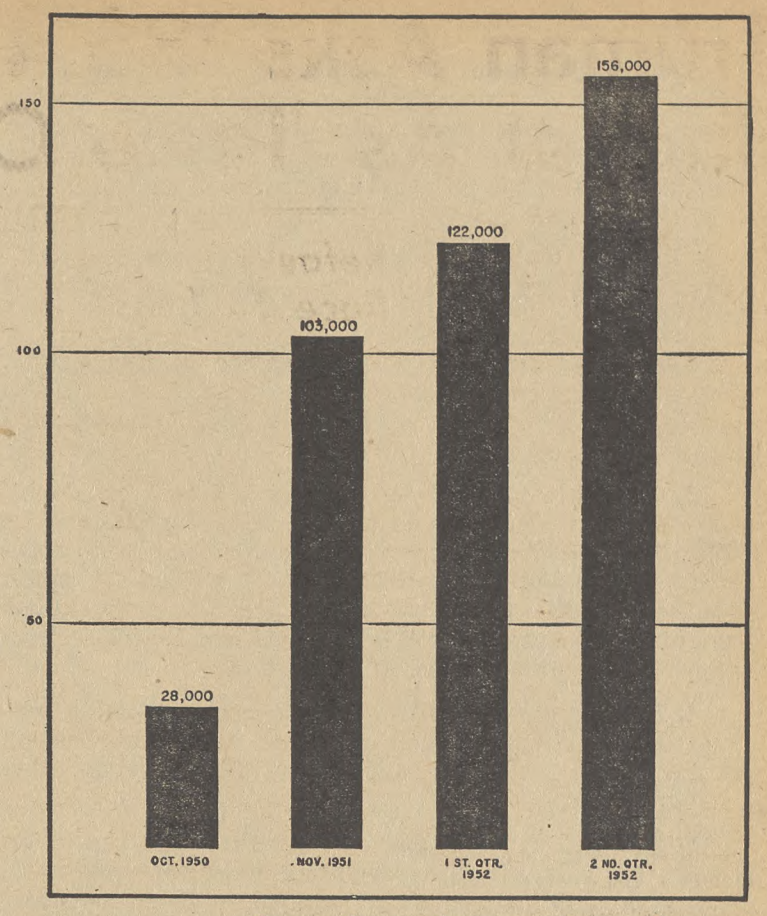
"Go on—I've got my work to do."

Then Heinke turned and went back to his job.



—Source: Ward's Automotive Reports

GOING DOWN! — Reservoir of machines and trained manpower available for defense production in the auto industry is illustrated by this chart, which shows quarter-by-quarter cut in auto production in past year to below 50% of capacity. Estimates presented to CIO Auto Workers recent Washington Conference on Defense Unemployment were that present unused machine tool capacity of the nation's auto, truck, and agricultural implement plants exceeds machine tool production of Soviet Russia. American industry used to be regarded as world's best in production.



—Source: Michigan Employment Security Commission

GOING UP!—Other side of the coin in auto production cutbacks, without matching defense contracts, is geometrical rise of unemployment in the Detroit area toward peak of 156,000 workers. Auto industry employment has dropped from some 800,000 in October, 1950, to under 650,000, while each month some 5000 Detroit workers exhaust their unemployment insurance benefits.

CIO Urges Backing For New Bill For U.S. Pay To Laid-Off Workers

CONGRESS last week was told by almost a score of its members that the present job lay-off crisis is largely a result of the conversion from peacetime to wartime economy—and that it is high time that legislation be enacted to aid the jobless.

A CIO-supported bill to supplement state unemployment compensation with federal funds was co-sponsored by 15 Senators and the same bill was introduced in the House by four members.

The bill provides that the federal government:

1 Pay jobless workers an extra benefit equal to half of what they get from the state in basic compensation.

2 Match a state dollar-for-dollar in payments for dependents.

Introduction of the bill follows promises by Sen. Moody (D. Mich.) and Rep. Dingell (D. Mich.) at the CIO Auto Workers' Conference on Defense Unemployment, held in Washington a fortnight ago.

The CIO executive offices and vice presidents have given their support to the measure.

(CIO members and organizations should write to their Senators and representatives urging them to vote for the bill—S. 2504 and H. R. 6174.)

"The Congress has a responsibility in this situation; so do the state legislatures," Moody told the Senate. "In my judgment, legislatures should immediately survey their state laws with the view to increasing the period of payments . . ."

The bill provides for U. S. aid when a governor certifies that there is substantial unemployment, and the Secretary of Labor approves his certification.

The measure covers not only workers laid off because of conversion to defense production but employes in industries such as textile, clothing and electrical manufacturing.

The bill declares that it is Congress' responsibility to help the states aid the jobless, who are out of work because of "dislocations in the economy during the national emergency."

The combined payments could not exceed 65% of the worker's regular weekly wages, if he has two dependents, or 75% where there are four dependents.

There is growing evidence in Congress of bipartisan support of the bill.

Fifteen Senators co-sponsored the bill: Moody, Douglas (D. Ill.), Kefauver (D. Tenn.), McMahon (D. Conn.), Benton (D. Conn.), Maybank (D. S.C.), Lehman (D. N.Y.), Gillette (D. Ia.), Humphrey (D. Minn.), Magnuson (D. Wash.), Murray (D. Mont.), Hennings (D. Mo.), Kilgore (D. W. Va.), Green (D. R.I.) and Thye (R. Minn.).

Identical bills were introduced by Reps. Dingell (D. Mich.), Machrowicz (D. Mich.), Eberharter (D. Pa.) and Bolling (D. Mo.).

In Detroit, UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther called on the leaders of industry to join his union in supporting the measure. He said "since defense unemployment results from defense mobilization policies, the cost of defense unemployment should be charged against the defense effort."

Meanwhile, the unemployment crisis cut deeper into the national economy. It was not confined to any one industry or any one section of the country.

Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers last week told the ACWA's executive board, meeting in Atlantic City, that the Defense Dept. has failed to place clothing contracts in distress areas although it has the authority to do so.

An evidence of industry-made unemployment was the case of the Utica and Mohawk Knitting Co., Utica, N. Y., which said it planned to move its factories to the south—a move that was halted at least temporaily—by action of the CIO Textile Workers.

TWUA got a federal court order telling the company to show cause why an injunction should not be granted. And a New York court jury awarded the union $126,000 damage—the money to go to an estimated 859 workers in the form of wages, vacations and other benefits they would receive under the contract.

In New York State, Industrial Commissioner Edward Corsi reported that number of persons registered for unemployment compensation in December totalled 251,547, a 13,000 increase over November.

Job Layoffs Climbing In 16 Areas

UNEMPLOYMENT is a problem in 23 major areas, the Labor Dept. reported last week.

And in 16 of these industrial areas, unemployment has increased in the past two months.

Grand Rapids, Flint and Detroit, Mich., have been added to the department's list of areas of greatest unemployment as a result of cutbacks in auto production ordered by the government.

Other areas of high unemployment include New York City; Brockton, Fall River, Lawrence and Lowell, Mass.; Manchester, N. H.; Providence, R. I., and Atlantic City, N. J.

Idleness also increased in Indianapolis, Ind., which was previously listed as a labor shortage area.

Hatchet Work Begins On Oil Tidelands

THE HATCHET work has begun in the U. S. Senate to force the federal government to turn over to various states leases now held on submerged tidelands oil.

The Senate Interior Committee last week voted 11 to 2, to approve a compromise tidelands bill which would give states a temporary "veto power" over U. S. leases of the rich oil deposits.

Sen. Long (D. La.), a champion of state ownership and an author of the committee compromise, pointed out that the Senate could substitute complete state ownership and control when the measure comes up in the Senate.

The House has already passed legislation granting the tidelands to the states. Such bills are aimed at reversing a U. S. Supreme Court decision giving jurisdiction over the tidelands to the federal government.

Committee Chairman O'Mahoney (D. Wyo.), who worked out the compromise with Long, said that none of the committee members who voted for the compromise is bound to support it in the Senate.

The bill is based on a measure introduced by O'Mahoney which would allow the Interior Dept. to administer the underwater lands while suits involving them are decided.

The state veto would apply to lands within the three mile limit. Full control of lands out to the contential shelf would be given to the Federal government.

Jersey CIO Asks $9 Boost In Weekly Jobless Benefits

LEGISLATION increasing unemployment compensation benefits in New Jersey was introduced in the State Legislature by the State CIO last week.

The CIO is seeking an increase in maximum benefits for unemployment compensation and temporary disability from $26 to $35 weekly, plus $3 for each dependent up to three.

New Jersey CIO Council Pres. Carl Holderman said the increased benefits would consume less than half the additional unemployment fund surplus piled up last year. He pointed out that as of Jan. 1, 1952, the state unemployment trust fund contained $448,075,765 — "10 times the amount paid out in benefits in 1951."

"This surplus was added to the safest unemployment compensation trust fund in the nation because of the failure to increase benefits in 1951," he said.

"The increased benefits we seek in 1952 would cost less than half the $15 million surplus piled up last year.

"Sharp cost of living increases for the necessities of life, such as food, rent and clothing strike the unemployed worker even more than the employed worker."

On Presidential Candidates

This year's political almanac clearly points to an early spring. Seeds are already being planted, many months ahead of the July nominating and November election harvests.. The political soil is already feeling the mark of the rake and the hoe. Intensive cultivation has begun.

On the whole, these are good signs. They are tokens of awakening political interest, and they promise widespread participation in the fundamental processes of democracy.

Many CIO members will participate in this debate. They are American citizens, conscious of their heritage and conscious of their responsibilities to their country and themselves.

Some cultivators of the political soil will, no doubt, claim they have the aid and assistance of the CIO and its Political Action Committee in their campaigns for the nomination. Some will seek benefit from the alleged opposition of labor. On this basis they will appeal for contributions from those vested and selfish interests which still seek to deny labor its proper place in our nation.

It is the purpose of this editorial merely to call attention to a pertinent paragraph from the resolution on political action which was adopted by the CIO convention last November.

"CIO-PAC will continue to operate," the resolution states, "as a powerful independent force, not seeking to capture any political group and rejecting with all its power any attempt by any group to capture it."

At the proper time and in the proper manner, the CIO will express the views of its members.

They Spilled The Beans!

Now that Congress has returned to Washington, we suggest you have an extra-large box of salt handy for applying to reports of some of the things happening in McCarthyville-on-the-Potomac.

Nine chances out of 10 you're represented in Congress by a staunch conservative pillar of the community, fearless upholder of the American free enterprise system, and last ditch opponent of "subsidies," "regimentation" or any action by government to help the little guy.

Last week, two congressmen spilled some of the beans.

They revealed that taxpayers—meaning you—are putting up $45,000 a year in subsides so that congressmen can get cheap lunches.

Despite the subsidies, they complained, the House Restaurant has upped its price for bean soup to 25c a bowl, and cut down on the size of the bowl to boot.

As for the implication that subsidy-fearing Congressmen should pay subsidy-free restaurant prices, we disagree. We think our lawmakers need all the strength and nourishment they can get before an afternoon of denunciation of "socialized medicine," so they'll have plenty of oomph left to rush out to Bethesda Naval Hospital for a free working over of their tonsils before another tough round of oratory on the morrow! Such oratory probably will be "agin" the "Welfare State"!

This week—on Jan. 30—marks the 70th anniversary of the birth of Franklin D. Roosevelt.

It is seven years since F.D.R. died. A year before his death, President Roosevelt in his annual message to Congress proposed an "Economic Bill of Rights" for all Americans.

IN OUR DAY these economic truths have become accepted as self-evident. We have accepted, so to speak, a second Bill of Rights under which a new basis of security and prosperity can be established for all—regardless of station, race or creed.

Among these are:

The right to a useful and remunerative job in the industries, or shops or farms or mines of the Nation;

The right to earn enough to provide adequate food and clothing and recreation;

The right of every farmer to raise and sell his products at a return which will give him and his family decent living;

The right of every businessman, large and small, to trade in an atmosphere of freedom from unfair competition and domination by monopolies at home or abroad;

The right to adequate medical care and the opportunity to achieve and enjoy good health;

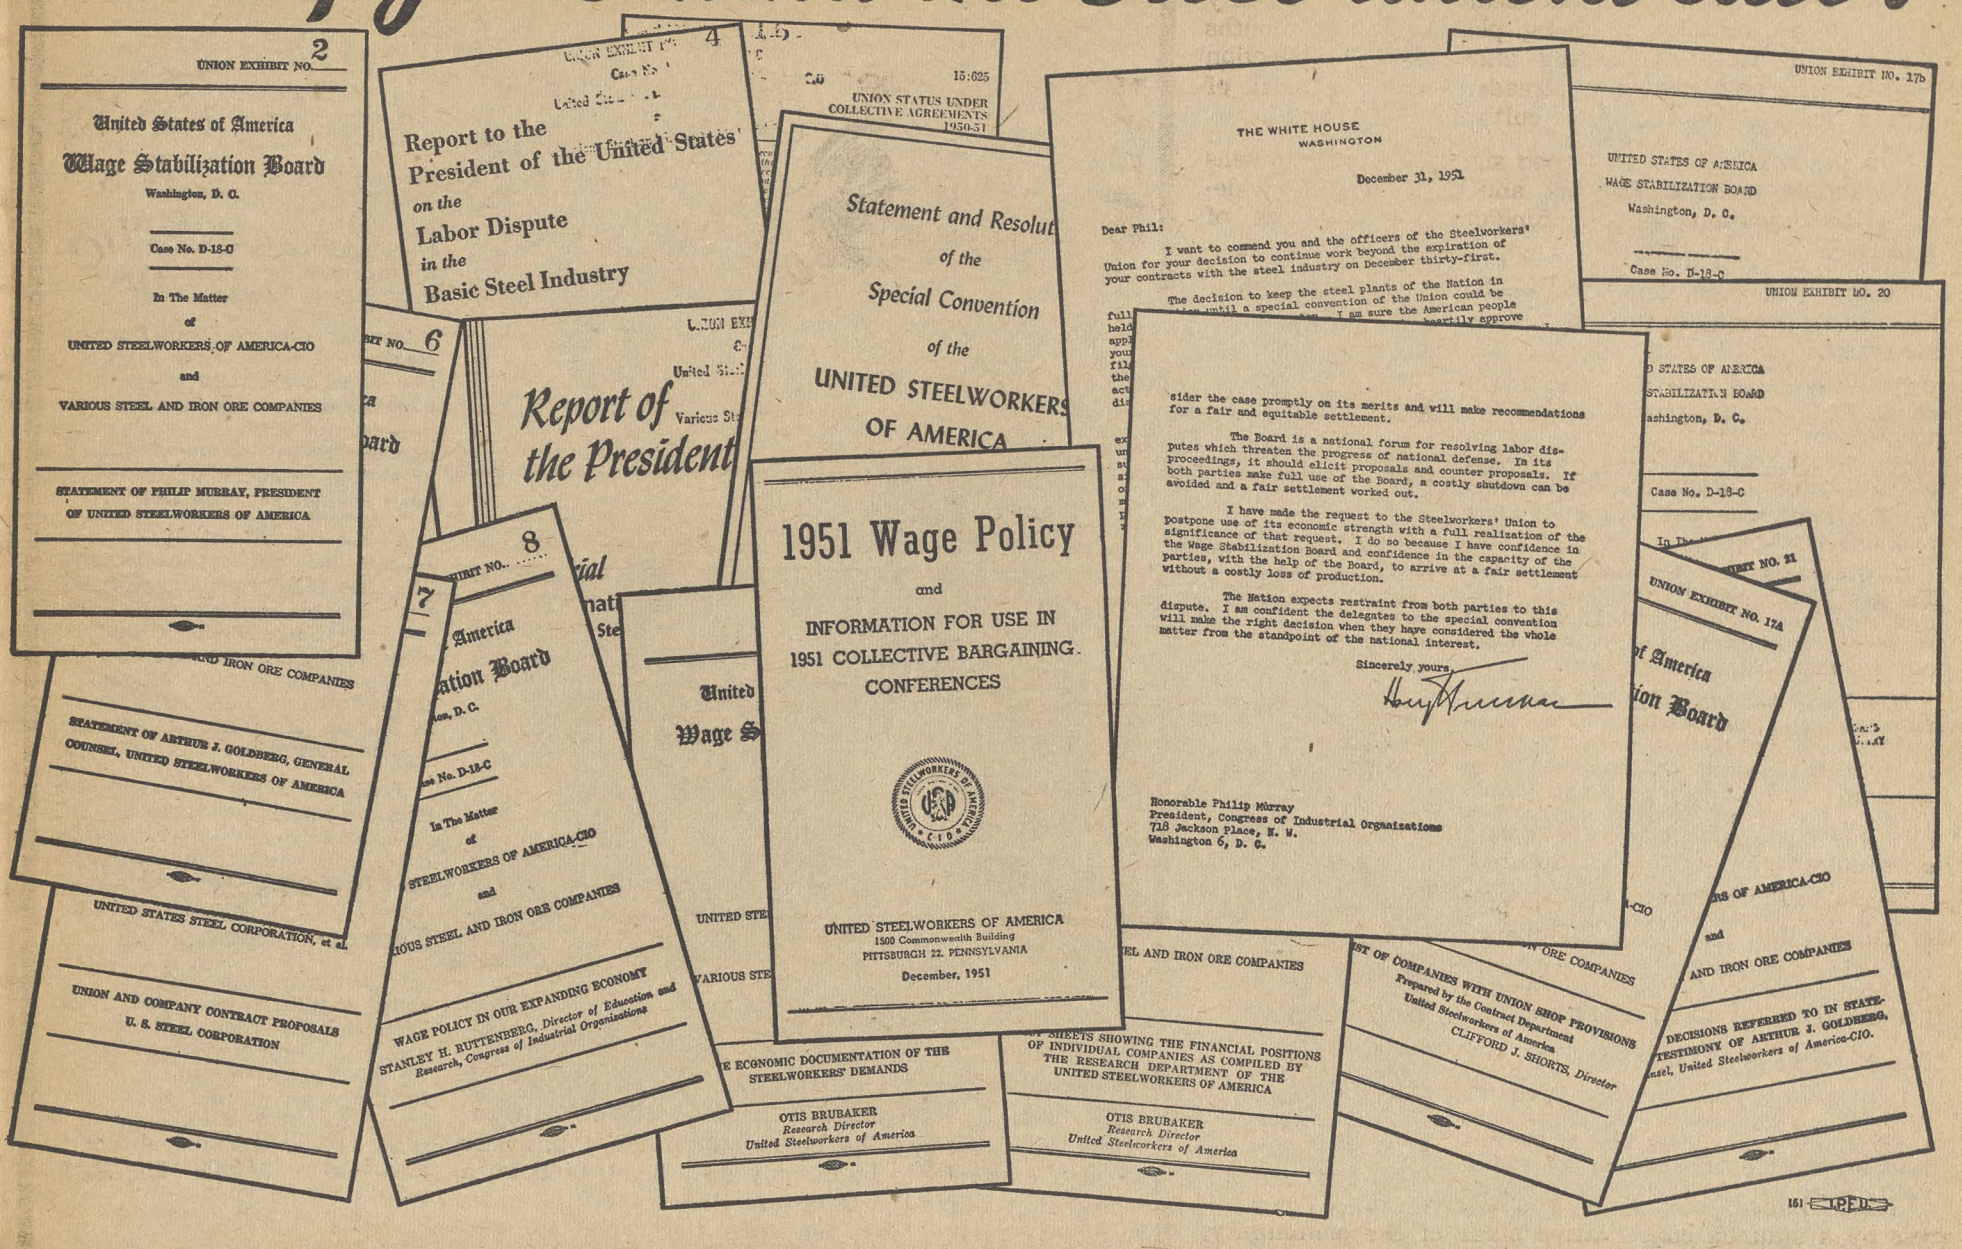
All of these rights spell security. And after this war is won, we must be prepared to move forward, in the implementation of these rights, to new goals of human happiness and well-being.

America's own rightful place in the world depends in large part upon how fully these and similar rights have been carried into practice for our citizens. For unless there is security here at home there cannot be lasting peace in the world.

The Big Job Behind the Steel Union's Case!



Impressive Facts Given WSB Result Of Long, Hard Work

By GERVASE N. LOVE

A LOT OF WORK went into the preparation of the case that the CIO Steelworkers presented to a special panel of the Wage Stabilization Board in the fight for higher wages and other contract improvements.

It was a task shared by thousands of members in the country's basic steel mills and fabricating plants—and by USA Pres. Philip Murray and his fellow-officers. It engaged the attention of staff members in the field, in national headquarters and in the union's Washington office, of virtually all of the technicians employed by the union.

THE RESULT was an impressive documentation of the union's right to a substantial wage increase for its members, and a place for them in the march forward of labor-management relations.

The documentation, in a manner of speaking, made the WSB panel's task easy: It gave the members many, many reasons for raising wages, and it showed why and how those reasons were necessary, just and economically possible.

The job started long before President Truman asked the union to call off the strike it had scheduled when the employers refused to grant increases, and to submit the dispute to the WSB.

It began months ago, when rank and file members realized that the contract under which they had worked without any but wage changes and a pension-insurance program since 1947 was due to expire soon. They held their meetings in their locals.

They discussed what they wanted to see in a new contract, the wages they thought were entitled to, the injustices and irritations that had irked them during its lifetime, their hopes for security and an ever-improving standard of living.

"During the months before out 1951 negotiations opened," Murray told the panel, "the union's international office in Pittsburgh received literally thousands of resolutions from our local unions suggesting changes in and additions to our collective bargaining agreement . . .

". . . I had our staff carefully analyze our expiring collective bargaining agreements and the thousands of local union resolutions which had been sent to us.

"I CONSULTED with my fellow officers, with our general counsel and his associates, with members of our international executive board, our representatives both at headquarters and in the field, and with representatives of our local unions."

The negotiations started, bogged down. A strike was called, the President intervened. The union held a special convention on Jan. 3, 1952, in Atlantic City. It acceded to the President's request, warned the steel industry not to stall, and reminded all USA members that the exercise of their right to strike had been merely postponed, not abandoned.

A copy of the statement and resolution adopted by the special convention was one of the early documents presented to the panel. By the time the union had finished presenting its case, that statement and resolution was only one of a score of exhibits.

They ranged far and wide, but each was tied directly into the case before the panel either by its very nature or by the additional testimony of union witnesses.

They were thin, like Murray's opening statement, and they were thick, like the 1947 report on guaranteed annual wages compiled under the direction of Murray W. Latimer.

They included Murray's report to the special USA convention, a statement by the General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg, the union's contract proposals.

THEY INCLUDED a detailed analysis of the over-all U. S. economic situation, and an amazingly detailed economic documentation of the Steelworkers' demands. And they included a study of the steel companies' financial positions showing that none would be financially embarrassed—despite any howling they might do—by paying a good-sized wage boost.

One showed how much of his average weekly earnings a production worker in a blast furnace, steel works or rolling mill had left to spend (it wasn't very much). Others referred to the union shop, and still another bulwarked the union's demand for a guaranteed annual wage.

And so on . . .

They represent an impressive amount of work. It was work the steel companies can't buy, because it isn't for sale. It was a labor of love.

'You Pays Your Money . . .

The CIO and its leaders are getting a generous quota of brickbats from a widely-varied group of enemies of free, democratic labor. A random sample of fact-flouting material coming across the desk at CIO's Washington headquarters:

1. From Trud, official organ of the government-controlled Soviet trade unions in Moscow, concerning:

". . . The policy of the reactionary chiefs of the Steelworkers Union headed by Murray . . . The leadership of the union, while showing a complete indifference to the needs of the workers, is particularly solicitous about the inviolability of the profits of capitalism."

2. From CGT, official organ of the government-controlled unions of Peron's fascist Argentine:

"The CIO and AFL are agents of capitalist imperialism . . ."

3. From "Economic Intelligence" — the publication of the Economic Research Dept. of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce:

". . . The CIO has never rid itself of Marxist economics. Virtually every important speech and publication . . . is replete with class consciousness, hatred for employers, and is designed to further and intensify the class struggle—things foreign to most Americans."

In fact, ALL of them are ALL wrong.

. . . And Takes Your Choice!

Big Steel Brings A Boom Along The USA Organizing Fairless Works

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

ON FLAT FARMLAND in country George Washington's soldiers once tramped over, a colossal U. S. Steel plant is today in process of construction.

When completed later this year, it will employ at the start upward of 6000 production workers.

They'll be members of the CIO Steelworkers, which now is pushing an organizing drive and soon will seek recognition and a contract.

U. S. Steel's newest plant, called the Fairless Works, will be the largest steel mill ever built at one time. It will have some of the biggest, fastest and most efficient machinery ever installed.

If a Revolutionary War scout could return today and spy the outline of high silo-shaped ovens and big cones of a blast furnace rearing against the sky along the Delaware River across from Trenton, N.J., (scene of a famous Revolutionary War battle) he would certainly think he was having a weird dream.

He could still wander over the flat countryside, now winter brown and bare; pick his way between rows of cornstalk stubs, or stroll up a muddy road as he might have done in his lifetime, and then suddenly find himself up against a high steel fence.

Cost $400 Million

Until work started last March on the $400 million Fairless Works, the eastern Pennsylvania countryside—now in the turmoil of gigantic construction — looked pretty much as it must have in Washington's Day. Even a few houses built in the 1700's were still standing.

They are gone now—along with the staggering carloads of soil that had to be scooped out during construction of the plant. (Approximately enough material from the old houses was to be transported to Mt. Vernon, Va., to be used in restoring buildings on George Washington's estate.)

Today many of the roads in the area lead to a dead end, stopping without previous warning at the seemingly endless fence surrounding U. S. Steel's new plant. That fence is said to be 18 miles around. There are some gates, to be sure, but they are guarded. You can't get in without a pass or a written permit.

The 3000-acre tract skirting the Delaware River which has been carved out as the site for the Fairless Works so far has left untouched many miles of surrounding farm land. It's a strange contrast to look through the fence at the mammoth plant in construction, then turn and gaze across the Bucks County fields and truck farms.

Following a highway that may lead you to a dead end at the high steel fence, you come here and there upon a clump of tumbled-down shacks where Negroes are living, apparently farm workers; or some house trailers under a stand of trees.

Problems Many

In the distance, high tension wires stand against the sky. Often you're stopped by freight trains creeping slowly toward the steel plant, loaded with long girders, big yellow bulldozers, machinery of all kinds; sand, cement, stones and other materials.

After 4:30 p. m. a long line of mud-splattered autos begins streaming down the roads toward Morrisville, as several thousand construction workers and plant personnel begin their tedious homeward journey. Drivers, some in plaid lumber jackets and red caps, lean on their steering wheels in boredom as the line halts for long intervals, or occasionally honk their horns impatiently. It's long, exasperating job to get home after a day's hard work through the jumble of traffic.

The small town of Morrisville, Pa., Fairless Works' post office address, is about five miles from the plant, It is hard put to handle the traffic and other problems the big project has placed upon it. Its pre-boom population was around 7000. (The town was once the home of Robert Morris, patriot and financier of the American revolution.)

The office is under USA-CIO District 7, headed by Director Charles Ford, with headquarters in Philadelphia. District 7 now covers more than 40,000 men and women in the steel industry in all of Eastern Pennsylvania and all of south and central New Jersey. Philadelphia, Bristol and Trenton are some of the main steel centers in the district.

The union office at Morrisville was set up last August. Staff Rep. Alfred Werner, who is in charge, has been on the USA staff since 1941. Previously he worked for 10 years at the Roberts & Mander stove plant in Hatboro, Pa., where one of the steel union's early organizing drives and famous strikes took place a dozen or so years ago.

Some 20,000 applications for jobs at the new plant have been made, Werner said, many of them from the Trenton and Philadelphia area.

At Fairless Works, a union organizing committee in Morrisville is making plans for signing up the new workers as they come on the job, Werner said. Later, when sufficient cards have been signed, the union will request an election to certify the USA-CIO as collective bargaining agency—for the record.

Both union and company officials take it for granted that the workers as Fairless, like the hundreds of thousands in the nation's basic steel industry, will "go CIO."

Any gains won in the stiff fight the CIO Steelworkers are at present engaged i with U. S. Steel before the Wage Stabiliza tion Board for higher wages and other con tract improvements, will therefore benef the workers as Fairless even though the may not yet be members of the union.

Housing of workers employed at the new steel plant, particularly as to discrimina tion against Negroes, is one of the prob lems the union is much concerned about a present. Several large housing projects ar now under way, but the question of rentin or selling property on a no segregatio basis has not yet been settled.

A "Levittown" of 16,000 homes nea Bristol, Pa., not yet constructed, and "Fairless Hills" community of 1000 prefab ricated single houses already put up by th Danherst Corp. about five miles from th steel plant, are the two big housing de velopments in the area. A number of smal er projects and individual homes have als sprung up like mushrooms for many mil around Morrisville.

Ford and other union officials in th area are somewhat bitter about the failu to consult labor in the planning of the communities where union members w soon be living.

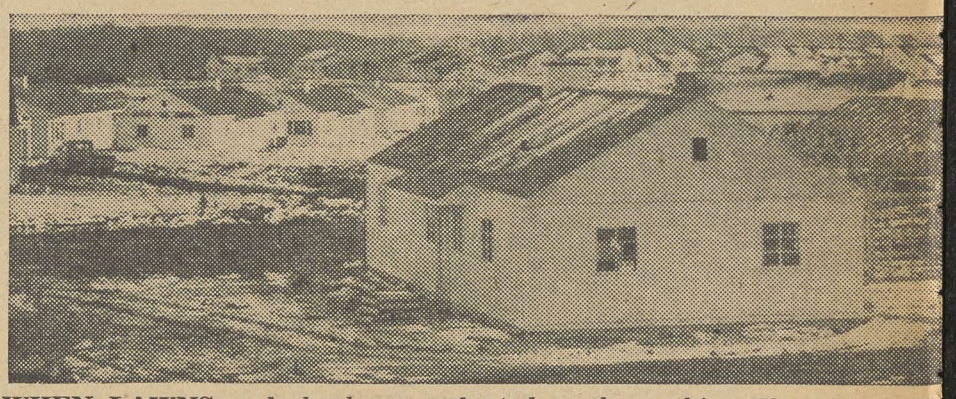
Labor Bypassed

In a statement presented to a conferen called to discuss problems raised by th industrial expansion in the area, Ford e plained "labor's stake" in what took plac He called attention particularly to the ne for a sound and fair housing developme keyed to the best interests of the tho sands of workers coming to settle in th area. Colored families should have th same right as white workers to comfor able, decent and inexpensive homes, h said.

"There will be thousands of colored ste employes working side by side with other races in the production of steel at th new plant," Ford declared. "We in th labor movement don't like lily-white Lo Island towns for Bucks County steel wor ers." (He was referring to the all-whi Levittown in Long Island, N. Y., built the same concern—Levitt & Sons, Inc. that will put up the Levittown near th Fairless Works.

"I can tell you that the American wor ing men and women coming to settle he will expect that any man, regardless race, creed or color, will be able to buy rent a home within the development no being built or those comtemplated."

Besides good and inexpensive homes a apartments, Ford said that proper pla ning required provisions for convenie schools, churches, shopping centers, braries, theaters. He warned that witho careful planning, there was a danger th this great industrial development mig "be turned into a shoddy, profiteeri boomtown for the enrichment of a f greedy pirates, and the devastation of t hopes of its new settlers."



WHEN LAWNS and shrubs are planted, perhaps this "Fairless Hills" community of 1100 prefabricated houses won't look as dreary as it did when our photographer took this picture. Workers at the new U. S. Steel plant five miles away will be buying some of these small homes. They're already two and three high for what ing machine in from the draw

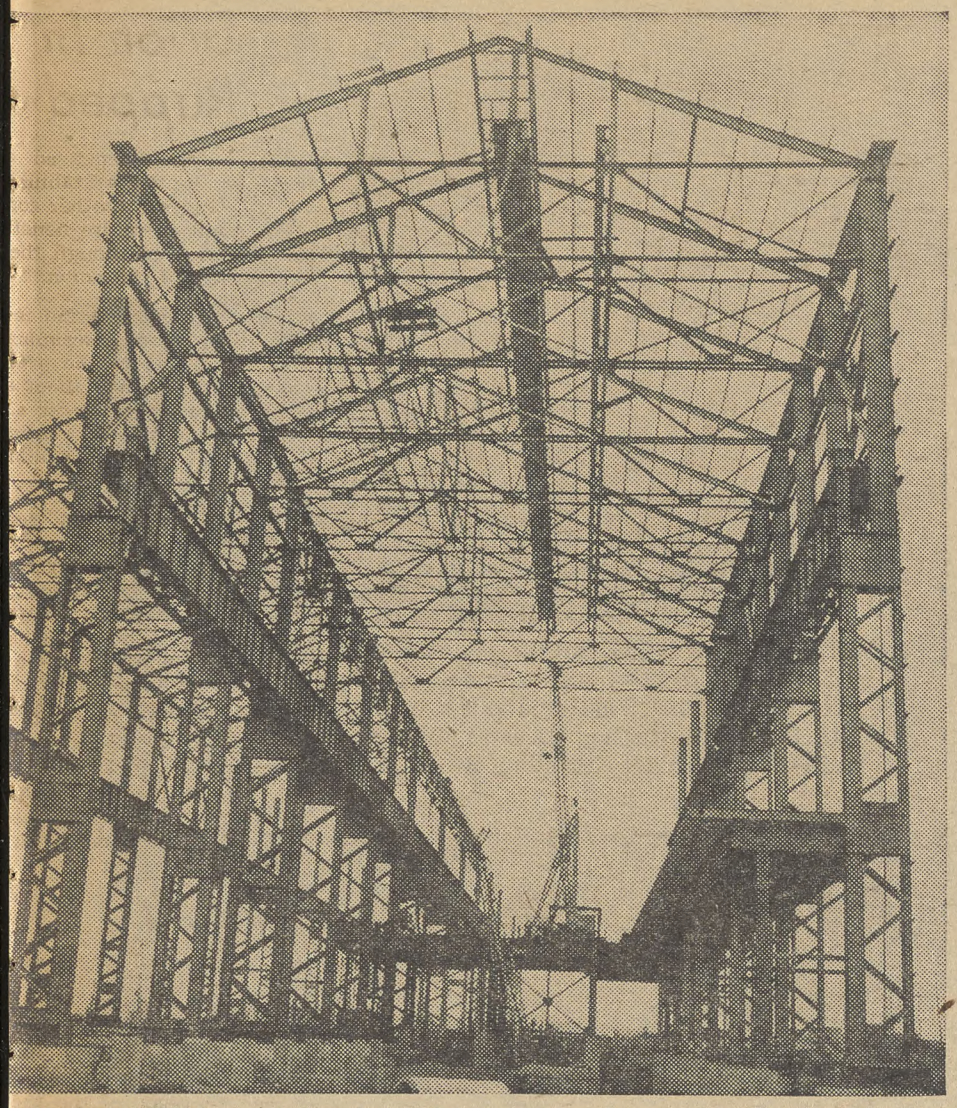
'Marginal Plants' May Close Down

Completion of the Fairless Works "will be another factor tending to reduce Big Steel's production in the Pittsburgh district," according to the Wall Street Journal.

If and when steel production—now above theoretical 100% capacity—falls to 85% or lower, the business paper said, U. S. Steel Corp. plans to close down some of its older plants in the Pittsburgh area, and transfer production to some of its more modern works.

Among steel mills labelled by the Wall Street Journal as "marginal plants"—not profitable to Big Steel except in times of high production—is the Homestead Works. Whether Big Steel considers Homestead's 14,000 employes as "marginal workers" wasn't stated.

Delaware!



UGE GIRDERS are being hoisted into place by cranes in constructing e open hearth furnace frames for the new Fairless Works. Nearly two illion tons of steel a year will be made here. Mostly ore shipped from Venuela will be used. The Delaware River channel will be dredged deeper so ean-going vessels can navigate to the plant up river from Philadelphia.

ream Of Glory ises In Trenton

F YOU'VE gone by train from Washington or Philadelphia to New rk in recent months, you may have en the jumble of freight cars, ountains of sand and a scene of genal upheaval to the right just bere the train crosses the bridge over e Delaware River and nears Trenton.

Or if it's night, and you can't see all this, u may have noticed the big sign in ght red lights on the auto traffic bridge the left: WHAT TRENTON MAKES HE WORLD TAKES.

t's not a new sign. When it was put up body dreamed of the big industrial delopment ahead, or had any idea that me day he might dream that this area uld come to be heralded as the possible future rival of Pittsburgh, or the "Ruhr of America," as it is today.

Trenton is on the Delaware River, and plans are in progress to deepen the river's channel to 40 feet so that it can be navigated by ocean-going ships. The estimated cost of the project is from $25 to $50 million. Congress will be asked to appropriate the money to dredge the channel on the basis that it is a defense need.

What started all this excitement over the "tremendous expansion" under way, of course, was the construction of the U.S. Steel's new $400 million plant, the Fairless Works, named after Big Steel's president, Ben Fairless.

Ore shipped direct to the Fairless Works, especially from Venezuela, will be used and processed to the finished product. U. S. Steel is reported to be confident that Congress will come across with the money to widen the Delaware, and already has built a small harbor where ore ships may unload.

Attracted by the new steel works, hundreds of other industrial plants have moved or are planning to move into this area. It has been predicted that within 20 years both sides of the Pennsylvania Railroad between Trenton and New Brunswick, N.J. will be filled solidly with shops and factories.

If all this is true, it has terrific implications for labor. Business interests are not given to considering the human values involved in their schemes for industrial expansion.

But as CIO Pres. Philip Murray has said, workers are not "automatons" or "robots." They are flesh and blood American citizens, who must have decent homes and communities to live in, and income high enough to provide them with a high American standard of living.

Hand in hand with industrial planning, therefore, should go the planning of pleasant and convenient homes and communities for the workers who will man the new plants and factories.

Lesson In L.A.—

How To Kill Housing In One Easy Lesson!

By BRADFORD V. CARTER,
For Labor Press Associated

There's a particularly nauseating radio commercial, "Film Never Lets Up." Neither does NAREB, which is short for National Association of Real Estate Boards.

NAREB is against rent control, and against public housing, for that's "government interference in private enterprise," and therefore "socialism."

Of course when the government eases credit controls, and when the government guarantees mortgages on private building, so that the builders and contractors and realty men get all the gravy, with no risk whatsoever—that's the American Way of Life.

NAREB fought the public housing program in Congress last session, almost got the program down to 5000 units for the entire country. The final figure was 50,000. Were the 50,000 units built? Not on your tintype, for NAREB never lets up.

What it did in Los Angeles it has tried, and will try, in other communities. And if the methods it used were not too pure, what's a few distortions between friends?

Alexander Sumner, NAREB president, explained its purposes in a signed article in Headlines, weekly newsletter published in Washington.

What's In A Name?

Sumner explained that the real estate boards used to be called exchanges and when they changed the name "then began the rise of the Realtor as a creative and constructive force through his organization in the life of his town and country."

How "creative and constructive"? In Los Angeles, Sumner wrote, "it is the policy of the Board to be represented by one or more of its members in each civic and service group, including women's organizations, bringing the viewpoint and the influence of the Realtor to bear in many fields."

How did the realtors fare in Los Angeles? Well, they managed to persuade the City Council to reverse itself, and cancel, 8 to 7, the city's $110 million public housing program. Said the NAREB Headlines:

"Heeding the growing opposition to the project among civic groups and the press as the implications became known, the council thus blocked the scheme for 10,000 units which was rammed through that body in 1949 without a hearing."

Then Headlines quoted Earl S. Anderson, secretary of the Los Angeles Realty Board, that "this is an indication of what can be done when the community is organized, and the citizens informed of such socialistic schemes."

About the only statements in the foregoing that are accurate are the vote, the amount to be spent, and the number of units to be built. All else is fancy, distortion, or plain, outright, baloney.

The NAREB account says the community was organized, and the citizens informed, and therefore the project was cancelled; in short, public opinion was solidly for the cancellation.

If so, why were the following groups opposed to cancellation? The CIO Council, the AFL Central Labor Council, the American Legion, League of Women Voters, Veterans of Foreign Wars, and many church groups? Would even NAREB say the Legion and VFW are "socialistic?"

Was it an aroused citizenry that forced the reversal? Or was it the greed of the landlords? How come that even NAREB's Headlines says that the drive was spearheaded by the Realty Board and the Chamber of Commerce?

The greed of the landlords and their phony arguments was given away by Milton J. Brock, big local mass builder. The Housing Authority had already accepted bids of $6587 and $7486 apiece for two-bedroom units. That's wrong, cried Brock; the way to estimate the cost per unit is to divide 10,000, the total number of units, into $110 million, total amount for the project. Of course, that would leave no funds for site clearance, development work, etc., but that's exactly what Brock wanted to put over. Then he could argue that all this other work would cost the city that much extra.

As to the realtor being "a creative and constructive force . . . in the life of his town and his country," how "creative and constructive" were the realtors in Los Angeles?

Well, the U.S. government had advanced to the city $12,679,952 for land acquisition, site clearance and other expenses. The city is liable for that amount. To repay it, the city will have to raise real estate taxes or double its sales tax. Both, of course, will be passed on to the little fellow.

There are 1481 families which lost their substandard homes to make way for the new dwellings, for which the first contract has been let. The "creative and constructive" Realtors have no suggestions as to what to do for these 1481 homeless families.

High Finance

The property of many citizens was purchased or condemned to make way for the public housing. Now the city must not only reimburse these owners, but provide them with homes as good as or better than the homes condemned.

The landlords clamored the public housing is not needed. The fact, of course, is that low-income groups, for whom the public housing was intended, cannot afford to rent the privately-built homes. More, landlords refuse to rent to Negroes and Mexicans, and they make up a large portion of the low-income groups.

That's how "creative and constructive" the Realtors were in Los Angeles. If there's a public housing project in your town, your local Realtors will also try to be "creative and constructive."

Yep, film never lets up, and neither does NAREB.

Good Old Days? It's Better Now For Swedish Unions

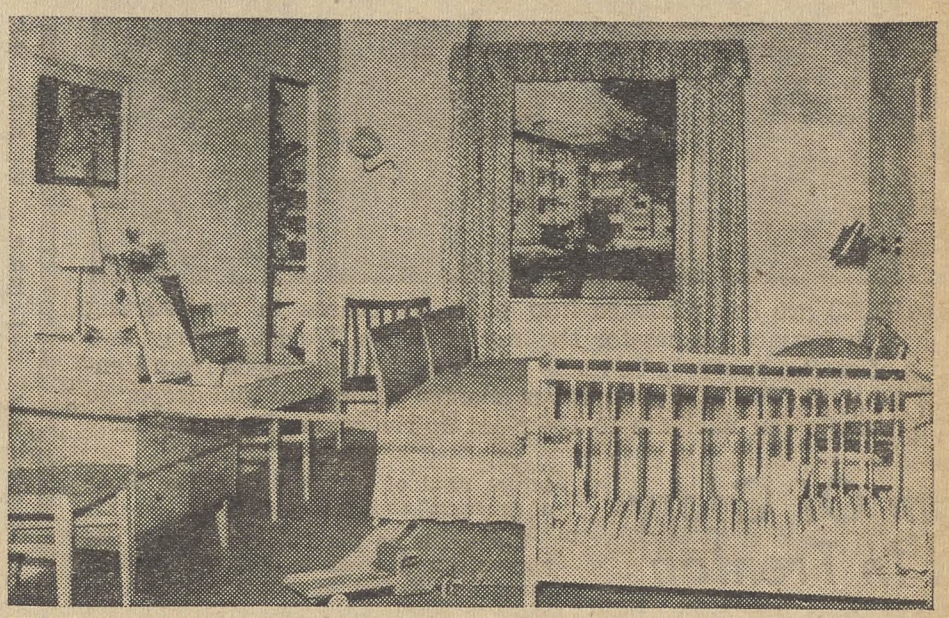
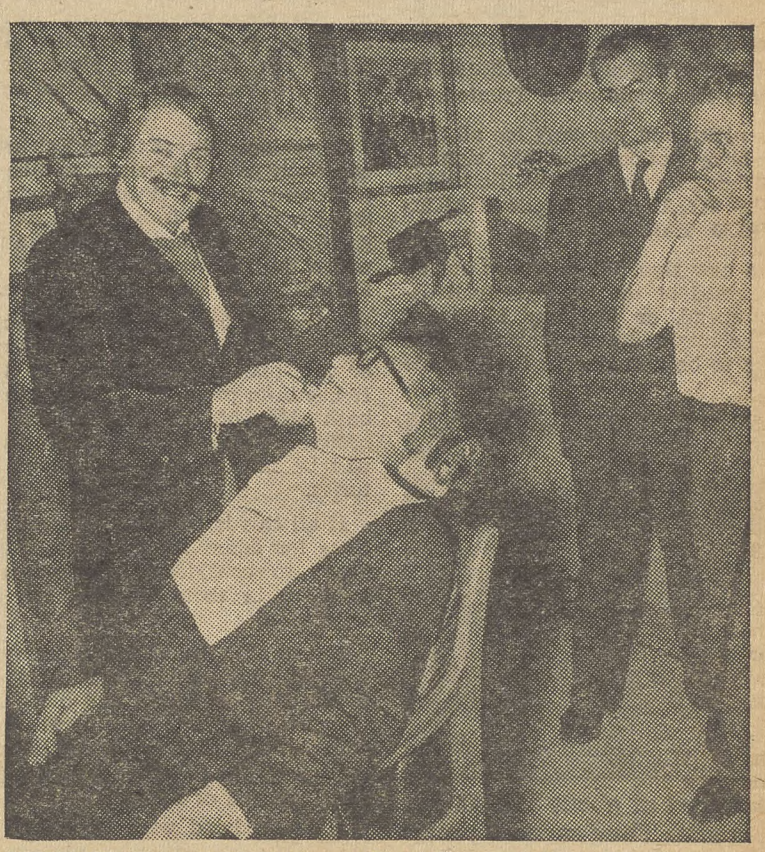
BEFORE AND AFTER contrasts were many. Here is typical home of Swedish worker at turn of century, when Swedish Confederation of Labor (LO) was small. Now it has 44 unions, 1,306,000 members. Country is 95% organized, unions are important in life of nation.



HERE IS HOW Swedish workers now live, in bright, airy, modern apartments, homes. Each union had a display at LO Fair: from Chimneysweeps to Metal Workers they demonstrated their work. Firemen even staged a rescue to show how they function on the job.

KEROSENE LAMP shone over open barrels of beer, milk, free candy for kids, steak at less than 10c per lb. in half-century old grocery displayed by Retail Clerks. But barrels, steak trays were empty. Here Albin Bergstrom, head of big co-op, buys candy.



HOW IT WAS DONE in good old days of Gay Nineties was shown by Barbers Union, members of which let whiskers grow for weeks so they could patronize themselves.

GOV. FULLER Warren of Florida last week was urged by the Civil Rights Committee of the CIO Electrical Workers to "bring to the bar of justice those persons guilty of murder bombing and terror" in the Miami area.

The terror reached its height in the bomb slaying of Mr. and Mrs. Harry T. Moore in their home at Mims, Fla. Moore was Florida director of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The committee, which consists of representatives from the IUE's 10 geographical districts, held a two-day meeting in Washington. IUE Secy.-Treas. Al Hartnett is chairman of the committee.

It was decided that every IUE contract should contain a clause barring discrimination in hiring, pay, job tenure and promotion. Some locals have such clauses in their contracts.

The committee also set up governmental and legislative goals which include:

A SENATE rule to end debate by simple majority vote, passage of a federal Fair Employment Practices Act and similar measures in cities and states, enactment of a federal anti-lynching bill, and passage of federal and state legislation outlawing poll taxes and other restrictions on the right to vote.

Among other 10-point aims of the committee are:

Strengthening federal civil rights laws, issuance of a Presidential Executive Order establishing a FEPC with enforcement powers, repealing the Smith and McCarran Acts and passage of legislation guarding against subversion and guaranteeing civil liberties.

The IUE committee also called for merciless publicity on violations of civil liberties, even of those whose ideas that are abhored, and constant watchfulness to see that in opposing Communist and other totalitarians the policies of dictatorial groups are not adopted.

The committee discussed legislative possibilities with Max Kampelman, legislative counsel of Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.), cooperation with other civil liberty groups with Clarence Mitchell of the Washington NAAPC office, and means of implementing its program with George L-P Weaver, assistant to the RFC administrator. Weaver is on leave as director of the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination.

Senate Votes Home Rule For Capital

CITIZENS of Washington, D. C.—where the nation's laws are made—face the same old run-around they've gotten before in the matter of home rule.

Although the Senate last week passed a watered-down version of the D. C. self-government measure, the familar coalition of reactionary Republicans and Dixiecrats is expected to ax the bill in the House.

In the Senate, the bill barely survived a 41-35 test vote against a strong opposition drive led by Sens. Smith (D. N.C.) and Johnston (D. S.C.) which would have shelved the measure.

Senate passage of the bill on a voice vote was a repeat performance of similar action on a slightly different suffrage bill in 1949.

The fate of that measure in the House was considerably worse than death. A hostile House District Committee held prolonged hearings, delayed a vote against the bill and finally defeated it.

Chairman McMillan (D. S.C.) predicted a similar fate for the measure this time when it hits the House.

"I haven't changed my position since the last time," he said. "I haven't seen a bill worth calling 'home rule.' There will be more hearings."

Potofsky Warns—

'Civil Rights Foes Are Like Nazi Hooligans!'

JACOB S. Potofsky, president of the CIO Clothing Workers, last week added his voice to demands for prompt federal intervention to end the recent outbursts of violence aimed at Negroes and other minorities.

In a strongly-worded address at a National Urban League meeting in New York, Potofsky warned that the breakdown of local law enforcement, as revealed in the Florida bomb outrages, is reminiscent of Nazi activities in Germany in the '30s.

"It is incumbent on the U. S. Attorney General," he declared, "to act with vigor and determination on behalf of both the majority and minority of Americans, because otherwise, our religious and civil liberties will be lost to all."

NOTING that discrimination is a poison that weakens our national strength and "saps us of an effective defense against our enemies from without and within," Potofsky said the recent outbreaks of violence against minorities are "a threat to the orderly processes of government and our way of life."

"They constitute a duplicate of Nazi hooliganism and must be curbed by prompt, energetic federal intervention if they are not to become a cancer eating at the vitals of our country."

Referring specifically to the murder of Harry T. Moore, the distinguished Negro leader in Florida, and his wife; the outbreaks in that state against Negro housing projects and the mob violence in Cicero, Ill., Potofsky warned that the breakdown of local law enforcement can no longer be tolerated.

"These acts of violence and discrimination are destroying our prestige abroad," he declared.

"They do us incalcuable damage with millions of men and women in Asia, Africa and Europe whom we are trying to win over to the democratic cause. They nullify the progress we are making with the Marshall Plan and Point Four assistance."

JACOB S. POTOFSKY

He said the blame "must be laid at the doors of a small band of wilful men in the U. S. Senate." Under present Senate rules, he pointed out a minority of Senators can filibuster legislation to death.

"THAT is exactly what has been done to date with the Fair Employment Practices Act," he added.

"I realize that discrimination can be completely rooted out only when it is expelled from our hearts. That is the most effective solution. But until that happy day, we need legislation—legislation with teeth in it—with enforcement penalties in order to insure full compliance with the law."

Potofsky declared that from the beginning the CIO has given strong support to the passage of federal, state and municipal legislation which would help impliment the principle of equal opportunity for all.

Officers Of NMU Upheld By ACLU

OFFICERS of the CIO Maritime Union have not violated the civil rights of their members, according to a report prepared for the American Civil Liberties Union by Prof. Philip Taft, of Brown Univ.

The report, released last week, reviewed some of the intra-union difficulties that ensued after Communist domination was shaken off in 1948, including the seizure of national headquarters by forces opposed to Pres. Joseph Curran late in 1949. In the heat of the fight, Taft found, there is "no doubt that violence was used sometimes against innocent men."

"It seems to me," he added, "that as one who looks upon the extreme incidents in the context in which they took place, it is difficult to conclude that the officers of the National Maritime Union have been guilty of violence of the civil rights of their members."

Paul Finet Reports—

'Bread And Butter' Gains, Spirit Of U. S. Labor Hailed

PAUL FINET, secretary of the Belgian Federation of Labor and former president of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, recently returned home after an "unusual" visit to the United States.

Although the visit was his fourth, it was the first on which he had actually seen Americans at work, according to an interview in the Free Labor World, monthly publication of the ICFTU.

"In none of my other visits," he said, "did I have the chance of getting so close to the American scene.

"This time, I was able to leave the beaten track and see things for myself. I can safely say that even an observer with such a limited amount of time as I had cannot fail to be impressed by the American people's determination and keenness for work.

"They are ready to accept many sacrifices in the cause of defense, and they are aware that these sacrifices will not be in vain, because their spirit of enterprise and their excellent organization enable all their efforts to have the maximum effect."

TWO INDUSTRIES especially interested him — coal mining and the heavy industries (steel mills and machinery construction).

"I visited the Homestead steel plant and rolling mill, which belongs to the U. S. Steel Corp., and the Midvale Steel Co. metalworks in Philadelphia.

"In both these foundries I found that working conditions were not so very different from those in factories in Belgium, and as a former metal worker, I shouldn't have felt at all at a loss if they'd offered me a job as a skilled worker with the Midvale Co.

"The reasons for the superiority of American factories from the production point of view are, first of all, better general planning (things are organized down to the smallest detail) and secondly, much greater attention to working conditions. Each work-place is arranged in such a way that the worker has to exert a minimum of effort."

PAUL FINET
Keenness for work.

He made it clear, however, that his conclusion was based only on what he saw, and not on a broad general view of U. S. industry.

Finet was asked if he agreed with the claim of some people that U. S. efficiency is attributable to the "special mentality" of the workers.

"I think it's not a matter of the worker himself—after all, his reactions are not so different on either side of the Atlantic," he answered.

"The real difference is in the prevailing atmosphere in the factories and in American life generally. Social distinctions, though they exist, are reduced to a minimum—there is not such a very wide gap between the boss and the humblest of his workers.

"Of course, I'm not referring to the big business men and financiers who in many cases know almost nothing of the plants they control. But it seemed to me that there is a fellow-feeling and a team spirit between management and the workers which it would be difficult to parallel in Europe.

"ON MY VISITS to mines and factories, I was accompanied by both shop stewards and representatives of the management. Not only did they address each other as equals, but the 'bosses' seemed to know each of the workers personally, and the workers certainly showed no special deference in their attitude towards them.

"American workers have a very clear idea of labor's interest, but because of the greater amount of social equality, they have not that class consciousness we imply when we speak of the 'class struggle.'

"They realize, of course, that any gains they make must be at the expense of the capitalists, but what they are aiming at is a fair share which will enable a regular improvement in their standard of living.

"Moreover, poverty and want —the lot of so many workers in Europe—are not to be seen, at least in the industrial regions of the East which I visited. Over there, everyone can afford a car —if not new, at least in very good condition. The comfortable conditions of the average worker make him much more indifferent to the luxury enjoyed by the few."

Again Finet stressed that his conclusions were based on limited observation. He pointed out that, for example, he did not visit the South and had had no first-hand contacts "with life in the Negro quarters."

He does not think that the role of labor unions in American political life—while important—is as great as that of European unions. This is due to a difference in methods and approach, he feels.

"In America, the unions are much more reluctant to have recourse to legislation," he explained. "The workers prefer to settle their affairs directly with the employers through their union representatives . . .

"This policy has yielded positive results and seems to have been quite adequate up to now . . .

"THE POWER of the American trade unions is also due to a practice which European observers generally forget to stress but which is, nevertheless, extremely important — the custom of inserting union shop clauses in collective agreements . . .

"So far as to be able to judge with a full knowledge of the facts, the advantages and disadvantages of the system must be carefully taken into account. I myself consider that its advantages more than outweigh the drawbacks."

European unionists, Finet said, can learn much from U. S. labor, especially along two lines—union administration and negotiating.

"Union administration has been developed to the point of perfection," he observed.

"The aim constantly before every trade union is to get the greatest possible results from every dollar members pay in affiliation fees.

"The trade unions, just as much as the big enterprises, are business-minded. They have developed research, education and publicity services which are models of their kind."

No Wonder He Hesitates!

Eight young Danes and 15 youthful Germans are now in this country under the Mutual Security Agency's workshop program. They arrived with praise for U. S. good will and a needling for Russia.

An invitation to spend a year working and studying in the Soviet Union, said the Danes, would have had a different reception. They were "not so sure" they'd accept.

"Stalin would have to post his personal bond guaranteeing my safe return to Denmark," said Jorgen Peterson of Copenhagen, "and even then I'd hesitate."

The group is now attending American International College, Springfield, Mass. They will get jobs in private industry and pay their own living and college expenses.

NLRB Report Bars Runaway By Employer

A NATIONAL Labor Relations Board trial examiner has handed down an intermediate report recommending that Cayey Manufacturing Co., Cayey, Puerto Rico, be required to post a couple of rather unusual notices in its glove factory.

Charges of unfair practices were brought against the firm by the General Confederation of Workers (CGT-CIO), which also asked that the results of an election held on Oct. 17, 1950, be set aside because of the company's interference.

The trial examiner, Ralph Winkler, recommended that the election be voided and that the company be required to post the usual notice promising not to interfere with, restrain or coerce its employes in the exercise of their right to self-organization.

Then he also recommended that the firm be required to post two additional notices — one promising "we will not threaten to move or shut down or change operations" because of the CGT's organizational efforts, and the other saying "we will not warn our employes that their opportunities for employment depend on how they vote" in bargaining elections.

CCL Praises Naming Of Labor Attache

THE CANADIAN government's establishment of a labor diplomatic service was welcomed last week by the Canadian Congress of Labor.

"The Congress has on a number of occasions urged upon the government the importance of having labor observers in important foreign centers," said Donald MacDonald, CCL secretary-treasurer.

MacDonald's predecessor, Pat Conroy, was the first appointee in the new service. He was named labor attache at the Canadian Embassy in Washington on Jan. 16. MacDonald described his appointment as an "excellent choice."

"His broad knowledge of the labor movement throughout the world," said MacDonald, "and his service with the CCL provide him with an excellent background for the new duties he will assume."

The CCL executive board, at a recent meeting in Ottawa, decided to confer shortly with government officials on the Canadian immigration policy.

The union group, with which CIO locals in Canada are affiliated, will first investigate indications that immigrants are not being channeled into jobs where they are needed and their skills can be utilized.

CCL Vice Pres. Stewart Alsbury, who also is president of the British Columbia district of the CIO Woodworkers, reported many immigrants getting jobs in the industry there despite unemployment.

A number have gone to logging camps, he said, and as a result of language difficulties have had trouble in understanding stafety rules and have been killed or injured.

UPA Chief Honored

Herman Kraehnke has received two scrolls in recognition of his 12 years as president of Local 1006, CIO Paperworkers in Monroe, Mich. One scroll was presented by the Monroe CIO Council, the other by the CIO's social and welfare committee.

'Testament' Of Czech Writer Warns West On Communist Intrigue

A VOICE FROM THE GRAVE has come out of Eastern Europe to warn the Western world that agitation, intrigue and organization, rather than sheer terrorism, are the main instruments of the Communists.

The voice is that of Frantisek Halas, a well-known Czechoslovak writer who died in 1949. His "political testament," written shortly before his death, was smuggled out of the country and has just been printed in the magazine of the Swedish Federation of Labor.

Halas once was a confirmed Communist and served for a time in the Parliament before he discovered the true spirit of communism, according to the Swedish publication.

It quoted him as saying that the "pink intelligentsia" in Czechoslovakia knew well that a Communist rule would not mean a paradise, but that they did not hesitate to choose such a government over a "bourgeois" one at the time of the 1948 revolution. Then—

"All around us the world changed," Halas wrote.

"Ignorant fortune hunters of the kind that always abound in cultural life took over the chief administrative posts. The most treasured voices became silent. Suddenly the most idiotic statements and the crudest lies were pronounced without anybody reacting to them.

"Instead of a culture with wide ramifications, there appeared something utterly meagre, monotonous, and base. How could all this have happened? We had, to be sure, been there the entire time, and in no way were we able to prevent it. We had all been socialists, and instead of socialism they rammed this down our throats."

Halas wrote that organization is the keynote of the Communist regime.

Dissenters have no chance to band together in their own organizations, he wrote. Their "voices are drowned," and significant and coherent criticism has disappeared.

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

ON JAN. 19 the writer convened a meeting of the CIO Organizing Committee in Atlanta, Ga. Dir. John Riffe, Sec.-Treas. Oral Garrison, all state directors, the educational and publicity staff and other top staff members were in attendance. This meeting was undoubtedly the most informative that we have ever had on the organizational situation in the South.

The men who actually do the work in the field reported much information concerning their own areas that would have been difficult to submit in written form. The state directors discussed their problems openly and put forth their ideas as what should be done.

A number of CIO international unions were represented, as follows: Clothing Workers by Pres. Jacob Potofsky, IUE by Pres. James B. Carey, Textile Workers by Sec.-Treas. William Pollock, Paperworkers by Pres. Harry Sayre, Shipbuilding Workers by Sec.-Treas. Ross Blood, Furniture Workers by Pres. Morris Pizer, Woodworkers by Vice Pres. Claude Ballard and Rubber Workers by Sec.-Treas. Desmond Walker. A number of other internationals were represented by their district directors.

It was the unanimous opinion that the job being done by the CIO Organizing Committee must be continued with even greater vigor. The industrialization of the South is taking place rapidly. In some cases industry from the North is re-establishing in the South and in other cases completely new industry is being created.

It is our job to bring to the workers of the South the benefits of unionism and help them obtain the wages and security that union members in the rest of the country receive.

The CIO is making good progress in organizing the workers of the Southern states. It is interesting to note the progress being made in North and South Carolina against the bigots who are hard at work broadcasting their vile, vicious untruths about the CIO.

I want to extend my thanks and congratulations to Dir. Riffe, Sec.-Treas. Garrison and the entire Southern staff for a job well done.

I am happy to report that the CIO has been of material assistance to our Puerto Rican brothers in obtaining a new wage determination in the sugar cane industry by the Dept. of Agriculture. Pres. Armando Sanches, of the Sindicato de Trabajadores Industria Azucarera, CGT-CIO, reports that this is the first time since 1943 than any change has been made in the basic wage rate of the sugar cane workers.

In view of the past history of wage determinations it is considered that the gains made this year constitute a great victory for the CGT-CIO. Besides the marginal benefits and the guarantee that the minimum of $2.15 per day will be paid even when raw sugar goes below $5 per cwt. in the New York market, gains of from 6% to 11% were made in basic wages for all classifications.

I want to extend my thanks and congratulations to CIO Rep. David Sternback for the part he has played in helping these workers of Puerto Rico obtain these gains.

Reg. Dir. Loren Houser reports that in a represenation election at the Indiana Desk Co., Jasper, Ind., the workers favored the CIO by a vote of 95 to 32 for no union. In this instance, two CIO unions, the Paperworkers and the Furniture Workers, had begun organizational work in the plant. By mutual agreement it was decided by the two unions to let the ballot read CIO, and settle their problem after the election.

CIO Rep. Ken Gillie reports that in a representation election at the Cal-Date Shed, Indio, Cal., the workers favored CIO by a vote of 158 to 127 for no union.

Sec.-Treas. John Lawson, Stone and Allied Workers, CIO, reports that in a representation election at the Kilgore Ceramics Co., Kilgore, Tex., the workers picked the USAPWA-CIO by a 27 to 24 vote. Intl. Rep. Joseph McGee handled the organizational campaign.

Dir. Riffe of the CIO Organizing Committee reports that in a representation election at the Bethlehem Steel Co., Corsicana, Tex., the CIO Steelworkers won an overwhelming victory over the IAM by a vote of USA 412, IAM 6.

'Flash Fire' Sweater Ban Once Rejected By Congress

THE MANUFACTURE and sale of highly inflammable brushed rayon sweaters would have been outlawed if Congress had paid heed to warnings issued by the Federal Trade Commission.

Police and fire authorities in several cities have reported that the sweaters are dangerous and, in some instances, have gone up in flames in less than 60 seconds after being ignited.

Several years ago, bills were introduced in Congress which would subject manufacturers and sellers to severe penalties if warning labels were not placed on highly inflammable materials.

At that time the FTC testified in favor of the legislation and urged its enactment but Congress turned a deaf ear to the proposals. The result, a rash of "flash fires" with many consumers burned.

'End The Rake-off On Workmen's Compensation,' N.Y. CIO Demands

By BERNARD RASKIN

THE NEW YORK State CIO Council has made establishment of an exclusive state fund to provide workmen's compensation insurance one of the key recommendations in its 1952 legislative program.

Pres. Louis Hollander declared that at least $90 million out of an annual total of $300 million in workmen's compensation premiums now goes to cover profits, commissions and expenses of private insurance carriers and brokers. All these costs would be avoided through an exclusive state fund, he said.

"An investigation of the entire field would bring out still more shocking facts about the tribute paid to private insurance interests through workmen's compensation," Hollander added.

The council is also putting major emphasis on a drive for repeal of the Hughes-Brees unemployment insurance amendments which were enacted last year.

These amendments set up a system of individual employer accounts, thereby reducing the state's central unemployment insurance reserve fund from $900 million last year to less than $400 million today. Added restrictions on eligibility have shut out thousands of workers previously protected and a new benefit calculation method has sharply reduced benefits for additional thousands, the council charged.

The council also opposed renewal of New York City's 3% sales tax which expires in June, urged expansion of the State Commission against Discrimination to include power to prevent discrimination in public housing projects, and demanded stronger rent control laws.

Hollander said the council would look at the record in endorsing candidates in the 1952 election and would not be "the tail to the kite of any party."

Mine Safety Bill Urged

PRESIDENT TRUMAN in his budget message last week asked Congress for speedy passage of a law giving the federal government enforcement powers over mine safety.

He followed his appeal with letters the following day to Vice Pres. Barkley and Speaker Sam Rayburn. Citing the Christmas disaster at West Frankford, Ill., which cost the lives of 119 miners, he urged Congress to "lose no time in enacting legislation... to help prevent the shocking fatalities in the coal mines of this country."

His request was in line with an appeal made by Pres. Philip Murray last month when the CIO contributed $10,000 to families of the West Frankford victims.

Bolstering the President's plea was the report of the U. S. Bureau of Mines last week showing that 1950 mine fatalities were the worst since 1948. The report showed 690 deaths in soft coal, an increase of 140 over 1950, and 100 deaths in anthracite compared to 92 in 1950.

Bell System Profits Up, Service Off

THE BELL SYSTEM—the nation's biggest monopoly—made more money last year than ever before, is providing less service to some of its customers, and wants to up its profits by more rate increases.

At a time when Bell operating subsidiaries have rate increase moves pending across the nation, the American Telephone & Telegraph Co.—parent of them all—reported net profits increased by more than $41 million in 1951.

They climbed from $286 million for 1950 to more than $327 million last year—despite a 30% tax boost. That figure is for AT&T alone. Counting in subsidiaries, the total last year was more than $339 million—an increase above 7%.

From the point of view of telephone consumers, however, a recent report by the Rural Electrification Administration showed that the Bell System is doing a poor job for the farmers.

The REA disclosed that 450,000 fewer farms had telephones in 1950 than was the case 30 years ago.

In 1950 there were 2,059,474 telephones down on the farm. In 1920, the number was listed as 2,498,493.

Part of the decline is due to a reduction in the number of mutual telephone companies in rural areas.

URW Sponsors Nunn In Akron

Guy Nunn, radio commentator sponsored by the CIO Auto Workers in Michigan for the last three years, extends his daily broadcasts to Akron, O., this week under the sponsorship of the CIO Rubber Workers and a score of URW locals in the Akron area.

Nunn has been broadcasting one program a week through Station WAKR in Akron as a public service for the last nine months. The same station will carry the daily program, which will be broadcast for the first time at 7:15 p.m. on Jan. 28.

'PositiveSteps' Against UE In A-Plants Told

"POSITIVE STEPS" taken by the Atomic Energy Commission in barring two Communist-dominated unions from atomic installations were detailed in a report released last week by a Senate Labor subcommittee.

Chairman Gordon Dean of the AEC said that agency had barred both the United Electrical Workers and the United Public Workers—two of the unions expelled from CIO as Communist-controlled—from collective bargaining rights in atomic projects.

Of this action, in 1948 and subsequently, Dean's report said:

"The action represented a particularized approach to a particular problem and was fitted to the specific facts of the situation.

"There was a decision by the responsible government agency that the risk in the particular situation was inconsistent with national security and that positive steps were required to eliminate this risk.

"AN essential step was to provide to employes and public authoritative information regarding the question of loyalty which existed in the specific situation and authoritative advice regarding the significance of this in terms of known Communist aims and purposes in the infiltration of trade unions (and) the importance to the national security of the work carried on in the specific bargaining unit.

"Specific assurance was given to employes as to the welcome to be accorded any bargaining representative that they might select which was free from Communist affiliations.

"The union officials involved were given every opportunity to be heard in their own defense."

Dean said that he was "not able at this time to suggest any specific approach for legislation." The Senate Labor subcommittee, headed by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.), is studying Communist infiltration in some unions.

Such legislation has been rejected as "unnecessary and unwise" by CIO Pres. Philip Murray, who said "the Communists are on the run in the labor movement."

IUE-CIO Forms Canadian Council To Push Organizing

CIO ELECTRICAL Workers are stepping up their organizing campaign in Canada, determined to eradicate the Communist-controlled United Electrical Workers and its "contracts that depressed wages and other standards throughout the industry."

Announcement of the organizing drive by IUE-CIO Sec.-Treas. Al Hartnett followed a two-day conference in Toronto last week which formed a Canadian Provisional District 5 Council of the union.

Forty-five IUE - CIO leaders from 11 Canadian IUE locals participated in the meeting, and elected Philip Magee, of Willard Battery Local 512, as temporary chairman of the council's administrative committee. Evelyn O'Neill, of Canadian GE Office Workers Local 567, was named secretary-treasurer.

The council, which will remain provisional only until the Canadian district itself decides to set up a permanent structure, was given jurisdiction to organize all Canadian employes of the electrical, radio, machine and allied industries.

(The IUE-CIO, which represents more than 350,000 U. S. and Canadian workers, was chartered by CIO in 1949 after the expulsion of UE as a Communist - controlled organization.)

"There are many thousands of Canadian workers in our industry to whom we are determined to bring the benefits of IUE-CIO wage standards and other contract benefits," Harnett and Magee said in a joint statement.

The District Council announced that its Canadian program, which will be meshed with the IUE-CIO's program in the U. S., will include contract demands for a substantial wage increase together with a cost-of-living escalator; a minimum wage of $1.25 an hour; elimination of differentials between Canadian and U. S. wage scales; restoration of the profit-sharing program which was previously in effect in the General Electric chain and which UE surrendered; comprehensive health and insurance programs; non-contributory pensions; union security provisions; productivity increases; and employer-financed payments to supplement unemployment compensation during joblessness due to plant conversion or reconversion.

MORE OF THE SAME—All day Dorothy Kern (left) and Susan Spoto work as secretaries in Trenton, N. J., offices of CIO Steelworkers locals. Recently they topped it off with a volunteer night-time stint, handling this big mailing for the fund-raising program of the Children's Home Society of New Jersey. They stepped in when regular volunteers failed to appear, and got mailing of 6000 pieces out in time.

Jurisdictional Pact Set By N. Y. Labor

CIO AND AFL leaders in New York last week established a joint committee to end jurisdictional disputes.

Not only will the new group attempt to head off destructive inter-union rivalries — with the power of persuasion its only weapon—but it also will throw the united strength of the metropoltan area's labor movement into the fight against unions led by racketeers or Communists.

Representing the CIO on the committee are Michael J. Quill, president of the CIO Council and of the CIO Transport Workers; Morris Iushwitz, council secretary-treasurer; Patrick J. McGrath, regional director of the Utility Workers; Pres. Joseph Curran of the Maritime Union, and Pres. Louis Hollander of the New York State CIO Council.

AFL members are Pres. Martin T. Lacey, Vice Pres. Moe Rosen and Sec.-Treas. James C. Quinn of the Central Trades & Labor Council, and Pres. Howard McSpedon and Sec.-Treas. John J. Brennan of the Building & Construction Trades Council.

Insofar as jurisdictional disputes are concerned, the committee will try to mediate differences between rival groups. Failing there, it will have the power to withhold the official support of organized labor from strikes or picket lines growing out of raids by one union upon another.

Hollander said the group is intended to stabilize labor relations and demonstrate that unions are made up of "mature people who can handle their own affairs without courts or outside help."

Iushewitz and Quinn said the setup will formalize the "catch as catch can" arrangement under which they have been trying to settle jurisdictional fights, and that it represents a long step toward labor peace.

McSpedon predicted that the committee's activities will do much to get rid of "socalled unions which both of our organizations know are not bona fide."

Curb Drafted On Wetbacks By Magnuson

SEN. MAGNUSON (D. Wash.) last week introduced a bill to halt the use of migratory workers who enter the United States illegally from Mexico.

Such workers, commonly called "wetbacks," have depressed the American labor market for years and at the same time have been ruthlessly exploited by unscrupulous employers.

Magnusons' bill has been approved by the White House and leaders of the CIO, AFL, American Legion National Grange and other groups. It was prepared after consultation with Cecil Clark, of Yakima, Wash.; R. T. Magleby, of Walla Walla, Wash., and other members of a national committee of farm labor users.

The bill would revise the immigration laws to prohibit the use, transportation or harboring of workers illegally in this country, with violators liable to fines up to $2000, or up to five years' imprisonment, or both.

It also would insure the payment of fair wages to all Mexican nationals working in the United States, as well as proper working and housing conditions.

"It is vital," Magunson said, "that we act to halt the shameful use of wetback labor, and at the same time insure a legitimate supply of migratory labor."

ARA Demands Safety Radio On Lifeboats

W. R. STEINBERG, CIO American Radio Association president, last week blamed government agencies and steamship owners "who place profits above safety of life at sea" for the loss of 46 lives after the S. S. Pennsylvania sank Jan. 9 off the coast of British Columbia.

In a bitterly-worded letter to the Federal Communications Commission, the Coast Guard Bureau of Marine Inspection, the Federal Maritime Board and each member of Congress, Steinberg appealed for reinstitution of the World War II requirement that lifeboat radio equipment be placed aboard all American vessels.

After the war, he recounted, the transmitters were removed by steamship companies "to save the few dollars necessary for maintenance" The portable transmitters cost from $300 to $700.

"When crews take to the lifeboats," Steinberg wrote, "they do not now have the means to communicate with potential rescue ships in their vicinity. We feel sure that were there a portable radio transmitter in the lifeboat of the S. S. Pennsylvania, a rescue ship that was only 60 miles away would have been able to 'home' on the radio transmissions of the drifting lifeboat and pick up its occupants before the fury of the storm destroyed them."

TWUA Gets $543,000 Back Pay For 15,000

FIFTEEN thousand CIO Textile Workers will get a 6c an hour wage increase retroactive to last Oct. 1 as the result of approval by the New York Regional Wage Stabilization Board of a new TWUA contract.

Workers getting the increase—which carries with it an estimated $543,000 in back pay—are employed in the dyeing and finishing industry in the New York metropolitan area.

There is also strong possibility that there will be an increase in the minimum wage paid to cotton and rayon workers working for employers holding contracts with the government.

Under the Walsh-Healy Act, Sec. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin is authorized to set minimum rates for employes working on government contracts over $10,000.

The present textile minimum is 87c an hour. Tobin said that hearings will be held on a new minimum after TWUA filed a demand for a $1.265 minimum.

While the dyeing and finishing pact approved by the regional WSB covers more than 8000 workers, William Gordon, acting TWUA dyeing director, explained that another 7000 will automatically receive the increase.

Four employers groups are covered by the contract—the Silk and Rayon Printers and Dyers Association; the Association of Textile Screen Makers, Printers and Dyers; Metropolitan Textile Processors Association and the Machine Printers Association.

The new contract also calls for a cost-of-living escalator yielding 1c an hour for each rise of 1.18 points in the Bureau of Labor Statistics consumer price index.

Annunzio Wins Democracy Award

Frank Annunzio, director of the Illinois Dept. of Labor, last week received the "Democracy Citation" from the Chicago Council Against Racial and Religious Discrimination at a dinner at Chicago.

The citation praised Annunzio —formerly Illinois CIO-PAC director — for "having expanded the work horizon of all workers in our state." Annunizo recently announced that the Illinois State Employment Service would refuse to fill job orders with racial and religious specifications.

Taft Won't Turn On Joe

Sen. Taft has refused to turn his back on Joe McCarthy.

When the Wisconsin Senator a few years ago first began his alarms about "Communists in government," Taft advised him, if he could not prove one case, to take up another.

Last week, while touring Wisconsin, Taft praised McCarthy to the skies and pledged him support for re-election.

IWA Seeks 'Substantial' Wage Hike

THE CIO Woodworkers will demand a "substantial" across-the-board pay increase for some 60,000 IWA members in Oregon, Washington, California, Idaho and Montana.

The proposals were outlined at the union's northwest regional negotiating conference at Portland, Ore., and will be presented to companies whose contracts with IWA expire Apr. 1.

The conference also recommended three additional paid holidays, revision of payment methods of health and welfare plans so that the employer pays the entire amount, travel time and rest periods.

An IWA spokesman pointed out that some loggers put in more than three hours a day traveling to and from work, part of the time on company property.

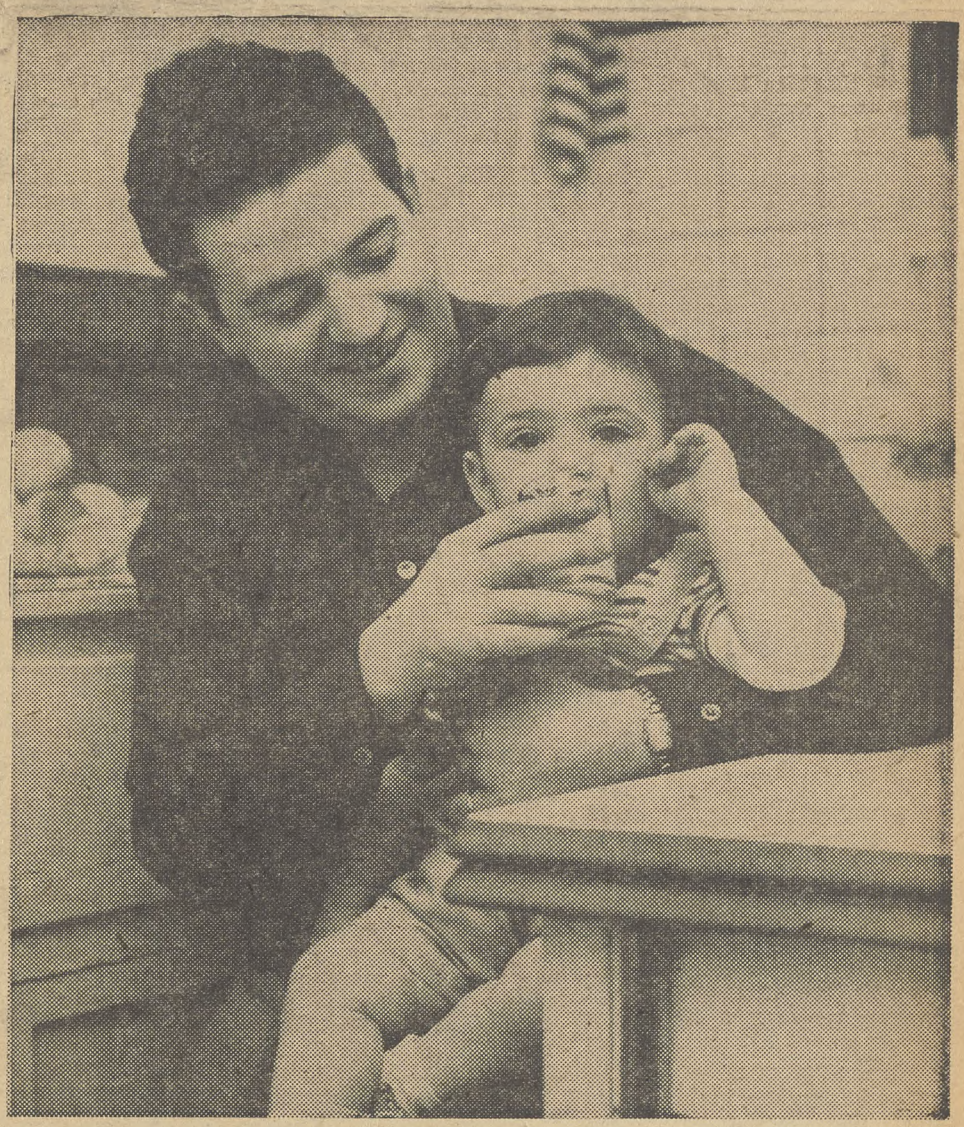
Caught in the Squeeze!



THIS IS THE STORY in pictures of Italo Mastrofranceso. He's an unemployed auto worker, and his story can be multipled 140,000 times in Detroit in mid-winter of 1952—for there are that many auto workers laid off because car production has been cut way down by defense allocations and scarce materials while defense orders haven't been sent in to the auto plants. Mastrofranceso has a wife and child, but the $29 weekly unemployment check he gets from Sherry Armstrong (top right) at the Michigan Employment Commission doesn't go far these days. He looks for jobs, but most places the demand is for skilled workers (lower left photo)—and he's an unskilled worker. Since he was laid off seven weeks ago, Mastrofrancesco has plenty of time at home (lower right photo). Here he feeds Luigi, his 13-month-old son, a glass of milk. Otherwise their menu consists mostly of soup and bread. (For news stories, commentary and cartoon on job layoffs, see Page 2.)

Why Not The Same Square Deal For Jobless Workers?

By BRADFORD V. CARTER
For Labor Press Associated

JOE WORKER loses his job because the mobilizers have blundered, and the unions think he ought to get paid, at his full rate, until he gets a job again.

That's been proposed, and the Congress is about to kick around the notion and maybe some statemen will go for the idea of at least adding federal payments to supplement state unemployment pay for those jobless through no fault of their own.

There are no qualifications. There's no maximum as to the amount. There is, for duration, seven years.

The interesting gimmick under which the corporations can do all this is the carry-forward and carry-back provision of the tax laws.

It works like this: The Superb Crunch Corp. coins money hand over fist for two years. Its taxes are pretty heavy. Then it provokes a strike, and the third year, it not only makes no money, but takes a loss. So it works the carry-back racket.

Let's say it made $26 million in the two prosperous years. In the strike year it lost $8 million. So it recomputes, and on the three-year basis it finds its profits were $26 million minus $8 million, or $88 million. Now the tax on $18 million is a good bit less than the tax on $26 million, so Uncle Sam obligingly hands back a big wad of the taxes paid on the $26 million.

Now the carry-forward gimmick. Screwy Textiles Corp. shuts its New Hampshire mill and moves to Tennessee to run away from the union. Well, what with the expense of moving, and having to use untrained workers, it takes a beating for two years. But the third year it really goes to town—what with cheap labor, sky-rocketing prices, and defense contracts.

Does it pay a hefty tax on that enormously profitable third year? Not so you can notice it. It "carries forward" the losses of the year before, and the year before that. Say in the third year it made $36 million. It doesn't pay taxes on that $36 million, for it stacks up the losses of the two bad years with the profits of the third good year, and if the two accounts cancel out, why it pays no taxes on the profits for the current year.

Compared to what the corporations get in "unemployment compensation" through these gimmicks, what the unions are now proposing—full compensation for a man made jobless by defense bungling—seems not only reasonable, but even meager.

"Who Sent For Him?"

TWUA Rips Mill Owners, Says Boston Bank Aids Move To South

NORTHERN Textile employers last week were charged by the CIO Textile Workers with practicing "deliberate deception" aimed at destroying the union.

The TWUA Executive Council charged that New England financiers were moving behind the scenes to drive the textile industry from that area into the South, it was announced by Pres. Emil Rieve.

TWUA said that although 1951 textile profits had been substantial, northern cotton-rayon and woolen industry leaders were demanding cancellation of union agreements or wage reductions in mills involving over 80,000 workers. Such wage cuts will be rejected, the union said.

The union charged that the northern employers were using alleged southern competition as an excuse for "arousing community hysteria."

"This is a deliberate deception," the resolution said.

The American Woolen Co., which was the first firm to announce that it would cancel its contract when it expires Mar. 15, was accused of "trying to cover up its own managerial mistakes by attacking the workers."

TWUA said that the latest figures showed a sharp increase in the company's debt, to a large extent representing the purchase of wool at higher prices than the present market price.

At the same time, the company made a nine-month profit of $21 million before taxes and $11 million after taxes, and has paid $6 dividends on $35 shares.

The union also pointed out—to show further that southern competition is a dodge to get wage cuts—that most of American Woolen's business last year consisted in filling government orders and was in competition with southern mills.

The union also revealed that a leading Boston bank refused a loan to a New England textile employer but had offered to lend a large sum if he moved his mill to the South.

The union said that another employer planning a modernization program was turned down by a major textile machinery firm which offered him "unlimited credit" if he would relocate in the South.

Rieve also announced that the TWUA council decided to urge Congress to raise the hourly minimum in the Fair Labor Standards Act to $1.25 an hour on the ground that the existing 75c rate has "become obviously unrealistic." The CIO Convention last year also called for this increase.

Rieve also said that the council is pressing Sec. of Labor Maurice Tobin to raise the Walsh-Healey minimum rates to $1.265 an hour.

Union Backing Urged For Jobless Pay Bill

THE CIO last week began mobilization of its forces to press for passage of the bill to supplement state unemployment compensation with federal funds.

The bill was introduced two weeks ago by 15 Senators and four House members. It would provide an extra benefit equal to half the basic compensation, and would match state payments to dependents dollar for dollar.

To marshal grass-roots support for the measure—S. 2504 and H. R. 6174—Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood last week sent out two letters—one to all national and international unions and organizing committees, and the other to all industrial union councils and regional directors.

Haywood urged every council where there is any unemployment to collaborate with representatives of international unions in arranging large meetings of local officers and stewards to call for the passage of the federal aid bill.

He also urged the councils to discuss their plans with the regional directors, and called on the state councils to assist local councils and regional offices.

Haywood said that in some cases mass meetings should be held "to stage a public protest against growing unemployment and make our position in this matter clear to the senators and congressmen."

He asked the international unions and organizing committees to urge their representatives and locals to participate in the meetings.

Wage Cut 'War Of Nerves' Rejected By Textile Union

A CHARGE that northern cotton and textile manufacturers are engaged in a "war of nerves" in an effort to stampede their employes into accepting wage cuts was voiced last week by the CIO Textile Workers.

Fifty-six companies employing 45,000 workers have asked to reopen their contracts Mar. 15. TWUA's northern cotton and rayon conference in New York City has voted not to reopen the contracts.

The 56 companies are planning to use the reopening negotiations as an opportunity "to build up still higher profits at your expense," Mariano S. Bishop, the union's cotton-rayon division director, warned in a letter to TWUA local unions.

Bishop served notice that "we are certainly not going to agree to wage cuts."

The TWUA letter was a reply to statements by employers, especially those in New England, intended "to frighten the workers and weaken the union."

Bishop cited a statement by the American Cotton Institute that 135,000 workers were totally unemployed and many more working part-time as proof that unemployment was severe in North and the South and that the industry was suffering from basic economic factors rather than regional differences.

"Despite the recent decline in business and the widespread unemployment, the employers have enjoyed a highly successful year," Bishop said. "Their profits are running as high as 34% on net worth before taxes; as high as 20% after taxes."

8c Increase For 3 Southern Mills

In the first decision involving major southern textile mills, the Wage Stabilization Board has approved an 8c an hour increase and a cost-of-living clause for 1300 workers in three cotton mills.

The workers—who are represented by the CIO Textile Workers—are employed at the Floyd Mills plant of the A. D. Juilliard & Co., Inc., at Rome, Ga., Aragon Mills of Aragon, Ga., and the Brookfield Mills of Hickory, N. C.

Both the hourly and the cost of living increase are retroactive to last Nov. 19. A number of other wage increases negotiated by TWUA for southern mills are awaiting approval.

'Bring Arms Work To Detroit, Don't Send Workers Away'

A PROPOSAL of the special task force to "solve" Detroit's unemployment problem by dispersing Detroit workers to other areas was characterized as "completely impractical" by Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers.

Under pressure from UAW, Defense Production Administrator Manly Fleischmann named the task force. It is headed by R. E. Gillmor, president of the Sperry Corp., gyroscope manufacturers.

"Detroit workers must not be required to leave their homes, take their children out of their schools and break up their families because of government and management shortsightedness in planning the defense program," Reuther said.

"The solution is not to remove workers to jobs in other areas but to bring the work into the areas where there are manpower, machines and plants available to do the job."

Meanwhile, the government announced that additional copper and aluminum would be allocated to the auto industry.

"While this is the most helpful development that Detroit and other communities affected by serious unemployment has received," Reuther warned, "we should not permit this hopeful development to lessen our efforts to dovetail sufficient defense work in civilian production plants to take up the slack in employment . . . That remains the chief solution of our unemployment problems."

Murray Urges Annual Wage To Cushion Layoffs

Steel Bosses Trying To Hijack Uncle Sam

THE "nation-be-damned" attitude of major steel industry spokesmen—who haven't budged an inch in their refusal to come to a contract settlement with CIO Steelworkers—is beginning to concern top government officials.

Last week Nathan P. Feinsinger, chairman of the Wage Stabilization Board, warned that the industry may reject the WSB's forthcoming recomendation for a steel settlement, thereby forcing a strike.

NATHAN P. FEINSINGER

Feinsinger predicted the board will urge a "fair and equitable" settlement, but he added:

"Whether or not the recommendations of this board will prevent a strike depends on whether the price question is settled before or after the recommendations are made."

On the same day that Feinsinger made this comment, a leading spokesman for steel management again denounced wage increases or other contract improvements for steel workers. The denunciation came from Charles M. White, Republic Steel Corp. president, who said management will "resist to the utmost" any wage increase unless they first hijack a price increase on steel out of the government.

On that question, Roger L. Putnam, economic stabilizer, said the industry has a "considerable capacity" to "absorb some wage increase without a price increase."

Big Steel Sets A Record

BIG STEEL—which claims it can't increase wages without boosting profits—did an all-time record business last year, and its rate of profit climbed sharply at year's end.

U. S. Steel Corp.'s annual report was issued last week, shortly before steel management was to open its case before the Wage Stabilization Board special panel.

The report showed that total sales for the year climbed by more than half a billion dollars. The figures were $3.5 billion for '51 and $2.9 billion for '50.

Because of increases in U. S. corporation income taxes, Big Steel claimed a slight book-keeping drop in 12-month profits, but any appearance of "poverty" was belied by payment of the usual quarterly 75c-a-share stock dividend. Earnings of $183 million averaged $6.08 a share.

And in the last quarter of '51, the report revealed, net profits were $49 million compared with $36 million in the same quarter of the previous year. That was a three-month increase in profits of a cool 33%

IN ACTION paralleling the basic steel dispute, the contract deadlock of CIO Steelworkers with the aluminum industry has been referred to the Wage Stabilization Board for investigation.

The steel union, which had extended twice its contract with Aluminum Co. of America, recently had warned of strike action on Feb. 1.

President Truman sent the dispute to the WSB, saying an aluminum strike "would have an immediate and serious impact on many of our defense production programs."

FROM THE "forgotten front" of the American economy, the fears of millions of workers of mass layoffs and unemployment and their demand for security of year-around employment were presented by the CIO Steelworkers last week to the special panel of the Wage Stabilization Board. Winding up the union's main presentation of its case for contract improvements, Pres. Philip Murray of the steel union focused attention on the USA's long-standing proposal for a guaranteed annual wage which he said, stems directly from the craving hunger of the steel workers for a mite of security from this industry to which they have contributed so much."

Murray declared "it is high time that America—labor and industry, both—came to grips with the human problem of employment." And he said the time to act is now, not later "when unemployment is sweeping whole communities."

Calling it "a practical, feasible, financially sound proposition," Murray suggested:

"Guaranteed annual wages provide a type of Point Four program for these men—and women—of the backward, or under-developed areas, of American economic stability.

"Most Americans gain a solid and justifiable sense of satisfaction from the pioneering efforts of our government to help our less fortunate neighbors overseas. But the acclaim that would redound to the benefit of the steel industry for moving ahead with a domestic Point Four program on this forgotten front of our own economy, would be of tremendous and overwhelming proportions."

Murray recounted the long efforts of the Steelworkers to gain the guaranteed wage. The issue was first raised back in 1943. It was studied by the War Labor Board. was an issue again in 1947, when management asked "more time" for study.

"THAT was four years ago, long enough for detailed study and mature reflection," Murray pointed out. "We have reached the point where positive action should take the subject of guaranteed annual wages out of the discussion phase and place it into operation as a practical, effective method of making American industry a better, more secure place in which to work."

At some length Murray condemned claims of Ben Fairless, U. S. Steel Corp. president, that the annual wage program would "interfere with the prerogatives of management." This, Murray said, "is diametrically opposite the truth of the matter."

"Our guaranted annual wage proposal is drafted with the best interests of our American free enterprise system in mind. It will strengthen American enterprise, now and over the long run."

Latimer, who conducted the War Labor Board's investigation of annual wages, estimated the guaranteed annual wage program could be financed at a cost of 6½ to 7c hourly. The program would provide benefits to laid-off or discharged workers for up to 52 consecutive weeks, and the overall benefit would be 30 times the standard hourly wage rate. Such payments would be in addition to state unemployment insurance benefits.

"Such an amount," Latimer said, "seems to me to be a wholly reasonable budget for the purpose of maintaining the income of steel workers during periods of unemployment."

This week steel management was schduled to begin its presentation. The present truce in the basic steel industry—granted by the USA in postponing a strike on New Year's Day—runs out on Feb. 24.

Prices? It's The Same Old And Costly Story

THE COST OF LIVING—and forgive us if we've said this before—hit another all-time high on Dec. 15, according to the latest consumers' price index of the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

The new index figure is 189.1, an increase of .3% over the Nov. 15 reading of 188.6. It is 11.1% higher than the 170.2 registered in June 1950, just before the invasion of the Korean Republic by the Communists, and represents an increase of 4.2% during 1951. It made the 1951 monthly average 185.6, compared to 171.9 in 1950.

The official index is the so-called new figure. The old index, which governs cost of living wage adjustments under many labor-management contracts, jumped .4% to 190.

Murray Hails Annual Wage Plan As 'Point Four For Forgotten Workers'

Highlights of the statement of CIO Steelworkers Pres. Philip Murray to the Wage Stabilization Board panel on the guaranteed annual wage follow:

ALL OF US KNOW the tremendous human tragedy that is involved in layoffs and continued unemployment. It takes no great imagination to understand the hardship, the bitterness, the strain on family life and community which result from layoffs.

It is high time that America—labor and industry, both—came to grips with the human problem of unemployment. The time to do it is not when unemployment is sweeping whole communities like some vicious disease; when plants are running at partial capacity and the outlook seems dim.

The time to think about unemployment, in a rational, logical fashion, is now, when the steel industry is running at capacity; when defense orders assure continued full operation of our industrial resources; when we have the opportunity to work out solutions for the problems that may afflict us in the future.

Guaranteed annual wages are not socialism or any form of socialism; they are fully consistent with our traditional free enterprise system.

Guaranteed annual wages are not by themselves a cure-all for all the problems of our economy; but a system of guaranteed annual wages in the steel industry would go far to give additional stability and strength to an important segment of our economic machinery.

In that positive aspect, the institution of guaranteed annual wages would contribute to our economic defenses against any repetition of the terrifying, devastating depression of the early 1930s—an economic tornado which might sweep away the economic and social progress of many decades, and, equally serious, our basic freedoms.

In the minds of workers today there is a deep-seated feeling of insecurity. Regardless of the size of his weekly pay envelope, the average worker has a gnawing worry that his job may come to an end.

Guaranteed annual wages provide a type of Point Four program for these men and women of the backward, or under-developed areas, of American economic stability. Most Americans gain a solid and justifiable sense of satisfaction from the pioneering efforts of our government to help our less fortunate neighbors overseas. But the acclaim that would rebound to the benefit of the steel industry for moving ahead with a domestic Point Four program on this forgotten front of our own economy, would be of tremendous and overwhelming proportions.

Gentlemen, it is an investment in American democracy which the steel industry cannot afford to forego—for on that investment may hinge the welfare not only of the steelworkers but of all the democratic institutions which all of us cherish so dearly.

Send 'Em To The Showers!

"Three times Congress went to bat on price control issues in 1950 and 1951 and three times it struck out."

That's the story CIO-PAC details in a new pamphlet, '52 Facts About Prices. It's a story you should check on—the record of how inflation is robbing us blind because of action and inaction in Congress. And it's a record which should bring action at the polls on Nov. 4.

Last week a report by the Bureau of Labor Statistics indicated what we're paying because of the Capehart, Herlong and other "economic boobytrap" amendments by which Congress has stoked up inflation.

The new BLS consumer price index hit 189.6. It was 170.2 before war began in Korea. That's an increase in the BLS index (a not entirely reliable guide) of nearly 20 points. Each one point increase, it has been estimated, costs consumers $2 billions. So you can figure out the cost to all of us of inflation—at least $40 billion in about a year and a half.

Last week the Senate struck out for the fourth time, rejecting any action now to strengthen controls on inflation.

When Congressmen have fanned out that often, it's time to send them to the political showers!

How Now, Big Steel?

Big Steel has just fallen flat on its face—and perhaps is more to be pitied than berated.

The compassion is due to U. S. Steel Corp. management and other big shot industrialists who are sold a bill of goods by high-powered press agents. Said bill of goods is that when you get into negotiations with your employes all you need is publicity. And, presumably, truth and the facts can be ignored.

Such was the bill of goods sold to the steel companies, and for weeks their press agents have been rolling out lengthy statements—all dutifully reported in the daily papers—declaring flatly that "steel cannot absorb the costs of wage and other demands" and weeping copious crocodile tears about inflation.

Then the facts caught up with the steel employers—in the annual statement of U. S. Steel Corp. itself. It showed that Big Steel's sales were at a record, up by a half billion dollars. It showed that, despite tax increases, dividends are being paid as usual. It showed that profits in the last quarter of the year climbed by 33% over the same period of the previous year.

All of which confirms what the CIO Steelworkers have said right along—that the industry can well afford to meet the wage and other current contract improvements now due its million workers.

'Bust' May Be Around The Corner

The Great Depression of the 30's was caused by the dwindling of the workers' and the small businessmen's share of the national income, while corporations' "take" zoomed upward, according to Dewey Anderson and Associates of the Public Affairs Institute. The same process is going on apace and Anderson and his associates tell about it in this article, entitled "The Trouble Starts with the Unequal Sharing of National Income":

Here's how it works. The profit share of income is increased by denying to labor increases in wages covering the increased productivity of industry. Then the chain reaction gets going. Independent businessmen and farmers feel the effects right off in the loss of sales. Then the big suppliers and manufacturers begin to feel the pinch in lost orders.

We all remember the Great Depression which followed the business boom of the 1920s. A clue to one of its main causes is found in the fact that from 1920 to 1928, when the industrial machine of this nation was becoming vastly more productive, workers and small businessmen actually suffered a loss in their share of the increase in national income while corporation profits soared and the "take" of owners through interest and rents grew.

The share of the increase in national income going to corporations' profits after taxes mounted nearly five times (26%) compared with the 1920 share (5.6%), while the share of the increased national income going to labor fell below that received in 1920.

Then came the Great Depression. Total employee compensation fell from $50.8 billions in 1929 to $29.3 billions in 1933, a loss of purchasing power of $21.5 billions. Small wonder that the depression was "severe."

There is serious doubt as to whether we have learned that lesson yet, despite the terrors and horrors of the Great Depression. For by the time of substantial recovery due largely to FDR's New Deal policies in 1937, the shares of national income going to workers, proprietors of businesses, owners of property and corporations were again moving in the same direction as in 1920. Labor was getting proportionately less of national income than it did in 1935, 1928 or 1920.

Corporations had recovered substantially by 1937, to take in profits nearly 10% of all private national income, almost double the percentage they got in 1920, and even more than their high take in 1928.

Now, look at what happened in the most prosperous peacetime year in modern times, 1948. Then labor got less than 60% of all private national income, considerably below its proportion in previous years, while corporation profits reached over 16% of all privately produced income, an abnormally high share. Unincorporated small business proprietors trailed along with labor, suffering a cut in their share of income.

Since we launched the present defense effort in mid-1950, the pattern has continued. Propped up heavily by government expenditures, our national economy is thriving as never before.

BUT IT IS not the workers of the country who are reaping unduly the benefits of this present prosperity.

Government defense spending is showing up in an increased share of private national income going to corporations and large farm operators, a lesser percentage going to workers.

In this trend, small businessmen suffer with labor. For unincorporated proprietors have lost 3% in total income since the beginning of 1951.

For there are ominous signs on the economic horizon. Here's one such: Since October, 1950, over 700,000 production workers have lost their jobs in consumer industries, and defense establishments have not expanded enough to absorb them.

While our national income is mounting to new high levels, not only is there unemployment and under employment but the share of the larger income going to the mass of consumers is not proportionately as high as that going to corporation profits (after taxes). How, then, will workers continue to buy the product of their increased productivity?

CIO Wins 221 Victories In South In Last 16 Months

By RAY WARWICK

THE CIO's "Southern Drive" and its tough job of unionizing the South is a "must"—for the well-being of both the CIO and the nation as a whole.

This was the renewed conviction of the top officials of CIO and representatives of internationals when they wound up a meeting of the organizing drive's Advisory Committee in Atlanta.

In the face of the rapid industrial expansion of the Southern region, the Advisory Committee recognized that the importance of the CIO Organizing Committee's work is greater than ever.

Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice-president and chairman of the Advisory Committee, recalled how many hard years it took to organize other sections of the country—"even with the help of the Blue Eagle" of NRA days—and said that the gains of the Southern drive against severe odds were greatly encouraging.

Sec.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers, who is secretary of the Advisory Committee, told the session that the Southern campaign has evolved through almost six years of experience until it is operating on a sounder basis than ever before.

"We must go on until the job is done," said McDonald.

The organizing gains the drive has made for various CIO unions in the past year were reported by Dir. John V. Riffe of the CIO Organizing Committee.

STEPPED-UP gains in CIO Southern Drive, with 221 organizing election victories won in last 16 months, are reported by John Riffe (standing), campaign director, at Atlanta meeting of CIO and international union officials who comprise advisory committee to the organizing campaign. Seated (from left) are William Pollock, Textile Workers secretary-treasurer; David J. McDonald, Steelworkers secretary-treasurer; Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president and director of organization and councils; Ross D. Blood, Shipbuilding Workers secretary-treasurer; and James B. Carey, CIO secretary-treasurer. The Southern Drive will continue indefinitely.

From Oct. 1, 1950 until the CIO Convention in November, 1951 the campaign won 190 elections in plants employing some 80,000 workers. From November to Jan. 19, 1951—day the Advisory Committee met — 31 more election victories were chalked up. This, said Riffe, was a total of 221 elections won for CIO unions in 16 months.

The National CIO has some 20 staff people assigned to the Southern organizing set-up while the USA has assigned 21. These are in addition to the 91 workers and two attorneys employed by the Organizing Committee for its operations in Alabama, Florida, Georgia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia.

The only way to do the job, said Riffe, is for all the state directors and organizers "to live" in the South, in the fullest sense.

"Our staff men are part of the communities they live in," said Riffe. "We tell them to settle their families, make their homes, register as voters, join the local churches—and be a real part of the community life. This is the only way we can win the respect and confidence of the people and do our job. But there is no sectionalism in our approach, no notions of North and South—but just the language of the worker wherever he may be."

In brief reports from the eight state directors of the CIO Organizing Committee, the advisory group got a clearer picture of the mushroom growth of industry in the South and of the tough job of organizing in areas where until recently unions were almost unheard of.

McDonald, referring to a Wall Street Journal story of the textile industry's migration from North to South, said one textile engineer said that lower wage rates and greater production per man-hour gave Southern mills a 10 to 20% advantage over Northern companies.

"That simply means," McDonald said, "that the textile manufacturers are coming South to exploit the unorganized Southern worker with sub-standard wages and the stretch-out. If the South were organized it could not be done."

This, said Haywood, is of crucial importance to union workers all over the nation, for if manufacturers are permitted to exploit Southern workers the effect will be in the long run to drag down wages and working conditions throughout the rest of the nation.

Amalgamated Wins Big N.Y. Laundry Election

THE WAY THE CIO has represented Greater New York laundry employes over the years paid off last week when the workers overwhelmingly rejected an AFL move to win bargaining rights.

The Laundry Workers Joint Board of the CIO Clothing Workers won an election conducted by the State Labor Relations Board covering some 18,000 employes of 1300 laundries in and near New York City. The raiding union, the AFL Laundry Workers, polled only a small proportion of the vote.

The laundries were divided into two sections for balloting purposes.

In the linen division, the count was CIO 4131, AFL 769, no union 47. In the family and hand laundry division, it was CIO 7071, AFL 804, no union 132.

Drivers and operating engineers, as well as production workers, were included in the bargaining units.

"The decisive margin of victory," said Louis Simon, ACWA vice president and manager of the joint board, "assures continuation of the progress which laundry workers have made over the past 14 years under the banner of the Amalgamated."

The current contract expired last week. Negotiations had started in December but were suspended when the AFL filed its election petition. They will be resumed immediately, Simon said, with the CIO asking wage increases and improved working conditions.

URW Pact Parley Called

L. S. BUCKMASTER, president of the CIO Rubber Workers has called a two-day meeting of the union's Intl. Policy Committee at Cleveland on Mar. 17.

Buckmaster said the purpose of the sessions will be to give consideration to the possibility of "formulating an economic program, based upon existing conditions, and possible future circumstances which may develop in the immediate future."

In addition, he said, consideration will be given to other collective bargaining contract provisions of general interest to URW

Delegates from 294 locals throughout the U. S. and Canada, representing more than 180,000 URW members will attend the conference.

CIO Gains In North Carolina Despite 'Growing Opposition' Of Employers

DESPITE GROWING and sometimes violent opposition on the part of anti-union employers, CIO in North Carolina enjoyed one of its best years in growth in 1951.

Reviewing the progress of the past year at a state-wide organizational meeting in Charlotte, N. C., Dir. Franz Daniel lashed out at what he termed the "illegal machinations" of union-hating companies in their "growing opposition to union organization."

"And," he added, "the illegal and extra legal actions of these employers who resort to the use of any weapon in their determination to thwart unionization of their employes is costing them literally hundreds of thousands of dollars."

Daniel reported that during the past 17-month period, the CIO has won 41 out of 61 representation elections conducted by the National Labor Relations Board in the state. The 41 victories involved 3412 workers.

During the past year alone, he said, CIO unions were on the ballot in 41 NLRB elections and won 26 of these, covering 1362 employes. Industries where CIO unions were declared bargaining agents included woodworking, stone, fertilizer, newspaper publishing, textiles, laundries, food production and packaging, furniture, steel and machinery.

Citing the Woodworkers and the Communications Workers as two unions who added substantially to their membership in the state during 1951, Daniel disclosed that IWA gained 800 members and CWA some 400.

ELABORATING on his charges that "widespread discrimination" was employed by numerous companies against workers interested in organization, Daniel said that during 1951, the NLRB had issued complaints charging discrimination against 35 firms involving some 370 CIO members. Twenty-one of these cases were still being processed by the board or on appeal to the courts.

The CIO director disclosed that during 1951, six firms in the state were required to pay more than $27,000 to 152 dismissed workers.

Daniel said that during the course of their organization activities during the year, CIO representatives had discovered that a "surprisingly large number" of employers were "flagrantly ignoring" the Federal Wage-Hour Law by refusing to meet the minimum 75c an hour wage and to pay time-and-one-half for overtime after 40 hours.

"When these cases came to our attention, they were turned over to the Wage-Hour Div. with whatever evidence we had. Five cases involving 30 workers were settled upon payment by the employers of $6739 in compensation due," Daniel said.

THE AMOUNTS paid to aggrieved workers however were "almost insignificant in comparison to the amounts spent by anti-union employers who will break any law, resort to any sort of physical violence or use any other means at their command to deny their employes the right to organize into the CIO," he added.

"They gladly pay thousands of dollars for high-priced legal talent and for court costs and fees in their desperate efforts to deny their employes better pay and better working conditions they would get through the CIO.

"But despite all these efforts to the contrary, the CIO in North Carolina continues to enjoy a steady and healthy growth and we expect to continue the progress we have already made."

Slayer Of Textile Organizer Acquitted In Just 30 Minutes

WHAT THEY call "Southern Justice" still prevails in Jackson, Tenn. It took just 30 minutes last week for a jury to acquit the scab who killed Lowell Simmons, CIO Textile Workers organizer, on Christmas Eve.

Freed of a murder charge was Cecil Cook, a scab working in the struck Bemis Bag Co. plant at Bemis, Tenn., where TWUA members have been picketing for more than three months.

Cook admitted he killed Simmons when the TWUA official called at his home to object to a "back to work" move which Cook was promoting. He claimed self defense.

Simmons, who was 41, was Memphis Joint Board manager for TWUA. He had held several county offices and had been a member of the Tennessee Legislature.

Uncle Sam's Last Chance To Open

Powerful Lobby Pulls Strings As Congress Faces Deadline

By MILTON PLUMB

A DESPERATE last-ditch, last-chance battle is shaping up in Congress over U. S. participation with Canada in developing the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project.

Supporters of the seaway believe that chances for passage of this long-overdue legislation are better than ever before. On the other hand, they are confronted with a deadline requiring Congressional action at this session.

Behind-the-scenes maneuvers by a powerful lobby for interests which put profits for a few before the nation's welfare are already going on in Congress. Their objective is to keep seaway legislation shelved in House and Senate committees, thus preventing it from coming to a vote.

Such tactics succeeded last session, and in many previous sessions as well. The House of Representatives has never voted on the seaway proposal, although bills have been pending for 20 years!

The new urgency for immediate action results from the fact that, finally fed up with waiting two decades for Congress to carry out U. S. treaty agreements with Canada to build the seaway jointly, the Canadian Parliament has just gone ahead on its own.

It voted last month to spend $300 million to build all basic elements of the seaway unilaterally—unless Congress acts now.

Canada needs the seaway for its national economic development, which has unquestionably suffered from Congressional stalling on the seaway.

Dream Of A Century

The dream of a direct deep-water route permitting ocean vessels to reach the center of the nation has been cherished by the American people for over 100 years. Canada's action means that this dream—no matter what Congress does—will soon be a reality.

In the U. S., regions with more than 50 million people will secure direct economic benefits. Lower transportation costs will mean considerable savings to consumers, and from just one dam alone this power-starved region will get as much electric energy as all the Tennessee Valley dams produced at the peak of World War II.

Few people realize that, largely because Canada has already built a major part of the canals and locks involved, this great 2400-mile-long water route is at this moment 95% complete. Only 114 miles along this path still require major improvement.

The only issue that remains before Congress is whether or not the people of this country are to be denied their just share of these forthcoming benefits. In terms of practical politics, it's a question of whether or not the small but immensely influential anti-seaway lobby will again persuade Congress to put sectional and regional interests before the welfare and even the security of the nation at large.

Ironically, even opponents of the seaway conceded that it will cost this country millions of dollars NOT to undertake the project with Canada. On the other hand, if the U. S. does participate the entire amount invested would be returned to the Treasury, plus interest!

This is due to the self-liquidating aspects of the proposed joint undertaking. Tolls collected from ships using the seaway and charges for electric power will ultimately more than equal the initial cost. No expense to taxpayers is involved.

However, if Canada builds the seaway alone the tolls she would get from American ships would ultimately cost U. S. consumers many times the amount Congress has been asked to invest, which is only $374 million.

One influential congressional opponent of the seaway, Rep. Secrest (D. O.), recently remarked with characteristic honesty that, if the dominion builds it by herself, "we'll be paying tribute to Canada forever."

Powerful Lobby

Despite this statement, Secrest, who (as the CIO voting guide confirms) is a better-than-average Congressman, still has not dared buck the vast power of the anti-seaway lobby. At least publicly, he has not changed his opposition to pending legislation on the project.

Nominally, this well-financed anti-seaway lobby is known as the National St. Lawrence Project Conference. Actually, however, the group is chiefly a "front" for the Association of American Railroads, which contributes more than 80% of its operating expenses.

Other relatively insignificant contributions to the Conference have been made by the National Coal Association, Foreign Commerce Club of New York, Anthracite Institute and Maritime Association of the Port of New York.

These sources reflect the three motives behind the forces working against the seaway. They are:

1. Sectionalism—which has led eastern and some gulf ports to fight the seaway because they want to prevent direct shipping to Great Lakes ports.

2. Industrial provincialism—so far manifested only by mining interests which chiefly fear that the vast electric power generated by the seaway would reduce coal consumption. They also want to prevent importation of badly needed foreign ores.

3. Monopolistic self-interest—which lies behind the railroads' fight against the seaway, since it would provide a much cheaper means of transporting many commodities which now must be shipped by rail.

Before 1934 when they combined with eastern lines to form the American Association of Railroads, western railroads favored the seaway. Now they are required to follow AAR policy.

The AAR's opposition is, however, quite easily explained: Voting power in the association is determined by gross revenues.

This enables three railroads with the highest income to set AAR policy. Those lines are the Pennsylvania, New York Central and Baltimore and Ohio—all eastern lines cheifly affected by the seaway.

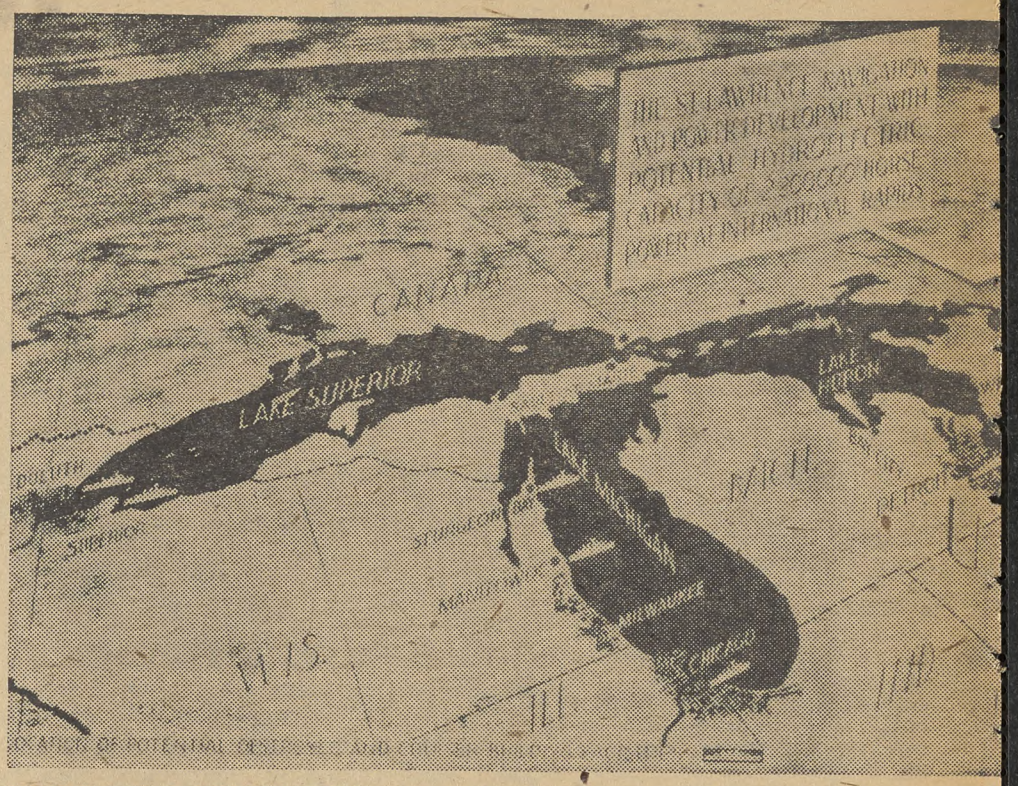
No lobby in Washington works more openly, more vigorously or more effectively than the anti-seaway group. Its chief weapon is selective political pressure.

During hearings on the seaway bill before the House Public Works Committee in the last session, Rep. Pickett (D. Tex.) fired a steady barrage of antagonistic questions at witnesses. He openly got his ammunition from Gregory Prince, assistant general counsel of the AAR, who sent him a stream of notes while the hearings were in progress.

Another member of the committee, Rep. McGregor (R.O.), was called down from the dais during the hearings on several occasions by Carroll Huntress, chief anti-seaway lobbyist. After huddles in the anteroom with Huntress and Prince, he returned to his chair to fire more unfriendly questions.

Some idea of how the lobby works behind the scenes may be obtained from Rep. Steed (D. Okla.). Appointed to the committee in place of Pickett toward the end of the session, Steed at once complained that a "fantastic" swarm of lobbyists was swooping down upon him.

"I spent from one-third to one-half my time combing them out of my hair," Steed



ONE LAST BOTTLENECK, plus action by Congress, is all that prevents direct ocean shipping along the more than 2400-mile-long Great St. Lawrence River route. Arrows on this panoramic view indicate the 114-mile stretch between Q proposed 27-foot na overcome the last has already been c

Seaway Summary

In a nutshell, the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project consists of the following elements:

1 Creation of navigable channels of a minimum of 27-foot depth between Montreal and Great Lakes cities such as Buffalo, Cleveland, Detroit, Chicago and Duluth.

2 Development at the International Rapids in northern New York of hydroelectric capacity of 2.2 million horsepower to be divided equally between Canada and the U. S. New York State is eager to pay the full cost of this country's part of the power development.

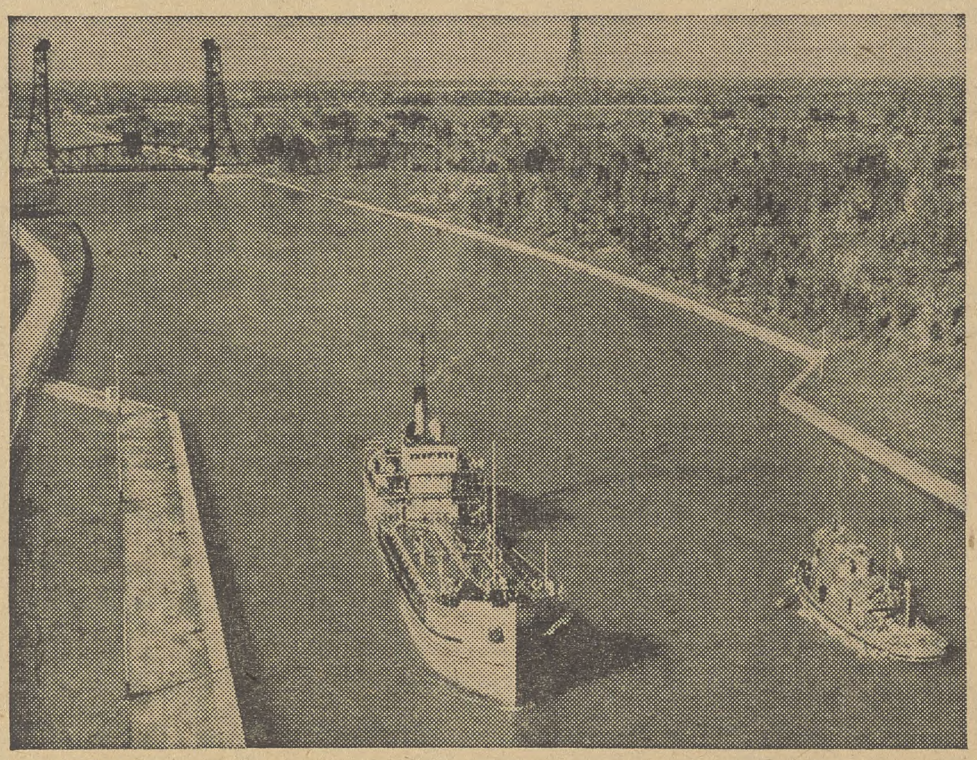
Total cost of remaining work amounts to $818 million, but the share the U. S. government is asked to invest is only $374 million, all of which would be returned with interest to the Treasury through Seaway tolls.

Truman Message Asks Approval Of Project

To bolster national security, President Truman in a special message last week urged Congress to approve joint U. S.-Canadian construction of the St. Lawrence Seaway.

Mr. Truman said the U. S. should be a "full partner" in building the project and "not to be merely a customer of Canada's for the use of the seaway after it is built."

Pointing to the development of high-grade iron ore deposits in Quebec and Labrador, the President said "the importance of a relatively safe inland waterway to bring this ore economically to the steel centers around the Great Lakes increases every year."



CANADA'S earlier contribution to the development of what will become the St. Lawrence Seaway is represented in this picture of the Welland Canal between Lakes Ontario and Erie. The Canadian government, regarding canal development as a national economic lubricant, has never charged tolls, but the U. S. Congress has held up completion of the seaway despite assurances that it would recover the full investment through toll charges.

Canada Ready To Go It Alone

have managed to deny Congress the right to vote on an essential measure known to have strong bipartisan support. This in itself is a good indication that an overwhelming majority of both parties in Congress would approve the seaway bill if they had a chance.

Every President of the U. S. since Wilson has urged its passage. Moreover, today the seaway has been declared "essential" to national security by top military leaders and the heads of all government agencies concerned. U. S. iron ore deposits are being rapidly depleted and there is an urgent need for a secure inland route for shipment of ore from Labrador.

The electric power that is to be generated is badly needed for defense industries. The amount the St. Lawrence project will produce is estimated to be equivalent to the physical labor of 33 million men.

Not only will consumers get much lower electric bills, but it no longer will be necessary for American taxpayers to subsidize the aluminum plant located at Massena, which is paid 6c a pound more to offset high power costs.

Only if the U. S. joins Canada in the undertaking will this nation be able to reap full benefits through joint ownership and control.

Many nations have gone to war to control a direct water outlet to the sea. Never in history has a nation voluntarily relinquished some measure of control over such an asset. But that is just what this Congress will do if it doesn't pass seaway legislation this year.

r AMA, There Is But One Taft And Byrd, His Follower

By FRED ROSS

MMUNISM has its Lenin and Stalin—and the American Medi- ssociation has its Taft and Byrd.

e political tone of the Los les session of the AMA House legates was set by the vitrolic at- of Sens. Taft (R. O.) and Byrd a.) on the Truman Administration.

AMA was willing to put cash on arrel head to the tune of $20,000 for our's radio time on a nation-wide to provide the American people an opportunity to hear these "ap- " of the AMA's line.

pite this kick-off of the doctors' 's augmented '52 political campaign, Pres. John W. Cline hailed Taft and as speakers on "a non-partisan sum and substance of AMA's polit- thinking is that Gov. Earl War- California—a candidate for the Re- an nomination for President—is list- a foe by the medical organization in ht against the "broad front of social- n."

The McCarthy-like type of thinking indulged in by the AMA is that its enemy is anyone it accuses of sympathy for "collectivism."

"Collectivism" was identified with Nazism, communism and the Fair Deal by Dr. Lewis A. Alesen, president-elect of the California Medical Association, in a speech at the Los Angeles session.

Lest anyone think that such political dogma is "full of sound and fury signifying nothing" AMA has elaborate plans for matching its action to its words.

Not only will AMA use pressure to make its members more active in its political wars, it also has elaborate plans for their wives.

The AMA Women's Auxiliary "represents the greatest potential force we have in the field of public relations," according to Dr. Cline.

The medicos' spouses will be pressed into service to give the AMA's line to the Parent-Teacher Association, the Federation of Women's Clubs and the American Association of University Women.

Let those organizations beware, because the AMA has no little measure of success in working through other organizations.

Whitaker and Baxter, the AMA's high-paid and high-powered public relations advisers, succeeded in getting more than 10,000 organizations to adopt resolutions against health insurance, according to the AMA's assistant secretary, Dr. Ernest B. Howard.

Dr. Howard told of AMA cooperation with the National Education Association, the American Hospital Association, the Chamber of Commerce, and especially the American Legion, which occupies a special place in the list of collaborators with AMA leaders.

AMA's assistant secretary said that rural areas are being reached through the Farm Bureau Federation and the Grange.

Encourged by its activities in Washington where it backed only three bills out of 34 health proposals introduced in 82nd Congress in 1951, the AMA doubtless will continue to press its program in the capitol.

The AMA's efforts to have its members carry out its policies has not always been crowned with success.

One out of five physicians did not pay his AMA dues, including a $25 political assessment, in 1950.

Another disappointment to the AMA politicians was the failure of the fund drive for AMA aid to medical education, through which it hoped to raise "several million"—and which was its substitute for Senate bill for federal aid to medical education.

AMA leaders recognize that the state medical societies cannot participate in elections as incorporated organizations, but as in the past it will participate in congressional elections through campaign coordinating committees.

"We are in politics and we must stay in politics if we wish our American Way of Life to continue."

How Goes It With Joe?

HST Slaps McCarthy As Pathological Character Assassin

THE MAN generally regarded as the Nation's Number One smear-monger and now rated by political scientists of both major parties as the poorest member of the Senate was denounced by President Truman last week as a pathological character assassin.

That evaluation of Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) was made by Truman in commenting on the senator's recent attacks on David Demarest Lloyd, an administrative assistant to the President, and Philleo Nash, White House adviser on minority problems, as "Communists."

Both Nash and Lloyd have denied McCarthy's charges. Nash, who was named last week, explained what may have motivated McCarthy in his "contemptible lie." Nash said:

"I suspect that Sen. McCarthy has been stung by an advertisement in my home town paper, the Wisconsin Rapids Daily Tribune, 'Citizens vs. McCarthy,' which appeared last Monday and was sponsored by a representative group of Wisconsin Rapids citizens, including my sister."

The President said that McCarthy's attack followed the same line of all attacks by the pathological McCarthy against government employes who incur his dislike.

COMMENTING on the Senator's statements that he had information on the two men from FBI and Loyalty Review Board files, Truman said McCarthy did not need information to be a character assassin.

That is McCarthy's business, the President added.

Recent actions by McCarthy indicating what the President had in mind show that such character assassination has now extended far beyond the limits of government employes. Last week, for example, McCarthy took on Publisher Henry Luce and his magazine Time, which has been critical of the Wisconsin Senator's tactics.

Obviously stung by Time's attack, McCarthy threatened to try to induce advertisers to boycott the magazine. Last year, similar tactics by McCarthy preceded the dropping of Drew Pearson's radio program after the Senator had called on the public not to buy the goods of his sponsor.

IN A letter to Luce, McCarthy charged that the policy of that conservative magazine tried to "parallel the Daily Worker's smear attack upon individuals who start to dig out the dangerous secret Communists" and "is rendering almost unlimited service to the Communist cause and undermining America."

2. Revamping of the membership of the subcommittee just before it was due to hand down its decision. The replacement of a Senator who had been critical of McCarthy with Sen. Welker (R. Ida.), a McCarthy supporter, is generally regarded as an attempt by the GOP leadership to prevent the issuance of a critical report. Benton charged a GOP "whitewash" and "jury stacking" lay behind the move.

3. The decision of Gov. Walter Kohler of Wisconsin not to oppose McCarthy in his bid for renomination to the Senate. Kohler was widely favored to beat McCarthy if he ran against him in the primary.

4. The assignment of McCarthy to the Senate Appropriations Committee by the Republican Senate Committee on Committees. McCarthy made clear his purpose in seeking this spot by announcing that he wanted to be assigned to the subcommittee which passes on funds for the State Dept., which has been his chief target.

5. The decision of Sen. Taft (R. O.), to forget his former statements that McCarthy's charges were "overstated" and largely bunk, and to back McCarthy for reelection.

In his tour of Wisconsin two weeks ago, Taft, in an open bid for votes from McCarthy supporters, told his audience that the smearmonger's unproven charges were "fully justified."

This latest shift put Taft back where he had started: In 1950 Taft told the press that he had privately encouraged McCarthy and urged him, if one case didn't work out, to bring up another.

ON THE other side, however, the Dept. of Justice finally launched its investigation into the Maryland 1950 election campaign in which McCarthy had played a leading part. The Civil Service Commission also announced that it had located a person suspected of leaking secret documents of the Loyalty Review Board to McCarthy and was taking action.

And McCarthy, who with others is already facing a $5.1 million damage suit brought against him by Drew Pearson, last month had another slander suit for $100,000 filed against him by Charles E. Davis.

Expelled from Switzerland when he was found guilty of violating that country's espionage laws in gathering material for McCarthy, Davis revealed in his suit that he had been paid up to $600 monthly for this work.

Investigate The Investigators!

While congressmen put forth a host of new demands for "investigations" which they think might make political capital in an election year, a move got under way in Washington to investigate congressional investigations themselves.

The District of Columbia Bar Association set up a four-man committee to study methods of improving precedures of congressional investigating committees.

"You Wouldn't Mind Being Investigated, Would You"?

Of 96 Senators, McCarthy Ranks At Bottom Of List

THE NATION'S top political scientists who specialize in legislation have just rated the members of the Senate. They consistently agree that Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) fits the No. 1 place.

The American Political Science Association legislative experts who put McCarthy at the bottom of the list were "unanimous" that his personal integrity was his weakest point, according to Dr. Bryon L. Johnson, who conducted the survey.

McCarthy's stand on both domestic and foreign issues also was almost universally criticized. Fellow Republicans among the political scientists characterized him as "not worthy of a Senate seat" and "a disgrace to the U. S. Senate."

Sen. Taft, who drew the surprisingly low rank of 24th, was criticized strongly by Republican and independent political scientists as well as Democrats. His personal integrity was rated a weak point by 23%, and at least some of this criticism was attributed directly to his praise for Sen. McCarthy.

THERE are 10 Republicans among the top 25, but of the 45 middle-rank Senators 32 are Democrats. That put 23 Republicans and three Democrats among the 26 who drew the poorest ratings.

The low ranking of one-half of the GOP Senators bears no relation to the party preference of the political scientists, the poll's compilers said. No individual would advance more than a few places by taking only the rank of his party partisans, and there was surprising "substantial agreement" about the merits of each Senator.

Pro-Labor N. Y. Lawmaker Dies

Rep. William T. Byrne (D. N.Y.), who had been one of labor's outstanding supporters in the House since 1936, died last week at Troy, N. Y. He was 75.

After practicing law in Albany from 1904 to 1924. Bryne served in the New York State Senate for 12 years before being elected to the 75th Congress from his state's 28th District.

In both the state and national legislatures, he showed particular interest in labor and social welfare measures. He was co-author of the New York State Unemployment Insurance Act, and had a "100% right" record in the CIO Voting Guide tabulation for the last session of Congress.

High Court Delays Ruling On Segregation In Schools

THE SUPREME COURT last week delayed ruling on whether segregation in southern public schools violates the Constitution, regardless of whether the school facilities for the two races are equal.

The court refused to act at this time on the ruling of the special three-man federal district court. That court ruled that segregation in Clarendon County, South Carolina, schools did not in itself violate the 14th Amendment for "equal protection of the laws" for all persons.

Two members of the three-judge court declared that the segregated school system was unconstitutional because the facilities for Negroes were not equal to those for white pupils, but they gave the school district six months to equalize Negro school facilities.

The other judge held that segregation is unconstitutional regardless of equality of facilities.

In appealing to the Supreme Court, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People sought to have the position of the dissenting judge sustained.

The Supreme Court, however, sent the case back to the lower court so that it could consider what the school district has done to equalize the facilities.

Justices Black and Douglas dissented on the grounds that segregation is unconstitutional and that it is not necessary to inquire into the equality of facilities.

A suit similar to the South Carolina case has been brought in Arizona jointly by the CIO, the NAACP and other organizations. Other suits on the segregation issue also are pending.

10 Polish Seamen Jump Ship In Antwerp

Ten Polish seamen, seeking political asylum, jumped their ships in the port of Antwerp, Belgium, during December, according to the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

Four of them walked off the S. S. Hugo Kollotaj on Dec. 16, on the way back to Poland after a trip to England. On Christmas night, five men fled from the S. S. Kolobrzeg, just in from Holland, and another quickly followed suit. Both ships are owned by the Polish Ocean Lines.

UWUA Gets Election On West Coast

FOLLOWING the filing of an election petition by the CIO Utility Workers, the National Labor Relations Board last week ordered an election at the Pacific Gas & Electric Co., in Northern California within the next 30 days.

UWUA already has bargaining rights for approximately 5000 clerical workers and according to UWUA Sec.-Treas. William J. Pachler, has an excellent chance to be voted in by the 12,000 physical employes. The latter are now represented by the AFL Electrical Workers.

Pachler said he has assurance that the physical workers are "fed up" with IBEW and "will welcome the opportunity to affiliate with a genuine industrial union organization like UWUA."

Ike Urged To End Silence On Domestic Social Issues

DELEGATES to the triennial convention of the CIO Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union in Boston last week said a lot of nice things about Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, but refused to endorse him for the presidency until he speaks up in approval of labor's programs.

A political resolution refusing him endorsement was passed almost unanimously. About 30 of the 600 delegates failed to vote.

The union's stand was lifted in a large part from the keynote address of Pres. Irving M. Simon.

The resolution complimented Eisenhower's stand on foreign affairs as being for the "most part" in agreement with that of the Truman administration. It also paid respect to his military and public services, but claimed he is to the "right of (Sen. Robert A.) Taft and possibly to the right of (former President Herbert) Hoover."

It charged that Eisenhower has "denounced the American quest for security," and has not made "a clear-cut stand on certain aspects of domestic policy."

"Unless and until Eisenhower makes clear his stand on these aspects of domestic policy, and espouses a clear-cut liberal and progressive viewpoint, he cannot lay claim to the support of American labor," it said.

"We are more sharply aware than ever before before of the intimate relationship between foreign and domestic policy. Candidates who seek labor support must deserve it on both counts."

Several other presidential hopefuls were also mentioned in the resolution. Vice Pres. Jack Altman, who introduced it, said President Truman "deserves and should get the support of labor." The resolution itself, however, pointed out consideration of him for reelection was "pointless" because he has not announced if he will run again.

TAFT, the Ohio Republican who co-sponsored the Taft-Hartley Act, was given short shift.

"On the basis of his record and platform," the resolution said, "he does not deserve and will not receive the backing of the American labor movement."

Sen. Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr. (R. Mass.), national manager of the Eisenhower campaign, also was a convention speaker but made no reference to politics in his address. In an interview before he spoke, however, he claimed that the union's charges against his man "are not right at all."

"People who say that don't know what they are talking about," he insisted.

SOME 600 delegates, representing nearly 100,000 members of the CIO Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union, met in Boston's Bradford Hotel last week and took steps to plumb "the frontier of the American labor movement."

That description had been pinned on white collar workers of the United States by one of the principal convention speakers, Under-Sec. of Labor Michael J. Galvin. Only two million of the 15 million workers falling into the white collar group now are union members, he pointed out.

"Larger numbers of Americans in organized labor means . . . major strides in the direction of help for America's economy," he declared in a plea for greater organization.

He pointed out that since 1939 the weekly wage of the average American worker has increased 182%. But the average increase for clerical and professional workers, he said, has been but 92%.

The result is that in December, the average factory worker earned $67.36 a week, while the average worker in the delegates' own field received but $47.95, he reported.

And while prices were rising 10.1% between January 1950 and June 1951, he said, the wages of some 20 million Americans failed to keep pace.

"For most of them," he added, "it means less food on the table, poorer clothing for the children and a lower standard of living. It was just the same as though the boss had cut the workers' pay checks."

Galvin's address and the union's program tied in with a speech by Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president and director of organization and councils. He reiterated that the CIO will continue its organizing program in the South despite widespread efforts of employers to block unionization of their workers.

"We will stay in the South until hell freezes over," he declared. "There are some good, fine people there, and they need unions and are going to get them."

"THE CIO is doing more than any other organization to stop totalitarianism inside and outside America," he said. "Our members are loyal to our government. Our objective is to build a strong, safe union to be a bulwark to democracy, for when you fight for freedom in labor, you fight against the Commies and totalitarianism."

In a blast at corrupt government officials, CIO Sec. Treas. James B. Carey charged that nearly $5 billion a year is "stolen" from the Treasury through income tax rackets—"a sum almost equal to our national deficit."

He estimated $750 million is lost through "the tax depletion racket passed by Congress by which powerful oil, coal and mining interests can charge off 27½% of their total income to depletion."

Additional hundreds of millions vanish by way of the capital gains tax, he said, "whereby the profits from timber, oil royalties, livestock and even turkeys are considered not as regular income, but as capital gains." Capital gains, he explained, are taxed at the 25% rate, "the same rate as the worker who earns $60 a week, even though the recipient of this income might be getting $100,000 a year."

CAREY listed other sources of federal revenue loss as the family partnership income tax proviso, split incomes, dividend withholding, tax amortization and "the corporation spin-off racket."

Roy Wilkins, administrator of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, predicted that civil rights "will loom large" in the presidential campaign. He attributed the southern revolt against President Truman to his civil rights stand.

Rep. Kennedy (D. Mass.) predicted that "swift action" will be forthcoming to channel defense contracts for textiles and shoes into communities in his State, hard hit by unemployment.

He told the convention a procedural directive for the contract awards is being prepared in the Office of Defense Mobilization for the guidance of military procurement officials.

Arkansas CIO Asks 'Right To Work' Repeal

REPEAL OF the "right to work" law in Arkansas was set as the Number One political action goal of the Arkansas State CIO Council.

The constitutional amendment bans all forms of union security.

The Arkansas Council, in its 14th annual convention held at Little Rock last week, also urged "an active two-party system so the voters in Arkansas can vote for the candidate instead of the party."

The 180 convention delegates voted to set up state and local Political Action Committees.

They also moved council headquarters from Fort Smith to Little Rock, and made the post of secretary-treasurer, now held by Charles Catton, a full-time job.

Tilford E. Dudley, CIO-PAC assistant director, told delegates that Congress and Big Business were responsible for corruption.

"What has happened is that Big Business has moved from Wall St. to Washington," he declared. "The CIO-PAC stands alone in the nation's capital as the only group with any power which has consistently fought for integrity in government."

ANTHONY W. Smith, assistant director of CIO councils, pointed out to the convention that the CIO is taking its fight against communism into the Far East and has already established an office in Indonesia.

The aim of the CIO, he said, is to raise the living standards of people throughout the world, an action which he described as "necessary" to defeat Communist aggression.

The convention passed resolutions urging repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act, enactment of an adequate Defense Production Act, extension and strengthening of nationwide rent control and enactment of an effective excess profits tax.

THE NATIONAL CIO Community Services Committee was commended on its 10th year of successful operation and the State CIO executive board was called upon to establish, promote and develop a state CSC. The National Reporter also was endorsed.

'Obstructionists In Crucial Year' Hit By Truman

In a message to the CIO Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union triennial convention in Boston, President Truman warned that during the presidential election campaign "efforts will be made to confuse the issues and obstruct the course of our endeavor."

"Your membership, engaged as it is in daily face-to-face contact with millions of American consumers, will be acutely aware of these obstructive and divisive forces at work," he said.

"I hope that your members will sift fact from rumor, evaluate the evidence, and maintain the same steadfastness in their objective as has characterized their action in the past."

Long Strike Won—

Ships Union Wipes Out Southern Pay Rule

THE CIO SHIPBUILDING Workers union has signed a contract with the Todd-Johnson Shipbuilding Corp., New Orleans, which, for the first time, wipes out the pay differential between northern and southern shipyards. The precedent-setting agreement ended the 191-day strike at the company's yards which had paralyzed operations.

IUMSWA Pres. John J. Grogan said the new contract, ratified last week by Todd-Johnson workers, was a "complete victory" for the union. Terms provide a 32c hourly across the board wage increase, $125,000 in retroactive pay and double time for all overtime.

The agreement brings the base pay for standard 1st class mechanics to $1.87 an hour, nearly 7c more than the average national rate. It followed by less than three weeks an IUMSWA victorious settlement following a 167-day strike at the Alabama Drydock & Shipbuilding Co. at Mobile, Ala.

Major points at issue at both yards had been the union's demand for a 25c hourly wage increase, dues checkoff, maintenance of membership, a $200 vacation credit and various fringe wage benefits.

The Todd-Johnson contract, covering more than 1500 workers, runs to Mar. 1, 1953, as does the Alabama Drydock contract.

Grogan said that a novel feature of the Todd-Johnson contract will grant the New Orleans workers an automatic increase to bring pay scales up to any rates reached in current negotiations with Bethlehem Steel Co.

On the latter front however, union negotiators have accused the company of "stalling" and "cold indifference" toward the 32,000 IUMSWA workers in eight East Coast yards.

Grogan warned that the Bethlehem Atlantic Coast Committee of the union had voted unanimously to recommend that the IUMSWA executive board give permission to take a strike vote at all company East Coast yards.

At Bethlehem, the union is demanding a 20c hourly increase across the board which would raise the standard 1st class mechanic's pay to $2 an hour. Other proposals include the union shop, longer vacations, pay for holidays, stricter seniority system and the abolition of inequities.

Kroll Urges Truman Act On Bombings

PRESIDENT TRUMAN was urged in a letter from Pres. Jack Kroll of the Ohio CIO Council to spare no effort "whatever the cost" to apprehend the bomb-murderers of Mr. and Mrs. Harry T. Moore.

"We must not permit these atrocities (of which the slayings were the climax) to become another series of 'unsolved crimes,'" wrote Kroll, who is also national CIO-PAC director.

Kroll said he realized that FBI is now investigating the crimes and felt assured that the federal agency would do everything possible to bring "these vicious criminals to justice."

No matter how long it takes, he noted, "the criminal beasts who perpetrated these ghastly crimes" must be apprehended.

"It is our hope and prayer that the Florida incident will shame Congress into action; that the conspiracy in Congress against democratic rights will be exposed and dissipated; that the forces of predudice and special privileges in Congress which have joined to obstruct the progress of civil rights will be routed," Kroll's letter continued.

Kroll added a clear warning to Congress that failure to act on pending civil rights measures would be an issue in the forthcoming election.

The Newspaper Guild of New York, CIO, also protested that the double murder "is a bestial act that can be atoned only by bringing swiftly to justice the culprits of this foul deed."

HEALTH AND WELFARE: This six-man tripartite committee has been set up by the Wage Stabilization Board to pass on all health and welfare petitions submitted to WSB which do not meet automatic approval standards. Left to right: Carl Huhndorff, research director of the of the AFL Machinisists; Kenneth Kramer, insurance and health director of the CIO Textile Workers; Wilbur Cohen, chairman of the committee; Frank Pierson, professor of economics at Swarthmore College; Frederick P. Sloat, New York City actuarial consultant; and Dudley M. Mason, personnel director, Armstrong Cork Co. Here they are working diligently on a problem.

N. Y. 'Jenner Amendment' Hit By CIO

THE NEW YORK State Council has called upon all of its more than one million members to oppose a bill throwing relief rolls open to public inspection.

In a report to affiliates, Sec. Treas. Harold J. Garno, who also is the council's legislative representative, said:

"This is part of the general underhand attack on our social security structure which gave us the Hughes-Brees amendments (giving part of the unemployment insurance fund back to the employers) last year and which will include moves against workmen's compensation this year."

The bill has been introduced in both branches of the Legislature. It permits city and county governments to prepare such lists for public inspection and specifies, but without any safeguards whatsoever, that the information "shall not be used for commercial or political purposes." (The bill is in line with the Jenner Amendment voted by Congress last year.)

THE CIO COUNCIL takes the position that the bill hits at the innocent and would label as "chiselers" the 98% of the honest, self-respecting people legitimately receiving relief payments in one form or another.

Garno warned that if the bill is passed, the lists inevitably "are going to be made use of by shady business enterprises and corrupt political workers."

"This measure violates a number of principles which are mighty important to us," he added. "It's kicking people (including women, children, the aged and disabled) when they're down. It demonstrates complete contempt for individual dignity and self-respect.

"This job of keeping chiselers off the relief rolls is one for trained specialists. As in the administration of every complex program, a few mistakes may be made. Every reasonable precaution should be taken to avoid and correct such mistakes. But it won't be done by viciously penalizing thousands for the abuses of a few."

CIO Veterans Group Aids Returning GIs

THE CIO HAS set up a Veterans Committee with the announced objective of rendering a wide range of services to veterans, both in industry and the community.

Chairman Allan S. Haywood, who is executive vice president of the CIO, said the committee was authorized by Pres. Philip Murray to help returning veterans "make the switch back to the normal life of their communities."

"An increasing number of members of the armed forces are now being returned to civilian life after service in this country, Europe and the Far East," Haywood said.

"These veterans deserve the best that America can provide for them in helping them make adjustments to civilian life.

"The committee will be concerned not only with the problem of getting veterans back to their old jobs in industry or with finding jobs for younger people, but with every type of community and social problem faced by the men and women who have served, during this period of international crisis, in the nation's military establishment.

"Hundreds of thousands of veterans of both World War I and World War II are CIO members. Thousands of World War II vets received direct and helpful guidance and assistance from their own CIO unions in the early post-war period.

"In establishing the CIO Veterans Committee, we are carrying on a fine tradition of service."

Other members of the committee, in addition to Haywood are: Pres. Joseph Beirne of the Communications Workers; Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers; Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey of the Auto Workers; and Vice Pres. James Thimmes of the Steelworkers.

An action committee has also been named. It consists of Fred Pieper of the CIO Headquarters staff; Frank N. Hoffman, legislative representative of the Steelworkers, and Harold J. Near of the Auto Workers. Other members will be added to the latter group in the future.

Michigan CIO Plans To Spur Action On State Jobless Pay

AIMED at spurring the Michigan Legislature to action on a number of key issues—particularly a much-needed increase in unemployment comepnsation — the Michigan CIO Council will sponsor a conference at Lansing on Feb. 9.

Five members of the lower House—including three CIO leaders—have sponsored a bill to increase primary unemployment compensation benefits from $27 to $40 a week and from $2 to $3 for each dependent. The measure also would extend the maximum duration of benefits from 20 to 26 weeks.

The sponsors of the measure are Reps. Kowalski, Currie and Carey, all Detroit Democrats, and Carroll, Mt. Clemens, and Goulette, Iron Mountain, both Republicans. The measure follows recommendations of Gov. G. Mennen Williams made at the opening of the Legislature.

Carey and Kowalski are international representatives of the CIO Auto Workers, and Currie is a staff member of the CIO Clothing Workers.

More than a dozen labor bills have been introduced and await action by House and Senate committees.

Six panels will be conducted at the state CIO meeting. They will deal with taxation, a state Fair Employment Practices Commission and civil rights, workmen's compensation and safety, unemployment compensation and welfare, and state labor mediation.

More Jobs For Older Workers Urged At Parley

ORGANIZED LABOR will soon start a fight for legislation compelling new industries to hire a proportion of older workers as the price of getting government aid, Solomon Barkin, research director of the CIO Textile Workers, said last week.

Barkin spoke at a three-day conference on older workers and their retirement on the Harriman, N. Y., Campus of Columbia Univ. It was held under the auspices of the McGregor Fund of Detroit and the Committee on the Aging of the National Social Welfare Assembly.

He maintained that the management of industry must re-design the jobs older workers can fill; otherwise, an important and growing segment of the working force will not be utilized.

In view of estimates of 24 million persons 65 and over by 1980, he warned that the cost of maintaining an older population in retirement would become prohibitive and could lead to development of a social political force that would "threaten the existing moves in the community.'

Harry Becker, director of the Social Security Dept. of the CIO Auto Workers, maintained that workers should be retired upon disability, regardless of age, and not on a basis of age alone. His paper was read by his associate, Willard Solenberger.

The new concept of industry, he said, means the establishment in industry of preventive health measures and prepaid hospital and medical care programs, and strengthened community health and rehabilitation services.

Most industry spokesmen claimed that retirement of workers at 65 is traditional, has worked well and is economically feasible. Some were willing to hire more older workers if their competitors do.

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

THE WRITER this past week attended the convention of the Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union in Boston. I had the honor of addressing the delegates, who displayed a great deal of unanimity in the approach to their problems. This union has weathered quite a siege of problems and is now ready to go forward and to continue organizing the unorganized.

The writer proceeded to New York, where with Richard Leonard, Harold Ash, and Simon Helfgott, he met with the bargaining committee of the Insurance & Allied Workers Organizing Committee in their preliminary negotiations for a contract with the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. These negotiations cover approximately 5000 insurance agents in Pennsylvania, New Jersey and New York City. There appeared to be a complete meeting of minds between the IAWOC Bargaining Committee and the company officials on the procedure to be followed in subsequent meetings.

THE BIG SHOW between the CIO Steelworkers and the steel corporations has again gotten under way in New York. Pres. Murray and his capable assistants are prepared to meet any challenge made by the corporations before the Wage Stabilization Board panel.

The Steelworkers are fighting for improvement among all of the workers of the country. They are fighting a wage freeze, while at the same time living costs and profits continue to soar. All sincere and fair-minded people of this country recognize the battle that the Steelworkers are engaged in, and realize that their battle is for all the working people.

Descending into the gutter, the Machinists of the AFL—at the height of election campaigns in Wisconsin—have resorted to raising false Communist accusations against the CIO. If AFL unions are to resort to such foul tactics, we can bring to light, supported by facts, incidents of extortion and racketeering of all sorts. We as trade unionists believe in clean, above-board campaigning based on facts and sticking to the issues. If these unions want to fight on such grounds we can meet them at every turn.

ONE OF THE refreshing signs on the horizon of racial relations is an announcement the other day by a Dallas, Tex., professional baseball team that it was going to use players on the basis of their ability, regardless of their race, or color.

This is probably the first instance of a Southern ball team making such a move. It is an answer to the bigots of the golf world who refuse to drop the color bar, except in special cases.

The CIO is glad to see recognition of a man's ability regardless of racial factors. This is a battle that the CIO has been waging for years and it is a good sign to see other groups joining in the battle.

The Laundry Workers Joint Board of the CIO Clothing Workers emerged victorious in a representation election affecting 18,000 workers in 1300 laundries in the Greater New York area. The AFL Laundry Workers Union was opposing the CIO union. Results were: linen and diaper division: CIO 4131, AFL 769, no union 47; family and hand division: CIO 7071, AFL 804, no union 132. The election determined bargaining rights covering drivers and operating engineers as well as inside production workers.

Reg. Dir. W. A. Copeland reports that in a representation election at C. F. Work & Sons, Inc., Memphis, Tenn., employes favored the CIO Woodworkers by a vote of 93 to 44 for no union. Intl. Rep. F. M. Dickenson handled this campaign.

REG. DIR. FRANK BENDER reports that in a representation election at Plastic Assembled Products, Inc., Baltimore, Md., the CIO Rubber Workers emerged victorious by a vote of 84 to 48 for no union. There were 10 challenged votes.

Sec.-Treas. Ross Blood of the CIO Shipbuilding Workers reports that in a representation election at the Consolidated Shipyards, City Island, N. Y., the workers favored the IUMSWA-CIO 142, no union 17, void 3. In a consent election at Joseph Rosenthal Sons, Philadelphia, Pa., the IUMSWA won by a vote of 13 to 4 for no union.

Reg. Dir. Edward McCrone reports that in a representation election at the Bassett Co., New Haven, Conn., the IUE-CIO won by a vote or 55 to 7 for no union.

Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports that CIO-LIU No. 78 won a representation election at the Valley Date Shed, Indio, Calif., by a vote of 28 to 18 for no union. CIO Rep. Ken Gillie was in charge of the drive, assisted by Reps. Lum Moorhead and Urssell Parker of LIU No. 78.

Two CIO Officials Named To WSB

Two veteran CIO officials in Northern California have been appointed to the 12th Regional Wage Stabilization Board in San Francisco, it was announced last week.

They are Joseph Angelo, subdistrict director of the Steelworkers Dist. 38, and Robert D. Brown, executive secretary of the San Francisco - Oakland Newspaper Guild.

Lead Strikers Get 10½c, End Walkout

A STRIKE of about 350 members of CIO Glass Workers Local 132 at the St. Joseph Lead Co., Herculaneum, Mo., ended last week with a 10½c hourly wage increase and a strengthened union security contract clause.

The Herculaneum lead smelter is one of the largest in the world. Negotiations which had bogged down were resumed when the union and the CIO sought to have the walkout certified because of its effect on defense mobilization.

The company had shipped its large stockpile of ore to other smelters which extracted the lead, but equally scarce and valuable copper which had been smelted at the Herculaneum plant was lost.

Before the settlement was reached the company withdrew its demand for a revision of the hours and overtime clauses, one of the main causes of the strike. The firm had demanded the right to work an employe on his day off without overtime pay in case of emergency.

THE COMPANY also agreed to pay the costs of hospitalization, one of the union's major demands. In turn the union, which had asked for six paid holidays, accepted the company's offer of three.

The strike settlement was a moral as well as an economic victory for the members of Local 132. The company has succeeded in busting every previous union at the plant, according to Intl. Rep. George Laiben of the Glass Workers.

Strike Ends At Carboloy

THE 20-week strike at the Carboloy unit of CIO Auto Workers Local 771 against the Carboloy Div. of the General Electric Co. in Detroit ended Jan. 31 when the workers ratified a settlement.

One of the main issues in dispute was the company's plan to move the work to its new plant at Edmore, Mich., without adequate protection for its 900 employes. UAW Reg. Dir. Norman Matthews said that although the union had "no quarrel" with the financial phase of the settlement, it still regards the limited transfer protection given the workers as inadequate.

The company agreed to give each worker one month's notice of transfer of his job for each year of service, and to give him a job at the new plant at his present rate or not more than 10c an hour under it, or to make up the difference.

The settlement included a 5c an hour general increase retroactive to Dec. 3, an additional 4c as an improvement factor in November 1952 and again in November 1953, a seventh paid holiday, an increase in call-in pay from two to four hours, and three weeks' vacation after 15 years. The contract runs for two years and is reopenable for upward revision of wages only every six months.

SEVEN American trade unionists got together recently at Ruskin College of Oxford Univ., England, to compare notes on their current study of British labor problems.

The students are on leave from their jobs and unions for one year, during which they are investigating organizational techniques and collective bargaining methods which will be of use in their union work at home.

The group was taken through the workers' college by three Ruskin Scholarship holders — Eileen Kerr, of the CIO Communications Workers; Neal Moore, AFL Typographical Union, and Edward Banyai, AFL Ladies' Garment Workers.

Although Ruskin is primarily a school for trade unionists it does not emphasize union topics. Economics, history and political science are the major subjects. Its purpose is to provide a higher education for workers who had to leave school at an early age.

After three or four months devoted to getting a general picture of the British labor scene, the Ruskin scholars will move into the industrial areas to observe the British counterparts of their unions.

Plans are being made by British unions to place them where they can get the best insight into union machinery and policy.

The other four American worker-students are attached to the London School of Economics. They are Betty Humphreys and John Grady, CIO Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee; Earl Villmow, CWA-CIO, and Harry Stark, AFL Teachers.

Miss Humphreys is studying independently. The other three have Fulbright scholarships.

Point Four Program Hailed At Roosevelt Day Dinners

THE POINT FOUR program of aid to underdeveloped countries won high praise from speakers at dinners in different parts of the country held Jan. 26 in honor of the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

The dinners were sponsored by Americans for Democratic Action.

To the New York dinner, President Truman in a message repeated the declaration with which he launched Point Four in 1949:

"We must never forget that the only war we seek is the war against poverty, hunger and illiteracy. Unless we win this struggle, we cannot win the cold war or prevent the hot war either."

The objective can be won, he added, by loyalty "to those high ideals of liberalism which are the core of our heritage and which in our time were so clearly expressed in the life of Franklin Delano Roosevelt."

The program is "no sentimental give-away notion" but a "hard-headed self-interest" plan for the United States, Sec. of State Dean Acheson told the dinner. The countries being helped, he said, spend $3 on the projects to our $1.

Sen. McMahon (D. Conn.) at the Washington dinner attacked Republican leaders trying to kill the program as "political and economic primitives."

"In place of Roosevelt's deep conviction that we can never put a price tag on liberty," he said, "we see a leading Republican contender for the presidency patronizing political five-and-tencents stores to buy freedom at the bargain counter.

"And instead of Roosevelt's certain knowledge that slave men can never be free men, we must now listen to elder statesmen imploring us to cut our losses, acknowledge the superior might of totalitarianism, and retreat to some imaginary Fortress America, there to cower in fear and trembling."

Johnston Named

Eric A. Johnston, former Economic Stablization Administrator, has been named by President Truman as chairman of the Intl. Development Advisory Board, set up by Congress to advise the President on the operation of the Point Four Program.

Dixiegops Win; Bills To End Senate Filibusters Killed

BOWING AGAIN to the Dixiegop coalition that controls the 82nd Congress, the Senate Rules Committee last week turned down all pending bills designed to end Senate filibusters.

Legislative experts have pointed out that such legislation must be passed before there is any chance of getting civil rights or FEPC laws through the Senate. Filibusters have prevented votes on such legislation for many years.

Because this is an election year, however, Republican members of the coalition—who must face voters favoring civil rights legislation—didn't want to appear to be opposing legislation to end debate.

So, with Dixiecrat support, the committee reported out the Wherry resolution which would permit cloture to be imposed by a vote of two-thirds of those present and voting. The present rule requires two-thirds of the entire Senate—64 votes—to end debate.

Thus, the GOP members can claim before the voters that they actually supported a move to make it easier to end filibusters. In actual fact, the modification proposed is so slight that it would have shut off debate only once in the last 21 attempts made.

Moreover, the committee refused to do anything about limiting debate on the resolution itself This means that even the insignificant change proposed could be filibustered to death when it comes to the floor.

Americans for Democratic Action, one of the leading liberal organizations working for real cloture, accused the Rules Committee of attempting "a bare faced political fraud."

Before approving the resolution introduced originally by the late Sen. Wherry (R. Neb.), the committee turned down the three measures that would really have made it possible to end filibusters. These were:

1. The resolution sponsored by Sens. Morse (R. Ore.) and Humphrey (D. Minn.) to require only a simple majority of Senators present and voting to limit any debate.

2. The resolution of Sen. Lehman (D. N. Y.) and others to permit a majority to cut off debate after 15 days.

3. The Ives-Lodge resolution to permit 49 votes, a constitutional majority of the Senate, to limit debate.

Sen. Benton (D. Conn.), who led the fight for cloture in the committee, announced that he would file a minority report. He said that he would carry the fight to the Senate floor by moving to substitute the Lehman resolution for the Wherry proposal.

Before approving even the meaningless Wherry resolution, the committee weakened it by adopting an amendment of Sen. Dirksen (R. Ill.) requiring a five-day Senate layover before any proposal to end debate could be voted on.

Carey Assails 'Inadequate' Move

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey last week branded the Wherry resolution on cloture—the cutting off of Senate filibusters — "completely inadequate."

"The proposal endorsed by the Senate Rules Committee fails completely to meet the situation because it still leaves in a handful of Senators the power to arrest all processes of government," Carey declared.

He said that the issue goes far beyond the civil rights question, since cloture can be denied any measure coming before the Senate. Carey pointed out that the Wherry resolution does nothing to end minority rule in the Senate.

"We are still for majority rule in that body," he added.

Not A Bad Apple In The Lot

The following dispatch was published in the Newport News, Va., Daily Press on Jan. 27—

NEW YORK (AP)—Sen. Robert A. Taft (R.O.) said today that the Administration has shackled the nation with the most "calamitous foreign policy in our history."

That policy, he told 3600 cheering Republicans, has undermined domestic stability, kindled the world-wide Communist threat, and caused an "unnesessary war" . . .

Taft's speech before the 31st annual luncheon of the Women's National Republican Club was interrupted 39 times by applesauce. He got a 2½ minute standing ovation when it was over.

Senate Vote Puts Blanket On Real Price Curb Action

GRAB still more tightly onto whatever may still be left of your pocketbooks! The 82nd "Horsemeat" Congress has no intention of acting on any of President Truman's requests for repeal of the "economic boobytrap" amendments it wrote into the Defense Production Act last year.

The Senate made this clear last week when it voted 47 to 39 —with not a single Republican dissenting—to recommit to the Banking Committee a measure repealing curbs on imports of foreign cheese, fats and oils, other dairy products and peanuts.

The action, which has the effect of killing repeal, was almost 100% along straight party lines. The motion to recommit was made by Sen. Capehart (R. Ind.). Only seven Democrats voted with the Republicans for recommital.

Other sections of the controls act which the President in his recent State-of-the-Union Message asked Congress to repeal, the Herlong amendment allowing traditional percentage profit margins to retailers and wholesalers, the Butler-Hope amendment banning livestock slaughter quotas and the Capehart amendment adding cost increases to prices.

But GOP leaders said right after his speech that they would oppose any effort to strengthen the controls law. Rep. Wolcott (R. Mich.) and Sens. Capehart and Bricker (R. O.) also predicted that no speedy action would be taken even on the pro-proposal to extend the anti-inflation act after June 30.

Last week, both Price Stabilizer Michael V. DiSalle and Nathan P. Feinsinger, chairman of the Wage Stabilization Board, warned the Joint Congressional Committee on the Economic Report that to drop controls now would be dangerous to the economy.

DiSalle told the committee, however, that he intended to appoint a committee to explore the idea of decontrolling certain goods "in specific areas where price pressures are largely absent."

ECONOMIC Stabilizer Roger Putnam, testifying before the Senate banking committee, gave support to published reports that the Administration has abandoned its fight for repeal of the Capehart amendment.

He said that he wished the amendment had never been enacted but that "the major damage has been done." He added that its repeal now "would not do tremendous good."

Labor economists differ sharply with Putnam's position. They believe that the full effects of the Capehart amendment, which allows everyone down the line from manufacturer to retailer to increase prices, are still to be felt. Between August, when the amendment went into effect, and Dec. 15, the price index jumped five points. But that appears to have been only the beginning.

Strike Vote Called In Oil Workers Fight For 25c Hike

By MARVIN ZELDIN

STRIKE VOTES by more than 275,000 oil workers were set in motion by CIO, AFL and independent oil unions last week to back up the united union demand for a wage increase of not less than 25c an hour, shift differentials of 6 and 12c an hour and other substantial contract improvements.

Delegates from oil unions all over the nation held a two-day meeting in Kansas City, Mo., last week. It was the second such joint conference.

They agreed that all inferior company offers would be rejected and that the unions would continue to pool their efforts and present a united wage stand.

To bring the generally stalled negotiations to a head, the oil union conference recommended:

- That all participating unions should immediately start taking strike votes, if they are in a position to do so.
- That U. S. Mediation & Conciliation Service be called into negotiations.
- That all unions be prepared for further united action.

To carry out this program, the oil unions set up committees to co-ordinate negotiations, act as a clearing house and call for another joint union conference. Members of these committees are O. A. Knight, president of the CIO Oil Workers, J. J. McKenna, representing independent unions, and V. O. Cottengim and O. V. Clover, for AFL unions.

First union to act on the conference recommendations was the OWIU-CIO. The Oil Workers Policy Committee, also meeting in Kansas City, asked more than 300 strategic bargaining groups—out of more than 600 OWIU contract units—to take immediate strike votes.

(The oil unions are in negotiations at a time when the industry's earnings are climbing sharply. Dividends paid by the oil and closely-related natural gas companies last year climbed 20.1% over 1950. Two specific examples: Socony-Vacuum Oil net profits after all taxes climbed from $128.2 million in 1950 to $160 million in 1951, a jump of 25%. For Phillips Petroleum Co., earnings climbed from $51.5 million in '50 to $73.7 million in '51.)

Already one union participating in the oil workers' conference has been forced on strike—and it has been pledged unanimous "financial and physical" support.

More than 2000 members of the independent Tide Water Employes Association have been out for a month at the Bayonne, N. J., refinery of Tide Water Associated Oil Co. They shut the plant down after charging the company had refused to bargain in good faith on many non-wage items, and had sought to eliminate many long-standing working conditions.

In supporting the Bayonne strikers, the oil conference said:

"In our united planning for a successful wage program, we cannot forget that the future of all workers in the U. S. and Canada is forged by the efforts of every group of oil workers, be it large or small.

"A victory by the Tide Water Employes Association will therefore be a victory for all oil workers."

Another statement issued by the Kansas City conference said, under existing Wage Stabilization Board regulations, that "it is perfectly legal to negotiate a wage increase of 25c an hour or more."

"Much has been said in the newspapers about a so-called wage freeze," the statement said. "Actually, wages were never frozen but were stabilized . . .

"Regulations issued by this (wage) board make it clear that unions and companies can still engage in collective bargaining, with no ceilings whatsoever placed on the amount of a pay raise that can be negotiated . . .

"We are therefore attempting to negotiate a 25c hourly increase and are then prepared to justify this raise before the WSB and thereby gain approval to have the raise put into effect."

'Unfair' Price, Tax Policies Hitting Workers Hardest, Rieve Warns

"THE IMPACT of the inquitable treatment of workers . . . has affected the national economy," Emil Rieve, administrative chairman of the CIO Committee on Economic Policy, last week warned the Congressional Joint Committee on the Economic Report.

Rieve, who is also a member of the Wage Stabilization Board and president of the CIO Textile Workers, cited the soft goods industries—such as textiles and clothing—as feeling the effects of this inequality in the defense mobilization program.

"The impact of high prices, tax rises and the payment of debts and obligations have cut into the buying power of large groups of the people," Rieve's statement to the committee said.

"Per capita disposable personal income (after taxes) was lower in the last quarter of 1951 than it had been a year before. In the fourth quarter of 1950, per capita disposable personal income was at a yearly rate of $1469; in the last three months of 1951, the rate of disposable personal income for each person in the country was $1455.

"The soft goods industries—such as textiles and clothing—are directly affected by the declines in consumer spending. These industries have been depressed in the recent months as a result of insufficient sales."

On the other hand, Rieve said, prices have remained high "despite the lull in inflationary pressures since February-March, 1951."

He said that at the end of 1951, wholesale prices and retail prices as reflected by the Consumers' Price Index are, respectively, 13% and 11.6% above June, 1950, when the Communists invaded South Korea.

"Corporate profits before taxes in 1951," Rieve said, "were at an all-time record level of $44.8 billion.

"If we apply the excess profits tax exemption of the best three years of 1946-49, we find that 1951's corporate profits before taxes were 75% above Congress' concept of 'normal' profits. Despite increased taxes, corporate profits of $18 billion, after taxes, were 16% above 'normal'."

Despite these high profits, Rieve continued, "the consumers have as yet felt only a small part of the impact of the Capehart and the Herlong amendments. . . .

"There are no Capehart and Herlong procedures for workers. Prices can move up almost at will as a result of the many loopholes in the Defense Production Act. But wages—the sole means of livelihood of the largest segment of the American people—are tied down by contractural obligations for three, four, five or more months.

"Through their unions, workers can attempt to catch up to the previous price rises. The Wage Stabilization Board now allows cost-of-living wage adjustments. But there is a delay of several months, at least, before the lag between prior prices and wages can be narrowed."

"Business has been handed a guarantee of higher prices, whenever markets get tight," Rieve declared. "In addition, upper income and business groups have privileged advantages under the loopholes of our tax structure. And industry has been granted the special privilege—through accelerated depreciation — of writing off a good deal of the new plant and equipment in five years, instead of the normal 20 years.

"In contrast with the privileges of business and upper income groups, workers and their unions are compelled to attempt to negotiate wage adjustments with employers and then to go through the Wage Stabilization Board's obstacle course."

Still More Inflation

Still more inflation has been proposed in the Senate.

A bill extending for another year all major provisions of the present inadequate Defense Production Act — including those condemned by President Truman as "economic boobytraps" which make it impossible to control run-away prices—was introduced last week.

Maybank's bill ignores all of the President's requests for a stronger controls law except one. The Consumer's Price Index has jumped five points since last August, when the present law which Maybanks thinks is adequate was passed by Congress.

UPWA Signs With 2 Firms For 6c, Wage Inequity Gain

AFTER some two months of negotiations, CIO Packinghouse Workers last week reached contract settlements with Armour & Co. and Cudahy Packing Co. — two of the "Big Four" meat packers.

Basic terms of the settlement are a 6c hourly general wage increase, plus 1½ to 2c hourly for women workers—a step toward eliminating a wage differential between men and women workers.

In narrowing this differential, the UPWA settlements went beyond the contract agreed to a month ago by AFL Butchers for a straight 6c increase.

Ralph Helstein, Packinghouse Workers president, said:

"The narrowing of the traditional male-female wage differentials is meaningful in improving the status of women workers in American industry."

The Armour contract covers 30,000 UPWA members and the Cudahy agreement an additional 10,000. Negotiations are continuing with Swift and Wilson.

U.S. Finally Issues Order For Defense Area Contracts

DEFENSE MOBILIZER Charles W. Wilson last week finally issued a directive enabling military and civilian procurement agencies to award contracts to unemployment "distress" areas even though the bids are not the lowest.

Under pressure from the CIO Auto Workers, Comptroller General Lindsay C. Warren three weeks earlier gave Wilson legal authority for the directive. About 140,000 workers are estimated to be unemployed in the Detroit area because of inadequate industry and government plans for converting from a peacetime to a wartime economy.

Detroit was expected momentarily be declared a distressed area under Wilson's directive.

Mobilization officials, however, warned that, particularly in the New England textile area, any action will have to be geared to conditions in the entire industry.

Under the directive, the Labor Dept. will determine the distress areas. It will certify them to a new Surplus Manpower Committee, which will include representatives of the Defense and Labor Depts., the General Services Administration, DPA, the National Production Authority, Atomic Energy Commission and Small Defense Plants Administration.

15c Hike For Brass Workers

A FIVE-MAN panel of the Wage Stabilization Board last week recommended a 15c hourly increase for 20,000 CIO Auto Workers in 11 American Brass Co. plants in New England and the South.

Prof. Harry Shulman of Yale Univ. headed the panel, which was created after President Truman referred the dispute to the board to avert a threatened strike.

The 15c increase includes an 11c cost-of-living adjustment and a 4c "improvement increase," the latter retroactive to last Oct. 15.

Steel Bosses Say 'No' And Take All Week To Say It

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

THE STEEL industry said "no" again last week to the 22-point contract improvement program of the CIO Steelworkers. It was not a terse "no." The "no" took the form of several hundred thousand words of testimony by more than 30 spokesmen for the basic steel producers.

Throughout an entire week the testimony droned on in the form of words and figures, charts and tables. The scene was the gloomy auditorium of the Association of the Bar of New York City. The hearings, moved there from Washington at the request of the companies, were conducted by a six-man special panel of the Wage Stabilization Board.

Looking down on the scene were a dozen gloomy portraits of prominent Manhattan barristers of another day—tight-lipped, stony-faced gentlemen who looked as though they agreed with each word of the steel companies' case.

The industry opened its case on Feb. 4 and its 34 witnesses were expected to consume the entire week.

Then Prof. Jules Backman of New York University took the speaker's stand for an eight-hour talkathon. Backman not only turned down the steel union's 22 requests—he even turned down a few that the union had not asked for!

And so it went, throughout the week. The union's program was exaggerated into a rugged horror story—one industry witness going so far as to suggest that lifting of pay for southern steel workers to the same level paid in the North and West would somehow leave the nation wide open to atomic attack. The charge was never clearly explained.

THE CORE of the industry case was contained in the Fairless statement.

The U. S. Steel top executive argued that the companies were merely caught in a contest between the union and the government over wage stabilization policies—and hence were really in the role of innocent bystanders.

Fairless contended that any steel wage increase would be inflationary—regardless of its size or nature. He also maintained that any steel wage increase would, inevitably and automatically, force the company to raise its prices.

Fairless capped his speech with a new "angle." U. S. Steel, he told the WSB panel, pays millions of dollars in taxes to the federal government each year. A wage boost, he added, would cut profits, and the company's profits tax payments to the government would accordingly be lowered. In fact, he lamented, if the thing spread, the government might lose $11 billion in corporation taxes.

That brought an angry retort from USA-CIO Pres. Philip Murray.

He said flatly that the Fairless statement cannot be proven, and then went on:

"It is interesting to find U. S. Steel — which complains about the so-called terrifying burden of taxes 364 days a year, and 365 on Leap Year—suddenly manifesting a postive passion to pay taxes.

"It would be interesting to know whether Mr. Fairless or any other steel corporation executive, has ever refused a raise in salary or bonus on grounds that it might conceivably deprive the government of taxes."

Murray noted that in 1945-46, U. S. Steel paid out in wages about 47c of each dollar it received from the sale of its product. In 1951, wages amount to only 39c of each sales dollar.

"We are asking not for an unfair share of the industry's pie—but we want our fair share, which has been whittled down crumb by crumb, like the food at a third-rate boarding house."

Arthur J. Goldberg, steel union general counsel, later in the course of the steel industry's presentation, charged that company spokesmen were "compounding confusion" through conflicting claims.

He said that proposals offered to the WSB by the industry for eliminating shift differentials altogether, and exaggerated claims as to the cost of ending geographical wage discrimination practised against southern workers, are not worth "serious consideration."

Steel Dispute In Summary

Union demands: CIO Steelworkers set 22-point program, including: 15c hourly wage increase plus higher rates for more skilled jobs; guaranteed annual wage to protect workers during lay-off periods; holidays with pay and better vacations; improved shift differentials; elimination of geographical differentials; union shop; and other improvements.

Background: Union entered bargaining conferences with companies in late November, but companies turned down all demands without serious bargaining. When union warned that expiration of contract midnight Dec. 31 would mean shutdown of steel industry, Pres. Truman appealed for delay in union action. Special convention of union early in January accepted President's request. Later in January, special Wage Stabilization Board Panel started hearings on dispute.

Next Step: WSB Panel to make recommendations to Pres. Truman later this month.

Employer Stalling On WSB Hit By Beirne

PRES. JOSEPH BEIRNE of the CIO Communications Workers has accused industry members of the Wage Stabilization Board of "conducting a sitdown strike" and "waging a war of attrition" to block gains for workers.

Beirne, who is a labor member of WSB, said industry members are "dragging their feet" and "doing a lot of double talk" on such important issues as productivity pay increases.

He cited as an example of "doubletalk," the recent disclosure by industry members that they will vote as a block against productivity increases, although they say they are not opposed to such wage boosts if won in collective bargaining sessions.

"Their action just doesn't add up," Beirne said, "because right now we have before us a number of cases where productivity increases were arrived at through collective bargaining channels and industry members are holding up consideration of these."

Beirne said Congress will have to take the blame for passing a price control law "so full of holes you could drive a truck through it." He said Congress "lent a ready ear" to "profit-hungry business interests" and the result is that price control laws are weak and wage control laws relatively strong.

"This was accomplished because a conservative coalition of Southern Democrats and Northern Republicans refused to listen to all sound advice on the subject," he added.

BEIRNE SAID that since the outbreak of the Korean war, industry net profits have jumped 19.5%. He charged that these "above normal" profits prove that big business "has its feet deep in the trough, profiteering on the war effort and recklessly pushing us down the road to inflation."

The WSB has before it resolutions from both the CIO and the AFL members which would permit employers to raise workers' pay above the wage ceiling on the basis of better work.

It has already approved some productivity increases, sometimes called "annual improvement" raises, where they were negotiated prior to the January 1950 control date.

Beirne said industry members are also opposed to WSB sanction of the union shop, a key factor in many of the disputes now before the board.

Arnall Named As Price Chief

Arnall succeeds Michael V. DiSalle, who is resigning on Feb. 15 to run for the Democratic U. S. senatorial nomination from Ohio.

Arnall, now an Atlanta lawyer, accepted the appointment, saying he had no "magic formula" for controlling prices.

Time's Running Out For WSB Decision On Steel Pay

IT WILL be late in February before President Truman is apt to get recommendations from the special Wage Stabilization Board panel on the issues in the steel labor-management dispute.

Final testimony will not be completed in the New York hearings until Feb. 16. The panel—representing management, labor and the public—will certainly require several days to consider the hundreds of thousands of words read into the hearing record.

And it is apt to run into some internal differences as to the nature of the recommendations.

The CIO Steelworkers convention authorized a 45-day strike postponement, with the time starting to run from the beginning of the WSB hearings early in January. Presumably the union's wage policy committee will have to reach a decision later this month as to its course of action if the WSB's recommendations are delayed beyond the Feb. 24 deadline.

. . . And Ragged Individuals

A few days ago, when the CIO Steelworkers were telling the WSB panel about the urgency of a guaranteed annual wage, President Philip Murray remarked:

"The companies, like most other American corporations, have shown little concern about the effect of periodic unemployment upon hourly-paid wage earners and their families."

But the cancer of idle men who want to work is coming to the fore—in auto cities like Detroit, in the textile towns of New England, in a "forgotten" city like Cumberland, Md.

On the opposite page, The CIO News presents the story in pictures of "Despair in Cumberland." It's not a pretty story of what happens to a town and its people—when the biggest plant sharply curtails operations. It's a record of how rugged individualism leaves ragged individuals.

It'll Be A Long Wait

Speaking of the WSB steel hearings, "the tears flowed like wine" as Ben Fairless and his associates, their accountants and their university professors took the witness stand in New York last week.

Such concern about inflation—from an industry which has a record of jacking-up prices a half dozen times since World War II, boosting prices to steel consumers before and after just about every time it has finally agreed to a wage increase for steelworkers!

From the testimony presented by steel management, we must conclude that the industry is about to denounce and berate the NAM, U. S. Chamber of Commerce and similar organizations and, thereupon, march on Washington to demand Congress vote a corporation tax increase and enact a real anti-inflation law.

'The New Soviet Man'

The arrogant contempt with which the Communist rulers of Russia view working men and women everywhere has been revealed on more than one occasion in the United Nations.

Tobias, who, incidentally, is a Negro and a distinguished educator, had protested the farcical Czech "trial" and imprisonment of William Oatis, CIO Newspaper Guildsman and a foreign correspondent.

As for Tobias, he replied "If I have to go down in the record as an example of a Chicago stockyards worker, I am happy."

The Ghost Arsenal

The following article by Guy Nunn, radio and TV news commentator of the CIO Auto Workers in Detroit, is digested from The New Republic:

DETROIT is a sick city. And treatment for the sickness isn't covered by the Blue Cross contracts which protect nearly a million workers in the Greater Detroit area.

The city which in World War II inundated the Axis with its military output is today pocketed with idle shops, idle machines, idle workers. The waste spreads with malignant speed. This week there are more than 145,000 unemployed auto workers in Michigan; by summer the line of jobless many stretch to 200,000 or 300,000 workers.

Much of the unemployment has depth reaching back into the late spring of 1950. Many workers have already exhausted the state's niggardly unemployment compensation benefits, and the proportion of jobless who will be thrown entirely on welfare may be staggering by late spring.

A heavy uneasiness is audible in the utterances of editors, city and state officials, employers —as though the ravening face of 1932 had suddenly intruded in their dreams and would not be blinked away in daylight.

There had been ample warning for those who would listen. Few would. For six years Apollo's curse lay on Walter Reuther's prophecy that unless production of strategic metals was increased, the national economy would be put into immediate jeopardy by even a partial mobilization.

Finally, when Korea took fire and the President issued his partial mobilization order, Reuther asked the heads of all auto manufacturing firms to meet with the UAW to explore ways of minimizing the impact of impending rearmament on auto industry employment. The brush-off was virtually unanimous.

In November, 1950, came the first announcement of heavy materials cutbacks but still the car manufacturers sat on their heels. The industry refused to convert any but the tiniest fraction of its existing capacity to defense production and chose instead to construct or acquire new plants elsewhere in which to exercise its high dividend patriotism.

Chrysler went to New Orleans and Newark; Ford tore down Detroit aircraft-engine capacity to tool up in Chicago. And in Detroit, the suicides of desperation multiplied.

A recently published estimate of current idle capacity in American industry places it at greater than over-all activated Soviet military capacity. In the last war, the auto industry and its subsidiaries produced close to 40% of the nation's military hardware. Today, nearly 40% of the industry's capacity is unused or under-exploited.

DESPITE this the Defense Production Authority announced that new plant construction in the amount of nearly $12 billion has been blessed with quick tax write-off authorization.

DPA Dir. Manly Fleischmann's recent acknowledgement of the plight of auto workers had all the iron of a dictum by Goering. "We do not believe," he told the House-Senate "watchdog" committee on defense production, "that mobilization goals can be achieved if allocation policies are based in large measure on employment factors."

Doubtless Mr. Fleischmann now regrets his somewhat brutal phrasing of policy, but it rang in Detroit like idiot laughter.

In recent days the auto industry has begun dimly to perceive the realities of the mobilization situation, but only dimly.

Having fouled its own nest through its refusal to convert (and a well-upholstered nest it was, feathered in fiscal by a 17% rate of return, after taxes, for its weakest company, and 34% for its strongest), it still clings to the hope that a show of bad temper in the capital will scare material quotas back to "normal." That hope will be the death of more auto workers if it is not abandoned.

Despair In Cumberland

Textile Workers Left High, Dry As Celanese Plant Shuts Down

This five-room frame dwelling is home for Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Wolfe and their six children. In the top photo, the children are, clockwise from the left, Gloria Jean, Mary June, Floyd Joseph, Georgia Mae, Edward Howard and Rosalee. Wolfe has worked only nine months in the past three years, has earned a "livelihood" by doing odd jobs. The Wolfe family's plight is all too common in Cumberland, Md., where the Celanese Corp. of America has cut employment from 8000 to 3000 in three years.

By FRED ROSS

"THE AMERICAN people don't want to live in poverty like this, especially when they are willing to work. It isn't our idea—living like this. Cumberland just doesn't have jobs for us."

That was the greeting that Mrs. Margaret Wolfe gave to a group of members of Local 1874 of the CIO Textile Workers, who called on her, her husband and their six children at their dilapidated home near Cumberland, Md.

Cumberland is only one of a number of communities throughout the United States that are feeling the blight of unemployment. New York State and many textile cities of New England also are hard hit by lack of jobs.

Unlike Detroit, which owes its unemployment to failure of government and industry to make adequate plans for conversion from a peacetime to a defense economy, Cumberland's woes are due to different causes — shifts of industry and technological changes which ignore the human needs of workers.

Its biggest employer, the Celanese Corp. of America, has closed department after department and moved operations to other plants. Since August, 1948, employment at the Cumberland plant has dropped from 8044 to less than 3000.

TWUA Local 1874 and the community are aroused by the company' latest proposal, to move the dye and finishing department to its more modern plant at Hopewell, Va. More than 500 would lose their jobs at Cumberland and employment at the plant would be reduced by 16%.

This is the story of what happens to a city and its people when unemployment strikes. So the case of the Wolfe family is to the point . . .

Mrs. Wolfe's husband, Floyd, 33-year-old veteran of Navy patrol duty in the Atlantic during World War II, is—like hundreds of others—on "furlough" at the Celanese plant. He has worked only nine months in the past three years, has not been entitled to any unemployment compensation since last September and he receives no relief because he is able to work —if work was available.

That would be tough enough if there were only Floyd and his wife, but they have six children, ranging in age from four to 11.

The little kitchen of their five-room, ramshackle home was already crowded as the union members entered. Not only were the Wolfe's children there, but also the children of Mrs. Wolfe's sister, who was visiting the family, and a number of neighbor's children.

Lives By Odd Jobs

"How do you manage to provide for your family?" Wolfe was asked.

"I take what odd jobs I can get. My last job was to help grade a parking lot in Cumberland.

"I tried to get work at the Kelly-Springfield tire plant here. I went there twice a week for several weeks, until the apple picking season opened last fall and then I went to work at a big orchard near my home."

The union group had met Wolfe as he was going to a neighbor's to help butcher two pigs. He said that when he helps with the butchering, he is given a "few pounds of meat" which help feed his family.

Wolfe explained that his home, which is at the bottom of a 300-foot ravine near a road that is unusable in winter, belongs

"What are you going to have for dinner?" Mrs. Wolfe was asked as the Local 1874 members prepared to leave.

She pointed to kettle in which there was a small beef knuckle and vegetables.

"My sister brought that," Mrs. Wolfe said. "If she hadn't we'd only have had this," she added as she lifted the lid of another pot.

In it were blackeye peas that barely covered the bottom of the kettle.

One of the union group, Jack Kreitzburg, the TWUA local's activities chairman, himself was laid off last October, and draws $25 a week unemployment compensation. His wife works in the dyehouse. He had just been refused a railroad job because he was "too old." He is 40.

Both the other men in the union group, Howard Bush, local vice president and chairman at the dyehouse, and Lee Emerson, vice-chairman at the dyehouse, are scheduled to be laid off if the company carries out its plans.

Emerson has worked in the dyehouse 19 years, and Bush has 20 years' seniority. Both are buying their homes.

Mrs. Emerson worked at the Celanese plant, but "was kicked out after 21 years" when the warp knitting department was moved to Bridgewater, Va., in 1948.

The union men said that 60% of the dyehouse employes have more than 15 years' seniority. Like Emerson and Bush, many of them are buying their homes and are natives of Cumberland.

Cumberland's Tragedy

When the three union men told Playford Aldridge, president of Local 1874, of the plight of the Wolfe family, he was sympathetic and said sadly:

"Cumberland's tragedy is that there are a lot more like that."

Francis Kenney, Cumberland manager of the Maryland Dept. of Employment Security, backed up Aldridge's statement with facts.

He said that the latest figures, for Dec. 1, show unemployment in the Cumberland area was 11%—an estimated 4950 jobless out of work in a work force of 41,700. (Any area which has 6% or more unemployment is listed by the U. S. Dept. of Labor as Group Four, the most serious.)

For the week ending Jan. 25, Kenney's office received 1820 applications for unemployment compensation and paid unemployment benefits to 1624. He estimated the number of unemployed Celanese workers at almost 70% of those drawing unemployment compensation in the area.

Kenney said that the number of persons who exhausted their unemployment compensation from last April through last December was 908.

The state official pointed to Cumberland's population decline as reported by the U. S. Census. Cumberland's population fell from 39,483 in 1940 to 37,679 in 1950.

"It is significant to note," he reported, "that of the five incorporated towns in Maryland which showed a population decline from 1940 to 1950, four were located in Allegany County."

The other towns Kenney referred to are Frostburg, Westernport and Lonaconi all near Cumberland.

Some of the county's trouble are due the closing of soft coal mines. In Cumb land, work at the Baltimore and O yards has declined since steam engi have been largely replaced by diesel p senger locomotives, which require l maintenance.

TWUA Local 1874 is not taking the clining employment at the Celanese pla lying down. When Harold Blancke, $229,000-a-year president of the Celan Corp., refused to meet with the local ficers to discuss the company's latest p posal to transfer its dye and finishing op ations, the local took its case to the pub and Allegany and Cumberland officials.

Take Case To Public

The local had a full page ad in the J 25 issue of the Cumberland News. The reproduced a help wanted ad which t Celanese firm ran for several weeks dur January in a Hopewell newspaper and in contradiction—a letter from the co pany to the Cumberland employes telli them the Virginia city's "available la will be sufficient" to handle producti there.

Local 1874 also turned the spotlight Blancke in an appeal to the Celan stockholders.

ere's Year-By-Year ecord Of Firings

1937, weave shed moved to Williamsport, ., 500 jobs lost.

1949, cellulose acetate receiving depart-nt, jobs cut from 30 to two; waste re-very department, jobs cut from 30 to o, and warp knitting department, moved Bridgewater, Va., 405 jobs lost.

The latest plan of the company to move e dye and weaving department to Hope-ll, Va., would lop off 512 more jobs.

The company last August told Local 74 of the CIO Textile Workers that it s satisfied with the department's opera-n and has lent a deaf ear to the urging the union that it modernize the opera-n.

ewer And Fewer Jobs

"While new plants have been built, while erations have expanded through the ited States and Canada and Mexico, employment level in Cumberland has ne down and down."

The letter quoted from two speeches by ancke—one to the annual meeting of the sociated Industries of Maryland last ec. 13.

Blancke told the assembled manufac-rers that modernization of departments the Cumberland plant helped not only ese departments but improved the ality of the work and the efficiency of her departments.

"I am sure," Blancke was quoted, "that e favorable results at the Cumberland ant, for example, would have been im-ssible of attainment had we not modern-ed our methods of handling employe and mmunity problems."

The letter quoted from a speech by ancke to the Cumberland Chamber of mmerce last May when he said that the lanese plant "is by far the largest em-yer and the most economic force in the fe of the community.

"All of us have a right to expect it to intain this important partnership as w constituted. We do not expect it or sire it to diminish in importance."

Local 1874 also got the support of the Allegany County Commissioners and the Cumberland City Council in its efforts to halt the dye plant move to Hopewell.

On behalf of the council, Mayor Thomas S. Post wrote to plant manager Harry C. Givens, Jr., asking him to forward to Blancke the council's request that the company review its decision.

The council also offered to discuss the proposed move with Givens.

The County Protests

The commissioners also wrote to Givens, asking that the corporation reconsider its proposed action. The commissioners pointed out:

"The downward adjustment of employment of the local plant in the recent past has created a serious economic problem in the county and the discontinuance of the . . . departments will unquestionably add to the already severe local unemployment problem."

And that is the situation today in Cumberland, one of a score of unemployment-ridden "ghost cities" of America, where the workers say:

"The American people don't want to live in poverty like this, especially when they are willing to work."

Unemployment causes vacant stores to multiply.

LOBBYISTS for the large-scale operators of industrialized farms in the South and West have won another victory in Congress.

Some half million American migrant workers will suffer almost incomprehensible hardship and intolerable working conditions as a result.

This is the real significance of the bill passed last week by the Senate for the stated purpose of "tightening" laws governing the use of Mexican "wetback" labor.

Actually, like the Ellender-Poage Bill of the last session, the new measure is shot full with jokers that will still make it impossible for immigration authorities really to stop the flow of cheap, illegal labor into this country.

In fact, it's unlikely the Congress would have passed any law "curbing" wetbacks at all if unusual circumstances hadn't compelled the lobby for the big commercial farmers to demand some changes.

THE BIG farmers reap many financial benefits from the cheap labor available so long as no effective steps are taken by Congress to prevent illegal immigration. Despite this fact, the curious spectacle of these farmers lobbying for a law to "curb" illegal entry stems from one simple reason:

The Mexican government has made it clear that it will not renew the international agreement under which some 200,000 Mexican farmhands have been legally brought into this country, unless the U. S. enacts stiffer curbs on illegal immigration. The temporary treaty signed last fall expires Feb. 11.

To keep this big supply of cheap, government - subsidized foreign labor, therefore, the farmers were compelled to push for passage of a law imposing penalties for harboring illegal wetbacks.

However, since they didn't want actually to cut off illegal entry, their strategy was to have their lobbyists write sufficient loopholes into the law so that the so-called "curbs" are relatively meaningless.

The lobby succeeded in both the House and Senate. Although the latter chamber was the first actually to pass the bill, a measure containing virtually identical loophole provisions has been approved by the House Judiciary Committee.

Both measures provide no penalties for a person who knowingly employe an illegal alien. And both would restrict enforcement of the penalty provisions of the law to U. S. immigration officers, either in uniform or properly identifed as such.

The latter provision makes it possible for employers to know in advance of the approach of uniformed border patrolmen and to send any wetbacks they have employed to cover.

The big farmers also know that their lobby has enough influence in Washington to prevent increased appropriations being made for the Immigration and Naturalization Service patrols. There are now only 700 officers to patrol 3000 miles of open border between the U. S. and Mexico.

Moreover, the bill limits the authority of the border patrol to search private property for wetbacks without a court-issued warrant to a distance of 25 miles from the border.

Efforts were made to amend the Senate bill to provide adequate penalties before it was passed. Sens. Douglas (D. Ill.), Lehman (D. N.Y.) and Humphrey (D. Minn.) led the fight, but were defeated in an effort to impose a penalty on employers hiring wetbacks by a vote of 69 to 11. Without such a provision, the bill is meaningless.

EVEN AS the Senate was approving the phony "curb" measure, the story of what the continued tolerance of illegal wetback labor by Congress means to American farm workers began to unfold before the Senate Labor subcommittee.

Under the chairmanship of Humphrey, that group last week began hearings on the whole problem of migrant labor. It heard leading experts testify that the work force of half a million U. S. migratory workers was entirely adequate to meet the nation's needs.

Archbishop Robert E. Lucy of San Antonio said that neither an estimated 500,000 "wetbacks" nor the Mexican farm hands legally brought to this country at government expense are needed to harvest U. S. crops. Sen. Morse (R. Ore.) commented that there was no reason why Americans shouldn't do the work "at a decent wage."

Other witnesses testified that the result of the congressional coddling of "wetbacks" was the creation of an artificial labor surplus that resulted in low wages and intolerable working conditions for U. S., as well as Mexican, farm workers.

Chairman Humphrey declared emphatically that it is impossible to establish good working conditions for U. S. migrant workers "as long as the wetbacks keep coming in."

Border Open To Russ Spies

The readiness of Congress to give in to the demands of the lobby for big farm interests in the South and West that there be no effective control over illegal immigration from Mexico is having serious consequences beyond the immediate lowering of wage and work standards for American farm hands.

Gov. Earl Warren (R.) of California recently called the Mexican border a "sieve." He pointed out that authorities in his state had rounded up in just one month a total of 69 illegal aliens from Iron Curtain countries. All of these potential spys and saboteurs had crossed the Mexican border.

Moreover, Mexican wetback labor is now moving into industrial jobs in the north. Immigration authorities in Chicago recently picked up large numbers of illegal Mexican workers who were employed as railroad track workers and on jobs in U. S. Steel and Republic Steel plants. Still others had been found in meat packing plants and on construction jobs.

Farm Labor Aid Bill Supported

WITH THE support of Nicholas Dragon, CIO regional director, a bill has been introduced in the Arizona Legislature to equalize rights to workmen's compensation benefits for all farm workers.

At the present time, said Dragon, farm laborers who are citizens are not covered by the state compensation act, yet employers who hire Mexican migrant workers are required to insure them under the law.

Prohibitionist 'End Run' Hit At Senate Hearing

THE UNDERLYING motive of the organizations sponsoring a pending bill to outlaw broadcasts of liquor advertising is not to improve radio and television, but "the restoration by whatever means possible of prohibition," the CIO told Congress last week.

Testifying before the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee in opposition to S. 2444, Thomas R. Owens, CIO legislative representative, charged that the bill's single purpose "is an attack on the alcoholic beverage industry."

Owens referred to the CIO's "deep concern" with the problem of improving the quality of radio and TV broadcasting and added:

"There is no consideration in this bill of any of the considerations that are so vital for the improvement of American radio and television."

The question of prohibition has already been decided by the American people at the ballot box, Owens said. Therefore it is an extremely undemocratic practice "to single out one industry—an industry which has been legalized by action of the American people since 1933—for the punitive action contemplated by S. 2444."

Owens suggested that if the organizations behind the measure were really sincere in wanting to improve radio and TV advertising they should support instead the pending proposal of Sen. Benton (D. Conn.) and others for the establishment of a National Citizens Advisory Board.

The purpose of this group would be to aid the Federal Communications Commission in improving the quality of broadcasting in general.

However, he added, if the bill's sponsors are only interested in the reinstitution of prohibition, they should settle the matter "in the true American way" and not by "subterfuge."

That, he said, would be to once again bring the question of prohibition before the American people "for determination at the ballot box."

CIO In Jersey Battles Move To Kill Housing

Its weapon is the Hillery Bill, which, prattling about democracy, would require a local referendum before any slum clearance, public housing or urban development project could be started in the state. (The real estate lobby succeeded in passing such a measure in California nearly two years ago.)

The lobby's move has been denounced by Pres. Carl Holderman of the New Jersey CIO Council and Mayor Ralph A. Villani of Newark.

The Hillery Bill "is promoted by the real estate lobby which has fought government - aided low-rent housing from the start because it is a threat to its profits from slum properties and from outrageously high-priced apartment houses," Holderman said.

"One of the most serious problems which confronts the CIO, and leads to labor unrest, is the inability of many of our younger members to find adequate housing at rentals within their incomes.

"They are forced to pay toward their rent money which should go for other necessities, such as food and clothing. The Federal Housing Act of 1949 was intended to alleviate this situation, and yet the real estate lobby is now trying to stop such help."

Villani called on members of the New Jersey Housing Committee to urge their legislators to vote against the Hillery Bill, which was introduced by Assemblyman Hillery (R.).

Villani organized the committee last summer to fight a move in Congress to slash the public housing construction program. It consists of the mayors of 32 municipalities which have undertaken public housing, urban development and slum clearance projects and state leaders in labor, welfare, church and veterans' groups.

Holderman and Villani both attacked the declaration of the bill's proponents that referenda would be "democratic." Holderman said:

"If the lobby really wants to conform with the principles of democracy, let it consent to public housing and development being passed on by the representatives of the people. We happen to operate under the form of government by representation."

Landlord Move In Court For Decontrol Fought

LANDLORDS in Rochester, Minn., have gone to court in an effort to get rent decontrol.

They were stymied when Mayor Glenn O. Amundsen, with support of CIO, AFL and veteran groups, vetoed a decontrol resolution voted by the city council. Such resolutions require decontrol by federal rent officials.

Now 10 landlords are seeking an injunction ordering that the decontrol resolution be sent to the Office of Rent Stabilization in Washington.

Mayor Amundsen, with the continued support of labor, pledged an all-out fight to block the landlords' action.

Meantime, Rent Stabilizer Tighe Woods announced that controls have been lifted in seven cities and four counties throughout the nation, including East Detroit, Mich., and Calumet Park, near Chicago.

New rent ceilings have been ordered for Bridgeport, Conn., Hawthorne, Nev., Sanford, Fla., Flagstaff, Ariz., and St. Marys County, Md.

Indiana Unionist Killed In Crash

CIO and Steelworkers members in Indiana have mourned the highway accident death of Mrs. Marie M. Cooper, 42, of Muncie.

Mrs. Cooper worked for the Indiana CIO Council on the CIO Philip Murray-Riley Memorial Fund, under which $500,000 has been raised or pledged by union members for research in children's medical care.

Mrs. Cooper was killed when her car collided with a truck, while she was returning home from working for the fund in Indianapolis.

She was a member of CIO Steelworkers Local 2220.

Carey Urges Real Curb On Senate Filibusters

CIO URGED each member of the Senate last week to vote an effective curb on filibusters, warning that "as long as Rule 22 stands, it will be the No. 1 civil rights issue."

The warning was contained in a letter from James B. Carey, CIO secretary-treasurer and chairman of the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination, to each member of the Senate.

Carey urged adoption of a change in Senate rules proposed by Sen. Lehman (D., N. Y.) which would allow a majority of Senate members to cut off debate after 15 days of consideration of a bill.

THE CIO official condemned the the Wherry-Jenner-Dirksen proposed change in Senate rules as "virtually meangless" and declared that its approval by the Senate Rules Committee constitutes "a new repudiation of the civil rights pledges contained in the 1948 platforms of both major political parties."

(Present Senate rules require a vote of two-thirds of all members, or 64 votes, to end debate. The Wherry-Jenner-Dirksen proposal, if adopted, would change the cloture requirement to two-thirds of all Senate members present.)

"This resolution," Carey's letter pointed out, "would leave veto power in the hands of the minority determined to filibuster against FEPC and other civil rights legislation . . . We urge members of the Senate who believe in majority rule and who stand by their parties' pledges on civil rights to support the proposal that will be made by Senator Benton and others to substitute the Lehman resolution for the Wherry-Jenner-Dirksen resolution."

"We believe that every Senator who is sincerely for democracy kept alive, quick and strong by majority rule would like to be able to say that the U. S. Senate is a truly democratic legislative body.

"Unfortunately, as the world knows, it is too often undemocratic. It can be, and often is, controlled and manipulated by a small, powerfully entrenched minority able to defeat the will of the majority.

"The economic, political and social justice we spend lives and billions of dollars to promote as the free world's answer to Communist promises and betrayal is too often denied here at home—and at home includes the hiring gate, a double murder by dynamite in Florida, the voting booth and the floor of the U. S. Senate.

"If we had a Senate governing itself by majority rule, adopting, amending or defeating bills by majority vote without the necessity for compromise to avoid a filibuster, we could destroy overnight the most damaging charge blown up and put around the world by Communist propagandists, that we deny in practice at home what we preach abroad.

"WE CALL on every Senator who believes in democracy to work in every possible way to get the Senate out of the parliamentary man-trap that an earlier Senate dug and voted itself into when it adopted the present Rule 22.

"As long as Rule 22 is allowed to remain in effect as a roadblock to civil rights and other necessary legislation, the American people and the Nation suffer discrimination, division and weakness. And the cause of democracy and freedom suffers in the minds and hearts of more than one billion men and women on the non- and anti-Communist side of the Iron Curtain.

"As long as Rule 22 stands it will be the No. 1 civil rights issue. Unless changed now . . . it will be the Number 1 civil rights issue in the 1952 campaign."

How To Get Ahead

Brotherhood Week—

Civil Rights Mobilization To Push For End To Dixiegop Filibusters

ANNUAL observance of Brotherhood Week will be given meaning-in-action next week as a Civil Rights Leadership Mobilization convenes in Washington.

The mobilization, called by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, will press for enactment of anti-discrimination legislation.

Its first target will be Senate Rule 22, which allows a handful of Dixiegop senators, by filibustering, to block all civil rights bills.

CIO and 50 other national labor, liberal and minorities organizations are cooperating with the NAACP in sponsoring the Washington meeting. The mobilization will be held Feb. 17-18, first days of Brotherhood Week.

Indicative of labor's support for the mobilization was the report that more than 200 CIO delegates, representing international unions and state councils, are expected to attend the conference. Additionally, Pres. Walter Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers has urged all UAW locals to send delegates to the capital meeting.

THE MEETING was called against a background of increasing violence against labor, religious and Negro groups—the bomb murder of Harry T. Moore and his wife in Florida, church bombings in Miami, the killing of Lowell Simmons of the CIO Textile Workers in Tennessee, a school bombing outrage in Illinois, Klan violence in South Carolina, killings in New Orleans, etc.

Consequently, said Reuther, 1951 "was a year in which a series of outrageous incidents occurred involving violations of civil and human rights."

He said immediate, effective action is needed by Congress, and if it fails to act, "civil rights will be appealed from the 82nd Congress to the people in the 1952 political campaign."

So far the Senate Rules Committee has refused to budge on legislation blocking filibusters.

Ten days ago it killed three separate resolutions effectively curbing filibusters, and approved, instead, a proposal by Sen. Wherry (R. Neb.). This proposition has been condemned by CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey.

NAACP Plans Ballot Box Drive On Klan Hooligans

AROUSED by the Christmas bomb-murder of Mr. and Mrs. Harry T. Moore, leaders of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in a dozen southern states will use the ballot box to halt violence against Negroes.

Moore, Florida state director of NAACP, was killed and his wife fatally injured when a bomb wrecked their home at Mims, Fla., as the climax of a series of bombings or attempted bombings of churches and other institutions of Catholics, Jews and Negroes.

At a recent meeting at Jacksonville, Fla., attended by more than 200 delegates from NAACP branches in 12 southern states, a resolution was adopted which declared:

"Our fight for the right of every Negro in the South to register and vote is motivated and revitalized by the cowardly murder of our Florida leader and his wife.

"A committee is hereby formed, composed of the state presidents of the NAACP in each of the 15 southern states, which shall carry out active political education and active campaigns despite efforts at intimidation and terror."

'More Than A Word'—Murray

The following statement was issued by CIO Pres. Philip Murray on occasion of the annual observance of Brotherhood Week:

"Brotherhood must not be reduced in content to a catchword; it must be kept on its proper dignified high level. We can do that by making the concept of brotherhood a reality among men of all races, creeds, colors and national origins.

"No matter how strong our faith in brotherhood, it will mean little without corresponding action.

"The CIO is committed in its constitution to the practice and extension of human brotherhood. We of the CIO strive to live by the spirit of that written provision on which all of our affiliates are agreed."

Joe Kamp Is Saved By Technicality

JOSEPH P. KAMP, the surly fuehrer of the anti-labor, anti-Semitic Constitutional Education League, got an undeserved break last week.

He was saved from another conviction on a charge of contempt of Congress by a legal technicality when Judge James R. Kirkland, in Federal Court at Washington, found him not guilty of refusing to answer questions about his tory organization's income posed by the House Lobby Investigating Committee headed by the late Rep. Frank Buchanan (D. Pa.).

Kamp was being tried a second time. His first trial ended in conviction, but the verdict was set aside because it was found the jury foreman could not make up his mind if Kamp was a man of the same name he had known some years ago.

At the re-trial, which was held without a jury, the court ruled a transcript of the committee hearings showed a "reasonable doubt" of his "wilful default" in not producing the names of contributors and purchasers of literature.

Kamp went through the same performance before another congressional investigating committee in 1944. He was convicted and appealed all the way to the U. S. Sureme Court, which upheld the verdict. Six years after the jury acted, he served a four-month term in the District of Columbia jail.

Oklahoma CIO Warned—

High Prices Pave Way For Crash, Says Knight

DELEGATES to the 10th annual Oklahoma CIO convention at Tulsa were told that the nation is on the brink of another depression which will reach major proportions unless wages are permitted to catch up with prices.

Addressing the more than 100 delegates representing 18,000 CIO members in the state, Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers warned that workers must receive sufficient wages to enable them to be good consumers.

"Rapidly increasing prices have made it impossible for many people to buy things they need," he declared. "When people can't buy, production stops. Already there is mass unemployment in textile mills and other plants, whose commodities have been priced out of the market."

Knight, who is a CIO vice president and also assistant administrator of the National Production Authority, said that labor is confronted with political and economic tasks. He said:

"Politically we must work for and elect to office men who have the best interests of the country at heart. Economically, it is our duty to see that business is not destroyed by price levels that are beyond the reach of the average consumer."

Commenting on the failure of diplomats to achieve world peace, Knight proposed the formation of a "shirt sleeve division"—a group of 18,000 American men and women to be sent to Europe to show its residents the American way of life.

Such a group, he said, would have more influence against communism that all the 200 divisions of military might now being assembled.

He declared that not only would a peaceful "invasion" on such a scale demonstrate that this country does not want war, but that it would prove conclusively that ours is the system that would mean more of the good things of life.

Russel Letner, district director of the CIO Auto Workers, painted a bleak picture of the current unemployment situation in the auto industry. He hit specifically at manufacturers who have closed plants and retarded production.

The convention passed a resolution demanding that Oklahoma's workmen's compensation payments be increased from the current $25 weekly to an amount "sufficient to sustain an injured worker during his period of injury."

Council Pres. A. W. Mitchell of the Oil Workers was reelected to his sixth term. John Marshall of the Chemical Workers was named vice president and Len Yarborough of the Oil Workers, secretary-treasurer.

Jobless Pay Tops Jersey CIO Goal

A DEMAND for an increase in state unemployment compensation from $26 to $35 a week and $3 a week for each dependent highlights the 46-point legislative program of the New Jersey CIO Council.

The council also urged that workmen's compensation benefits be revised upward, with a maximum of $40 a week, plus $3 a week for each of three dependents, and with a worker permitted free choice of his physician.

The program also calls for a state labor relations act, strengthening of the anti-injunction law "to bar injunctions against peaceful picketing," a wage-hour law with $1 an hour minimum wage and a 40-hour week, equal pay for women for equal work, and making nonpayment of wages due a misdemeanor.

Council Legislative Dir. Harry Kranz said the program was unanimously approved by the 29-member State CIO Legislative Committee.

Anderson Enters California Race For U. S. Senate

DEWEY ANDERSON, executive director of the Public Affairs Institute, announced last week that he will seek the Democratic nomination for U. S. Senator from California to run against Sen. Knowland (R. Calif.) next November.

Anderson said that he had decided to run at the urging of state Democratic leaders who "want good clean government and a program of peace, freedom and continued prosperity."

"Their right to insist on my accepting this challenge to oppose the course followed by Sen. Knowland both in foreign affairs and domestic policies cannot be denied," he declared.

"Only a 'people's campaign' will offset all the money advantages and entrenched reactionary power of the Republican opposition in California."

On the subject of "entrenched reactionary power," Anderson is probably the nation's foremost authority. He was formerly executive secretary and economic counsel of the Temporary National Economic Committee, which by exposing the evils of monopoly helped fashion many reforms of the New Deal.

GCEOC Gets $2000 Check For Widow

THE CIO is rapidly gaining the reputation of being a benefactor to the working people of the South.

Through the efforts of the CIO Government & Civic Employes Orgainizing Committee Local 1402 at Mt. Vernon, Ala., Mrs. Rosie Lee Edwards recently received a check for $2037.50 from the state for the death of her husband, Connie Edwards.

Edwards died Aug. 24, 1950, from injuries received when he was attacked by a patient at Searcy State Hospital, Mt. Vernon, where he was employed as an attendant.

When the employes of the hospital were organized into a GCEOC local three months later, State CIO Dir. Carey E. Haigler learned that Mrs. Edwards had not received compensation for her husband's death.

The case was brought to the attention of Jerome A. Cooper, general counsel for the CIO Organizing Committee, who filed a claim for Mrs. Edwards with the State Board of Adjustments.

As result, Mrs. Edwards received a check for the full amount allowable under the law.

Tax Dodgers' Delight Defeated In Colorado

"THE KEEP Uncle Sam Poor Club" has been set back in Colorado, thanks to the CIO, the AFL, the railroad brotherhoods and the Townsend Clubs.

Its legislative darling, the Millionaires' Relief Amendment, was recently defeated by the Colorado Legislature.

The amendment's aim is to limit the federal government's taxing power to 25% of income, and its enactment would make Uncle Sam too poor to pay for a lot of services now provided for its citizens—such as many functions of the Labor Dept., housing aids and river valley developments.

When the amendment was introduced at the second session of Colorado's 38th General Assembly, the United Labor Legislative Committee—which includes the CIO, the AFL and the railroad brothers—went to work on the Republican Senators whom it had convinced at the 1951 session to vote against the proposal.

The measure passed the House at the second session by a vote of 30 to 29, was defeated in the Senate by a vote of 20 to 12 and again was defeated by the latter body 18 to 13 when it was brought up for reconsideration.

"We in the CIO in Colorado are very happy that Colorado was not put in the column of states that have already passed this legislation," reported Sec.-Treas. William T. Butler of the Colorado CIO Council. Wayne Price is council president.

THE BILL is backed by such reactionary groups as the Committee for Constitutional Government, the American Taxpayers Association and the Western Tax Council.

If 32 states pass the amendment, Congress must call a convention to consider it. If the convention approves the amendment, it is sent back to the states and if ratified by 36 it becomes part of the Constitution.

Twenty-six states have approved the amendment during recent years, but three have since reversed themselves.

Russ Demand Bigger 'Take' Of Czech Factory Output

THE SOVIET-dominated government of Czechoslovakia has ordered a 21% increase in industrial output for 1952, according to an official statement recently reprinted in the London Times. An increase in agricultural production of 15% also was decreed.

The farmers, moreover, will not escape the heavy pressure that will have to be exerted on the unwilling and often uncooperative industrial workers if the goal is to be reached.

A breakdown of the increases ordered for separate industries, according to the Times, shows that "the whole emphasis of industrial output is to be, as last year, on the production of so-called capital goods and machinery for export to Russia."

A recent example of the lengths to which privation, substandard wages and living conditions came just before Christmas, according to the Czechoslovak News-Letter, edited by the National Committee For a Free Europe.

An official decree abolished traditional Christmas bonuses. The reaction was immediate protest work stoppages in all parts of the country.

The most serious, the News-Letter said, was in the heavily industrialized town of Brno. The militia at one large armament plant was beaten by angry workers. who marched to the center of the city, carrying anti-Communist banners. There they were joined by other workers in an impromptu protest rally that tied up the main square. Not until a major detachment of heavily armed police arrived did they disperse.

Hospitalized Vets Thank Michigan CIO For Smokes

Do Veterans' Hospitals appreciate gifts to hospitalized servicemen from unions?

The Michigan CIO Council, which has been distributing cigarets at Christmas to bed-ridden veterans for 11 consecutive years, has a stack of letters to prove they do. Last Christmas 13,000 packages were distributed to veterans' hospitals in the state.

The following excerpts are typical:

"You are to be commended for your extreme generosity and thoughtfulness." — Veterans Administration Hospital, Dearborn.

"Your interest in our hospitalized veterans is sincerely appreciated."—VA Hospital, Saginaw.

"Thanks a lot for your remembrance." Michigan Veterans' Facility, Grand Rapids.

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

THE WRITER last week was in St. Louis, Mo., attending a meeting of all CIO international and national union representatives. Political action on state and national levels was thoroughly discussed, also CIO policies on economic matters, the international situation and the rapidly increasing cost of living. The CIO councils in the St. Louis area have done a wonderful job, and plans were laid to make their work more effective.

Among those in attendance were CIO Reg. Dir. Del Garst, of St. Louis; Acting Reg. Dir. A. R. Kinstley, of Kansas City; Pres. Martin Wagner, of the Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers, and Pres. Tom Andert of the Optical Workers. Every international union in the area was represented.

I also had the pleasure of visiting the headquarters of UAW-CIO Local Union 25. This local has done a fine job in the St. Louis area, and is a credit to a great union.

THE UNITED Packinghouse Workers, CIO, received a fine tribute recently in an indirect manner, which happened as follows: In Paris recently Channing Tobias, U. S. delegate to the UN General Assembly's Social Committee, hotly defended United States principles of freedom during a debate on William Oatis, Associated Press correspondent jailed in Czechoslovakia as a "spy." Alexei Pavlov, Soviet delegate, said that Tobias "acted like a Chicago stockyards worker" in bringing up the issue.

To this crack, Tobias replied: "I know that the stockyard workers are honest, hard-working and intelligent. If I have to go down in the record as an example of a Chicago stockyard worker, I am happy."

The Negro educator said also that he was proud to have worked his way up to the position of delegate to the United Nations.

REG. DIR. JOE WALSH reports a success for IUE-CIO in a whirlwind election campaign at the Jessup, Pa., plant of the Aerovox Corp., indicating a new campaign in northeastern Pennsylvania to eliminate the discredited UE from the picture. In a run-off election IUE defeated UE 122 to 116, after the IBEW-AFL and no union had been eliminated in the first election. The campaign was conducted by CIO Reps. Frank Vrataric and Elmer Chatak and IUE Rep. Joseph England.

Reg. Dir. Chester Dusten reports that in a representation election at the International Harvester Co. parts depot, Portland, Ore., the UAW-CIO won out over the AFL Teamsters by a vote of 48 to 33, with 4 challenged votes and 4 voting neither. CIO Reps. John Brost and R. E. Engelking, and UAW Reps. Harry Whiteside and Tiny Payne worked in the campaign.

Reg. Dir. Jack Easton reports that in a representation election at the Railway Service & Supply Co., a chemical processing plant at Huntington, W. Va., the employes favored the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers by a vote of 10 to 1. Intl. Rep. Lou Koletka handled the drive.

Sec.-Treas. Ross Blood, CIO Shipbuilding Union, reports that in a representation election at the Liberty Dry Dock Co., Greenpoint, N. Y., the workers voted for the IUMSWA-CIO over no union by 56 to 38, with 8 votes challenged.

REG. DIR. George DeNucci reports that the CIO Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee has issued a charter for maintenance and service workers employed on the campus of Ohio State Univ. University officials agreed to recognize the union on matters of wages, working conditions and hours.

Reg. Dir. Frank Bender reports that in a representation election for firemen at the Bethlehem Steel Corp., Sparrows Point, Md., the workers favored the CIO Steelworkers by a vote of 56 to 10 no union.

Claude Ballard, vice president of the CIO Woodworkers, reports the following two representation election victories: Parrish Brothers Pencil Factory, Oroville, Calif., IWA-CIO 21, no union 3, challenged 1; National Wood Treating Corp., Oroville, IWA-CIO 23, no union 2, challenged 12.

The Newspaper Guild of New York, CIO, reports that the employes of Atlantis, Greek-language daily, voted for the Guild to be their bargaining agent in a NLRB election. The vote was 11 to 2 for no union.

Reg. Dir. Ewald Sandner reports that in a representation election among clerical workers of the Archer Daniel Midland Co., Edgewater, N. J., the workers voted for CIO by a vote of 10 to 5 for no union. They will become members of Local Industrial Union 1713.

Sec.-Treas. James Mitchell, CIO Shoe Workers, reports that in a representation election at the Brown Shoe Co., Caruthersville, Mo., employes favored the Shoe Workers by a vote of 204 to 182 for no union. The campaign was conducted by USWA Rep. Dave Wilson.

TWU Seeks 40 Hours On N.Y. Bus Lines

FED UP WITH the stalling tactics of seven private bus lines in New York City, Pres. Michael J. Quill of the CIO Transport Workers last week called for institution of the 40-hour work week "on or before Mar. 1."

Warning that further delay in installing the shorter work week "will have a serious effect on the morale of private line employes," Quill said the "men are furious" at the prospect of waiting until July 1, as recommended by an impartial chairman of the transit industry.

"They feel they have been penalized in not having been granted the shorter work week on Jan. 1, along with a substantial increase in their take-home pay, to which they are entitled because of the all-time high in the cost of living," Quill declared in a letter to the president of the City Omnibus Co.

QUILL SAID that while company spokesmen maintain that the reduced work week involves months-long revision of schedules, the union is prepared to offer the benefit of its experience in putting the plan into operation on or before Mar. 1.

"Our committee feels that any further delay in setting the date for the institution of the 40-hour week will have a serious effect on the morale of our members, who are your employes," Quill wrote.

TWU contracts cover 8000 drivers and mechanics who work for private companies in the city. It also represents 36,000 employes of the Board of Transportation.

ORIT Begins New Research Publication

THE RESEARCH department of the Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers (ORIT), the regional organization of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions in the western hemisphere, has issued the first number of a new publication, Facts & Figures.

The editor is Ernst Schwarz, assistant secretary of the ORIT and secretary of the CIO Latin-American Affairs Committee. The new publication appears in English and Spanish.

The first issue contains a study of the economy of British Guiana, "a colonial miniature." It points out that with only 10% of the workers organized into unions, wages are extremely low. Most wage earners are dependent on the sugar industry, with a bauxite mining industry developing. Bauxite development is being done by two American firms, the Aluminum Co. of America (Alcoa) and the American Cyanamid Co., with pay rates ranging from 17 to 27c an hour in U. S. money.

Facts & Figures also examines the Peruvian textile industry, next to mining the most important in that country, and begins a series on U.S. oil companies with an examination of the Shell Oil Co., most of which is owned by the Dutch or British.

Book Review—

'A Comfortable Home For Every Family'

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

MILLIONS of Americans today are living in filthy slums and squalid homes and shacks scattered all over our wealthy country.

We've made fair progress in supplying our citizens with more and better food and clothing—but when it comes to housing, the third essential for a decent standard of living, we are far behind some less prosperous countries. Why?

Nathan Straus, administrator of the U. S. Housing Authority from 1937 to 1942, explains what's holding us back in his new book, "Two-Thirds of a Nation." The housing program he advocates has as its goal "a comfortable home for every American family."

Straus believes this a realistic goal entirely possible to achieve —if we fight hard and persistently for it. But there are many obstacles to be overcome on "the rocky road of progress"—the same kind that had to be surmounted in the struggle for free public education and other great forward movements.

In 1886, Zachariah Montgomery, later an assistant attorney general, railed against free education as "this Communistic system of public schools." And in 1893, a governor of New York opposed the building of national highways as "too chimerical and foolish to be possible of realization."

The "hand-me-down" theory given expression by certain real estate interests in defending their failure to build much needed low-priced homes offers no solution to the housing program, Straus writes. According to this line of argument, homes built for the wealthy gradually filter down to the middle income and finally to the low income groups.

This is scarcely more enlightened than the remark Straus quotes, made in 1938 by ex-Rep. Robert Luce of Massachusetts: "They are living in shacks and hovels because God made them unable to earn more."

Straus believes that builders are neglecting the greatest opportunity for an expanded home building program under private enterprise by failing to construct more houses for the middle and lower income families.

Prospective home buyers will find some valuable information and suggestions in the Straus book. For one thing, he warns that the monthly payments they will have to make cover cost of capital (amortization)—about 50%; and taxes, about 12½%; but do not include cost of utilities, which may amount to as much as 25%, or maintenance and repairs, which may run to 12% or higher.

Straus believes that the ultimate solution of the housing program for "the forgotten third" may lie in cooperative enterprise, on a national scale. (But beware of fake co-ops, he warns.) Cooperative housing such as has been thriving for some years in Sweden, Denmark and Holland rests on assistance from the national government. It should get such assistance here, but so far the U. S. government has done little to encourage cooperative ventures.

In a chapter called "A Miraculous Piece of Legistlation," Straus tells the scandalous story of the debasement of the Federal Housing Administration set up by act of Congress in 1934. This agency, formed to aid low-rent, limited dividend housing, Straus writes, "has been converted into a mechanism for providing high-rent housing and fantastic profits for speculative builders."

The damning record of powerful lobbyists fighting the housing program is given in a chapter describing the Housing Act of 1949. This valuable section was written by Lee F. Johnson, assistant administrator of the U. S. Housing Authority from 1938 to 1944, who helped formulate the policies of the country's first permanent public housing program.

Union members will find Johnson's account of the dirty work being done by the National Assn. of Real Estate Boards, the U. S. Savings and Loan League and the National Assn. of Home Builders something to rile them no end.

Straus gives organized labor a plug for helping expose these unprincipled lobbyists. "The emergence of organized labor as a champion of legislators who oppose ruthless, hitherto unopposed lobbies has decidedly altered the political picture," he said.

Behind The Budget Fight—

Tax-Cutting Lawmakers Cry Economy To Get Off The Hook

By MILTON PLUMB

THE BOOK of 1222 pages it comes in weighs precisely 5¼ pounds. And the federal budget for 1953, which President Truman sent to Congress last month, seems likely to be the weightest problem in the present session.

In any event, no issue before Congress will be more heatedly discussed. It's a good political issue, no matter how you look at it.

And, from the politician's viewpoint, almost anything a congressman says about it will get a nice big headline—even if he doesn't make much sense!

The simple fact is that probably no single person—including even the understanding director of the Budget Bureau—fully comprehends all of the document's meaning. It is the product of hundreds of man-years of work by many individual fiscal experts in the government.

These considerations, however, do not prevent nearly every member of Congress from speaking about the budget with an air of infallible authority. Some of them—Rep. Taber (R. N.Y.), for example—don't even need to know what's in it before doing so.

Taber, the ranking GOP member of the House Appropriations Committee, has long been one of the leaders of the self-styled "wrecking crew" in Congress. This year he was calling for cuts of more than 10% in all the personnel items in the budget even before the President had made the figures public.

Dixiecrat Sen. Byrd (D. Va.) said that the President's $85.4 billion budget must be cut "drastically;" his colleague Sen. Maybank (D. S.C.) predicted a $3 billion cut. Senate Republican Leader Bridges (N. H.) demanded a reduction of $5 to $6 billion; not-to-be-outdone Sen. Dirksen (R. Ill.) upped the proposed cut to $7 or $8 billion.

THEN the president of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, D. A. Hulcy, went the "economy" advocates one better. He demanded that $14.5 billion be hacked off.

If you listened only to Congress, Truman's budget must seem one of the highest in history, since it appears to need so much trimming. Actually, the President and his advisers have done a far bigger job of cutting 1953 budget requests than Congress can even hope to do.

On the military item alone, the $51 billion called for in the budget represents a cut of $34 billion in the amount our top military advisers think should be spent next year.

THEY wanted a total of $85 billion for defense. Instead, the President asked for $8 billion less than they got this year.

And, entirely lost sight of in all the hullabaloo for "economy" —apart from government spending which runs over from one fiscal year to the next—is this significant fact: The $85.4 billion budget for 1953 is some $8.2 billions LESS than the budget submitted a year ago!

This reduction made by the President and his budget staff comes in spite of the fact that Congress last year added billions to the cost of government, not only by failing to control inflation, but by voting increased expenditures for many continuing purposes.

To understand the present congressional concern about the budget, it is necessary to realize that the present fiscal difficulty in which Congress finds itself is in large part its own making.

By stalling on the new tax law and then filling it with loopholes through which top bracket individuals and high income corporations escape paying about $4 billion a year, Congress in the last session put the government in the red this year for the first time since World War II.

From 1946 to 1951, government receipts exceeded expenditures by $7.5 billion. The deficit this year alone, however, is expected to amount to $8 billion.

And unless Congress increases tax revenues, the deficit next year may be close to $16 billion. These new deficits totalling $24 billion would exceed the present statutory limit on the Federal debt—which is set at $275 billion.

Congress almost certainly won't increase tax rates in an election year, but it might be forced by the impending deficit to close some of the more glaring tax loopholes.

Even that, however, won't be enough to take Congress off the uncomfortable financial hook it hung itself on in refusing to vote the necessary increases in taxes and closing of tax loopholes last year. The current frantic cries for "economy" are, therefore, largely pure political expediency.

Here's How To Balance The Budget

HOW TO BALANCE the budget — the big issue facing Congress this session — is not an unanswered question.

Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) has already drafted a new tax bill which he will soon introduce. By closing unfair tax loopholes Humphrey's measure would bring in $4 billion a year more in revenue.

And the National Committee for the Hoover Report has once again reminded Congress that reorganization proposals could save as much as $4 or $5 billion.

Additional savings, too, can undoubtedly be made if Congress, instead of merely talking "economy," intelligently trims unnecessary items.

Republicans who are among those screaming the loudest for "economy" last year took the lead in shelving the McClellan bill to improve appropriations procedures.

"MISS HEADLINE" of the San Jose, Calif., local of the CIO Newspaper Guild is Ginny Fanelli. Ginny, 23, is all decked out with crown and ribbon to advertise Guild local's first annual gridiron dinner.

So You Want To Ask Taft? 'Fine: $25'

SEN. TAFT—who has a lot of opinions on a lot of subjects —doesn't hanker to be questioned about them.

If you try it, it will cost you $25.

That's what Jerry Merrell, secretary of Local 817 of the CIO Auto Workers, learned last week in Louisville, Ky.

Merrell attended a Republican rally at which the Ohio Senator, who is seeking the G.O.P. Presidential nomination, was to speak.

The auto worker attempted to ask this question: "What about the Taft-Hartley Act?"

That's as far as Merrell got. He was arrested for "disorderly conduct," hauled before Judge Michael Hellman in traffic court, and fined $25.

AMA Lays An Egg In Fund Drive

The American Medical Association—which has steadily resisted any move for federal aid to medical schools—has laid an egg in its own drive to raise fund to train more doctors.

Last year with great fanfare, AMA announced a drive for its Educational Foundation. Now the current AMA Journal reveals that only $245,000 has been raised—which won't go far to meet the critical needs of medical schools.

Jersey Phone Boost Asked

A GENERAL wage increase, reduction in hours, and other contract improvements were asked by CIO Communications Workers in contract proposals presented last week to New Jersey Bell Telephone.

The proposals were presented by CWA-CIO Pres. Joseph A. Beirne on behalf of 11,000 operators and 1000 clerical employes of the A.T. & T. operating subsidiary.

The phone union proposed an unspecified general increase, reduction in length of shifts, job classification changes, and improvements in pension and vacation provisions.

IUE Wins Long Strike At White's

AFTER throwing the book of strike-breaking tactics at their 1100 employes for 22 weeks, the White Sewing Machine Corp., Cleveland, last week tossed in the sponge and signed a contract with the CIO Electrical Workers.

IUE won an 8½c hourly increase to be applied to a pension and retirement plan being worked out by union and management. The IUE also gained steward participation in the first step of the grievance procedure, weekly meetings between union and management, union participation in time study of jobs, and the regular rate of pay to stewards for time lost on union business.

Perhaps the most nefarious tactic used by the company in its efforts to break the strike was an attempt to revive the blacklist in the Cleveland area. The company also hired scabs, wrote misleading letters to strikers and used supervisory workers as production employes.

Also in Cleveland, the CIO Auto Workers—after a 26 weeks' strike at the United Screw & Bolt Co.—last week won the union shop, a 6c across-the-board raise and other contract improvements.

Railroads Talk Economy, But Tap U.S. For $1 Billion

AMERICAN railroads—which are providing most of the money behind the lobby seeking to defeat U. S. participation with Canada in the St. Lawrence Seaway—have nicked American taxpayers for certificates of necessity amounting to more than $1 billion.

While denouncing cost of the seaway, the railroads have taken the greatest number of rapid tax write-offs of any industry.

What's more, railroads, along with private power interests which also oppose the seaway, dominate the list of new certificates announced by the Defense Production Administration last week.

A total of 573 certificates for nearly three-quarters of a billion dollars were listed. Power companies led with $210 million and railroads were second with $205 million.

Previously, the railroads had been given additional certificates amounting to $806,064,000.

Last week's list included $35,646,639 for New York Central and $6,244,400 for the Pennsylvania Railroad. These two lines and the Baltimore and Ohio—the three which control the Association of American Railroads—have alone received certificates totalling about a quarter of a billion dollars.

The certificates announced last week bring the total of rapid tax write-offs so far approved by DPA to approximately $13¼ billion.

George W. Taylor Named CIO Family Peacemaker

DR. George W. Taylor, former chairman of the War Labor Board and the Wage Stabilization Board, is the new CIO organizational disputes director.

His appointment was announced Feb. 11 by CIO Pres. Philip Murray after a meeting of the CIO national officers. Full ratification of his appointment by the CIO Executive Board, which includes the national CIO officers and a representative of each affiliate, is expected within a few days.

Taylor is one of the country's outstanding figures in the field of labor-management relations and is a top-ranking arbitrator of industrial disputes. He is widely known and highly regarded in academic, professional and government circles.

Upon ratification of his appointment, he will become top man in the CIO's family plan for settling jurisdictional disputes—from which the CIO has been remarkably free—between CIO national and international unions.

Basically, the plan provides that if two CIO unions find themselves in a jurisdictional dispute, their representatives try and resolve the problem by negotiation; if they fail, Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president, attempts to mediate the dispute; if the differences still are not settled, the disputants go before Taylor, who as arbitrator has the authority to make a "final and binding" decision.

GEORGE W. TAYLOR
"Try to solve problems."

All CIO affiliates which have ratified the program are legally bound to accept his findings.

"In the person of Dr. Taylor," said Murray in announcing the appointment, "the members of the CIO and the leaders of our affiliated unions are assured of fair, impartial and understanding consideration of whatever disputes on jurisdictional matters may be considered by his office.

"The public will also recognize, I am sure, Dr. Taylor's deep devotion to the national welfare. In his new post he will have an opportunity to carry on the great service to improved industrial relations which has characterized his entire career."

"I believe in trying to solve problems, not in just having somebody win an argument."

The peace plan was worked out at a meeting of the Executive Board in New York on Oct. 31, just before the CIO Convention. The convention itself approved the program the following week.

It has been accepted by 28 national and international unions, including the largest.

The executive boards of six other affiliates will hold meetings this month or next at which the agreement will be brought up for ratification. These are the Barbers & Beauty Culturists, National Association of Broadcast Engineers & Technicians, Lithographers, Marine Engineers, Shipbuilders, and Maritime Union.

THE Brewery Workers, because of constitutional requirements, will act on it at their convention later this year.

Taylor, who is 50, was born as a member of a textile family in Philadelphia, where he still lives. His father was superintendent of a small drapery mill and had dealt with the old United Textile Workers. The son worked in the mill during high school and college vacations.

He was graduated from the Univ. of Pennsylvania as a bachelor of arts in economics in 1923. His thesis for his doctor of philosophy degree, which he received from Penn in 1929, was a study of the full-fashioned hosiery industry.

The industry at that time was expanding and was running into overproduction. Taylor's thesis was the first modern statistical study of it, and was one of the first major studies by the then fledgling Industrial Relations Dept. at his alma mater.

HE TAUGHT economics at Albright College, Reading, Pa. from 1924 to 1929, and has been on the U. of P. faculty since then. He has been a research associate in the Industrial Relations Dept. since 1930, and for some years has been professor of economics in Penn's Wharton School.

After serving as vice chairman of the World War II National War Labor Board, he succeeded Dr. William H. Davis as chairman. He also was chairman of its successor, the National Wage Stabilization Board. Later he was secretary of President Truman's Labor-Management Conference and chairman of the Office of War Stabilization and Reconstruction.

His other work in the labor-management relations field includes impartial chairmanships in the full-fashioned hosiery industry, in the men's clothing market in Philadelphia, which is organized by the CIO Clothing Workers, and under the contract between General Motors and the CIO Auto Workers. He is widely in demand as an arbitrator.

Murray Hails 'Experiment In Democratic Unionism'

In announcing the appointment of Dr. George W. Taylor as CIO organizational disputes arbitrator, CIO Pres. Philip Murray made the following statement:

The CIO considers itself fortunate to have obtained the services of Dr. George W. Taylor to serve as its organizational disputes arbitrator. Dr. Taylor has an unsurpassed background, both academic and practical, in the fields of labor-management relations and of intra-labor relations.

In the person of Dr. Taylor, the members of the CIO and the leaders of our affiliated unions are assured of fair, impartial and understanding consideration of whatever disputes on jurisdictional matters may be considered by his office.

The public will also recognize, I am sure, Dr. Taylor's deep devotion to the national welfare. In his new post he will have an opportunity to carry on the great service to improved industrial relations which has characterized his entire career.

Dr. Taylor will devote as much of his time to these new services for the CIO as his task will require.

We have been proud, in the CIO, that the number of jurisdictional conflicts among our unions and their thousands of local groups has always been very small, and, to the best of my knowledge, there has never been a jurisdictional strike between two CIO unions.

The CIO looks upon its Organizational Disputes Plan as a preventive step to avoid jurisdictional conflict between CIO unions, in the interest both of our members and the public at large.

The agreements signed by the CIO unions which have already ratified the disputes plan are recognized to be supported by the force of law, as well as by the moral backing of our various unions. Through this program, we aim to insure that in the future our unions' jurisdictional conflicts will assuredly be settled on a basis of equity and logic.

The offering of the post of organizational disputes arbitrator to such an outstanding American citizen as Dr. George W. Taylor is an indication of the good faith and serious intent of the unions of the CIO in embarking upon this new experiment in democratic trade unionism.

Operations Of New CIO Disputes Plan Outlined

This is how the CIO Organizational Disputes Program will work:

1. "No CIO affiliate shall attempt to organize the employes in any plant or property if any other CIO affiliate has been recognized by the employer or has been certified by the NLRB as collective bargaining representative of such employes."

2. In the conduct of organizing campaigns among non-union workers, each CIO affiliate "shall respect the jurisdiction of the particular CIO affiliate which is the appropriate unit to conduct such organizing campaigns."

The procedure for settling such disputes as may arise is:

1. Conversations between "responsible representatives" of the disputing unions to seek adjustment of their differences.

2. The CIO director of organization, at the request of any party or on his own motion, may call for prompt negotiations between the national officers or representatives of the disputing unions and any other affected groups in the CIO, for the purpose of attempting to resolve and settle the matter.

3. Failing settlement through Step 2, either party or the CIO director of organization may submit the dispute to Dr. George W. Taylor in his capacity as organizational disputes arbitrator.

4. The arbitrator, working under such rules of procedure as he may deem appropriate, will determine a contest between CIO unions conducting an organizing campaign among non-union workers by making decisions that will "best serve the interest of the employes involved . . . and the good name and orderly functioning of the CIO." In making his decision, he may consider:

   (a) The charters of the disputing unions.

   (b) The extent to which each union involved has organized the industry, the area and the particular plant involved.

   (c) The ability of each union to provide service to the employes involved.

5. If time will not permit protracted negotiations, "because of pending NLRB representation proceedings or other valid reasons," any interested CIO affiliate or the national CIO may take a dispute directly to the arbitrator for his award and decision.

In cases involving NLRB elections, the arbitrator may decide which CIO union should go on the ballot; or he may determine that the national CIO should appear on the ballot, with the specfic union jurisdiction to be determined after the election.

6. The affiliates of the CIO, in accepting the organizational disputes plan, agree that the "decision and award of the CIO organizational disputes arbitrator in all cases referred or submitted to him, shall be final and binding and that this contract, and any awards made by the arbitrator under it, shall constitute a legally enforceable obligation of each of the parties hereto."

UAW Gives Strike OK As WSB Cases Pile Up

THE INTERNATIONAL executive board of the CIO Auto Workers will promptly honor requests for strike authorization from local unions with cases pending before the Wage Stabilization Board when "unreasonable delays or management resistance" are encountered.

A policy to that effect was adopted by the UAW board, which charged "industry members and certain public members" with following a "deliberate and wilful policy of delay" in processing WSB cases.

The board pointed out that hundreds of contracts covering some 100,000 UAW members are being delayed by the WSB to the extent that some workers have been awaiting wage adjustments for more than a year.

The resolution accused the WSB of failure to develop regulatory policies on pensions, substandard wages, salesmen's commissions and productivity increases; failure to develop broad areas of authority for regional boards to expedite cases and cut down the backlog of 17,000 cases; failure to develop expediting machinery; and failure to act on petitions where employers and UAW have agreed on pension plans and annual productivity increases.

The resolution declared that even a liberal WSB program administered without delay tends to impede collective bargaining and encroaches upon the basic right of free labor.

"The present program, however," the UAW said, "not only denies workers economic equity, but in addition it discriminates against thousands of workers because of the deliberate and wilful policy of delay which industry members and certain public members are following in the administration of the WSB program."

CIO Members Hit Delays At Wage Board

A little more than a year since the first case was filed, there now are over 17,000 cases on tap and the number is growing every day.

A CIO member of the WSB said recently that the delay in processing cases is causing workers to be "increasingly restive."

"It's a study in frustration," he said, "and we intend to see what can be done to speed up the board's snail-like pace."

Another CIO member, Jack Livingston, Auto Workers vice president, has raised the question of whether the big backlog and the delay in case handling aren't being used as a deliberate stabilization technique.

Murray Denounces Steel Barons' 'Filthy Lying' As WSB Hearing Reaches Angry Climax

THE STEEL industry is deliberately attempting to provoke a nation-wide steel strike in an effort to hi-jack "new and completely unjustified price increases" from the government.

That charge was made late last week by CIO Steelworkers Pres. Philip Murray, as the steel union neared the end of its case to the Wage Stabilization Board special panel, sitting in New York.

Tempers were drawn taut by the time the USA began its rebuttal, after a fortnight of mounting attacks by steel management not just on the union or its contract proposals but on the steelworkers themselves.

Anger exploded when Vice Pres. John Stephens and other representatives of U. S. Steel Corp. fluffed off the man-killing basic steel industry as "push button" work and steelworkers as "economic royalists."

A Big Steel economist, Bradford B. Smith, called the Steelworkers' demand for a guaranteed annual wage "Robin Hood romanticism run riot" and suggested that the men in the mills now earn so much money they could well afford to put aside $15 a week of their own pay as a cushion against unemployment. (The average hourly basic wage in the steel industry, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, is $1.79 and, according to the union, 60% of steel workers earn less than the $72.33 weekly which BLS says is necessary for a "modest" family budget.)

No Shortage Here

The National Reporter, proposed national labor daily, issued a newsletter last week devoted entirely to the steel hearings. It commented:

"The steel industry produced statistics and statements at more than 100% of capacity this week."

When steel management spokesmen had finished blasting the workers' search for the security of year-around employment and adequate layoff benefits as so much "socialism" and "romanticism" by "loafers, chiselers and bargain hunters," Murray rose angrily to his feet and in a low, tense voice said:

"This piece of paper that your industry has presented here is the most reprehensible, filthy, lying, deceiving presentation that has ever been presented to a government agency in my lifetime. And I want it to be placed in that category.

"It is beastly, in every true, absolute, honest sense of the word and the gentlemen who presented it is either ignorant of the facts or he is calculatedly trying to place the steelworkers who sweat and bleed and die in these operations in the category of despots, and I resent it with all the power within me."

Shortly thereafter, Murray called the Steelworkers' Executive Board and International Wage Policy Committee to meet in Pittsburgh on Feb. 21. That is shortly before the expiration, on Feb. 24, of the strike truce agreed to by a USA special convention to allow the WSB to hear the steel dispute. The Pittsburgh meeting this week, according to press dispatches, will consider whether to extend the truce until a decision is reached.

'Human Element'

In his final rebuttal statement to the WSB panel, Murray again called upon it to "keep the human element in mind" and to "remember that 15c an hour and adjustment of wage increments can spell the difference between actual hunger and at least a minimum subsistence for hundreds of thousands of families."

Murray called the union's proposals for "long-overdue" wage increases and other contract improvements "an appeal for economic reason" which would "help give stability to the country's economic system."

Time and again he denounced the "callous sophistry, hypocrisy and cynicism" of management's presentation to the WSB. He labeled industry's "hundreds of thousands of words as window dressing to mask an overweening lust for higher and higher profits."

"They have," said Murray, "made a farce out of collective bargaining. . . . The self-proclaimed statesmen of the steel industry have offered just one little word: 'No'."

Murray charged the steel industry with:

1. Deciding in advance not to engage in real collective bargaining with the union.

2. Insisting that no wage increase is needed or justified—"despite the increasing productivity of the industry, sharply rising living costs, and the obvious economic difficulties of workers."

3. Pretending that any wage increase would require compensating price increases—"despite the record or near-record profits and dividends and governmental economic studies that prove the contrary."

Made Of Rubber

Such facts and figures as steel management presented to the WSB panel hearing were made of rubber—and the most stretch of all was the claim by Ben Morreel, Jones & Laughlin Steel Co. chairman, that the proposals of CIO Steelworkers would cost $1.08 per hour per worker.

Of these "wild flights of imagination," USA Pres. Philip Murray commented:

"First, we heard it would cost the industry 50c an hour to meet union demands.

"The next day, somebody raised the ante to 60, and like the temperature on a hot summer day, it kept going until now Admiral Morreel wins the jackpot—and the headlines—with his $1.08 figure."

4. Protesting concern about alleged inflation while the industry seeks "inflationary price increases" and opposes "sensible anti-inflationary legislation."

He struck out at the "artificial arguments" of Benjamin F. Fairless, U. S. Steel president, who "publicly lamented that the industry may not be able to pay all the taxes it would like to pay."

"I strongly suspect," Murray predicted, "that this one will be forgotten by its enunciators as soon as this dispute is over. Soon the various companies, U. S. Steel included, will be back at the same old stand, fighting for lower taxes for the wealthy and seeking to utilize each and every loophole in the tax structure."

"Our requests go into the industry's propaganda mill in one form and come out as something altogether different. Thus, our request for a moderate wage increase becomes distorted, in the minds of these industrial statesmen, into a device for bankrupting either the steel industry or the United States Government—or both!

"Our efforts to protect hundreds of thousands of Americans and their families from the effects of past inflation are somehow transformed by this new steel industry propaganda process into the causes of inflation in 1952, 1953 or 1960.

"The truth of the matter is that these men who have used the popular, and justified, fear of inflation to try to launch a propaganda campaign against our legitimate demands have never given wholehearted support to the government's fight against inflation."

THE PIOUS double-talk and graceless illogic with which the steel industry opposed the CIO Steelworkers' claim for the union shop were reduced to their basic absurdities last week when the union offered its rebuttal before the Wage Stabilization Board special panel.

The demolition of the industry's case was accomplished by Arthur J. Goldberg, the union's general counsel. He effectively showed the arguments advanced by the industry were often irrelevant, usually capricious, and founded almost wholly on a hope of dominating the lives of its employes.

The steel companies had sought to make two basic points—that the WSB should not make any recommendation whatsoever on the union shop, and that if it did make one, it should be against this form of union security.

Goldberg knocked down all of the major arguments the industry used to back up its points.

He showed that the WSB has the authority to make a recommendation on the union shop, which the industry had said it should not do because it does not affect the stabilization program. President Truman's executive order, he pointed out, gave the WSB the right to recommend on any matter in dispute, and a bill to strip the board of power to act in labor disputes was defeated in the House.

Goldberg flatly denied the companies' allegation that the union, not its members, want the union shop. The 1951 negotiations, he said, "have done little to provide steelworkers with a confident assurance that the union has been fully accepted" by management. The companies indirectly had said the union didn't need the union shop because it is "strong" and "responsible." The CIO Auto Workers and CIO Clothing Workers, which are strong and responsible, both have the union shop, Goldberg pointed out.

The USA attorney, in addition, showed that the union shop is not contrary to the legislative policy of Congress; that other federal boards have either ordered or recommended some form of union security (on Feb. 14 a presidential fact-finding board recommended a union shop for one million non-operating workers in the railroad industry who never before had had union security); and that most states, including the big industrial states, permit the union shop.

Business Mags Confess Profit Grabbing Boosts Inflation

By Labor Press Associated

THE COST OF LIVING is at an all-time high, and the dailies and the loud-mouths in Congress blame inflation on the unions, when they are not belaboring the Administration for bringing on inflation by "too much spending."

Sooner or later, however, the truth comes out. Behind the headlines in the dailies, behind the mouthings of the prophets of doom, on the air waves, the business dailies and magazines give the whole thing away.

Thus, Business Week, discussing the growing impact of corporate taxes, said: "By standard economic theory, taxes at the present level should be a serious drag on business, should have practically wiped out the incentive to expand. There's no doubt they're a drag on some business, but so far no such effect on investment as the theorists expected has shown up."

And the financial journals are now admitting what labor said long ago—that it was greed for profits, and speculation, that shot prices up.

The Wall St. Journal said, "The spark of Korea sent prices skyrocketing at a time when there was actually no money inflation at all."

And the Journal of Commerce said there was a "spectacular increase" in inventories the first half of 1951, and continued:

"This bulge in inventories was a powerful contributing factor to the inflationary price rise of the early months of last year. Scare buying on the part of consumers received most attention, but inventory building by business had even more effect in many sectors." The editorial said that such heavy inventory building added "to the pressure on prices and supplies in the first part of the year."

When the Korean war started there were no shortages, nor did the government leap into the market. Nor did wages go up. But prices began shooting up at once. The wholesale price index, 157.3 in June, 1950, went to 162.9 in July, and 180.1 in January, 1951. The retail index, 170.2 in June, 1950, was 181.5 by January, 1951. (It was 190 Dec. 15, 1951.)

The conservative coalition in Congress never has wanted real controls. It refused to give the government power to control speculation on the commodities exchanges; it guaranteed increases in the price of food; the first "price freeze" order did not come until Jan. 27, 1951—which froze prices at the then all-time high.

The Capehart amendment was sneaked through, to provide "built in" inflation. The Herlong amendment fixed it so that the higher an article cost, the higher the profit the seller makes. The Butler-Hope amendment ended any hope of effective regulation of meat prices. The coalition killed all efforts to set price ceilings in dollars and cents, or effective quality control of good. Rent control was gutted.

While the coalition voted billions in subsidies for plant expansion, for stimulating mine production, for ship construction, it turned a deaf ear to subsidies to protect the consumer from high food prices.

The "thinkers" for the conservatives should have a heart-to-heart talk with the editors of Business Week, and the Wall Street Journal and the Journal of Commerce.

Dr. Taylor's New Job

The CIO's plan to settle jurisdictional disputes between its member unions was not born of necessity, because such inter-family disagreements have never been a major problem.

Rather, it grew out of the sane and reasonable aim of a thoughtful group of leaders, the spokesmen for unions banded together in a common cause, to reduce the area of conflict that inevitably exists in any relationship. It is, as CIO Pres. Philip Murray said at the time of its announcement last October, "statesmanlike." Consequently, an impartial arbitrator of the highest calibre was demanded to sit as its final authority.

The CIO is fortunate in getting Dr. George W. Taylor for this post. Few indeed are the men who have won greater distinction in the field of labor-management relations. He did this by the simple expedient of expressing his convictions honestly after examining all the evidence laid before him. He has a reputation for helping the parties to a dispute to work out a compromise—but for letting the chips fall where they may when he himself has to make a decision as an arbitrator.

CIO unions which take disputes to him for settlement may not always like his rulings. But they can rest assured that the evidence they offer to support their claims will be weighed fully, and that the decision he hands down will be the work of a competent man conscientiously trying to do an honest job.

Now We Know

For our money, it's tough to choose between the 79th Congress which butchered price controls back in 1946, the "awful" 80th Congress which enacted Taft-Hartley in '47, the do-little 81st Congress which followed, or the present 82nd Congress which is butchering price controls, rent ceilings, and anti-inflation legislation generally—shifting the burden to the backs of working people.

Our uncertainty has been clarified by Sen. Taft.

The wandering candidate for the Republican presidential nomination—who last week was representing the interests of the people of Ohio in the Senate from way out in Spokane, Wash.—declared:

That's that.

Quote And Unquote

"Pravda having filled half a page with Herbert Hoover's recent attack on the foreign policy of the United States, some Republicans are covering their embarrassment by recalling that the Russians also quote with approval Sen. Taft, Rep. Buffett and the Washington Times-Herald. To date, however, nobody can recall the Communists having a kind word for Harry Truman."—from PAC Pipeline.

Merrily We Roll Along?

Problems Of New England

The CIO Textile Workers in Maine are taking their story of what labor is trying to do to help New England directly to the people in a 13-week radio program. In the second of the series, Pres. Emil Rieve of the TWUA prefaced the excerpts printed below with the statement that New England's problems are part of the national problems growing out of inflation and cannot be separated from them.

THIS IS the background against which we must consider the problems of New England: An economy of constantly-rising prices, with wages struggling to keep up with them. And, in addition, an economy in which the defense program is playing an increasing part.

What happens under these conditions? The average family changes its buying habits. When food and shelter become more expensive, they spend less money on other items, like clothing and shoes.

Also, the average family remembers the shortages of goods during the last war, only a few years ago. They hurry to buy a refrigerator, an electric toaster or a new car, for fear that tomorrow will be too late. Once again, they economize at the expense of apparel and other soft goods.

Therefore, we find the textile areas in a slump—a slump in the midst of inflation. We find thousands of workers unemployed, and thousands more on short time. Even though the problem is national, the distress is local.

The job of finding a solution—and especially, of putting a solution into effect—would be difficult, even if all of us clearly recognized the facts. It is more difficult than necessary because there are forces in New England which are trying to profit by the problem, instead of trying to solve it.

I refer specifically to textile mill-owners—the ones who are attempting to make this a North-South problem.

I say, flatly, that is not so. The textile business is as poor in the South as it is in New England.

The New England mill-owners are entirely aware of the real facts. But they are trying to take advantage of the present slump to destroy the Textile Workers Union and to lower the living standards of the workers.

Let us suppose they should succeed—which, I promise you, they will not.

Would this help New England?

Not a single additional order would be placed with New England mills as a result. There would not be the slightest decrease in the price of textile goods to consumers.

Instead, the purchasing-power of New England citizens would be reduced still further. These citizens would buy even less than they are buying today. Every merchant in New England would suffer—and so would the textile mills.

I want to assure you that we will save them from their own folly. We are going to maintain the wage level in New England; and before long, we are going to increase it. Neither New England nor the nation can be saved by moving backwards.

THE TEXTILE mills which are now petitioning for lower wages have enjoyed, on the whole, a very profitable year.

To sum up, these are the points I would like to leave with you today:

First, the problems of New England are a part of the problems of the United States. The local differences are not as important as they seem. If the nation's problems are solved, the New England problems will be easy to meet.

Second, the national problem which concerns us most (aside from foreign affairs) is inflation. We cannot stop inflation until we have a federal law which will control prices, rather than guarantee profits.

Third, the textile mill-owners who are proposing lower wages and working-conditions in New England are not really concerned about the problem at all. They are using it as a smoke-screen to hide a campaign for even greater profits. They are among the few who have grown richer during the recent slump.

Their program would make the problem worse—by reducing New England to a sub-standard, poverty-stricken slum.

Ohio Papers Please Copy—

Bob Taft's Ben Tate—And Missing $100,000

By AL ZACK

WHEN A PROMINENT politician admits, under oath, that his committee violated election laws, that's news.

Ohio newspapers gave little play to these sensational revelations which were placed upon the record when Ben E. Tate testified before the special Senate committee investigating the 1950 race between Taft and Joseph T. Ferguson.

Tate, who lives in Cincinnati, was one of the top campaign managers for Taft. (He is also a top official of Standard Brands, president of United Collieries, Inc., head of the Diamond Elkhorn Coal Co., Raymond City Coal and Transportation Co., the Snap Creek Coal Co. and various other concerns.)

Tate made the following damaging admissions while he was under cross-examination:—

- He collected approximately $300,000 for Taft but kept no records of how much or who made the contributions.
- He never accounted for some $100,000 of this amount.
- The money was all kept in cash in a private safe deposit vault, thus opening up the possibility that some transactions were made in cash to prevent a thorough investigation.
- All Tate's campaign records were ordered destroyed, thus preventing a complete probe.

Here is the amazing story in Tate's own words as he was being cross-examined while under oath:—

QUESTION—That box was taken in the name of whom?

ANSWER—Ben E. Tate.

Q.—And what did you keep in it, Mr. Tate?

A.—I keep stocks.

Q.—I don't mean your individual safe deposit box. Was there one for the campaign?

A.—I had two boxes.

Q.—You did keep the campaign funds in your own safe deposit boxes?

BEN TATE tells Senate committee he kept no record of $100,000 spent in Taft's campaign.

A.—That is right.

Q.—Why, Mr. Tate?

A.—So that I could take the money out and buy drafts.

Q.—None of that was ever reported?

A.—That was reported when we . . . (he stopped talking, stammered and then continued). No. I am sorry. I don't know whether it was ever reported.

Q.—And you have no record of how much was kept in the boxes?

A.—No.

Q.—Now, such amounts that you collected in your capacity as treasurer and forwarded to other committees, did you report?

A.—No, the record would be in those committees. I understand from them that these reports have been made, but I have not actually checked them.

Q.—You just assumed that they had reported?

Q.—And you have no records whatever of any of these amounts?

A.—That is right. I haven't in my possession any record, but the records are in these committees. That is my opinion, because I have confidence in the members of these committees.

Q.—In forwarding this money to the several committees, did you do so by mail?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Did you write covering letters?

A.—I don't think I asked them to acknowledge receipt, but I transmitted some by mail, some I gave to them.

Q.—And do you know where any of those covering letters are?

A.—No, I do not. They might have been destroyed with other files, the letters.

Q.—Who destroyed these letters?

A.—Some of the people in my office that I had instructed them to do.

(At this point, Tate testified that he ordered destruction of these records because he did not want some persons in his office to know who gave various sums of money and how much.)

Q.—How much cash for the purpose of distribution to the several committees went through your hands and was not reported by you, but you hope reported by the committee?

A.—I figure a little over $100,000.

Q.—Will you tell us in summation how much money came into your hands for use in the candidacy of Senator Taft for re-election in 1950?

A.—Approximately $300,000.

Q.—When you made your report . . . why did you not report the sums that you had received up to approximately $300,000?

A.—Because the subsidiary committees of ours, I gave the money to them, and they reported it.

Q.—You hope they reported it.

Tate shrugged, for there was no answer to that observation.

Taft's Law At Work—

For 7 Long Years, General Tire Fights TWUA To Standstill

For half of those six years, it has been trying to convince Congress, the courts, government agencies and everybody else that the owners of cotton mills in the South have been flagrantly conspiring to violate the law that requires them to bargain collectively with unions selected by their employes.

It has told the Senate Labor-Management Relations Subcommittee that the operators—thanks to the Taft-Hartley Act—openly flout the National Labor Relations Board and the federal courts, and it has offered volumes of evidence in support of its contention.

Now, perhaps, it may get some action.

At any rate, Winthrop A. Johns, NLRB assistant general counsel, has filed with the Circuit Court of Appeals at New Orleans a petition to adjudge the Aldora Mills in contempt.

The mill is not a concern owned by Southerners who might conceivably still be living in the moonlight and magnolias era. It is owned by the General Tire & Rubber Co., which has headquarters at Akron, O., and contracts with the CIO Rubber Workers. But the absentee owners follow the pattern of union-busting with which the TWUA has become all too familiar in its organization work below the Mason-Dixon line.

They'd Rather Pay The Legal Eagles

They have developed a common technique to its highest point: they take every advantage of Taft-Hartley technicalities, the slow processes of the National Labor Relations Board and the courts to stall to the bitted end.

The theory is that if the company fights long enough, the workers will become discouraged and the unions will disintegrate, because they can't hold out for a struggle that lasts for years.

And the employers would rather pay lawyers than workers.

The TWUA drive at Aldora started in January 1945. Briefly, here's what has happened since:

In April 1946, after nine months of stalling by the company, it was certified as collective bargaining agent.

On August 27, 1946, four months later, the first negotiating meeting was held. The company was represented by the law firm of Candler & Weekes, of Decatur, Ga., old hands at stalling off unions and starving them to death.

Between August 1946 and the spring of 1947 numerous meetings were held. No agreement could be reached. The union kept detailed minutes of the sessions, mimeographed them into a package that weighs more than seven pounds, and later filed them with the NLRB and the Labor-Management Relations Subcommittee to bolster its charge that the company was not bargaining in good faith.

Early in March 1947 the TWUA complained to the regional NLRB office that the company refused to bargain. Hearings were held in Barnesville later that month.

On June 3, 1947, a trial examiner issued an order requiring the company to cease and desist from its refusal to bargain. Aldora appealed.

On Aug. 23, 1948—more than a year after the appeal and more than three years after the start of the organizing drive—the NLRB upheld the trial examiner.

The company still refused to meet with the union.

On July 21, 1949—more than two years after the appeal and more than 4½ years after organization started—the NLRB asked the Circuit Court at New Orleans to uphold its order.

On Apr. 29, 1950, nine months after the petition was filed, nearly three years after the trial examiner issued his decision, four years after the union had certified and more than five years after the organization campaign got under way, the court issued its order.

Early in May 1950, the TWUA again asked Aldora to bargain.

On June 9, 1950, Murphy Candler, of the law firm, finally agreed to meet—but the employer was too busy just then.

"Just think, if labor was getting the present-day profits, we'd have to use these things for wallets!"

On June 25 the first meeting was scheduled, after almost daily pursuit of Candler by union representatives.

On Aug. 25 — two months later—the second meeting was held. The company's intention of stalling was more apparent than at the first session.

Since Dec. 13, 1950, the company has simply ignored all requests for further negotiations, except for a flat refusal in January 1951—six years after the organizing drive was opened.

In July 1951 the TWUA finally gave up its efforts to get negotiations going again. It concentrated on persuading the NLRB to ask for the contempt order.

There isn't a formally organized local any more at the Barnesville plant, where General Tire & Rubber makes the fabric that goes into its tires.

But some of the workers are still union-minded, and they keep in constant touch with TWUA organizers.

Their numbers, however, are in the process of being reduced. James Bamford, TWUA Southern Director, said last week that the company has recently taken to discharging those of its 600 employes who evince any interest in the union.

There is nothing unusual about the Aldora case. In fact, TWUA organizers say, it's typical.

Old Joe Grundy's Home Town Is A C

Unions Bring Hope To Workers In Domain Of Ex-GOP Boss

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

A BIG RED BRICK ivy-covered house surrounded by a lawn that slopes to the Delaware River is one of the sights of Bristol, Pa. Huge sycamores shade the grounds and a wide veranda across the back of the house looks out on a pleasant river-view. It's not a magnificent place as compared to the mansions built by the wealthy today. Bristol itself has many much finer homes.

What gives this ageing but well-preserved house at 610 Radcliffe St. its distinction is that it is the home of Joseph R. Grundy.

JOSEPH R. GRUNDY

Not much is heard about old Joe Grundy these days, although his reputation as one-time boss of the still powerful Republican machine in Pennsylvania hangs on. His name has long been a by-word for a political apparatus organized by hard-boiled, anti-labor business elements to forward their financial interests.

The Grundy machine, which raised huge sums to elect its candidates, and was constantly being smeared with some scandal, has for years played a powerful role on the political scene in Pennsylvania and the nation.

Grundy was head of the Pennsylvania Manufacturers Association from 1909 to 1930 and served a short time in the U. S. Senate in 1929-30 by appointment. When he tried later to get elected on his own, Grundy failed to get the Republican nomination due to a GOP factional fight, and to the uproar created by earlier appointment.

The heyday of Grundy's career is so far in the past now that he's commonly believed to be dead. The truth is, he is still alive—and passed his 89th birthday on Jan. 13. He lives at his home on Radcliffe St., or at his nearby farm. Rumors that big politicians in the state now and then visit him are often heard in town.

Just a few blocks from Grundy's home—in distance—but at the extreme opposite end of the social scale, is another show place also pointed out to visitors in Bristol. It's a little one-storied building squeezed into a row of small shops and stores in the industrial part of town.

Here the local headquarters of the CIO Auto Workers are located, and here some of the other unions in town hold their meetings.

The UAW local represents workers employed at Kaiser Metal Products, largest industrial concern in town. The company manufactures sanitary ware — kitchen sinks, bathtubs, wall cabinets, etc., for Sears-Roebuck and other suppliers, and employs some 2000 workers.

The Kaiser plant also makes aircraft parts at present, under two big government defense contracts, and is building a new adjoining plant for production of aircraft parts on a big scale. When completed, the new plant will employ 5000 more workers. Production at the new plant is scheduled to start about the middle of this year.

Another large CIO-organized plant in Bristol is Rohm & Haas which has a contract with the CIO Glass Workers. The firm makes plexiglas, chemicals, and other products.

Other CIO unions which have organized smaller plants in Bristol are: Steelworkers, Pacific Steel's boiler plant; Textile Workers, Thomas L. Leedom Co., original home of Wilton rugs; and Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers, Manhattan Soap Co., makers of soap and other cleansing products.

Not all the workers employed in Bristol live there—population of the town proper is only 15,000—but enough of them do live and vote in Bristol to have helped bring about a small political revolution that has wrecked Republican control of the Borough Council.

Grundy himself was once the most prominent member of this Council. In fact it was the only public office he ever was elected to. His brief term in the U. S. Senate was handed to him by appointment.

Pres. John Daugherty of Bristol UAW Local 130 says that in 1948, with labor support, the Democrats were successful in electing members to the Borough Council for the first time in 50 years. Two years later they succeeded in ousting the Republican regime (they still call it the Grundy machine in Bristol) and took over complete control of the Council.

Several CIO members have been elected to borough office in recent years, among them two UAW local officers. Daugherty served on the school board for two years, and Local Vice-Pres. Anthony Niccol was elected in 1950 to a six-year term as justice of the peace. (This victory especially tickled CIO'ers.)

As for the change union organizat has brought in higher wages and impro working conditions, Al Cardisco, finan secretary of the UAW local, told of own case.

A dozen or so years ago, Al used work in Grundy's worsted mills in Bris He made $15 for a full week's work a rail setter—his job was to put bobbins the machine. If you expected to keep y job, Al said, you'd be foolish even to m tion the word, union, let alone think belonging to one.

Today Al works at the Kaiser plant an expediter (he feeds parts to the p duction line). He spends part of his t in the plant, and is given time off wh ever he needs it to attend to his un job. Average weekly straight time hours a week) is $72.80, with time an half for overtime.

Al thinks that the difference betw the Grundy days and today, is as mar as the difference between night and day

No wonder CIO members at union he quarters take such pleasure in poin out the Grundy home on Radcliffe They do it somewhat in the manner o European worker showing off the medie palace of a duke or lord whose glory power have vanished. For they look u the Grundy house as a symbol of a bit era gone forever—they hope.

THESE EARLY BIRDS were the first of the Kaiser workers to make it

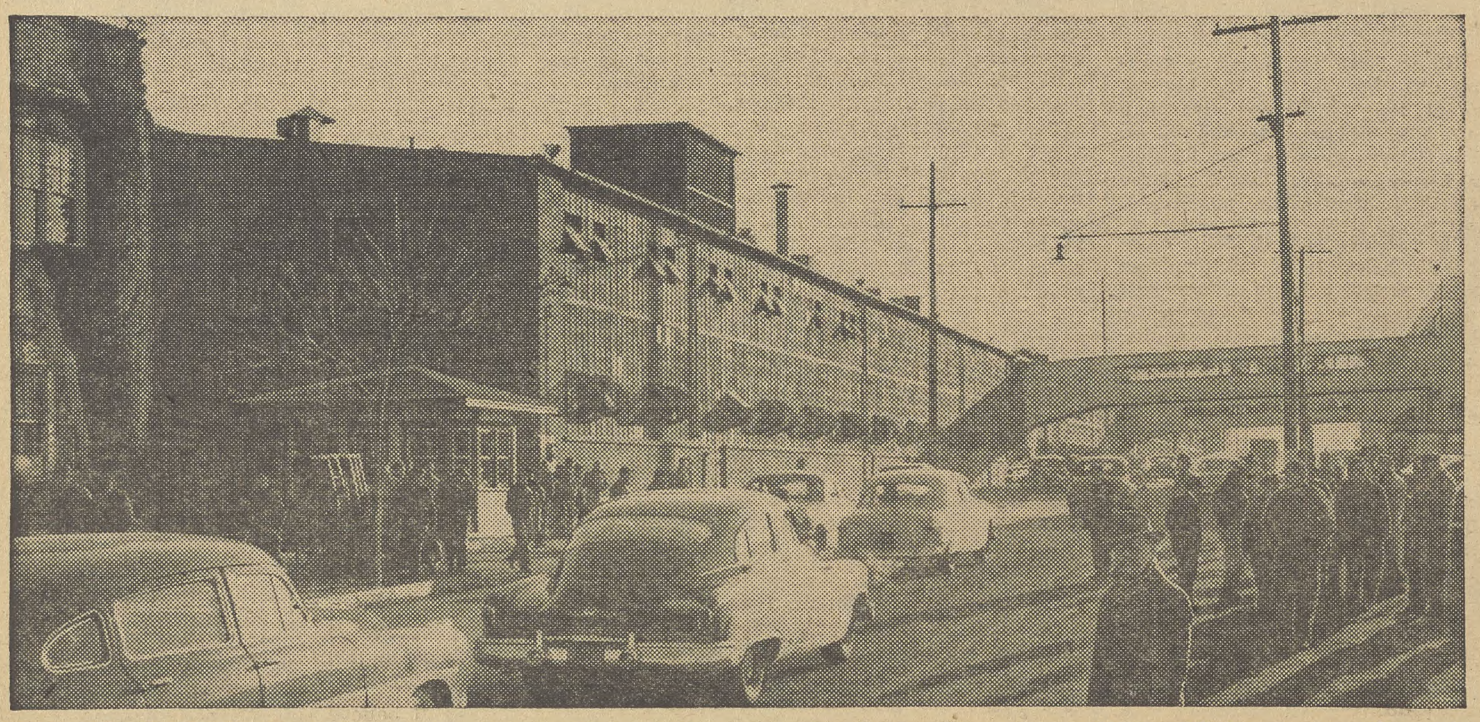
'King Of The Tar Grinned As Sena

ONE OF THE MOST astound scenes that ever took place Congress happened a little more t 23 years ago when Joseph R. Gru took the seat in the U. S. Senate which the Republican governor of Penn vania had appointed him.

A few days earlier, former Sen. Will Vare finally had been kicked out of Senate, after a long and bitter fi Charges against Vare involved the sp ing of $785,000 to win the Republican s atorial nomination in the 1926—"chic feed" by 1952 GOP expenditure "sta ards."

"Grudging Senate seats 'Uncle Grundy," said a periodical of that which gave a graphic account of strange behavior of this queer little Qu er, whose personal fortune was then e mated at $25 million.

It described how this "short, wh haired, red-faced man" sat complace



THE BIG KAISER Metal Products plant in Bristol, Pa., where some 2000 members of the CIO Auto Workers work. The plant makes sanitary ware and is also now working on defense contracts for aircraft parts. A new plant, which will employ 5000 additional aircraft parts workers, is under construction. It will be in production about the middle of '52. UAW members helped end GOP Boss Grundy's control of the borough council.

O Stronghold Now

More Growth Due As Union Center

MAYBE YOU never heard of Bristol, Pa. Unless you live or work in the Philadelphia area or travel between New York and Washington, it's probably unknown to you. And yet it has a very special interest to labor.

Once a stronghold of Republican reaction and open shop industries, and still the home town of Joe Grundy, Bristol today has become a CIO town in a big way, and is headed toward even greater growth as a union center.

Outwardly, Bristol looks pretty much like thousands of other small towns all over the United States that depend upon diversified local industries. It's on the Delaware River about 30 miles northeast of Philadelphia, in lower Bucks County.

Bristol has a population of around 15,000 in the town proper. Including the surrounding area of which Bristol is the center, some 64,000 people—upward of 10,000 of them industrial workers—live and work in this section of Bucks County.

A big industrial boom, started by the building of the new Fairless Works of U. S. Steel, 10 or so miles to the northeast, is under way and has already caught the little town up in the whirl.

As yet this has not changed the general appearance of Bristol much. Its pre-boom plants are going on with their regular business, some of them expanding their facilities while production continues.

Products turned out in the town's main plants, organized by five different CIO unions, include sanitary ware, airplane parts, plexiglas, chemicals, boilers, soap, and carpets.

Despite gains made by unions, the attitude of distrust and condescension toward labor prevalent in the old Grundy days cropped out recently when plans to build a new $1.5 million community hospital in lower Bucks County were being discussed.

A committee set up to publicize the hospital drive reported that statements had been made to the effect that "labor would not support such a project."

How entirely wrong this prediction turned out to be soon became evident. "Labor was one of the first to go on record by resolutions endorsing and pledging their support," the committee reported. In fact it became the largest contributor to the drive.

Union officials at headquarters of the CIO Auto Workers in Bristol reported that total contributions of $385,000 had been given by the combined forces of labor in the area. The fabulously rich U. S. Steel Corp. gave $300,000.

Lobbyists' Just Critics Roared

the Senate while a terrible storm of enunciation roared over his head. While l this was going on, "Uncle Joe" sat comacently in his seat, grinning as though ghly amused.

One angry senator denounced Grundy on e floor as "a stench in the nostrils of l honest men." Another called his apointment "an insult to the Senate." None oke up in his defense.

He held his seat from December 1929 to ecember 1930, but failed to win the senorial nomination at the Republican primy and so his career in the Senate came a quick end.

After Herbert Hoover's election, Grundy ened an office in Washington and issued ultimatum to Pres. Hoover and to Conress that he was there to get a "super riff" and that he would accept nothing ss than a "blanket embargo" on every nport competing with any Pennsylvania oduct.

A liberal weekly of the time called the nnsylvania Manufacturers' Association e "most influential group of its kind in e United States." Grundy was PMA present from 1909 to 1930. He was called he man who perfected lobbying into a ience," the "virtual overlord of Pennsylnia," and the "king of the tariff lobby."

Your Stake In Fight Over Rich Oil Lands

By IRVING FAGAN
For Labor Press Associated

THE OIL COMPANIES, which have been coining money hand over fist and have succeeded in reversing one presidential veto, are trying it again. The stake is enormous—$40 billion worth of oil.

Your stake? Decent education for your children.—which they now don't get because the nation's school plant is not even meeting current needs, let alone future needs.

The oil companies, through their mouthpieces in Congress, are guilty of two deceptions. First, they refer to the issue as one over "tidelands" oil. Second, they plead state's rights.

The real issue is: Profits versus education.

As to "tidelands," the very title is a phony. What is at issue is oil beneath the sea—not in the tidelands area, but beyond it — three miles seaward from low water mark in costal states except Texas, where it would be 10½ miles. Seaward from low water mark, mind you, not tidelands.

—Fitzpatrick in St. Louis Post-Dispatch

The Seemingly Respectable Mink

Here is the official word from the Justice Department: "This department has consistently maintained that the only lands involved in the offshore controversy are those underlying the ocean, beyond the tidelands and outside of the inland waters, that the coastal states do not and never have owned such lands, and that state ownership of lands under inland navigable waters—an entirely different matter from a legal standpoint—has not been challenged or endangered by the claims of the United States."

Second, "state's rights." The states most concerned are Louisiana, Texas, and California. By no coincidence whatever, that's where title to the richest oil deposits so far found have been staked out by the major oil companies. They want state regulation rather than federal regulation. Again, by no coincidence, they have found state regulatory bodies more amenable than federal agencies.

A bill to give the title to the states was passed by Congress in 1946. President Truman vetoed the bill, and the veto stuck. Last July the House passed a similar bill. Now Sen. Connally (D. Tex.) has introduced a resolution to force the bill out of committee.

Sen. Hill (D. Ala.) has proposed that the oil royalties from these submerged lands be used for educational purposes.

In a speech introducing his measure, Hill said "modern technology has created, from a source which we had not dreamed, new public lands in these newly-extractable oil deposits lying beneath the sea.

"They offer the greatest opportunity to American education since the dedication of a large proportion of our public lands to educational purposes through the establishment of our prized system of land grant colleges.

"It is part of the American tradition and belief in education that our public lands should be dedicated in substantial part to the creation of an even greater resource—an educated citizenry."

CIO Backs Bill For U. S. School Aid

GIVING the federal government the revenue from off-shore oil lands to use for aiding education would be "entirely consistent with the policy of our nation of devoting the proceeds of public land resources" for helping schools, Pres. O. A. Knight of the CIO Oil Workers told a Senate Committee.

Along with a number of representatives of labor, liberal and farm organizations, Knight urged the Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs to approve the Hill Amendment to a bill governing submerged coastal lands.

He said that he was "sure the members of this committee are acquainted with the crisis that we face in our educational system in the United States."

"Great inequities of educational opportunity exist between the states," Knight continued. "Ten million additional pupils will have entered our school system by 1960.

"We have a desperate need for additional school buildings to take care of our critically overcrowded class rooms.

"If the Hill Amendment is passed by the Congress, we will be saying to the children of America that there is a tremendous financial resource which can be used to provide them with the educational opportunities to which they are entitled.

"I believe that we are fortunate indeed in such a situation to be able to have the opportunity to use the royalties from our vast undersea oil and gas resources to build an even greater resource—a trained and educated citizenry."

Wetbacks' Plight Seen Making Reds

A DELIBERATELY "planned" ignoring of the plight of America's two million native migrant farm workers who are living in intolerable poverty is "making Communists faster than the FBI can catch them," Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) warned last week.

Speaking as chairman of the Senate Labor subcommittee which has just opened extensive hearings on the migrant labor problem, Humphrey said that the plight of these American citizens is "a disgrace and blot on the social face of America."

While we are spending billions to aid backward nations abroad, he added, greedy economic forces in this country have brought about a "planned ignoring of the spawning ground which produces domestic-made communism."

Humphrey said that despite poverty which the big industrial farmers have forced upon them, comparatively few migrant workers have turned Communist. Instead, he pointed out, they are the ones who have most bitterly resisted the kind of "collectivistic economic system" which the big farm interests are trying to impose.

The collectivized farm grouping and human exploitation that the big farmers are bringing about is "political medievalism," Humphrey declared. Congress, he said, is not only ignoring the problem, but is actually making the American people subsidize and foster it.

The hearings before Humphrey's subcommittee mark the first time that the whole problem of migratory labor has been considered by Congress. This long neglect is also reflected in the fact that among the witnesses last week was the first delegation of migratory agricultural workers ever to appear before a congressional committee.

The hearings have created more interest and support among labor, religious, welfare, civic and consumer groups than almost any recent congressional inquiry. The press, however, has virtually ignored them.

AT A meeting of representatives of more than 40 national organizations under the auspices of the National Council on Agricultural Life and Labor, Humphrey said that testimony before his committee has been so startling that it should have been featured in every newspaper in the country. But, he added, only a handful of papers have published more than a few paragraphs about it.

To overcome this indifference about one of the most significant disclosures of grave social evil that has taken place in a decade, representatives of the CIO, AFL and independent unions and editors of the labor press met in Washington last week to pledge united financial and other support for a program to bring the facts about migratory labor before the American people.

Speakers called the problem "the most serious soft spot in the whole labor front." They pointed out that since the end of the war, the difference in the average wage of migrants and industrial workers has widened so that farm migrant wages now are 37% of factory earnings.

"That has created a vast underprivileged labor force which is now becoming a serious threat in industry, where it is willing to work for much less, and under poorer conditions, than most American workers," Dick Gonzales, legislative representative of the AFL Farm Labor Union, said.

The most startling testimony was the charge of Rep. Machrowicz (D. Mich.) that the failure of Congress to provide adequate funds to stop Mexican farm hands from illegally entering this country was resulting in "peonage."

Machrowicz said that Immigration Commissioner Argyle R. Mackey had admitted that a number of "wetbacks" arrested in the Chicago area in the last six months had been paroled because Congress had failed to appropriate enough money to send them home.

He had reason to believe, he said, that they were paroled to their employers. That would be peonage, he added.

Sen. Morse (R. Ore.) directed the subcommittee staff to call upon the Immigration Service for the full facts about the incident.

Washington Reporter Wins Broun Award

FOR STORIES of corruption and laxity in the federal government, Jack Steele of the Washington bureau of the New York Herald Tribune won the 1951 Heywood Broun Award of the CIO Newspaper Guild.

The award for the best newspaper job of the year "in the spirit of Broun," consists of $500 in cash and a Guild citation. Broun helped found the Guild and served six terms as its president before he died in 1939.

High praise was bestowed on several other entries by the judges. These included entries by the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, who was represented by reporter Theodore C. Link; the city staff of the Chicago Sun-Times; reporter Ernest Brashear of the Los Angeles Daily News, and reporter George de Carvalho of the San Francisco Chronicle.

In addition, the judges felt that at least 10 other entries would have upheld the prestige of the Broun Award had any of them been declared the winner.

Wade Franklin of the Chicago Sun-Times was chairman of the award committee. Judging was done by a panel of editors, Erwin D. Canham, editor of the Christian Science Monitor; Ed Donohoe, Scranton Times city editor; and John C. Manning, Detroit Times editor.

MEBA Asks Joint Body To Probe Isthmian Strike

THE CIO Marine Engineers last week called on the newly-created Joint AFL-CIO Committee on Jurisdictional Raids and Disputes in New York City to investigate the seven-month strike of MEBA against the Isthmian Steamship Co.

"The dispute . . . is centered in the Port of New York . . . We are confident that . . . an investigation will clearly reveal the collusion between Isthmian and the SIU (AFL sailors' union) and expose their efforts to turn the strike which had and has a legitimate objective into a 'jurisdictional dispute.'

"We believe that on the basis of justice and equity your Committee will be justified in recommending that support be given to our Isthmian strike by the AFL and CIO affiliates in the New York area.

"The representatives of the National MEBA are prepared to meet with your Committee at your earliest convenience to present our case."

MEBA held contracts with Isthmian for 13 years prior to July 16, when the union called a strike after the company failed to accept an agreement which had been negotiated with some 150 other steamship companies on the Atlantic, Gulf and Pacific Coasts.

Drive Opens For Teachers

A SPECIAL committee of the CIO Government and Civic Employees Organizing Committee is conducting an organizing drive among New York City's 37,000 teachers.

The High School Teachers Association, a semi-professional group, has been invited to join the CIO. Heading the special committee are Daniel F. Gunsher of James Madison High School and Albert H. Sayer of Brooklyn Technical High School, a former member of the AFL Teachers Guild.

"Smooth, eh?—tried something different this year—added a gallon of anti-freeze."

CIO Protests Arrest Of 9 Jim Crow Foes

THE CIO and other organizations last week protested the arrest of nine representatives of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People who spearheaded a movement to end Jim Crow in the Cairo, Ill., schools.

They were arrested by local authorities, despite the fact that bombings and other violence were directed at them.

Willard S. Townsend, secretary of the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination and president of the CIO Transport Service Employes, wired Gov. Adlai Stevenson of Illinois:

"On behalf of the National CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination, I protest the fake charge of conspiracy which has been lodged in the court at Cairo, Ill., against nine representatives of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

"This is most obviously a perversion of legal process invoked by those who favor segregation on the grounds of race of American school children which is prohibited by state law.

"These people are in effect lawbreakers themselves. I suggest that you consult with the attorney general who is the state's chief law enforcement officer to see that legal process is not prostituted in the State of Illinois."

The Jewish Labor Committee wired Stevenson and U. S. Atty. Gen. J. Howard McGrath, asking the arrest of those responsible for the violence. Protests have also been lodged by the NAACP, whose special counsel, Thurgood Marshall, went to Cairo to consult with Illinois attorneys.

Illinois law bans segregation in the schools. The Cairo branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People conducted a campaign to have the law enforced. Arrangements had been made for the transfer of pupils to a previously all-white school.

Outbursts of violence followed. Windows were broken at the home of David Lansden, a white attorney who had represented the NAACP branch. A shotgun blast rocked the home of Dr. J. C. Wallace, and a bomb wrecked a bedroom of the home of Dr. Urbane F. Bass, another prominent Cairo Negro.

None of the persons responsible for the violence was arrested, although the local U. S. Attorney, the local FBI agents, Atty. Gen. J. Howard McGrath and state authorities had been warned of the danger of violence, according to NAACP.

Instead Drs. Bass and Wallace, and Lansden were arrested. Along with others they were charged with conspiracy "to endanger the life and health of certain children" and were held in $1000 bail each.

Others arrested included Dr. W. A. Fingal, president of the Cario branch of the NAACP; Lester Bailey and Miss June Shagaloff, NAACP field secretaries; W. S. Madison and Arthur Jelks.

Candidate Endorsed

CIO Steelworkers Local 2155 at Niles, O., has endorsed Steelworker Jack Sawyer's candidacy for the Democratic nomination for sheriff of Trumbull County.

Strike Voted At Newark By CIO Brewers

MEMBERS of Local 2 of the CIO Brewery Workers have voted almost unanimously to strike against the Anheuser-Busch brewery at Newark, N. J., in their fight for their first contract.

The company is attempting to force on its employes the same sub-standard wage and working conditions provided in former contracts with the AFL Teamsters and an AFL federal union. The two AFL affiliates and the company recently agreed to tear up their agreements rather than go through with hearings scheduled by the National Labor Relations Board on the Brewery Workers' petition for a representation election.

What really touched off the strike vote was the employer's walking out on a signed agreement to arbitrate two important issues—the question of a single rate for regular and temporary employes, and retroactivity.

Other issues in dispute include 13 collateral issues.

Breweries in North Jersey were taken over by the AFL in raids several years ago and a series of backdoor agreements signed. The Brewery Workers' fight at Anheuser-Busch's Newark plant is the first skirmish to get the workers back in the CIO where they belong and give them the kind of contract coverage the AFL has never been able to win for them.

Because the AFL refused to move in other breweries, the Brewery Workers have demanded that all employers in the area raise the wages of all employes by not less than 13c an hour, retroactive to Nov. 13, in accordance with Rules No. 6 and No. 8 of the Wage Stabilization Board.

Swift Signs Pact For 6c Increase

The CIO Packinghouse Workers have reached an agreement with Swift & Co., the third of the "Big Four" to come to terms with the union. Like Armour & Co. and Cudahy Packing Co., Swift agreed to boost wages 6c an hour plus a 1c to 1½c an hour additional increase for women to narrow the differential against them.

CIO Gives The Answer On Cincinnati TV

THE CINCINNATI CIO Council's 13-week television series on issues of the day started last week, with Universal Military Training as the first subject debated.

Titled "What's the Answer?", the Saturday afternoon half-hour show takes up such touchy subjects as academic freedom, unions in politics, price control, FEPC, the payroll tax and farm price support, among others.

James Maxwell, magazine writer, acts as moderator, and Grant Cannon, managing editor of "Farm Quarterly" magazine, acts as "interrogator," pinning panelists down to specific answers about the positions they hold.

Two panelists are invited guests weekly, one opposed to the subject under discussion and one in favor of it.

A representative from one of the CIO unions in Cincinnati appears on the show each week to point up CIO's position on the issue.

"Object of the program," says Walter T. Grainger, CIO Council president, "is to bring important issues before people in our community so they can hear both sides and make up their own minds on these vital problems.

"And CIO is going on the record as to where it stands so people here in Cincinnati can find out that CIO members really do act as 'partners in building a better America.' "

Produced locally by the Cincinnati Council and its advertising agency, the program commercials point out the contributions CIO members make to their community. One typical commercial shows how union wages help local businesses at a high level of prosperity through purchases made by CIO members.

Mrs. Murray Named To PAC Staff

NAMING of Mrs. Esther Murray as a national representative of the CIO Political Action Committee was announced last week by PAC Dir. Jack Kroll.

Mrs. Murray, one of the leaders in the successful fight at the 1948 Democratic convention for a strong civil rights plank, was the Democratic candidate for Congress in California's 16th District in 1950.

A native of the state of Washington and a graduate of the University of Chicago, Mrs. Murray was assistant to the Democratic National Committeewoman for California and a vice chairman of the State Democratic Committee.

As a member of the platform committee of the 1948 Democratic convention, Mrs. Murray, together with former Rep. Biemiller (D. Wis.) and Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.), signed a minority report asking for a more forthright stand by the Democratic party on civil rights. The fight was carried to the floor of the convention where it was won.

"Mrs. Murray is a valuable addition to the staff of PAC," Kroll said, "and I am sure CIO members all over the country will find her experience and energy helpful in meeting the political tasks we have ahead."

'Screen Of Red Tape'—

OWIU Hits Industry's Refusal To Bargain

By RAY DAVIDSON

WITH STRIKE VOTE action now under way in the strategic half of its 600 bargaining units, CIO Oil Workers have condemned major oil firms for flatly refusing to bargain on union proposals for a $2-a-day wage increase and other substantial improvements. "The industry has has refused to discuss this case on its merits," said the OWIU Policy Committee and Pres. O. A. Knight. "Instead, the industry has hidden behind a screen of red tape and has misquoted government regulations to our members."

In its call for strike votes by key locals across the nation, the committee made plain that it seeks an improved wage standard for oil workers—not just an increase that would "catchup" in part with price increases over recent months.

"The industry," the Policy Committee pointed out in a resolution, "has offered increases only equalling the increase in cost-of-living as such increase is conservatively reported by the government's unfair and inadequate cost-of-living index.

"In effect the industry has said: 'The wage earner must stand still, earning only enough to maintain his same living standard, while industry gets more work done for less money and makes greater profits."

Action by the OWIU for strike votes came after a second national conference representing all oil workers' organizations—independent, AFL and CIO. This conference, held in Kansas City, brought together 22 oil unions.

Mutual support in the campaign for the wage increase was pledged along with assistance to all organizations forced to strike to win their demands.

The Oil Workers base their wage demand on the vastly increased productivity of oil workers. "We find that in the face of generally rising costs, the oil and allied industries actually have been able to reduce production costs because of increased productivity," said the Policy Committee.

"We find that because increased productivity has enabled the industry to produce, transport and manufacture its products more cheaply, because there has been a constant full market for its products and because labor costs are becoming a smaller and smaller factor in the industry's economy, profits have risen fantastically."

The committee stated that the union had never stood in the way of technological advance and did not intend to do so, but that it believed the fruits of increased efficiency should be shared by the wage earners of the industry.

"We believe that the oil worker is entitled to a better standard of living than he has had in the past because he is doing a better job than in the past," the resolution said.

The 22 unions engaging in the Kansas City joint conference represented approximately 275,000 employes of oil and allied industries. The meeting was a follow-up to a similar conference held last November, in which representatives of 18 unions met and, for the first time in the history of the industry, pledged mutual support in a campaign.

WHILE the AFL has not had a large membership in the oil industry since OWIU pulled out of AFL and became a charter member of CIO, independent unions always have been a significant factor in the oil industry.

In past years, industry management has attempted to play off the independents and OWIU against one another. The newly-established unity between these various unions has posed a new problem for industry management.

The independent unions participating in the program range from small locals with a few hundred members up to a national independent union representing tens of thousands. The AFL unions participating in the program represent two major refineries and several smaller ones.

Altogether, the unions participating probably represented 90% of the industry's employes in the basic operations of the industry—production of crude oil, pipeline transportation of crude and refined oil, and refining.

Major Locals Vote For Strike

A majority of CIO Oil Workers locals in the important Texas Gulf Coast fields and also in Colorado and Wyoming have voted in favor of strike action, OWIU headquarters in Denver announced late last week.

The OWIU said all locals reporting to date had favored going out for a $2-a-day wage increase.

Among first locals to act favorably were those in Houston, Texas City, Beaumont, Port Arthur and Port Neches, all in Texas.

"Can't you talk about her diet without reminding me of the word 'formula'? I had a tough day negotiating our new contract with management."

IUE Hits Westinghouse On Minimum Pay Rule

WESTINGHOUSE Electric Corp. is pressuring senators and congressmen from four southern states to interfere with the Labor Dept.'s administration of the minimum wage law, according to James B. Carey, president of the CIO Electrical Workers. He charged that the firm is trying to have congressmen from Alabama, Arkansas, Kentucky and Texas "prevent" the issuance of a Labor Dept. ruling concerning prevailing wages in the lamp industry.

Under the Walsh-Healey Act, the Secretary of Labor is responsible for determining hours and the "prevailing minimum wage" to be paid workers in firms holding contracts in excess of $10,000 with the government.

Carey said that Ralph D. Stuart, a Westinghouse vice president, wrote to the congressmen that "the Fair Labor Standards Act was intended by Congress to supplant the Walsh-Healey Act" and "is contrary to the Defense Production Act of 1950." The Fair Labor Standards Act sets 75c as the minimum wage in industry in general.

"The most casual examination of these laws," Carey wrote the congressmen, "would show that Stuart's assertions are utterly wrong and completely at odds with the express language of the laws.

"Perhaps Mr. Stuart fears that a determination of the prevailing rates will show that Westinghouse employes are paid less than most other employes in the lamp industry."

"We are confronted in this situation with the fact that one of the largest corporations in the United States is boldly calling on southern congressmen to help it colonize and pauperize the South. Mr. Stuart threatens that the southern expansion of Westinghouse will automatically be curtailed if he doesn't have his way on the matter of minimum wages.

"Westinghouse . . . should be particularly careful that its professed concern for the South should not be viewed as a sanctimonious cover for an unconscionable grab for profit . . . That precisely is the situation involved."

Pickets In Barrel Get Legal Okeh

Criminal Court Judge David W. FitzGibbon in St. Louis ruled there's nothing improper about picketing in a barrel—provided, of course, you also wear the proper amount of clothing.

FitzGibbon reversed a city judge's conviction of James E. Youngdahl and Robert Lee Fahle for disturbing the peace when they picketed a Richman Brothers clothing store in barrels during a CIO Clothing Workers organizing drive.

The two men had rolled up their trouser legs and donned barrels, giving the appearance of having nothing on but T-shirts, shoes, socks and barrels. (LPA)

IUE Wins At 2 More Plants In GE Chain

THE CIO Electrical Workers have lengthened their winning record in the General Electric chain during the past year by winning a dozen elections and now represent more than 70,000 GE workers.

IUE scored the twelfth win when it trounced UE in an NLRB run-off election at the DeKalb, Ill., GE plant by a vote of 260 to 230.

A few days before the DeKalb vote, IUE won an election at the GE Eastern Regional Warehouse at Clinton, N. J. The vote was IUE 37, no union 7. UE tried in vain to get on the ballot.

IUE also has won a number of other NLRB victories recently, including the Metuchen, N. J., plant of the Westinghouse Electric Corp., where it defeated UE, 140 to 18. Seven votes were cast for no union.

Meanwhile, IUE Pres. James B. Carey, who is also CIO secretary-treasurer, has asked GE to join it in getting immediate WSB approval of a 2.5% productivity increase, with a minimum of 3c an hour, which was included in a contract negotiated last Oct. 11.

Carey has asked GE to place the 2.5% increase in the pay envelopes immediately by absorbing the 2% payroll deductions for pensions and the .5% deduction for other purposes.

"When WSB approves the 2.5% productivity increase we negotiated, the company could be reimbursed out of the back pay due its employees," Carey wrote GE Vice Pres. Lemuel R. Boulware.

IUE also asked GE to support the union's demand for quick WSB action on a cost of living adjustment of 1.08% for the period between Mar. 15 and Sept. 15, 1951, which also was negotiated last year.

Reuther To Talk On Anniversary Of Chrysler Sitdown

WALTER P. REUTHER, president of the CIO Auto Workers, will be the principal speaker at a celebration of the 15th anniversary of the Chrysler sit-down strike to be held Mar. 8 by UAW's Chrysler local in Detroit.

Other speakers will include: Norman Matthew, director of the UAW Chrysler Dept.; R. J. Thomas, assistant CIO director of organization, first president of Local 7 and former UAW president; Richard T. Leonard, secretary-treasurer of the CIO Insurance and Allied Workers Organizing Committee and a former UAW vice president.

The observance will include a leadership training institute, a luncheon to be attended by 200 active leaders of Local 7—at which Reuther, Thomas and Matthews will speak—and a dance.

'Life's No Joke For Workers In Soviet Eden,' French Seamen Say

THE COMMUNIST union secretary was waiting on the dock at Nantes, France, when the ship got back after a rare trip to the so-called workers' paradise behind the Iron Curtain.

The vessel had called at Gdynia, Poland, and Riga, Latvia. It was obvious he expected the French sailors to leap onto the pier and start singing the praises of what they had seen—things like working conditions, for instance.

They didn't.

"You ought to come along with us the next time," one of them said drily.

"French workers just wouldn't stand the kind of lives they live there."

The rest of the story is told in Air-Terre-Mer, publication of the Mediterranean Committee of the Intl. Transport Federation. The committee represents transport workers in France, Italy and Greece. The story went on:

"There were no flowers to welcome us, but plenty of guns. Their men over there don't carry pistols tucked away in a friendly way, like our own policemen, but keep them well in view the whole time, so as to scare you.

"As soon as we came into port, all the exits were guarded by armed men, while others overran the whole ship. The radio aerial was carried off, and all our private wireless sets or cameras were locked out of reach.

"We were all summoned on deck, every man of us, and were made to produce our credentials. We'd been given strict orders to leave all our drawers, cupboards, boxes, etc., unlocked. While the identity of every man on deck was being checked, the ship was thoroughly searched.

"Well, after this kind of welcome, we weren't especially keen about going ashore. Several of the boys who did apply for 'permits' only got them just before leaving, so they couldn't go anyhow.

"What we did see didn't exactly give us the idea people over there are as peace-loving as the Communists say they are. We met a fleet of warships on maneuvers; jet planes buzzed up at the rate of one every 10 minutes; and the only cars we saw along the coast were all full of uniformed men.

"Though our stay was quite short, we did manage to watch dockers at their jobs. There is no question of having one team work for each ship. No, one man does most of the job, and if he's urgently in need of help, he'll have a team called — a team that's appointed to any ship that happens to need it.

"The men over there look simply wretched. Their clothes are pretty ragged, and they look as if they badly needed a good meal.

"On the other hand, the police wear fine uniforms and certainly don't look hungry. They must be well paid. The traffic is regulated by women policemen, and their wages are said to be twice as high as what skilled workers get.

"Tell our comrades to be careful what they say. Many Poles who came back from France were drafted into the police forces and given all sorts of advantages to bring them round to the regime. And they understand French. One of our boys, who made some kind of remark about old Joe Stalin, was marshalled off by the police and only brought back just before our ship put out to sea.

"What we saw and heard was enough, anyhow, to show it was no joke living in the Soviet Paradise."

"Our union paper says we must keep our feet on the ground and stand shoulder to shoulder!"

UN Inquiry On Venezuelan Anti-Labor Terror Asked

A REQUEST that the United Nations investigate charges that the military junta which rules Venezuela is persecuting the labor movement and using "brutal measures" against union leaders was made last week by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

The petition was filed with Trygvie Lie, UN secretary general, by Jacob S. Potofsky, chairman of the CIO International Committee and president of the Clothing Workers, and Vice Pres. Matthew Woll of the AFL. Potofsky and Woll are official ICFTU representatives to the UN Economic and Social Council.

The two handed Lie a vigorous denunciation of the Venezuelan government for jailing union leaders without charges and for torturing some of them, and asked him to take action "to bring about the respect for trade union rights guaranteed by the UN."

They also left a detailed memorandum charging "systematic persecution, confiscation of union property, arrest of trade union leaders, coercive action against workers by the Venezuelan militarists" from the time the junta seized power in November 1948.

The reign of terror against the unions started with the junta's dissolution of the Venezuelan Federation of Workers. The number of unions dwindled, the ICFTU document said, from 1053 free groups in 1948 to 387 unions in 1950—none of them free.

THE memorandum said that more than 3000 workers have been jailed "without due process of law," that no union activities are being carried on "due to the fact that all the labor unions have been divested of their resources," and that 500 prisoners, most of them workers, have been transferred to a penal colony on an island at the mouth of the Orinico River, "a harsh and unhealthy region."

The ICFTU asked the UN to give the Intl. Labor Organization the job of examining the situation and of making recommendations "as to the steps to be taken in order to convince the Government of the United States of Venezuela of its duty to re-establish freedom of organization and association and respect for trade union rights."

It also asked the Economic and Social Council to support the "justified claims" of the Venezuelan workers.

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

THE WRITER this past week had a very interesting and enlightening trip to Dallas, Tex. John Riffe, director of the CIO Organizing Committee, and CIO Reg. Dir. C. A. McPeak have done a wonderful job in the State of Texas with representatives of the various international unions in the area, the Southern Drive and the Councils.

Among all of our CIO people in Texas there is a tremendous spirit of cooperation and a display of militancy that reflects the spirit of '36 and '37. While in Dallas, I attended a meeting of Southern Drive representatives and international union representatives. In attendance where Dir. Riffe, Secy.-Treas. Oral Garrison of the Organizing Committee and other staff members.

I also attended a meeting of active CIO workers in the UAW Hall between Fort Worth and Dallas. This meeting was ably presided over by Pres. Paul Gray of the Texas State IUC. Our people in Texas are busily engaged in getting people to pay their poll taxes so that they can register and vote in the coming elections. Brother Gray and other Council members are doing a splendid job in PAC. A large percentage of those at the meetings were CIO members of the fairer sex. The women of our affiliates in Texas are taking a very active part in CIO affairs.

All in all, the writer feels greatly enriched from his visit to Texas, and is happy to see the fine enthusiasm shown by all of our members.

FROM DALLAS, I went to New York to attend the CIO vice president's meeting. At this meeting Pres. Murray announced the appointment of Dr. George W. Taylor, a leading figure in the field of labor-management relations, as CIO organizational disputes arbitrator. This office will cooperate in every way to help our unions and Dr. Taylor settle intra-CIO jurisdictional conflicts. I know that our unions will also make every effort to recognize each others jurisdictions and reach agreements everywhere we can.

Reg. Dir. Walter Harris reports that in a representation election, the employes of the Viking Press, New York City, repudiated the discredited DPOW and chose CIO as bargaining representative by the following vote: CIO 40, DPOW 18, no union 3. CIO Reps. Peter Flynn and Caesar Guazzo handled the campaign.

Intl. Rep. Nick Zonarich, CIO Steelworkers, reports that in a representation election at the Tennessee Coal, Iron & Railroad Co.'s iron ore mines at Red Mountain, Birmingham, Ala., the workers voted in favor of the Steelworkers by 2363 to 1371 for the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers (independent). There were 3876 eligible.

REG. DIR. Irwin DeShetler reports the following representation election victories for the CIO Fresh Fruit and Vegetable Workers, Local Industrial Union No. 78: Salinas Valley Vegetable Exchange, El Centro, Calif., CIO 72, no union 5; J. J. Crosetti Co., El Centro, CIO 35, no union 8; Desert Growers & Shippers Co., El Centro, CIO 40, no union 4; Russel F. Brown Co., Brawley, Calif., CIO 20, no union 13; Ark Produce Co., Holtville, Calif., CIO 17, no union 1; Charles E. Huston Co., El Centro, CIO 39, no union 4; R. B. Wilson Co., Brawley, CIO 40, no union 0; Holtville Vegetable Co., Holtville, CIO 33, no union 10; Sunshine Farms, Yuma, Ariz., CIO 79, no union 7.

CIO Field Rep. James Spangler and Local Union Reps. Clayton Coon, Dick Perry, Glen McGraugh and Herman Cornell did a splendid job in directing this campaign.

The CIO Oilworkers report two representation victories at the Toker Oil Co., Newark, N. J., by a vote of OWIU 7, no union 1, with Larry Leonard of Local 406 handling this drive, and at the Texas Co. Terminal, Charleston, S. C., where the count was OWIU 21, no union 3. CIO Reg. Dir. Lloyd Vaughan and the CIO staff assisted the Oil Workers in bringing about this victory.

UPA Gets 10c In Coast Pact

THE FIRST contract of the CIO Paperworkers with the Zellerbach Paper Co., Los Angeles, has spurred the union's organizational work on the West Coast.

The contract includes a 10c an hour pay increase, paid vacations, six paid holidays, grievance procedure, strict seniority guarantee, four-hour call-in pay, provision for union-management discussion on employment of handicapped workers, and a 10c an hour shift differential premium.

Carey Hits UMT Again

UNIVERSAL military training will contribute nothing to the national security at the present time, CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey again told Congress in a statement filed last week with the Senate Armed Services Committee.

A bill which would establish military training for all men over 18 has been approved by the House Armed Services Committee. Carey urged the Senate group, now holding hearings on a similar measure, to vote down the proposal.

UAW Council Urges Defense Of Civil Rights

THE TAFT-HARTLEY Act, state anti-union laws and recent attacks in the South on Negroes and other minority groups imperil the union movement, a conference of the CIO Auto Workers Agricultural Implement Workers Council declared.

Specifically cited in a resolution was the series of bombings in the Miami, Fla., area that culminated in the murder of Harry T. Moore, state director of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and his wife.

The conference, held at Ottumwa, Ia., represented 53,000 UAW members in the agricultural implement industry.

"A labor movement cannot exist without freedom," the resolution pointed out. "It is time we awakened our ranks to the fact that their bread and butter is at stake, that the conditions they have fought so hard to obtain are involved; that elimination of any civil or democratic right is a danger to working men and women."

The resolution called for repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act and state anti-union laws, the arrest and conviction of the slayers of Mr. and Mrs. Moore and of Samuel Shepherd, who was shot by Sheriff Willis McCall of Lake County, Fla.; a congressional probe of the Florida bombings, and protested the actions of Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.), McCarran (D. Nev.), and the Loyalty Review Board.

White Collar Vote Won By Ship Union

SUCCESS CROWNED the initial move of the CIO Shipbuilding Workers last week to organize the white-collar workers in the nation's shipyards when it defeated the AFL Office Workers by a margin of almost six to one in a NLRB election at Quincey, Mass.

The election was held at the big Fore River Shipyard of the Bethlehem Steel Corp. The result: IUMSWA 473, AFL office workers 83.

IUMSWA has for many years represented the 6000 maintenance and production workers at the yard.

The CIO union has not in the past represented shipyard white collar workers. IUMSWA Pres. John Grogan hailed the victory and said that the campaign would be continued to organize the remainder of the shipyard white-collar workers throughout the United States.

UWUA Gets 10c In Indiana Strike

The CIO Utility Workers last week ended a six-day walkout against the Municipal Light & Power Co., Anderson, Ind.

Terms of the new agreement, featured a 10c hourly wage increase, effective Apr. 15, were ratified by the 125 UAW members employed by the city.

CIO Outlook Says—

Workers' Compensation Laws Need Overhauling

DEATH BENEFITS paid to the survivors of workers fatally injured in industrial accidents are "tragically low" under state workmen's compensation laws, the latest issue of CIO Economic Outlook declares.

This is only one of a number of shortcomings of state laws listed by the Outlook, which is published by the CIO Dept. of Education and Research. The Outlook calls for a 10-point program to bring state compensation laws up to date, and "the ultimate enactment of a national workmen's compensation law."

"An examination of the maximum benefits allowed for fatal injuries under our workmen's compensation laws reveals that a human life is a cheap commodity in the judgment of reactionary employers, insurance companies, and state legislatures which usually dominate the writing of industrial insurance schedules," the CIO publication declares.

Other failures of the compensation law include:

"Medical care remains arbitrarily restricted to cost and duration in as many as 17 states. Severely injured workers simply are not entitled to needed medical care under the provisions of these laws.

"Five states do not cover occupational diseases at all (Kansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Oklahoma and Wyoming). One state (Alabama) covers only silicosis. Seventeen states cover only a list of specified occupational diseases. These lists are always behind the times.

"Only 17 states and the District of Columbia have any provisions covering rehabilitation.

"While most compensation laws include the stipulation that an injured worker should receive about 66 2/3% of his wage loss for temporary total disability, the worker does not collect it. Actual payments average far less than 50%.

"For millions of workers in the steel, automobile, aircraft, rubber, machine tool, oil, utility and many other industries, the $30 maximum provides weekly compensation for only 35 to 40% of the real wage loss. In several states, those workers cannot possibly receive more than one-third."

NAM Affiliate's Attack On Compensation Law Fought

THE ASSOCIATED Industries of New York, state branch of the National Association of Manufacturers, is leading one phase of the attack on workmen's compensation, the New York State CIO Council charged last week.

AINY wants to set up a super-court to review decisions of the Workmen's Compensation Board, both as to fact and law, the council said. State courts may now review questions of law, but not fact. The CIO calls the super-court proposal "a deliberate attempt to jam hopelessly the administration of the program."

The New York State CIO also charged that the other phase of the attack is led by insurance companies and brokers, whose lobbyists are seeking to restrict the operations of the state workmen's compensation insurance fund.

The state fund now makes workmen's compensation coverage available to employers at rates substantially lower than private companies.

The council, which seeks to make the state fund the exclusive source of workmen's compensation insurance, has called for legislative investigation of compensation costs, profits and benefits.

Council Pres. Louis Hollander said such an investigation will "expose the greed and the hypocricy of those who complain of the cost of workmen's compensation on the one hand and at the same time seek to swell the profits which private interests are making out of the program."

Truman Renews War On 'Capehartized' Price Law

In a long, strongly-worded message, the President again assailed the Capehart, Herlong and Butler-Hope Amendments to the Defense Production Act. He said that the failure of Congress to act on his request for their repeal before adjourning last October has already caused "a great deal of damage" to the nation's economy.

Branding the amendment of Sen. Capehart (R. Ind.) as "by far the worst and most damaging provision in the present law," the President warned that "the longer remedial action is delayed, the more completely and irrevocably our whole price structure will be 'Capehartized'."

The Capehart Amendment requires the Office of Price Stabilization in setting price ceilings, to include all cost increases since the Korean war began. The amendment's effect is to pass all of this rise in production costs on to consumers.

The President's stand was supported by Ellis G. Arnall, successor to Michael V. DiSalle as head of OPS. He told Congress that a stronger price controls law is necessary because the worst inflationary pressures are still to come.

"We must not hasten headlong into decontrol," he told the Senate Banking Committee.

Since the Capehart and other crippling amendments became law last summer, the Consumer's Price Index has jumped more than four points. Economists estimate that each point rise costs consumers $2 billion.

THIS MEANS that the indifference of Congress has already cost consumers more than an additional $8 billion in inflation since the present law was passed six months ago.

In his message the President carefully documented the way in which the Capehart Amendment has helped bring this about. He cited the following examples, pointing out that they "are not isolated cases":

- One highly profitable metal manufacturer was scheduled under the 1950 law for price reductions amounting to almost $2 million which "would have been fully fair and equitable to all concerned, protecting the interests of both the company and its consumers." Under the Capehart Amendment, the company was able to push up its ceiling prices by $7.5 million. Total additional cost to consumers: $9.5 million.
- Another company producing vacuum cleaners was scheduled for a 2% reduction. Instead it got an increase of 3%.
- A producer of gas ranges would have had a 5% reduction; instead, the Capehart Amendment gave him a 2.5% increase.
- A candy bar producer got a 15% increase from the Capehart Amendment.
- A producer of household water softeners was scheduled to get a 4% reduction, but instead came out with a 5% increase.

A total of 5000 similar requests for Capehart increases have already been filed.

The price raising effects of the Capehart Amendment have been "compounded" by the provision sponsored by Rep. Herlong (D. Fla.), the President said. The Herlong Amendment guarantees pre-Korean percentage mark-ups to wholesalers and retailers.

The President called the Herlong Amendment "downright unconscionable." He pointed out that when manufacturer's excise taxes were raised last fall, OPS was required not only to allow firms to pass on the full cost of this tax to consumers but also "to add on top of this a percentage of the tax as a profit to themselves."

"The Capehart and Herlong Amendments have one thing in common," Truman said. "They are both aimed directly at raising prices. And they do just that."

HE ESTIMATED that "Capehart increases" recently obtained by auto manufacturers, plus "Herlong mark-ups" for dealers, will cost auto buyers "up to $400 million" in the coming year.

The President said that the potential pressures toward inflation are now even greater than a year ago, when the big price upsurge took place. He asked that controls be continued for two more years.

Chairman Spence (D. Ky) of the House Banking Committee introduced a bill carrying out the President's recommendations, but indicated that he thought there was little chance of getting the Truman program through Congress.

The chairman of the Senate Banking Committee, Sen. Maybank (D. S. C.) has already introduced a bill continuing all major provisions of the present inflationary law for one year. Hearings before his committee will begin Mar. 4.

"Some Teeth, Doc—For Meat!"

HST Inches Still Closer To Running

PRESIDENT TRUMAN came closer last week to taking a stand on running for another term than he ever has before.

Rep. Sabath (D. Ill.) quoted the President as saying he had served seven troublesome years and that it might injure his health and shorten his life if he served another term.

"He said he might have to do it," said Sabath, "if conditions demand it and if he is satisfied that it would be in the interests of the country and in the interests of world peace.

"If it would help bring about an earlier peace and help the country and the world, he would be willing to sacrifice his health and shorten his life."

(Some days earlier, the President was quoted as saying that everybody knows that a Republican president would be the worst thing that could happen to the United States.)

Democrats who believe Truman will try again for the nomination pointed to his decision to run in the New Hampshire presidential elector primary election on Mar. 11.

Truman at first decided to withdraw from the New Hampshire contest after his name had been entered by his supporters. Then he yielded to the pleas of Frank McKinney, Democratic national chairman, and allowed his name to remain on the ballot.

Blame For Scandals Put On Congress

FROM now on, when you hear a congressman shouting about "corruption in government" you can justifiably write off a large part of what he says.

A man in one of the best positions to know the facts says that a major part of the blame for corruption in government must be placed upon Congress itself.

That is the conclusion reached by Philip H. Willkie, son of the 1940 presidential nominee. He has just finished serving as chief counsel for the Senate subcommittee on morals and ethics in government, which made a detailed investigation under the chairmanship of Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) last year.

Willkie placed responsibility for federal agency scandals on Congress for paying low salaries to many government officials and for granting absolute powers and then failing to repeal them when no longer needed.

"The crisis for this corrruption is the very character of the kind of government we have," Willkie said.

He pointed out that government administrators are "mostly men with low salaries whose only opportunity for economic advancement lies through doors opened by the interests over whom it is their duty to make arbitrary decisions." Such a situation, he said, is "built for bribery."

BIG STEEL'S BLUFF CALLED.—Loud and frequent claims of steel management that they are worried over inflation were challenged by CIO Steelworkers Pres. Philip Murray when he called on management to join in signing a "fight inflation" petition to Congress. Here Murray signs petition, held by USA Rep. Frank N. Hoffman, but steel management leaders at WSB hearing backed away. (More pictures and stories, Page 3.)

22 Oil Unions Set Deadline For Extensive National Strike

REPRESENTATIVES of 22 oil unions last week set a deadline for an extensive national strike in the petroleum industry.

Deadline for the walkout was set for 12:01 A.M. next Monday, Mar. 3—if an acceptable contract settlement has not then been reached.

The strike date was set at a Denver meeting of a coordinating committee representing the CIO Oil Workers, independent local unions which have a sizeable role in the industry, and the AFL, which represents only a small number of oil workers.

Some 275,000 oil workers are represented by the unions which have joined together to get an adequate wage increase. OWIU, representing about 110,000 is the largest.

Altogether, the 22 unions representing 90% of the workers in the nation's basic oil industry—field drilling and pumping operations, pipe line transportation, and refining.

The strike deadline was forced on the unions by the companies' rejection of the workers' demands. The unions asked for a wage increase of 25c an hour and hiking of night shift differentials.

No major oil company offered wage increases exceeding 4.6%, or about 10c-an-hour, although some companies have agreed to night shift premiums.

The 10c offered by the companies is a cost-of-living increase which is automatically permissible under Wage Stabilization Board regulations, without prior WSB approval.

It will not be announced when and where each company will be struck, although companies will be notified in advance of intention to strike.

"Our policy," said OWIU Pres. O. A. Knight, "has been to cooperate with the companies in arranging orderly shut-downs of operations so that there will be no damage to equipment or danger to lives."

Where contracts ban strikes—as do those of some of the independent unions—the workers will refuse to supply oil products to other struck companies. In the past, struck companies have been able to operate by getting products from non-struck firms. Workers not on strike will aid the strikers.

The results of strike votes taken by locals assure wide rank-and-file support of the strike. About 300 strategic OWIU-CIO bargaining units, representing between 50,000 and 60,000 members, have voted overwhelmingly to strike.

In addition, an indefinite number of other independent unions and AFL locals have authorized the strike.

The union coordinating committee was formed at a conference in St. Louis last November called by OWIU. Eighteen unions responded to the call.

At a second conference earlier this month in Kansas City, 22 unions with 275,000 members were represented. A pledge of cooperation was renewed and bargaining strategy was planned.

TWUA Gets Set For Woolen Deadlock

THE CIO TEXTILE Workers last week got set for a possible strike at American Woolen Co. plants, charging in newspaper ads that the firm "is apparently determined to provoke a strike of almost 20,000 workers in 21 mills scattered across eight states."

The financial statement of the firm, which wants to cut pay, showed that its 1951 net profits after taxes were almost double the 1950 figure.

The net profits last year were $10,057,412, after a book loss of $3,848,330 for inventory. The 1950 figure was $5,309,630.

This is the company which wants to cancel its TWUA contract, which expires Mar. 15, and called for ending the escalator clause, all fringe benefits and an increase in the work load.

TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve announced that the union is willing to settle for the present contract but will not take any cuts in wages or work standards.

American Woolen's latest proposal is that there be a separate contract for each of its 21 mills, instead of the 14-year-old company-wide agreement.

TWUA's woolen and worsted policy committee last week rejected the demand, confirming a similar decision made earlier by the union's American Woolen advisory council.

THE committee made plans to get financial assistance in the event of a strike, by asking all woolen and worsted locals not involved in the current dispute to initiate a special assessment.

A sub-committee to carry out this program consists of J. William Belanger, Jack Rubenstein and Charles Serraino, Massachusetts, New York and New Jersey state directors respectively, and TWUA Sec.-Treas. William Pollock.

The policy committee also set up a sub-committee to act between meetings of the full group. Members are Rieve, George Baldanzi, TWUA executive vice president; Pollock and Chupka.

John Chupka, TWUA's woolen and worsted director, said that half of the union's membership is employed in mills that have renewed their contracts and that those who have canceled their agreements "have no particular demands of their own." He added:

"It has become obvious that American Woolen is not concerned with economic issues, but is embarked on a campaign of union-busting, pure and simple. We feel sure that some, if not all, of the other employers will hesitate to join American Woolen in this kind of adventure."

'Unite Or Die'

The CIO Textile Workers last week hoisted a revised version of the traditional battle-flag of the American Revolution as the emblem for its struggle with the American Woolen Co.

TWUA adopted a variation of the "Rattlesnake Flag," which shows a snake divided into various segments, representing the then-separate colonies, with the slogan "Unite or Die." The union's adaption uses a snake with 21 segments, representing American Woolen's 21 mills.

The company is insisting that the present company-wide contract be abandoned in favor of separate bargaining for each of the mills.

Textile Gets 6c

The CIO Textile Workers won a 6c hourly pay raise and other contract benefits for about 400 workers at Royal Swan Co., Inc., at Allentown, Pa. The new contract runs until Jan. 28, 1953, with a wage reopener six months before the expiration date.

600 Barbers Win $5 Raise In N. Y. Pact

SIX HUNDRED New York City barbers last week won an increase of $5 a week in the basic minimum wage scale in a contract negotiated by Local 11 of the CIO Barbers and Beauty Culturists with the United Master Barbers Association, Inc.

Features of the pact, which runs for two years, include a five-day week, health and welfare fund, eight paid holidays, vacation pay, mediation and arbitration of all disputes, and a no lockout-no strike clause.

The union was represented by Nation Pres. Ernest Herbert and Sec.-Treas. Joseph Visconti of Local 11. Visconti said that Murray M. Gassman, CIO representative, "helped during negotiations and provided the basis for the agreement."

WSB Okehs 25c Hike For 10,000 CIO Aircraft Workers

SOME 10,000 members of the CIO Auto Workers employed in the Douglas Aircraft Co. plant at Long Beach, Calif., were given an immediate wage boost averaging 25c an hour in a Wage Stabilization Board recommendation handed down last week.

The recommendation includes a general 10% increase plus 9c an hour to be applied to the base pay, which has averaged $1.61; additional increases in some job rates; automatic increases of 5c every 16 weeks for workers of higher skills; the same increases for workers of lesser skills up to a point 5c below the maximum pay in each grade, beyond which merit would govern boosts, and a 1.14% increase every time the Bureau of Labor Statistics' consumer price index rises 1%.

The board still has to act on retroactivity of the wage increases and on the union shop, which Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the UAW said was essential to peaceful settlement of the dispute with management.

A six-weeks strike last fall sent the case to the WSB. The strikers went back to work when President Truman certified the case to the board, which in turn named a special panel to examine the issues.

The WSB recommendation, which also covers about 300 welders in an independent union, is not binding. It is believed, however, that it will settle the dispute, as continued disagreement could lead to another strike and the appointment of a presidential fact finding board which probably would make the same recommendations as the WSB.

Workers Authorize Strike At Bethlehem Shipyards

ARMED WITH an overwhelming membership authorization to call a strike, CIO Shipbuilding Workers' negotiators met last week with Bethlehem Steel representatives in another effort to conclude a contract covering the firm's eight East Coast shipyards.

IUMSWA officers were authorized to call a strike Mar. 1 in meetings at the Bethlehem shipyards at Brooklyn, where there are two yards, and Staten Island, N. Y.; Hoboken, N. J.; East Boston and Quincy, Mass., and Sparrows Point and Key Highway, Md. The strike-enabling vote was 26,643 to 532.

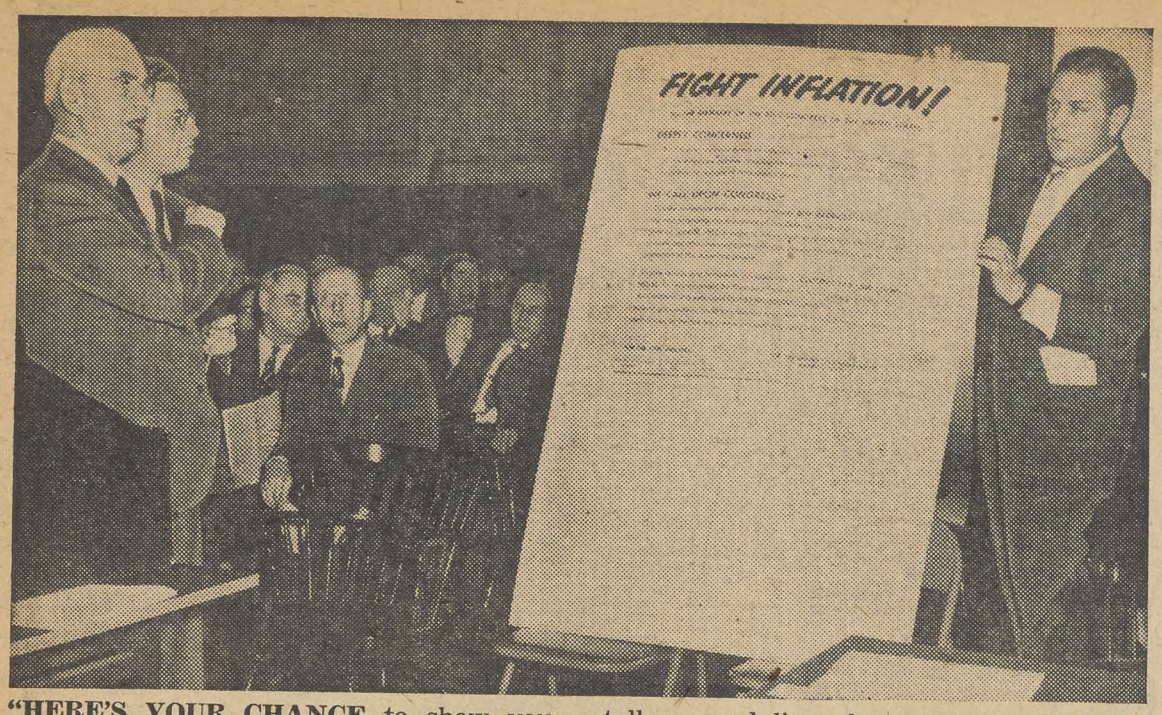
The union has asked a 20c wage increase and other benefits in contract talks which began early in December and were resumed on Feb. 15 after a long adjournment. The Dec. 31 contract expiration date was extended to Mar. 1 under the terms of the old agreement.

IUMSWA Pres. John J. Grogan said that vote put the responsibility for averting a strike on the Bethlehem executives and "underscored the seriousness of the Shipbuilders' plight in an already aggravated and grievous condition where we have sacrificed our parity with workers' wage scales in other major industries and in the face of the skyrocketing cost of living."

Ex-Rep. Karst Files For Another Term

Ray Karst, Missouri Democrat who served in Congress from 1948 to 1951, last week filed for the Democratic nomination for U. S. representative from the new 3d district in St. Louis.

He has been practicing law in Washington since 1951. His candidacy is supported by many CIO and AFL leaders and the major Democratic leaders of his district.



"HERE'S YOUR CHANCE to show you mean it," Pres. Philip Murray of the CIO Steelworkers tells steel employers as "fight inflation" petition to Congress is unveiled at WSB panel hearing. Steel bosses, who talk a good line about inflation, held up their hands in horror. At Murray's left is Arthur J. Goldberg, union general counsel, and at right is Frank N. Hoffman, USA representative.

"KEEP THE HUMAN ELEMENT in mind," Steelworkers Pres. Philip Murray tells WSB panel in the union's closing argument. At left, USA Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes and Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers listen to Murray's summation of the union's case.

Angry Words Mark WSB Hearing

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

A GOVERNMENT panel is studying a million words of testimony this week in the hope of finding a peaceful settlement of the steel wage dispute.

While the union's Wage-Policy Committee agreed to a 28-day postponement of a threatened strike, the two public members of the panel which heard the union and industry debate the case, met with public members of the Wage Stabilization Board in Washington.

The WSB chairman, Nathan Feinsinger, said the board expects to begin considering the steel case "within a week or 10 days." He said the board expects to have the first report from its special panel, headed by Dr. Harry Shulman of Yale, by that time.

Feinsinger said the WSB decided to speed up the case by considering the panel's recommendations in separate "chunks" for each of the 22 issues raised by the union. The WSB is scheduled to submit its recommendations to Pres. Truman in the next few weeks.

The long series of hearings—held in both Washington and New York—wound up in a flurry of sharp words and angry retorts.

Pres. Philip Murray of the United Steelworkers of America led off the union's day-and-a-half rebuttal testimony with a 90-minute speech, in which he charged that the industry:

1. Had turned down every request of the union and had evaded the responsibilities of good-faith collective bargaining.

2. Had applied double-standard economic arguments to the workers' pay proposals.

3. Had falsely and cynically raised the issues of inflation and tax losses for the federal government.

4. Had sought to force the union into a strike in order to provoke the government into granting the steel industry "completely unjustified price increases."

He read a long list of salary figures paid to top executives in the industry—as well as substantial increases in recent years—and commented that these same men sound off "against the worker who gets as low as $1.31 and $1.66 an hour—the underpaid and the underprivileged."

"He got a salary of $269,547 in 1950, and an increase of $86,587, or 45% that year, but he's busting his britches to kick the hell out of the steelworkers."

The industry's temper came near the boiling point, however, when Murray called its bluff on the inflation-taxation issue, about which the company spokesmen had put scores of thousands of words into the record.

Unveiling a 4x5 foot petition to Congress, Murray called on the industry leaders to join with the union in a joint assault on the two problems.

The petition, entitled "Fight Inflation", urged Congress to extend and strengthen the Defense Production Act, including price controls; and to pass Pres. Truman's plan for collecting $5.5 billion from corporations and wealthy individuals, through a closing of present loopholes in the tax law.

Murray and other steel union officers signed the petition. The industry men sat in glum silence as he invited them to sign it. Eventually, Vice-Pres. John Stephens of U. S. Steel got around to calling the speech and the petition a "carnival."

Steelworkers Grant Last Truce Extension

WARNING "the patience of our members is running out," CIO Steelworkers late last week gave the Wage Stabilization Board an additional 28 days in which to attempt to resolve the deadlock in the nation's basic steel industry.

The USA executive board and Intl. Wage-Policy Committee, meeting in Pittsburgh, struck at the "filibustering" by steel management which has delayed a WSB decision.

It urged the WSB "promptly to make its recommendations."

And it authorized Pres. Philip Murray to call a steel strike on or after Mar. 23, "in the event a fair basis for an equitable settlement of the dispute is not forthcoming by that date."

The steel union, in allowing the government the period since Jan. 1. to act, made plain that a strike is coming if agreement is not reached shortly.

"We hope that a strike may be averted but the patience of our members is running out," the Wage-Policy Committee said.

"We do not propose that further meetings of this Policy Committee be called for the purpose of considering further postponements."

Tracing the lengthy history of negotiations and government hearings since last November, the union said:

"Our dispute is still unresolved. Our demands continue to receive a uniform 'no' from steel management.

"The cost of living continues to rise and the economic pressure on the families of steelworkers, as on almost every worker's family in America, becomes more burdensome each day.

"The industry's case presented in eight days of testimony boiled down simply to the word 'no,' 1000 times repeated.

"That simple 'no' to each and every one of our demands was accompanied by as distorted and provocative a series of statements as has ever been presented to a government agency by an American industry."

A Government-Decreed Union Shop To Settle The Steel And Other Disputes Will Amount To Just That

If the C.I.O. wins a 16-cent-an-hour increase and a union shop in the steel industry, the wage-price

A JOHNSTOWN FLOOD of crocodile tears for the self-made suckers who don't want to join unions is being wept over the country as a by-product of the CIO Steelworkers' demand for the union shop.

Gwinn, who helped the CCG get millions of pieces of propaganda into the mail without stamps by loaning it his mailing frank (he was howling for goverenmt economy at the same time), discussed the "sinister significance" of the steel negotiations. And a wage boost for steel workers, he said, will send the country to the dogs. This is strange indeed; the usual CCG propaganda line is that the country went to the dogs during the Roosevelt administration.

Yet while housewives and workers groan over what happens to paychecks at grocery stores, the big wholesale and retail grocers and chain store and independent operators announce a lobbying drive to wipe out such slight food price controls as now exist.

They'll probably get a warm reception in the "Horsemeat" Congress, which is stalling on President Truman's requests to put some teeth in the "Capehartized" Defense Production Act.

It's time for us to put some steam behind the President's proposals.

State's Rights Supreme

Every once in a great while (in non-election years) Sen. Taft makes some pretense of being interested in human welfare.

But every time his candor catches up with him, as it did last week when the Senate Finance Committee began hearing the bill to give extra federal unemployment benefits to areas hard hit by layoffs, usually because of defense cuts in civilian production.

The thousands of unemployed men and women are growing in number in Michigan, New England, New York and elsewhere.

But Taft would ignore them. State's rights, he says, are more important than starvation. The U. S. can't act, he claims, because that would "federalize" the present hodge-podge of state unemployment laws.

It's still true that Congress has acted handsomely to help corporations during the defense emergency, and its past time that it protected workers and their families against hardship.

How Long, J. Howard?

The FBI is to be commended for the arrest of 10 Klansmen—including a deputy sheriff and a constable—in North Carolina.

It is now two months since the Christmas bomb blast which killed Harry Moore and his wife in Florida. More than a month ago, Atty. Gen. J. Howard McGrath promised a delegation, including a CIO representative, that a vigorous federal investigation was under way. It's past time for some results.

Fairless The Fakir

Reds, Fascists Work Together

Following is a digest of an article by Mark Alexander which appeared in the New Leader, labor-liberal weekly. The authors' observation that Communists and Fascists in the Middle East have formed an alliance bears out the views expressed by John Roy Carlson (author of Under Cover and The Plotters) in his recent book, Cairo to Damascus.

ON JAN. 26 in Cairo a man named Ahmed Hussein was arrested and charged with "top responsibility" for anti-British riots which had raged in the city.

Other reports mentioned that the riots were the work of the "Socialist party of Egypt." There is no contradiction between these two assertions, for Ahmed Hussein is the leader and founder of the Egyptian Socialist party, and it is not unlikely that it played a key role in instigating the violence.

Nor that, behind this "socialist' party, was the long arm of the Kremlin.

Ahmed Hussein's "socialist party" is socialist in name only. Until a few months ago, it was known as the Young Egypt party, and was notorious for its pro-Nazi, terrorist leanings. Ahmed Hussein is, in fact, recognized as the founder of Egyptian Fascism. In addition, Hussein is a prominent member of the Middle East Peace Council, a Communist front.

The Communists have maintained intimate relations with the extreme rightist Moslem Brotherhood ever since Communist and Brotherhood leaders were interned together in 1949. Afterward, the Communists instructed their adherents to join the Brotherhood's "liberation battalions."

It is this tie between Communism and Middle East Fascism which, in all likehood, lies at the bottom of the Cairo rioting and which makes the general situation in the Middle East highly explosive.

The central figure in the Communist-Fascist Middle Eastern alliance is the ex-Mufti of Jerusalem, Haj Amin el Husseini. Haj Amin, who has been many things in the course of his long and remarkable career, cannot be said ever to have been remotely liberal in outlook. A close wartime friend and collaborator of Hitler's, the ex-Mufti has usually been identified with stark reaction. Nevertheless, he is also a Communist favorite.

Most of the Arabian leaders who favor playing ball with the Communists know little, if anything, about Communism, and what they know is hardly to their taste.

Essentially, they regard Soviet Communism as another form of imperialism that can be played off against the West. What they do not realize, however, is that the initiative has passed slowly but surely to Communism: Most of the anti-imperialist demonstrations, from Cairo to Teheran, are nowadays organized by the Communists.

One might well ask why there has not been more trouble than we have had. The answer is that Communism in the Middle East may be a lusty phenomenon but also possesses serious weaknesses.

The first is that it is utterly dependent upon foreign direction, and Moscow is not yet clear whether it wants to see the "Chinese solution" applied or "people's democracies" created. Further, the generation of Middle East Communists which was trained in Moscow has given way to a locally nurtured leadership which, being shot through with nationalism, is not trusted by the Kremlin.

FINALLY, the Arab Communist leaders are rarely of proletariat origin, and this is a serious defect in a region where the masses live in total squalor. The Syrian and Egyptian Politburos, for instance, are dominated by bankers, absentee landlords and industrialists.

From this it is evident that the upsurge of Communism in the Middle East is not a direct result of the undoubted need for social and economic reform.

Nationalism, not "socialism," is the decisive issue. The Communists have taken cognizance of this fact and have, therefore, deliberately soft-pedalled socialism demands. The resulting alliance with the Right is sometimes embarrassing, but generally serves well the aims of Moscow.

Strategically, Communism in the Middle East—as it showed itself most recently to be in Egypt—is a fifth column that is not supposed to march until the other four columns are on the way.

Behind The Headlines—

Why Steel Workers 'Worry' Over Tear Gas

The steel workers are "worried," says USA Pres. Phillip Murray, that if they are forced on strike, the industry will use violence against its employes as it has many times in the past.

As the WSB panel hearings wound up, Murray recalled that the steel industry had spent $1.2 millions in the early Thirties for arms and tear gas, and he suggested:

"Perhaps munitions are already stored for use against strikers. No wonder the steel workers are worried on the basis of the industry's past record."

While the industry denied any such present intention, this dispatch recalls how the steel industry has treated steel workers in the past.

By IRVING FAGAN
For Labor Press Associated

"I BELIEVE that no industry can permanently succeed that does not treat its employes equitably and humanely," said Judge Elbert H. Gary, founder of United States Steel Corp., and its chief executive officer for 26 years.

" . . . We are unalterably opposed to any extension of union labor and advise subsidiary companies . . . not to recognize it. That was said by the same U.S. Steel Corp., in 1910, the year it was formed by swallowing up Carnegie Steel and other corporations.

In the famous general steel strike of 1919, Negroes were imported by the thousands to act as strikebreakers. Company agents were instructed to " . . . stir up as much bad feeling as you possibly can between the Serbians and the Italians. Spread data among the Serbians that the Italians are going back to work . . . Urge them to go back to work or the Italians will get their jobs."

The World Interchurch Movement, which investigated the strike, reported: denial of the rights of assembly and free speech; interference with meetings; arrests without charges and often without warrants; provocation by hirelings and spies; invasion of the homes of strikers without legal proceedings; brutality and violence by sheriffs and city police; the use of federal and state troops.

In 1937 seventeen pickets were killed in the "Memorial Day Massacre" in Chicago, where employes of Republic Steel were trying to form a union.

Less than a generation ago the seven-day week and the twelve-hour day were standard in steel. Towns and houses were company-owned.

In 1889, the workers at Homestead, Pa., rebelled. The state militia was used against the strikers. Union leaders were arrested wholesale. There were heavy fines for union activity. Spies and provocations were imported, including armed Pinkerton agents. The strikers won, but three years later at Carnegie Steel, the workers were locked out for five months, and unionism was crushed.

In the 1919 general strike, although there were only 100,000 union members, 275,000 men walked out. Management said the strikers were "aliens" and "anarchists." The churches were used to whip up feeling against the strikers.

In the next decade the steel companies beat the drum for "the American Plan"—that is, open shop, anti-union, and the branding of unionism as a "foreign influence."

The U.S. Steel Corp. last April published its history under the title "Steel Serves the Nation." It says of Judge Gary that he was at the forefront of American industrialists in instituting welfare and safety programs and other measures for the betterment of working conditions.

Yet the history says that Judge Gary, in the 1919 strike, "refused to see representatives of the strike committee on the grounds that they did not represent workers of the Corporation and had never been in its employ and therefore had no right to speak for them."

There is nothing in the history about the big anti-union "American Plan" campaign in the 1920's. The history skips from 1919 to 1937, with the signing of the first contract between the corporation and the then Steel Workers Organizing Committee.

The position of U.S. Steel today in resisting union demands for a pay increase and other changes is that it is acting for the best interests of the nation as a whole.

Said Benjamin F. Fairless, president of U.S. Steel: "The granting of the all-embracing non-economic demands of the union, which include such things as a union shop and a guaranteed annual wage, would mean turning over to labor the control of many essential managerial prerogatives. That we cannot voluntarily do."

Note: There are thousands upon thousands of union shop contracts—and in no case has that meant "turning over to labor the control of many essential managerial prerogatives." There are firms that have instituted the annual wage—and have prospered.

Sign Of Desperation—

Taft's 'Useless War' Cry Is 'Playing Politics With Misery'

SEN. TAFT is going up and down the land denouncing U. S.-United Nations resistance to Communist aggression in Korea as a "useless, unnecessary war" and as "Truman's war."

And he's alternating these arguments, in his campaign for the Republican presidential nomination, with a call for the U. S. to spread the war to China by arming Chiang Kai-shek's Formosa forces for an invasion of the mainland.

Taft is "playing politics with human misery," said Columnist Lowell Mellett. Similar comments were voiced by two other columnists, Tom Stokes and Marquis Childs.

Mellett struck at Taft's "useless war" cry and his assertion that President Truman is not trying to win the war in Korea, saying:

"This is not honest. Further it is a cruel deception, since it is aimed in part at the unhappy hearts of those who have lost or are fearful of losing relatives in the war the Senator describes as useless. The Senator has become a demogogue in his desperate drive to obtain the office so long denied him.

"The basis for calling the war useless probably lies in the false premise of the Senator and his partisans that it might have been avoided if the administration had gone hog wild in its support of Chiang Kai-shek; if it hadn't sought to 'appease' the Communists in China.

"But even if this premise were true, it would not make the war 'useless' now. Senator Taft did not think that at the time Mr. Truman put American troops at the service of the United Nations in resistance to the invasion of South Korea.

"He commended the President's prompt action then, only protesting that he should have first obtained a declaration of war from Congress.

"IF THERE ever were an instance of playing politics with human misery, we are now seeing it in Taft's campaigning and the campaigning of those who follow his line."

Stokes warned that our "spiritual defenses . . . can be weakened from within—by ourselves through self-created 'fifth-columns.'" He went on:

"It seems proper to ask, for example, how long Senator Taft should permit himself to go up and down the land calling the United Nations' stand against aggression in Korea 'a useless war' and 'Truman's war.'

"Enough of this might well tend, at least temporarily and at a critical time, to undermine the faith of some of us in ourselves, in our ideals as a Nation, and in the principle of collective security to challenge aggressors and keep the peace for which the United Nations was established in the first instance . . .

"Senator Taft is doing his party a great disservice by his attitude; for his party can't stand on his defeatism and regain the confidence of our people. He is creating a schism in his party, as becomes evident every day, making it hard for it to regain the trust of our people.

And Taft's supporters brook no deviation from the Ohio Senator's policies, according to Childs. He wrote:

"Above all, among these managers in the Taft wing of the party the signs are evident of a growing determination to go it alone; to read out of the party—and for that matter, out of human society—anyone who does not subscribe not merely to Taft, but to the whole decalogue of reaction.

"Me-too-ism may have lost the election of 1948, although that is debatable. Me-ism — completely self-centered concentration on the prejudices and the predilictions of one limited group of voters—can lose the election of '52."

'Shame List' Fails To Cut Relief Rolls, Figures Show

THE "SHAME LIST" tactic of making public the names of relief recipients has had virtually no effect upon the size of relief caseloads, despite advance claims to the contrary by supporters of the Jenner Amendment.

When the Jenner Amendment —allowing inspection of relief rolls—was added to a tax bill and rammed through Congress last year, its supporters claimed there were large numbers of "chiselers" and "fraudulent" relief claimants, who would be exposed and eliminated by "publicity."

But it hasn't worked out that way, the Federal Security Agency revealed last week.

Indiana was the first state to open its rolls for inspection, as of last Oct. 30. But the caseload declined by only 1.3%. Illinois was another early state to adopt the "poor law" program, but the drop was .2%.

"If public access to names would lower the caseloads," said Oscar Ewing, FSA chief, "spectacular declines should have appeared in Indiana in November and in Illinois in December. This did not happen."

Ewing pointed out the reductions were "about the same as for previous months and no greater than in several other states."

THE "shame list" plan of the Jenner Amendment has been carried to the extreme in Maryland. One of several relief bills pending in the Legislature would make mandatory the publication of a full list of all relief recipients—old age, dependent children, etc. This goes far beyond the opening of relief rolls to public inspection.

And in the nation's capital, the District of Columbia Commissioners have reversed themselves and urged Federal legislation opening Washington's rolls to inspection.

The action was condemned by a half dozen labor and social agencies, including T. J. McCarthy, vice president of the D. C. CIO Council, as a proposal for "shaming the people on relief."

Civil Rights Leaders Get More Doubletalk From Congress; Plan Fight At Ballot Box

THE FIGHT for anti-discrimination legislation last week took on new impetus when it was carried directly to individual members of Congress by 900 delegates to the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, held Feb. 17 and 18 in Washington.

It was an educational process for the delegates, as well as the congressmen. Each available member of the Senate and House was cornered by his own constituents among the delegates and asked five specific questions about his position on civil rights.

The answers were reported back to the full conference, where it was generally agreed that there had been too much Congressional doubletalk and indifference on civil rights matters.

Disillusioned but not disheartened, the delegates unanimously pledged themselves to "carry this vital fight into the precincts where the people of America live and vote."

The delegations who called upon them came from 35 states and the District of Columbia and represented 52 national non-Communist organizations. They made clear to congressmen that this was not a "minority" protest.

Sponsored by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the CIO, AFL and religious, veterans and civic groups, the conference opened Sunday afternoon with an address by NAACP Administrator Roy Wilkins.

This was followed by a mock "trial" of the civil rights issue before Presiding Judge Robert W. Ming, midwest regional chairman of the American Veterans Committee. Six witnesses, including Paul Sifton, Washington legislative representative of the CIO Auto Workers, presented the case for civil rights on behalf of the American people.

Many delegates spontaneously gave supplementary testimony.

Art Hindson, of CIO Auto Workers Local 212, Detroit, likened the tactics of the Dixiecrats to Vishinsky's methods, declaring:

After state delegations had been organized, a capacity audience turned out for a banquet and addresses in the Statler Hotel ballroom. Four leading Senate supporters of civil rights legislation predicted confidently that victory is "much closer than our proponents realize."

Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) reminded the delegates that "the very fact that we can meet here in Washington and in this hotel is in itself a major victory for our cause."

He recalled the discriminatory policies which had previously prevented interracial meetings at Washington hotels and said that no small tribute was due the management of the Statler chain for making the meeting possible in a capital that is largely Jim Crow.

"This conference meets in Washington because we know that it is in the halls of Congress that discrimination and intolerance are fighting their last battles," Humphrey declared.

"Our meeting tonight will stand as a symbol and eternal reminder that this community—the national capital—belongs to all the people all of the time."

The real work of the conference began Monday morning when delegates ove flowed the Senate Caucus Room to g final instructions before making individu calls upon their congressmen.

They heard CIO Sec.-Treas. James Carey, chairman of the CIO Committee Abolish Discrimination, characterize th "basic aim" of all civil rights supporte as being a desire for real democracy prevail in the Senate where filibuster ru now prevails.

He said the CIO demands for all person

1. Economic equality, the right to job at equal pay for equal work wi equal opportnuity to be promoted in a cordance with merit.

2. Political equality, the right to pa ticipate equally at the ballot box selecting the government, national or loca

Severe penalties, including death, for vandalism resulting from "racial and religious prejudice" are provided in a bill introduced in the House Feb. 14 by Rep. Heller (D. N. Y.).

The death penalty could be imposed when victims suffer injury or death, as in the case of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Moore, who were killed in the Christmas bombing of their Florida home.

CIO Protests Bias In Panama; Gains Of U. S. Negroes Hailed

THE RECORD of accelerated economic and social progress of Negroes in the United States—with high praise for the CIO—was given workers in Denmark recently by Mrs. Eugenie Anderson, U. S. ambassador to that country.

Mrs. Anderson was a speaker at the National CIO Convention in New York last November. Her address to the Danish Workers Educational Association served to clarify for her audience a picture of the role of the Negro in America that is often distorted by the time it gets to European workers.

The transition of the Negro from farm worker to industrial worker, she said, is illustrated by the fact that whereas 100,000 were employed in industry in 1910, the figure had risen to 1.5 million in 1950. The labor unions, she said, played an important part.

"The Congress of Industrial Organizations—the CIO—which was first organized in the early 1930's took a firm stand, from its very beginning, against race discrimination," she said.

"Since the CIO organized labor in the heavy industries such as automobile, steel, rubber and mine workers, this orientation was especially important for Negroes. It is estimated that out of the six million members of the CIO, at least 500,000 are Negroes; while another 600,000 Negroes are members of the American Federation of Labor, which has eight million members.

"The CIO has had for a number of years a national committee to combat discrimination. This committee has been active throughout the nation on behalf of Negro workers.

"Walter Reuther's Auto Workers, affiliated with the CIO, should be mentioned as having taken a vigorous stand."

THE CIO, through its Committee on Latin-American Affairs, last week lodged vigorous protest against the flagrant refusal of a government-operated hotel in the Panama Canal Zone to provide accommodations for a distinguished visiting Negro surgeon.

A strongly worded complaint was filed with Gov. Francis K. Newcomer of the Canal Zone on behalf of the committee by Dr. Ernst Schwarz, executive secretary. Copies went to Sec. of Defense Robert A. Lovett and Assistant Sec. of State Edward G. Miller.

Victims of the discrimination were Dr. G. V. Harry, Panama-born surgeon now practicing in Jamaica, and Mrs. Harry. They were refused accommodations at the Washington Hotel in Colon when they appeared to claim rooms reserved by phone 10 minutes earlier. Dr. Harry, a fellow of the British Royal College of Surgeons, was in Panama as a delegate to a sectional meeting of the American College of Surgeons.

Schwarz pointed out to Newcomer that the hotel is operated by the Panama Canal Co., "an entity set up and administered under your supervision and thus under the jurisdiction of the U. S. Government." Its refusal to give Dr. and Mrs. Harry the rooms reserved, he maintained, "is in blatant contradiction with the policy of equal rights repeatedly announced and supported by the President of the United States."

The letter demanded an official investigation and reprimand of those responsible "for this violation of human rights."

"You are undoubtedly aware," it concluded, "of the damage done by happenings of this kind to our country throughout the Hemisphere and beyond, unless steps are taken to remedy attitudes and actions in complete contradiction to democratic principles."

Unionists From 3 States Join Enthusiastically In New England CIO School

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

THE PLANE dropped carefully down on a windswept runway cleared out of a field of snow and came gradually to a stop.

We crawled stiffly out of the little hedgehopper, eased down the slippery portable iron steps and fought our way against the icy gale toward the small shelter a short distance away.

A quick look around the countryside blanketed in snow, dazzling brightly in the winter sunshine, made us think of Alaska, but we really were only a few hundred miles from New York City. For the past two hours we'd been flying over the hills, valleys, forests, farmlands and towns of New England, to the little airport of Montpelier, Vt.

(Exciting places—these little airports which have popped up all over the country. An air of drama and suspense seems to hang over them such as once must have pervaded the stage coach stops of pioneer America.)

A little dickering with the driver of the big auto stage and we arranged to be taken right to our destination, Goddard College, at Plainfield, about 10 miles away.

There were five of us in the party on our way to the Northern New England school sponsored by the National CIO and the Vermont, New Hampshire and Maine CIO Councils. Four were from CIO headquarters in Washington: George Guernsey, associate education director, his two assistants, Stuart Brock and Ben Segal, and your CIO News reporter.

The fifth member of the group was Baruch Shesinski, the friendly and well-informed labor representative from Israel. He is secretary of the Metal Trades Union in Israel and a member of the Haifa Labor Council.

A winding drive up a long snow-covered road off the main highway brought us to the cluster of rambling brown shingle buildings which is Goddard College. This unusual school, renowned in educational circles for its informal and unorthodox teaching methods and facilities, was once a farm.

The regular students at this small liberal arts college, some 100 or more boys and girls, were away working for two months at whatever jobs they could find—a requirement of Goddard's curriculum which made it possible for the CIO to obtain use of the college facilities for its one-week school.

Registration showed that seven CIO International unions were represented by the 29 student delegates sent by their locals and councils to attend the Vermont school.

The Textile Workers Union headed the list with 11 members, nine of them from the troubled ranks of Local 579 at the big American Woolen plant at Winooski, Vt., where a strike is threatened Mar. 15. (The company has announced that it will not renew the contract without a wage cut.) The three women students at the school were all textile workers from Winooski.

Other unions represented were the Steelworkers, Stone and Allied Workers, Shoe Workers, Lithographers and Auto Workers. Also present were three members from the CIO's newest affiliate, the National Association of Broadcast Engineers and Technicians, in New York, who were given special permission to attend the New England school.

Many Visitors

Vermont CIO Pres. James F. Christie, Vice-Pres. W. John Mitchell of the Stone Workers, one of Vermont's most important unions; and CIO Regional Director Frank Carmichael from Boston, all warm supporters of the school, were among the CIO officials who visited the school and spoke to the students.

As usual at CIO schools, a heavy schedule of morning classes, afternoon workshops and evening speakers kept the students closely occupied during the week, but they gobbled it up—there was little if any absenteeism.

That the CIO delegates were deeply interested showed not only in the class discussions but also at mealtime and recreation periods, when groups would linger at the table or gather in a corner to continue a talk—not to mention the bull sessions that went on in the dormitories to all hours of the morning.

At a morning class, you'd find Ben Segal standing with his foot on a chair in front of a table piled high with books and pamphlets, giving informal talks on labor history and drawing out of the CIO students some of their own past experiences.

Or across the hall, you could listen in on Scott Hoyman's class on New Englands' economy, and perhaps hear him say: "Union people have just as much or more at stake in what happens to the industrial development of their town as any noisy Chamber of Commerce."

(Scott is TWUA's PAC director in northern New England.)

At a later class, you might hear Henry Murray, National PAC representative, telling what it takes to run a good political drive—not just "pamphlets, slogans, sound trucks and radio speeches," he said emphatically, but also plenty of plain hard grubbing work on the local level.

And at another session, Stuart Brock would be hammering away on the subject of how to do an active job back home in the local union. "If we could only get our own people to be active," he said, "if we could get our own six million members all steamed up, we could do a hell of a lot to get better legislation."

Popular speakers at evening sessions included Larry Rogin, TWUA publicity and education director, who told of the CIO's efforts to organize southern workers, and the foreign visitor from Israel, Sheshiski, who gave a moving talk on the pioneer struggles and achievements of the Jewish people there.

Members Modest

Certainly a visit to a CIO regional school such as the one held at Goddard College in Vermont is a good way to find out what kind of people make up the big sprawling militant labor organization of six million members that has impressed itself so deeply on the modern industrial scene during the past 15 years.

You can't help but think, as you listen to these CIO members discuss what's happening in their plants and communities, that some of our leaders in government and industry could learn much from them.

Not since the workers themselves believe this. They speak up modestly and often doubt that anything they know about is important. But given the same time and chance to think and talk things over that they have at CIO schools, workers can tell plenty that is revealing of what is happening today in the United States.

AFTER SUPPER students relaxed in the recreation room before the evening discussion started. Representatives of seven CIO international unions attended the school.

WHAT WILL HAPPEN if industries continue to move South? Scott Hoyman (right) leads discussion.

The Biggest Battle—

Foes Of Price Lids Having Field Day In Congress

(First of two articles.)

By MILTON PLUMB

WHAT is likely to be the most crucial battle that this session of the "Horsemeat" 82nd Congress will fight on the issue of price "controls"—if anyone would still call them that—is already approaching a climax. So far, the foes of price control are having things pretty much their own way.

Officially, Congress won't deal with the issue until it takes up the question of renewing the Defense Production Act next month.

Actually, congressional opponents of effective anti-inflation legislation have been hacking away at even the inadequate provisions of the present law since they returned in January.

This time their behind-the-scenes attack is one of indirection. No competent observer believes, since this is an election year, that Congress will fail to extend at least the major provisions of the present phony "controls" law.

There is a good chance, however, that, unless public opinion is immediately aroused, additional gimmicks will be written into the law to make it still more ineffective at a time when living costs are a record high.

Urged on by the same big business lobbies that killed workable inflation curbs last year, congressional foes of price control have gone a long way toward victory for one such proposal—the compulsory decontrol of items now selling below ceilings.

By jumping the gun while attention of supporters of price control has been focused elsewhere, the forces of inflation have already lined up most big business lobbies behind the "decontrol" campaign.

So much pressure has been exerted by Congress upon the Office of Price Stabilization that a committee of that group now is studying whether the decontrol of some items is "advisable."

The committee was created reluctantly by former Price Stabilizer Michael V. DiSalle just before he resigned to run for the Senate from Ohio.

DiSalle previously had been summoned before the Joint Congressional Economic Committee and raked over the coals about the "unnecessary record keeping" which congressmen said OPS regulations imposed upon businessmen. Why, the committee wanted to know, shouldn't items selling below ceiling be decontrolled so that such records wouldn't be needed?

Even as he announced the committee, however, DiSalle hit back. He said that all studies by OPS so far had indicated "that the extent of price weakness has been greatly exaggerated by some who have only a superficial knowledge of the situation or by some who use this as a means to attack controls generally."

Bigger Boobytraps

He also warned that "there are many potential dangers and difficulties in suspension or decontrol of major commodites at this time."

Actually, this new "decontrol" proposal presents a far greater threat to the nation's economic stability than any of the "economic boobytraps" set by foes of price control last year. If written into law, it could bring on a national economic disaster.

The experience of the country bears this out. The same phony "decontrol" argument was probably the most effective weapon used by the National Association of Manufacturers back in 1945 and 1946 in its successful drive to end wartime price controls prematurely. Prices shot skyward immediately thereafter.

Moreover, the argument, that since most consumer goods prices are currently below OPS ceilings there is no reason to continue controls on those items, is illogical to the core.

Actually, the direct contrary is the case: The current price situation is one of the clearest evidences of the need for much stronger price control legislation.

For proof, consider the case of grease wool, an item which the powerful sheep growers' lobby is working to decontrol. The price of this commodity at parity which has long been generally regarded as the "fair" return for farm produce is 57c a pound.

It's now selling at 63c, and the OPS ceiling is $1. Yet, under the present Defense Production Act, the minimum ceiling price which OPS can set is 95c.

What it means is simply that Congress last year so rigged the law that OPS can't set ceilings low enough to have any effect whatever on the prices of most items. But now Congress, complaining that prices are below the artificially high ceilings it set by law, is using this fact as an argument to bolster its "decontrol" drive.

The greatest immediate danger lies in the possibility that OPS, in an effort to stave off the growing drive to write a compulsory decontrol provision into the law, may go along part way. OPS might, some observers believe, try to offer a sop to the "decontrol" forces in Congress by recommending that several "soft" items be taken out from under controls.

Cotton, wool and other textiles, for example, last year felt no price pressures because of a general depression in the industry brought on by overproduction.

It happens that Sen. Maybank (D. S.C.), chairman of the Senate Banking Committee which will draft the new law, has a record of loyal service to the cotton lobby. Hence, there is some reason to fear that the OPS decontrol committee may decide to recommend taking controls off cotton and other textiles in the hope of preventing drastic action on other items.

Pressure for some such move is being put on OPS by businessmen manning the defense mobilization agencies. Although they urge "compromise decontrol" action ostensibly on the grounds that it will stave off Congress, their interest is a tip-off to the philosophy behind the whole "decontrol" movement.

Past experience has shown that as soon as one item is decontrolled, it immediately is used as an argument for taking price control off something else. How, the foes of price control then ask, can you fairly keep price control on this commodity when that one isn't under control?

A danger even greater than such a spreading extension of decontrol, however, lies in the fatal effect that even temporary removal of controls would have upon the entire anti-inflation program.

One pending proposal is that, once an item has been selling 5% below its ceiling for 60 days it would have to be decontrolled. OPS then could recontrol it only if it later sold above its former ceiling for 60 days.

However, under the present law it would take much longer than that to bring such an item back under control. Since OPS is required to consult its industry advisory committee and to make a market survey before imposing a ceiling on any item, at least 45 days more would elapse.

Sky-High 'Ceilings'

Throughout this minimum period of 105 days, the price might shoot skyward and nothing could be done about it. Congress made it clear that it won't tolerate price rollbacks when it killed the pending rollbacks on beef last year, and the new "ceiling" therefore might well be the roof of the sky itself.

Even that assumes, however, the highly improbable continued existence of OPS machinery for recontrol. Once commodities are decontrolled, members of the OPS staff dealing with them will be released from their positions and many industry advisory committees will cease to function.

That happened after the last war when price controls were wrecked. It took several months for OPS to hire the staff of trained economists it had to have before it could begin to function.

"Decontrol" advocates, of course, are counting on their being no one around to "recontrol" the decontrolled items once they break their ceilings.

(Next: The phony drive to eliminate "unnecessary" business records and other behind-the-scenes moves to boost existing prices by subterfuge.)

Stronger Controls Needed: Putnam

Taking direct issue with the growing drive in Congress to end price controls, Economic Stabilizer Roger L. Putnam said last week that the government needs still more controls to check inflation.

"We must try to get the revenues we need to keep defense as nearly as possible on a pay-as-we-go basis," he said.

"And above all we need a greater realization among all elements of the economy that fighting inflation is a personal assignment for each of us."

Senate Unit Reports CIO, AFL Opposition To New Statute On Red-Run Unions

LEADERS of the nation's democratic labor organizations have gone on record before the Senate Labor subcommittee in opposition to new legislation dealing with Communist-run unions.

The results of the subcommittee's survey of the opinions of labor, business and government leaders were released last week by its chairman, Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.). His group is scheduled to open hearings early in March on "the problem of Communist dominated unions and national security."

In separate statements, CIO Pres. Philip Murray and AFL Pres. William Green said that unions can best do the job of beating Communists in the labor movement on their own. Both pointed out that the non-Communist section of the Taft-Hartley Act had failed to root Communists out of the labor movement, but that unions themselves had done so.

"The Communists are on the run in the labor movements; their influence is declining day after day," Murray said. "Legislation, with all its inherent dangers, is not necessary to keep them on the run and to reduce their powers to insignificance."

MURRAY'S position was supported also in separate statements filed by Pres. Joseph Curran of the CIO Maritime Union and Pres. James B. Carey of the CIO Electrical Workers.

The IUE, which as Carey pointed out has "had more continuous and direct experience with the Communist problem in American industry than any other labor organization," did, however, call for greater administrative action on the part of both government and industry.

Benjamin Sigal, IUE general counsel, outlined a proposal for the immediate establishment of a labor-industry-government committee to drive Communist-controlled unions out of defense plants.

Sigal said that such a tripartite committee could be set up by the Munitions Board, which passes on defense orders, under its present authority. He pointed out that the Atomic Energy Commission had followed a similar plan as far back as 1948 when it directed General Electric Co. to withdraw recognition for the United Electrical Workers at atomic plants.

Such action should be taken "quickly," Sigal said, because many employers, "including very large ones with millions of dollars worth of defense contracts, look upon Communist-dominated unions with indulgence simply because they consider it profitable."

Communist-dominated unions have been willing to sign contracts "at almost any price" and many employers have taken advantage of this situation, Sigal said.

"Considerations of national security are of little or no concern to such employers—if dealings with Communist-dominated unions are profitable."

Brehm Appeals Kickback Verdict

Rep. Brehm, the Ohio Republican who was found guilty of getting kickbacks from a former office employe to help finance his election campaign, last week asked the U. S. Court of Appeals to reverse his conviction.

His counsel claimed the jury that found him guilty should have been instructed by the trial judge to acquit him because the government did not prove the money extracted from Mrs. Emma Craven, the clerk, was going to his campaign. Mrs. Craven testified she thought she was contributing to the Republican campaign fund.

Brehm was fined $5000 and given a suspended sentence of five to 15 months. Despite his conviction, he is still serving in Congress, but is not seeking re-election.

Packinghouse Paper Hits AFL For Sell-Out

WHEN CHEAPER sell-outs are made, the AFL Butchers & Meat Cutters will make them, according to the CIO Packinghouse Workers.

The UPWA paper charged that the AFL union was willing to accept 5c an hour increase instead of the 6c which the two of the Big Four, Swift and Armour and Co., gave them.

The paper said that Swift negotiators "were cold to the AFL offer because they weren't sure how the UPWA would like it." The 6c offer was made by the companies and accepted by the AFL union after the CIO Packinghouse Workers rejected the proposal.

After the AFL accepted the 6c offer, UPWA pressed for more concessions from the two companies and from Cudahy Packing Company—another of the Big Four—and got them. UPWA is currently negotiating with the other of the Big Four—Wilson & Co.

The UPWA gains included adjustment of inequities in 1600 job brackets and an additional 1½ to 2c for women workers, plus the 6c.

UPWA Pres. Ralph Helstein hailed the UPWA agreement as "a substantial improvement over the offer initially made by the packing companies." Narrowing of the differential in pay rates for men and women workers helps to improve "the status of women workers in American industry," he said.

A Packinghouse Worker editorial took exception to the charge of Sec.-Treas. Pat Gorman of the AFL union that the UPWA leaders are "dream peddlers and Utopia builders."

"Because we are dreamers," the paper declared, "unprecedented gains have been made in cutting down the long-standing, and heretofore rigid wage differentials between men and women workers; and significant adjustments have been made in job inequities.

"We have other dreams for the future. They include the annual wage for the packinghouse workers, better wages and working conditions and eventually a better life for the packinghouse workers."

UPWA also charged that Gorman and Pres. Earl W. Jimerson of the AFL union wrote a letter to Wilson & Co., Grand Rapids, Ia., trying to undercut the efforts of the CIO union to reduce work loads on beef kills.

The UPWA succeeded in cutting the job load at Armour & Co. by 12% through work stoppages, which were provided for under the contract. Gorman and Jimerson's letter referred to the stoppages as "wild cat strikes."

These recent efforts of the Meat Cutters to "sell out" the packinghouse workers are part of a long series of undercutting settlements of the AFL union dating back to the World War II, according to UPWA.

"The Big Four keeps the AFL alive for one reason only—to undercut any demands which the UPWA makes in behalf of the great majority of packinghouse workers," the UPWA's official publication charged.

UAW Reports Solid Gains In Health, Pension Benefits

SOLID GAINS in hospital, medical, disability, survivors' and pension benefits were reported last week by the CIO Auto Workers.

Hospital benefits, $50 million for 385,000 members; surgical-medical benefits, $23 million paid for over 900,000 visits to doctors and surgeons; disability benefits, $27 million to 168,000 workers; survivors' benefits to widows, children and other survivors of 8500 members.

"The greatest gain which has been made," the UAW paper reported, "is in the protection against the cost of medical care.

"Every day more than a thousand UAW workers and family members are admitted to hospitals for more than about one week. Even those who stay as long as 120 days are usually covered with UAW-negotiated plans.

"The bills usually run high—often very high. Even for a one-day stay, you can rarely get out of a hospital with a bill of less than $20. Every day, on the average, five UAW workers get a hospital bill for a thousand dollars or more . . . Most of the hospital bills are paid in full under the plans negotiated by the union."

"Although great gains have been made, existing health security plans need improvement in many important ways," the Auto Worker said. Improvement called for includes:

More adequate levels of income maintenance for the temporary disabled, more surgical and medical care in hospitals, better protection for workers during layoffs, more effective provision for hospital-medical protection for retired workers; rehabilitation and preventive services.

UAW Sec. Emil Mazey said that 12,500 UAW members had retired on pensions as of Jan. 1, 1952. A pension survey made by the union's Social Security Dept. covered the period beginning Mar. 1, 1950, the effective date of the Ford pension plan, which was the first major pension agreement negotiated by the UAW.

Of the 12,500 retirements, 94.5% were at or after the age of 65, 4.1% were for total and permanent disability and 1.4% were retirements between the ages of 60 to 65 for reasons other than disability.

Tax Bonanza Tapped Again By Railroads

THE GRABBING of rapid tax write-offs by the railroads took on even greater momentum when the Defense Production Administration disclosed that it has approved additional certificates totalling more than a quarter of a billion dollars for rail transport.

The new list brings the total of such certificates awarded to the railroads to more than $1.3 billion. Approximately 70% of this amount will be written off in five years instead of the usual 25—at the taxpayers' expense.

The Pennsylvania Railroad, which just the week before had nicked the public for $6,244,400, this time led other railroads with an award of $50,862,500.

Biggest single certificate on the new list — which totaled $612,599,931—was the $65,338,000 given Harvey Machine Co. for new aluminum facilities at Flathead County, Mont. Actually, since Harvey is only a 5% partner of Anaconda Copper Co., most of this award will go to the copper company, although its name nowhere appears on the list.

Religion-Labor Group To Meet

The annual general membership conference of the National Religion and Labor Foundation will be held in the Sheraton-Gibson Hotel, Cincinnati, O., on Mar. 4 and 5.

Harry Read, executive assistant to CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, will be co-leader of a panel discussion on how religion and labor can work together more effectively. Other CIO participants in the conference program include John G. Ramsey, director of community relations and chairman of the foundation; Ben Segal, associate director of education; Nat Goldfinger, associate director of research, and Sec.-Treas. Jacob Clayman and Education Director Orville C. Jones of the Ohio CIO Council.

Compensation Gains Voted In Virginia

Measures to boost workmen's compensation from $20 to $25 a week and to increase the period for payments for medical attention from 180 days to a year are in conference to iron out technical differences between House and Senate versions.

A bill to boost unemployment compensation from $20 to $22 a week has been passed by the Senate and is expected to pass the House.

Both measures are sure of getting the approval of Gov. John S. Battle, because he recommended them to the Legislature.

3 Conferences Of IUE Meet On Pay Talks

THREE conferences representing about 170,000 members of the CIO Electrical Workers are meeting over a six-day period to decide on pay increases to be sought in forthcoming wage reopenings.

The General Electric Conference, representing 70,000 workers, met in New York Feb. 21 and 22, on call of John H. Callahan, chairman of the conference and business manager of two Pittsfield, Mass., locals.

The Radio & Television Conference was meeting in Boston the two succeeding days to discuss higher wages for some 50,000 IUE-CIO members, while the Westinghouse Conference, representing another 50,000 workers, will meet in New York Feb. 25 and 26.

The conferences are the IUE-CIO's largest.

THE WAGE Stabilization Board has approved a 1.08% cost of living increase for nearly 200,000 GE workers five months after it was negotiated by the IUE-CIO. The boost means about 2c an hour and is retroactive to Sept. 15.

However, the board still has not acted on a 2.5% productivity increase negotiated at the same time on the ground that it has not yet developed a policy on such raises. James B. Carey, IUE-CIO president, has proposed that until it is approved, the company pay the 2% pension contribution now deducted from wages and absorb enough other deductions to permit the workers to get the 2.5% now. Under Carey's proposal, the company would repay itself when the increase is approved.

Poston Gets Award

Ted Poston, New York Post writer, has received the 1951 Unity Award of Beta Delta Mu fraternity for "efforts to promote interfaith amity, brotherhood and understanding." He is a member of the CIO Newspaper Guild.

End Of Segregation Rule Studied By D. C. School Board

THE DEMOCRACY that has been denied Negro children in the public schools of Washington inched nearer realization last week when the Board of Education voted for a study of the possibility of integrating the dual school system.

The action was taken by a 4 to 2 vote after the board had heard 15 witnesses at a public hearing. Most of them cited a surplus of pupils and a shortage of teachers in Negro schools, compared to a shortage of pupils and a surplus of teachers in white schools.

Ben Segal, CIO associate director of education, who testified on behalf of the District of Columbia Council, declared the "separate but equal" philosophy "has created glaring inequalities in the school system."

He called for a program that includes redistribution of all qualified teachers, regardless of color, between the two separate school systems; employment of teachers solely on the basis of merit, and no discrimination against qualified teachers, regardless of race, to teach where they are needed.

"Looking at this situation realistically," he added, "we are faced with the fact that it will be increasingly difficult to obtain adequate funds from an increasingly economy-minded Congress for even one school system, not to say anything about a dual system.

"It seems to us that here would be an excellent opportunity to take the first step in breaking down the patterns of segregation in the use of the teaching personnel."

The dual school system, Segal said, "negates our domestic principles" and "is the greatest blot on our democracy."

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

THIS PAST week, the writer had the pleasure of meeting with Dr. George W. Taylor, newly appointed CIO Organization Disputes Arbitrator. Dr. Taylor in connection with his duties has an office at headquarters of National CIO, 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D. C. It is a happy omen that those CIO unions which have jurisdictional problems are making every effort to reach agreement.

We must avoid intra-CIO jurisdictional conflicts; by doing so we protect the workers and retain the strength that is needed to combat the industrial giants. Dr. Taylor's appointment shows that Labor can and will regulate itself. My office will work with and cooperate with Dr. Taylor in every way in bringing about settlement of the old problem of jurisdictional conflicts.

The CIO Veterans' Committee, headed by National Rep. Fred Pieper, announced the addition to its working staff of two Washingtonians, James C. Allen of CIO Local Industrial Union 1695, and Ed Staatsburg, Jr., of the Insurance & Allied Workers Organizing Committee. Both are veterans of World War II. There is much work to be done in the field of helping the returning veterans, and we intend to extend every possible assistance in getting them reestablished.

CIO NATIONAL Rep. Richard Leonard is just back from the West Coast where he reports that the United Fresh Fruit & Vegetable Workers, Local Industrial Union 78, held a splendid meeting in El Centro, Calif. This group has done a tremendous job in organizing workers in the fruit and vegetable industry in the West. Brother Leonard also attended a civil defense meeting in Los Angeles, and from there went to a general organizational meeting in Oakland, Calif., which was attended by a large number of our CIO people in California.

Brother Leonard, in making this trip to the West Coast, was acting on my behalf. I wanted very much to make these meetings, but pressing matters in Washington prevented my doing so.

At this writing, the Negotiating Committee of the Insurance & Allied Workers Organizing Committee is meeting with representatives of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. to work out an agreement for the agents represented by the IAWOC-CIO. I feel sure that the contract negotiated with Metropolitan, like the one recently signed with the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co., will prove a much better agreement than the one recently reached by the AFL with Prudential. The poor showing made by the AFL points up the fact that the proper place for all insurance workers is with the CIO.

CLAUDE BALLARD, vice president of the CIO Woodworkers, reports representation election victories for the IWA at the Carolina Lumber Co., Atlanta, Ga., where the vote was eligible 40, IWA-CIO 29, no union 6, and at the Mar-Lin Plywood Co., Winchester, Ore., IWA-CIO 76, no union 48.

Sec.-Treas. Al Hartnett of the CIO Electrical Workers reports the following representation election victories: Bassick Corp., Bridgeport, Conn., IUE-CIO 55, no union 7; DeHaan, Chester, Pa., IUE-CIO 35, no union 10; GE Electronic Tube, Clifton, N. J., IUE-CIO 35, no union 7; General Electric, DeKalb, Ill., IUE-CIO 260, UE 230; Westinghouse Corp., Metuchen, N. J., IUE 140, UE 18; Marion Machine Foundry & Supply Co., Marion, Ind., IUE 94, no union 19.

Reg. Dir. George DeNucci reports that in a representation election at Grossman & Sons, Columbus, O., the workers voted in favor of the Plaything, Jewelry & Novelty Workers, CIO, by a vote of 33 to 30, Rep. Edward Rosenhahn was in charge of the campaign. The CIO Paperworkers were victorious in a representation election at the Kress Box Co., Newark, O., by a vote of 68 to 20 over the Glass Bottle Blowers, AFL. Intl. Reps. Berkley Watterson and John Gray handled the drive.

REG. DIR. John Maurillo reports that the Paperworkers won a representation election at the Robert Gair Paper Co., Syracuse, N. Y., by a vote of 72 to 7, with 8 votes challenged.

CIO Field Rep. Ed Stone reports that the Citrus and Allied Workers Div. of the Brewery Workers, CIO, won an election in two units of the Winter Haven, Fla. Citrus Exchange. For the production and maintenance unit it was 25 for the CIO and 24 no union; for the truckers, 9 for CIO and 4 against.

Sec.-Treas. Ross Blood reports that the technical employes of the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corp.'s Quincy, Mass., yard, formerly the Fore River Independent Union, favored the CIO Shipbuilders Union by a vote of 473, AFL 88, no union 37.

Newark CIO Reports Gains

SHARP GAINS in affiliation and activity were reported to delegates at the annual convention of the Essex-West Hudson CIO Council, meeting last week in Newark, N. J.

In the past two years, since CIO expulsion of Communist-line unions, the Newark Council has grown from 35 locals with 12,000 members to 69 locals with some 32,000 affiliated members.

The report by Pres. Harper Winship and Sec. J. R. Jacobson detailed successful Council PAC activity for the re-election of two pro-labor congressmen, support for CIO affiliates in strikes and organizing campaigns, legislative presentations, and widespread community services representation.

CIO Supports Redistricting In Michigan

MICHIGAN'S 32nd Senatorial District with 60,000 population has as many votes in the State Legislature as the 12th Senatorial District with 526,000 population.

That is one example of why 400 delegates to the Michigan CIO Council's legislative conference at Lansing decided that constitutional changes are required to assure representation based on population.

The constitution now provides any county having one-two hundreth of the state's population is entitled to one of the 100 House seats. That is known as the moiety clause.

The Michigan Council's Legislative Newsletter said:

"Moiety, someone quipped the other day, may sound like the name of his favorite Irish bartender, but is much less just."

Other recommendations made by the conference panels included:

Higher unemployment compensation benefits over a longer period, adequate workmen's compensation for as long as the worker is unable to be on the job because of his injury, the right of collective bargaining for public employes, corporate profits tax as proposed by Gov. G. Mennen Williams, and a state FEPC bill.

CIO Honors Bishop Haas In Bias Fight

MOST REV. Francis J. Haas, bishop of the Catholic diocese of Grand Rapids, was presented with the 1951 achievement award of the Michigan State CIO Council for "outstanding activities" in the fight against discrimination.

The honor was given Bishop Haas at a dinner closing the council's mid-February legislative conference in Lansing. In accepting it, he praised the civil rights record of the CIO, which he said "blazed the way" with its "forward-looking and humane policy of non-discrimination."

He predicted enactment of federal and state fair employment practices legislation "much sooner than the opposition dreams," because "the underlying sentiment of our people is against discrimination in employment, and they will see that this sentiment is embodied into law."

S.F. CIO Re-elects 2 Top Officers

Top officers of the San Francisco CIO Council have been re-elected. They are Pres. Arthur Hellender, of the Communications Workers, and Sec.-Treas. Frank E. White, of the Government Employees.

Other Council officers are Vice Pres. Shannon Wall, of the Maritime Union; Sergeant-at-arms Genevieve Phillips, of the Textile Workers; and Trustees Jack Cronin of CWA, Floyd Pierce of the Furniture Workers, and William Weinberg of the Utility Workers.

Labor Overseas—

ICFTU Aids Growing West African Unions

THE GROWING labor movement in British West Africa is making swift progress, thanks to the establishment of an office in Accra, on the Gold Coast, by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, and the activities of British government labor officers.

The Gold Coast is now largely self-governing. The ICFTU office will help the older and more stable unions to develop their organizations throughout the continent as a prelude to good industrial relations, higher productivity, and better living standards for African workers who have been exploited in the past.

Throughout West Africa, in 10 British territories, there are more than 200 trade unions with more than 200,000 members.

In all of them the government labor officers are encouraging the training of union officials by means of lecture courses and special schools. Dozens of African unionists have won scholarships to study in England. The British Trades Union Congress is supplying libraries and office equipment from a special fund. In addition, the TUC and Ruskin College of Oxford Univ. are offering correspondence courses.

The growth of trade unionism received its greatest impetus when W. R. Comrie, veteran of the British labor movement, was sent out as labor advisor in 1947. Largely under his guidance, native union organizers have assumed new responsibilities and have developed qualities of leadership "which reveal the African capacity for rapid social adjustment," he said.

"Their grasp of detail and of organization is astounding," he added.

A PROPOSAL to set up a joint labor-management production council has been laid before Italian employers by the Italian Confederation of Trade Unions (CISL), largest free labor group in the country.

The CISL suggested that the council develop plans to increase production so as to make more goods available, and at the same time adjust piecework rates and extend bonuses so the workers can share in the profit from the greater output. This would increase real wages without endangering price stability, the union contends.

The CISL won one recent brush with the de Gasperi government and is now involved in another. Its claim for a wage increase of 2000 lire (about $3) a month for government employes was passed by the Assembly of the Parliament after the government's motion for a 1500 lire boost was defeated.

Now it is trying to persuade the government to overhaul social legislation and to increase family allowances in accordance with rises in the cost of living.

ORGANIZED workers and organized employers in Denmark who were having a tough battle trying to bat out a new wage agreement recently turned from the negotiating table and joined in an attack on the government for meddling in their deliberations.

Members of the government abandoned past practice in the country and while negotiations were under way, attacked the workers' demands. Pres. Eiler Jensen of the Danish Trade Federation (DSF) and Pres. Hans L. Larsen of the Danish Employers' Federation both expressed sharply-worded objections to the interference.

The negotiations, which are on a national scale, affect about 800,000 workers.

A NEW Latin-American labor federation which calls itself middle-of-the-road but sounds Communist was formed at a recent meeting in Buenos Aires dominated by delegates from the Peron-controlled Argentine labor movement.

It named itself the Committee of United Latin-American Syndicates. It was expected to supplement the Communist-dominated Confederation of the Latin-American Workers (CTAL) and fight the Inter-American Regional Organization Workers (ORIT), regional affiliate of the anti-Communist Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

Organizers purported to represent workers in Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Bolivia, Uruguay and Paraguay. Observers also were present from Costa Rica, Panama, Ecuador, Peru, Colombia, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua.

GENERAL SEC. J. H. OLDENBROEK of the ICFTU has just issued another protest against political persecutions in Franco Spain involving more than 100 members of the National Confederation of Labor.

Death sentences were called for in one trial in Barcelona and another in Seville, compared to terms of two to 20 years imprisonment sought for a group of Communists being tried separately in Barcelona. The principal charge, Oldenbroek pointed out, is "subversive activities," which the Franco regime considers "to cover all normal trade union activities."

Truman Supports Bill Giving Laid-Off Workers Extra Pay

A SHOWDOWN hearing on the bill to give federal aid to states where unemployment is heavy opened last week before the Senate Finance Committee amid these developments:

- President Truman endorsed the measure and Sec. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin testified for the bill. Tobin said that while the administration favors a federal law to require the states to liberalize unemployment compensation, the benefits can't "be increased rapidly enough through state action alone."

- Sen. Taft, committee member and aspirant for the Republican nomination for the presidency, strongly condemned the measure. He said that the bill would "federalize" unemployment compensation which, he thought, was the sole responsibility of the states.

- Morris Pizer, president of the CIO Furniture Workers, warned that curbs on housing constructions mean unemployment for 25,000 furniture workers because "at least 20% of all furniture sales depend on new housing."

MORRIS PIZER
Protests housing cuts.

In reply to a letter from Sen. Moody (D. Mich.), who is one of the 19 congressmen sponsoring the federal aid bill, Truman said that the Michigan Senator is "on the right track."

"The defense program has not been the only factor leading to fewer jobs in some localities, but it certainly has contributed to that result," the President said.

"There is no more dramatic illustration than the situation out in Michigan today.

"You are quite right to be worried about it. We are all worried about it. Naturally, our main effort has been to find useful and productive jobs for all the unemployed who need and want work.

"But I agree that the federal government should help make sure that the people who are losing jobs right now are not penalized by the inadequacy of state unemployment benefits."

Pizer in an open letter to Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson attacked the use of critical materials to build "luxury hotels, department stores and race tracks" and new plants for defense production while huge plants lie idle.

Pizer urged Wilson to:

End all non-essential commercial building for the duration of the defense emergency.

Place defense orders with existing plants and conserve scarce materials being used for defense plants. Allocate materials for the building of schools, hospitals and other community facilities.

Use all available materials to build new homes, particularly in defense areas, with top priority given to the construction of housing for low-income families.

Canadian Ford Strike Gets 21c

Wage increases totalling 21c-an-hour under a two-year contract were won by CIO Auto Workers after a short strike against the Ford Motor Co. of Canada. The UAW local, representing 9000 workers, was out three days at the plant in Windsor, Ont.

Reuther Urges Moody Bill To Strengthen U.S. Armor

THE MOODY bill to give extra federal unemployment compensation funds to the States "is wise, socially desirable, morally right," Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers last week told the Senate Finance Committee.

"Precisely because this is so," said Reuther, who represented the CIO and the UAW, "we need this action as part of our defensive and offensive armor and program in the unceasing worldwide contest for the minds, hearts and loyalties of mankind . . .

"The States of Michigan, New York, Indiana did not individually decide to shift the national economy from peace to defense. Nor did the States of Georgia, Maine, Virginia or Oklahoma decide to cut back on the amount of raw materials which could be used for the production of less essential items.

"ALL these and other accompanying decisions were made by the United States acting through its legislative and executive branches."

Vice Pres. Harry E. Block of the CIO Electrical Workers said that more than 47,000 were unemployed in critical defense industries covered by his organization because of "the operation of the defense program and because of government orders and regulations."

He said that the IUE regarded the Moody bill as a "temporary and stop-gap substitute for revision of the entire unemployment compensation structure."

Vice Pres. Mariano Bishop of the CIO Textile Workers testified that the "high rate of incidence of unemployment is characteristic of textile communities in the North and the South."

Supplemental statements in support of the measure were filed by the UAW, IUE, TWUA, Furniture Workers, Paperworkers; Playthings, Jewelry & Novelty Workers, and the Massachusetts, New York State and New Jersey CIO Councils.

N. Y. Added To Critical Jobless List

THE LABOR DEPT. last week designated 23 areas —including New York City —where defense contracts should be channeled to help eliminate unemployment crises.

This was the first list that the department forwarded to the special surplus manpower committee. The committee was set up under a directive of Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson and has authority to certify that defense contracts be awarded in these critical areas even when the bids are not the lowest.

The department also reported last week that unemployment covered by state unemployment insurance laws rose in January to 1,420,000, the highest level since July 1950.

Major areas where there is at least one central city with a population of 50,000 or more: New York, Detroit, Providence; Wilkes-Barre-Hazelton, Pa.; Grand Rapids and Flint, Mich.; Scranton and Altoona, Pa.; Beaumont-Port Arthur, Tex.; Fall River, Lawrence, Brockton and Lowell, Mass.; Atlantic City, N. J.; Asheville, N. C.; Manchester, N. H.; Terre Haute, Ind., and Laredon, Tex.

LIBERAL EDUCATION: Members of the delegates to the first session of the fourth annual Washington Legislative Institute of the CIQ Textile Workers pause long enough on the Capitol steps to have their picture taken. Not only did the delegates from five states attend classes for five days, but they also visited their congressmen to present a five-point program, highlighted by adoption of the Moody bill. 'Build Your Union As You Would Build Your Home'

(From Textile Labor)

A 16-YEAR-OLD high school student in Bemis, Tenn., was assigned to write an essay. The subject he chose was "Labor—the Things It Represents and Does." He began it by defining labor as work.

"There is also another type of labor, a better, stronger and more capable type," he wrote. "This kind is strong because it is organized labor."

"Organized labor is not just a union you join." he wrote, "it is an organization which you must mingle in, contribute time and valuable thinking too."

"It is an organization that has not sprung up overnight; it has taken years of painful, hard fighting to get it," he wrote. "Some lived so that they could work and contribute their time in organizing many plants, factories, mills."

"No matter what kind of union you have, it cannot run itself," he wrote. "It must be taken care of because it will return your time and effort much better and more securely."

"Make preparation for your children and theirs," he ended his essay. "Build your union as you would build your home. For without it, you're without a real home."

The student signed his essay: "By David Simmons."

Lowell Simmons was TWUA Memphis Area Joint Board manager. On Dec. 24, 1951, during a strike at Bemis, Tenn., he was shot to death by a non-union member who was trying to organize a back-to-work campaign.

U. S. Gets Last-Minute Truce In Oil Deadlock

By RAY DAVIDSON

LEADERS of the nation's oil unions, headed by the dominant union, the CIO Oil Workers, late last week postponed a nation-wide strike in the oil industry.

A one-week postponement of the strike was announced by OWIU Pres. O. A. Knight and the leaders of the sizeable independent unions and the AFL oil workers three days before the strike deadline of midnight March 2.

The strike was set aside—at least temporarily—at the request of Cyrus S. Ching, federal mediation chief, but the oil union leaders served notice on the industry and they would not tolerate the industry's preparation for strike-breaking.

Knight joined in a statement with J. J. McKenna, representing the independent unions, and O. V. Clover of the AFL groups:

"The unions . . . warn that the companies must not disturb the status quo or utilize the additional time for the purpose of hiring strikebreakers or preparing for their maintenance within strike-bound plants.

"IN THE event any of the companies so attempt to utilize the postponement period then the unions reserve the right to revoke the postponement and to utilize immediate strike action against any or all of the companies."

"There are plants right now," Knight added, "where they are bringing in food, cots and Pullman cars, which incidentally are badly needed elsewhere."

The agreement to postpone the strike was announced following day-long meetings held Feb. 28 in the Washington offices of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service. Conciliators met first with the union leaders, and then held a separate meeting with the oil company representatives.

Ching also called for the maintenance of the status quo.

"We are instructing our people," Ching said," to intensify their efforts to get an agreement. Also, we are requesting that the status quo be maintained to see if something can be worked out."

Conciliation efforts had been conducted on the local level prior to the Washington meeting and were continued on that basis following the postponement.

THE UNIONS are requesting a 25c an hour increase in basic wages, plus increases in night shift premiums. Thus far, company offers have amounted to about 10c an hour on basic wages. Some companies have agreed to the increased night shift premiums.

The companies, acting in complete unison, have insisted that they would grant increases no greater than the WSB allows under Regulation 8. That regulation permits increases matching the increases in the consumers price index without prior WSB approval. Currently, this would amount to 4.7% per cent, or about 10c to the average oil worker.

The unions are insisting that the industry bargain above the 4.7% point and join with the union in taking the increases to WSB for approval.

The oil industry showed a 20% increase in profits in 1951 over 1950, contrary to the declining profits shown in some other industries. Because labor costs are a minor factor in the oil industry, the increase sought by the unions could be paid by shaving only a tiny fraction from profits.

New Trial Asked In Groveland Case

After two convictions by all-whte juries in the Groveland, Fla., case, attorneys retained by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People have asked a new trial for Walter Lee Irvin.

Irvin is the last of four young Negroes involved in the Groveland "rape" case. One was killed by a deputized mob, another by a sheriff, and a third is serving a life sentence.

The petition for a third trial said Irvin had been denied "a fair and impartial trial as guaranteed to him by the Constitution."

TWUA Urges U. S. Probe Of Woolen Firm

CIO TEXTILE Workers last week called for a congressional investigation of the threat of the American Woolen Co. to move its plants to the South from communities where it earned millions of dollars in profits.

The request for the inquiry was made by the American Woolen Advisory Council of TWUA, meeting in New York City.

Delegates from each of the 21 mills under TWUA contract reported that the membership has voted unanimously in favor of a "no contract, no work" policy when the present agreement expires Mar. 15. About 20,000 workers in eight states are involved.

The union is willing to continue the present contract without change for another year; the company, however, is insisting upon 21 separate contracts, bargained individually, instead of a single, chain-wide pact.

The company also has made a series of economic demands, including the elimination of paid holidays and cost-of-living protection.

According to John Chupka, TWUA's woolen and worsted director, delegates to the meeting confirmed the union's earlier charge that American Woolen mill managers had been ordered to complete current production by Mar. 10, and not to start any new runs. Chupka said this "obviously is another maneuver in the company's attempt to frighten the workers into breaking up their union."

WSB Ends Long Delay, Sets Policy On Pensions

AFTER a long delay, the Wage Stabilization Board, by unanimous decision, has exempted pensions and profit-sharing plans from the 10% wage formula.

The action paved the way for automatic approval of hundreds of new and revised pension plans which have been held up for months awaiting a decision on WSB policy.

WSB Chairman Nathan Feinsinger said the new ruling allows "maximum latitude" in establishing pension and retirement systems. It does not affect plans in effect before Jan. 25, 1951.

The regulation sets three minimum standards to which new pension plans must conform for board approval:

1. The normal age at which a worker may qualify for benefits must be at least 65.

2. Benefits other than death payments must be payable at least over the lifetime of the retired employe.

3. Any benefits from employer contributions to employes whose jobs end before retirement—those who move to another job or are fired, for example—shall carry no cash surrender value to the worker and shall not be paid out until the employe reaches his normal retirement age. Workers who retire before age 65 would be entitled to reduced benefits.

The new policy does not mean that employers or unions are obligated to agree to the establishment of pension plans but merely deals with the question of what plans are permissable under the Government's anti-inflation rules.

Management members of the board had fought to have the cost of the pensions counted against the 10% wage ceiling. Labor members had battled for complete decontrol.

Until the board made its new ruling, no pension plan could take effect unless the employer and employes agreed to deduct employer contributions from the wage formula. For that reason, very few plans have been put into effect since Jan., 1951.

Bus Drivers Get 6c Hike In New York

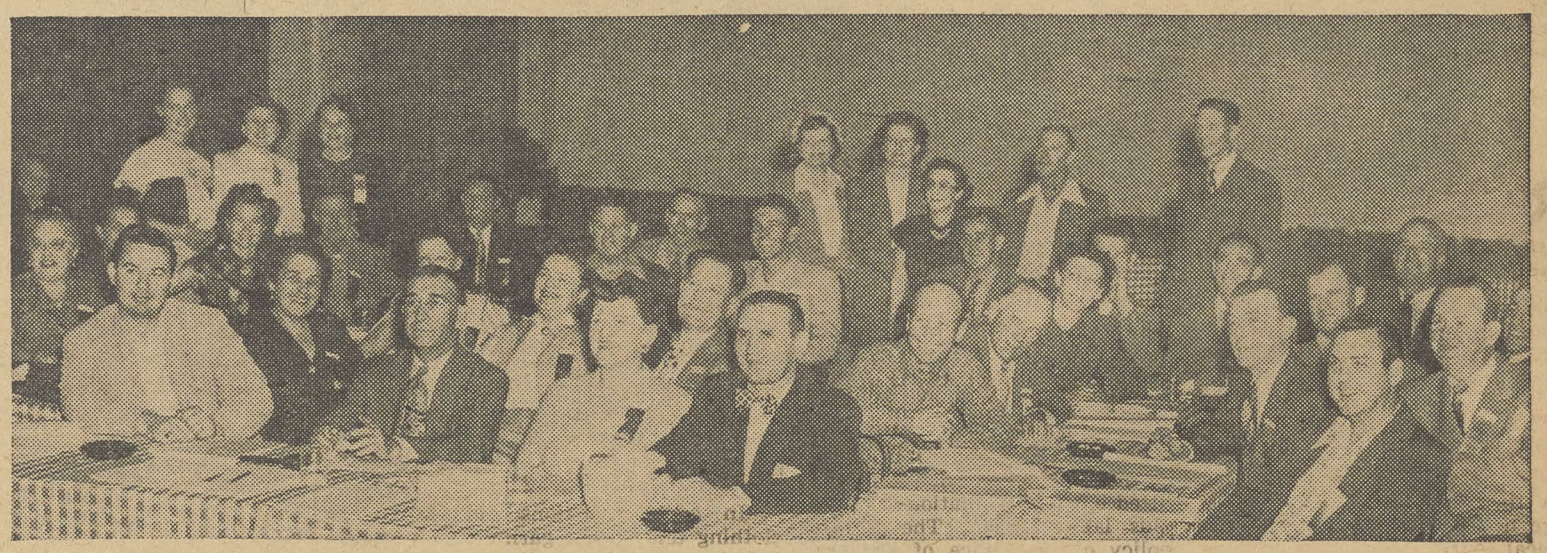
The increase for drivers and mechanics is retroactive to Jan. 1 and is based on the rise in the consumer price index for New York City since Jan. 1, 1951.

TWU Pres. Michael J. Quill said the raise brings the average hourly wage on most privately-owned lines to $1.66 hourly. On lines of the New York City Omnibus Corp. and the Fifth Ave. Coach Co., the new rate will be $1.73½ however.

The union is currently seeking a 40-hour week for workers on the private bus lines as well as for the 40,000 TWU members employed by the city-owned subway, elevated and bus lines.



"FRUIT TRAMPS" of California and Arizona were represented at first constitutional convention of CIO United Fresh Fruit & Vegetable Workers, Local Industrial Union 78. The big local represents some 8000 workers. Delegates at El Centro, Calif., convention adopted organizing program, drafted constitutional amendments for referendum vote, and voted education-political action program. Among CIO officials present was Richard T. Leonard (at right).

TWO WALTERS. Chairman Walter F. George (D. Ga.) of the Senate Finance Committee (left) listens to CIO Vice President Walter P. Reuther as he presents testimony in support of the bill sponsored by Sen. Moody (D. Mich.) to provide emergency increased unemployment relief to workers idled by defense cutbacks. Reuther called the measure "economically wise, socially desirable, morally right."

Jobless Pay Bill Faces First Test After Strong CIO Testimony

THE SENATE Finance Committee will give prompt consideration to the Moody Bill providing extra federal jobless benefits to workers laid off because of defense cutbacks, its chairman, Sen. George (D. Ga.), has promised.

Following strong CIO testimony winding up hearings on the measure, George said that he expected the committee to take up the bill this week. Without indicating what kind of action he expected, George nevertheless said:

"I know from experience in my own state how the small plant is hit by defense cutbacks."

HE ADDED he knew of one Georgia manufacturer of aluminum windows forced out of business when it could not get substitute defense contracts.

In presenting the CIO's statement urging prompt enactment of the Moody bill, Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther lambasted the secretary of the Detroit Board of Commerce, Willis Hall. Hall had told the committee that present unemployment in the Detroit area is "normal."

Reuther charged that Hall deliberately "falsified the record" by citing figures for January 1950, when 90,000 were unemployed in Detroit because of layoffs and strikes, implying that this was a normal period. Only 28,000 were unemployed in Detroit in October, 1950, Reuther said, and the total was much less than 90,000 in other months until defense cutbacks began.

"All leading Detroit manufacturers have said that Detroit's present unemployment is not normal," Reuther reminded the committee. "As a matter of fact, even Mr. Hall has said so except when he finds it convenient to change his position."

"Hall then called it 'tragic,' although only 90,000 were unemployed," Reuther pointed out. "In February, with 107,000 out of work in Detroit, Mr. Hall says unemployment is not critical."

Reuther charged that Hall was playing "a very clever game" at the expense of the wives and children and workers of Detroit.

"Hall used unemployment to get more defense orders for Detroit firms he represents, but when we come down here to get help he reverses himself. In other words, he's willing to use the hardship of Detroit workers to advance his own special interests but not to help the people involved."

REUTHER said one out of 13 workers in Detroit is now out of work, and that workers with as much as 18 years seniority had been laid off in some plants.

"To call that normal is to say that one out of 13 people doesn't have a right to work," Reuther commented.

"Unemployment has to be looked at in terms of hungry children, heartbreaks and hardships, because that's what it means. To be 'normally' hungry, from whatever cause, is not a good experience."

Meantime three Michigan Congressmen have introduced bills in the House identical to the Moody Bill now being considered by the Senate. They are Reps. Dingell, Machrowicz and Rabaut, all Democrats from the Detroit area.

N. Y. Relief Rolls Mount To 298,000

There is a growing city within New York City—persons on relief rolls.

Henry L. McCarthy, New York City's Welfare Commissioner, reported last week that there were 297,919 persons on the relief rolls, an increase of 2899 over December.

'Old' BLS Index Again Reaches A New High

One of the government's consumer price indexes went up again last month, once more reaching an all time high.

The "old" index of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, which governs "escalator" wage clauses in many union contracts, climbed one-tenth of 1% in the month ending Jan. 15. It reached a new high of 190.2% over the 1935-39 average.

The "new" BLS index—which differs from the "old" in including new consumer purchases, such as frozen foods, TV, etc.—was unchanged for the month, at 189.1.

Except for slight dips last summer, both BLS indexes have been rising steadily since the Korean war began. Both have climbed some 11% in that period and 4% in the past year.

Here are the cumulative figures for the "new" BLS index:

Period	Index	Period	Index
1939 monthly average	99.4	1950: June 15	170.2
1943 monthly average	123.6	1951: Jan. 15	181.5

Job Layoffs Give Urgency To Price Cuts, Mazey Says

THE NEW increase in the U.S. consumer price index will give more than a million members of the CIO Auto Workers 3c more than an hour in what the union has called "the wooden nickels of inflation."

As the BLS increase governing General Motors, Ford, Chrysler and other UAW contracts was announced, Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey of the auto union reiterated that "price roll-backs would be infinitely preferable to further wage increases growing out of price increases."

"Today," said Mazey, "we have a more compelling reasons than ever for renewing that statement.

"Thousands of our members are walking the streets. Most of them are trying to exist on pitifully inadequate state unemployment compensation. These workers must pay those outrageously high prices."

He said the BLS index increase gives urgency to President Truman's demand for repeal of the "Capehartized" features of the Defense Production Act. And he warned that "dangerous nonsense" of lobbyists who want to repeal the present, inadequate law would bring "complete disaster."

Potofsky Blames Pentagon For Clothing, Textile Layoffs

RESPONSIBILITY for the threat of ghost towns in clothing, cotton garment and textile communities was laid last week on the Pentagon's doorstep by Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers.

In a blistering statement, he charged Defense Dept. procurement officials with bias against unions, and warned that "awards to the chisler and fly-by-night are not always the most economical course."

The ACWA president called for a congressional investigation of the practice of awarding contracts in low-pay areas "at the expense of industrial sections where there is surplus of manpower."

He demanded that clothing, cotton garment and related industries be designed as "critical industries" where contracts should be awarded in areas of greatest unemployment, even though bids are not the lowest.

Until that is done, Potofsky said, manufacturers and workers in these fields will not be benefitted by the designation of "surplus labor cities." The official policy of the Office of Defense Mobilization is that contracts be awarded in areas of critical unemployment even when the bids are not the lowest there.

"Plants have closed down and continue to close down," Potofsky said, "in places where there is ample skilled labor. Machinery has been shipped from one town to another because of procurement policies.

"Valuable time is lost instructing new workers, wage and production standards fall while the skilled manpower we have built up over the years go on the unemployed and relief rolls as burdens to the community.

"In certain sections of the clothing and cotton garment industries, which ordinarily employ 375,000 men and women, there has been total or partial unemployment. Some sections have shown a drop of 50% in employment, a drop aggravated by the senseless procurement policies of the Pentagon.

"The drop in purchasing power has reacted severely against the retail merchants and other segments of the community where these men and women remain idle. There is a real threat of ghost towns in these communities where a clothing, cotton garment or textile plant is the principal industry . . .

"The Pentagon must act without prejudice. It has done much damage because of its anti-labor attitude, whether it is conscious or unconscious. It must act, before it is too late, if it is to restore the teamwork and the know-how which are as important as guns and atom bombs."

Study In Slow Motion

Delays, more delays, and still more delays are the order of the day in Washington.

Almost five months have passed since Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers and other CIO leaders urged defense mobilization officials to award contracts in unemployment crisis areas.

Early last month, Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson finally got around to issuing a directive to that effect.

Last week still further delay developed—at least so far as the textile industry is concerned.

An Office of Defense Mobilization spokesman said that the ODM would have to hold a hearing and consult with representatives of the entire industry—North and South—before the directive could be carried out. That reflects the lobbying of the open shop, low-wage southern industry and its Dixiecrat congressmen.

While Washington delays, unemployed textile workers in New England, auto workers in Detroit, and electrical and clothing workers in many large cities are trying to live meagerly on unemployment compensation.

How long do we have to wait?

Pressure Tactics

Industry and conservative groups, acting in support of the rich steel corporations, have started a campaign to pressure the Wage Stabilization Board into turning down the steel union's demand for a union shop.

In turning on the propaganda pressure, these right wing organizations apparently operate on the premise that the steel industry's case against the union shop wasn't much good. This is a determination with which many neutral observers at the recent steel dispute hearings can readily agree.

But the crude efforts by such tarnished organizations as the Committee for Constitutional Government and the Joe Ball lobbying outfit to stampede the WSB should be recognized for what they are. The WSB, if it is to serve the public interest and to avoid a strike in steel, will do well to ignore the "advice" of the professional union-haters.

52 Brotherhood Weeks

National Brotherhood Week was celebrated late in February throughout the country. It was a great success, with lots of newspaper, television and radio coverage.

But one week a year to preach and practice brotherhood obviously isn't enough. Some incidents:

- The secret ballot refusal of a San Francisco neighborhood to accept a Chinese-American family as neighbors.
- The statement of a midget-brained county commissioner in Maryland that "anybody who wants to practice brotherhood should go to Russia."
- The effort of a California group with the self-complimentary name of "America Plus" to legalize, clearly and explicitly, every form of discrimination and intolerance in the West Coast and elsewhere.

Obviously, we still have a long way to go toward brotherhood. What we need is "Brotherhood Year." The country could stand it.

Smoke Gets In Their Eyes

Ford 'Engineers' 2 Ghost Towns

The decision of the "human engineers" of the Ford Motor Co. to transfer its operations from Iron Mountain, Mich., and from Windsor, Ont., threatens to make both these communities "ghost towns." The impact of these decisions on the lives of the workers and on the two towns is told in the CIO Auto Workers' paper, the United Automobile Worker:

THE "HUMAN ENGINEERS" did an almost scientific job on Iron Mountain. They took the best wood from the nearby forests and the best years of the men. Most of the workers bought their homes.

Abruptly the "human engineers" pulled out of Iron Mountain, giving the community a headlong push toward becoming a ghost town. In Windsor, folks are worrying, "Is Ford going to 'engineer' us, too?"

In Iron Mountain, the Menominee River is roaring over the dam—instead of through the turbines. Some of the stores are closed. The rest are not doing much business. Some of the stores are already boarded up.

For 30 years, Iron Mountain produced the finest available in automobile and wood products. The Ford layout there included 600,000 square feet of floor space, and a great deal of modern machinery. Cheap power is available. So are the railroads and lake ports and air fields.

A few months ago, Iron Mountain was a prosperous, busy community. The merchants and the men built their lives around the Ford Motor Co., the chief employer there. More than 85% of the Ford workers owned their own homes. To all outward appearances, Iron Mountain was a peaceful, secure American community.

Iron Mountain made a tremendous contribution to World War II. Its residents believed that they were going to find their skills in great demand again. The future looked bright.

So one day last December, Ford's "human engineers" announced they were transferring the Iron Mountain operations elsewhere.

Men who spent a lifetime building security found themselves stuck with homes almost valueless . . . in a town where they could find no work. Merchants suddenly discovered their business was headed for disaster. In a matter of weeks, grocers faced the hard decision of determining how much they could carry on the books, and survive.

Iron Mountain is a community built around the Great Industrial God Ford, and the Great God, without warning, abandoned it.

Today, 1500 workers in a city of 9500 persons are drawing meager unemployment compensation checks to support themselves and their dependents. More than 300 already have exhausted their claims.

The Ford property has been sold to the Kingsford Chemical Co. which is trying to resell it. Some of the workers of Iron Mountain have left their home town and their home church and their old friends to seek employment elsewhere. Most of them are sweating it out, gambling that a kindlier industrial god will take over the plant.

Ford still hasn't engineered out hope.

WINDSOR, like Iron Mountain, is largely dependent upon Ford. Already Ford of Canada has announced that it will move Plant Four, the final assembly and body shop, to Oakland, near Toronto. For Windsor that is a loss of 4000 jobs. The new Oakland plant is to employ 7000.

During a radio appearance, Rhys M. Sale, Ford of Canada president, said that more jobs were going to be brought to Windsor. That was last November. Still no new jobs are in sight. Increasingly, the operation smelled like a runaway.

(Since the UAW report was issued the Windsor UAW local went on strike three days and won increases totalling 21c an hour under a two-year contract.)

Welfare Publicity Opposed

JENNER Amendment-type publicity of the names of pensioners and others receiving public assistance has been strongly condemned by CIO in California.

Such publicity and opening up of welfare records would be "a vicious form of psychological intimidation," said Secy.-Treas. Frank E. White of the San Francisco CIO Council. He testified on behalf of the three Bay Area CIO Councils before the State Assembly Interim Welfare Committee.

'Shrimp Boats' Are Coming, Loaded With Bilge

THE 'SHRIMP BOATS' are a-coming—with a new load of propaganda seafood to throw at the CIO Steelworkers and the government's Wage Stabilization Board.

The sails of the propaganda fleet are already in sight.

Who's manning the boats? A big collection of anti-union, anti-Fair Deal outfits—veterans of many other battles against labor.

From every indication, there'll be lots of dancing—not tonight but in the near future—as industry calls the tune for a determined fight against the union shop in the steel industry.

Already the WSB is getting letters and wires—many with near-identical words demanding it veto the union shop demand.

The CIO United Steelworkers have included the union shop high on its list of 22 demands, and during recent hearings called on the WSB to recommend that the industry accept the union security clause.

At the WSB hearings in New York, the steel industry replied with a roar to the union suggestion. John Gall, one time counsel for the Natl. Association of Manufacturers and chief lawyer for the steel companies at the hearing, urged the Board not to grant the union shop.

Gall, in fact, went further than that. He called for the Board to disallow the maintenance-of-membership provisions written into many contracts during World War II at the recommendation of the War Labor Board. And he urged the union to withdraw its demand for security.

(Gall's statement, in printed form, is being distributed in scores of thousands of copies of a phaphlet with a "horrid word" title: Should the Government Force Employes to Join a Union?)

Within just a few days of the union's presentation of its case to the Wage Board, big business allies were in print with a counter-attack which borrows heavily from Gall's theme that a union shop recommendation in the steel case would practically destroy democracy.

JOE BALL, discredited former Senator from Minnesota, is still performing odd-jobs in current lobbying drive of big business against the union shop.

● The Committee for Constitutional Government, cited a dozen times as a stealthy, wealthy organization supported by gifts from big corporations and wealthy individuals, bought full-page ads in many papers to hit the union's demands for union shop and higher wages.

● The Freeman Magazine, a new semi-official organ for the extreme right wing, carried an anti-union shop article by Joe Ball, the discredited former Senator from Minnesota. Ball, who had a major part in passing the Taft-Hartley Act, has been an odd-jobs lobbyist for many large companies. Large numbers of reprints of the Ball article have been distributed.

● The General Electric Co., whose industrial relations boss has been carrying on a running war with the CIO Electrical Workers Union for the past two years, has distributed thousands of copies of the Ball reprint.

● Rep. Allen (R. Ill.) has proposed a congressional probe of the WSB, and suggested that the WSB should be prohibited by law from recommending union shop agreements in disputes cases. (Allen had only one "right" vote in the CIO's 1951 Voting Guide.)

At the steel hearings, the union gave impressive reasons why the Board should consider the union shop issue on its merits and make recommendations supporting the USA-CIO's proposal.

(A government board hearing a railway labor case made a recommendation for union shop on the railroads on the day that the steel union was arguing its case before the special WSB panel.)

Arthur J. Goldberg, counsel for the steel union, argued that the industry could not play both sides of the street, nor could it advocate that the government do so.

The steel dispute was referred to the WSB for recommendations on all 22 of the union's demands, he pointed out. The case was referred to the Board by Pres. Truman with the hope of averting a strike.

If there were a strike, Goldberg said, the union felt confident it could win the union shop. If the government felt the national emergency required that a strike be averted if at all possible, it must be prepared to move into the heart of every issue involved in the dispute.

The steelworkers, he said, would not accept a situation in which it would first be told it could not strike, and then be told that the government could not even consider its union shop proposal. Yet, that is what the industry proposed, Goldberg said.

Madden Condemns NAM, CCG Move To Coerce Wage Board

"THE NATIONAL Association of Manufacturers, the Committee for Constitutional Government, and the barons of the steel industry" last week were denounced by Rep. Madden (D. Ind.) for their attempt to use Congress as an ally in their campaign against the union shop.

Madden spoke against HR. 532, which is aimed at a possible recommendation by the Wage Stabilization Board for the union shop in the steel industry. The resolution, which was introduced by Rep. Allen (R. Ill.), calls for a House investigation of WSB. Madden said:

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 532 calls for an investigation of the Wage Stabilization Board by the House Committee on Labor and Education. I want to serve notice that as a member of the Rules Committee to which this resolution has been referred that I shall oppose it.

The WSB must be free to arrive at decisions based on fact, without coercion or intimidation from any source—including the Congress of the United States.

The purpose of this resolution is crystal clear. It is intended as a congressional club to be used against the WSB on the union shop issue now pending before the board in the steel wage case.

It seeks to use the Congress of the United States as an ally of the National Association of Manufacturers, the Committee for Constitutional Government, and the barons of the steel industry in their current high-financed, nation-wide propaganda campaign against a possible recommendation for the union shop by the WSB. In my opinion, the resolution calls for unjustifiable, prejudicial interference by Congress in the decision-making authority by the Board.

The very timing of the introduction of the resolution stigmatizes it as an attempt at undue influence on the WSB in the first major dispute case to come before it. It will be recalled that on Jan. 10 of this year a special panel of the WSB begun hearings on the dispute case between the major steel-producing companies and the United Steelworkers of America.

THESE hearings were ended Feb. 16. Six days' later—I repeat and emphasize this because it is of the utmost importance—six days later, on Feb. 22, a resolution is introduced in this House calling for an investigation of the WSB.

What is the basis for this investigation? In the words of the resolution itself, to determine whether the board has exceeded its authority and jurisdiction with respect to labor disputes, to determine whether the board has failed to respect the national labor policy as expressed in the Labor-Management Relations Act, the Defense Production Act, and other applicable laws with respect to collective bargaining.

There is no excuse for congressional time and money being wasted on prejudicial investigations designed to influence and harass Government agencies in the administration of their lawful duties.

Legitimate investigations by committees of Congress of government agencies or personnel based on specific charges of fraud, or mal-administration are, of course, always in order, and I would not be one to oppose such investigations.

I do object, however, vigorously and emphatically when this House is called upon to approve an investigation by one of its committees of an agency of the Government where the obvious purpose of such an investigation is made at a time when the welfare and the well-being of hundreds of thousands of American workers and their families are involved in a major case currently pending before that agency.

You will recall that last year when this body had under consideration amendment of the Defense Production Act an attempt was made through the Lucas amendment to take away from the WSB its powers to handle nonwage dispute cases.

AFTER full debate on the matter this House took decisive action by a vote of 217 to 113 to reject the Lucas proposal. It was recognized at that time by the members of the House, and rightly so, that more than the oppressive provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act were needed for the settlement of disputes in critical defense industries.

The President of the United States likewise recognized that fact in assigning dispute functions to the board under his constitutional powers. No one can successfully challenge the correctness of the decision made by this House or of the action taken by the President with respect to the dispute authority of the board.

Nor can anyone in good faith contend that a union shop recommendation by WSB would be a violation of national labor policy as expressed in the Labor-Management Relations Act, the Defense Production Act, or any other applicable law pertaining to collective bargaining.

Is anyone's memory so short as not to remember that just last year this Congress — by unanimous vote of the Senate and by a vote of 308 to 17 of this House—amended the Taft-Hartley Act by eliminating the need for elections to authorize a union shop?

The union shop in American industry is not a violation of national labor policy, and no one knows better than the proponents of House Resolution 532.

(Madden related that the Steelworkers had three times postponed a strike to give the government ample time to consider the case. He said that USA took this action despite the continued rejection by the steel industry of the union's proposals and a campaign of vilification by the industry against the Steelworkers.)

It ill behooves the House to inject itself at this time into the steel-dispute case on the side of the steel industry. And that is exactly what we would be doing were we to approve HR 532 and thereby authorize an investigation of WSB.

I call upon all fair-minded Members of this House to join me in vigorous and outspoken opposition to this resolution in order that WSB may arrive at a decision in the steel case based on facts; a decision completely free from coercion or intimidation by the Congress of the United States.

Gary's Mayor Backs Steel Union

FROM THE big steel-producing center of Gary, Ind., the Wage Stabilization Board got a warning last week "that our city has declined economically due to the steel workers not receiving an equitable pay increase in the past two years."

The warning came from Mayor Peter Mandich of Gary, and was typical of statements by several Gary and Lake County public officials in support of the CIO Steelworkers wage proposals which now are before the WSB.

In his letter to the board, Mandich said:

"I am writing to you on behalf of the thousands of steelworkers that reside in the city of Gary.

"As the Mayor of our great city, I deem it necessary that the 22-point program submitted by the Steelworkers Union be fulfilled in its entirety.

"Our city is totally dependent upon the wages earned by the steel workers, and from a survey I have found that our city has declined economically due to the steel workers not receiving an equitable pay increase in the past two years.

"Being a former steel worker myself, I feel that they are justified in asking the Wage Stabilization Board to certify their program, so that they may be justly compensated for their toil."

End 'Barbarism'—

CIO Demands Congress Act To Aid Migrants

MILLIONS of Americans —"the great underprivileged segment" made up chiefly of U. S. migratory workers and their families—are living in conditions of "misery, poverty, ignorance and misfortune" because Congress has failed to pass laws to protect them, the CIO charged last week in testimony before the Senate Labor-Management Relations subcommittee.

CIO Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood called for "prompt legislative action" to end "the present wasteful and barbaric migrant labor system." He said that U. S. migrants are being forced to live in "conditions of almost unbelievable poverty" while legal and illegal alien farm hands take their jobs.

He denounced present polices under which the government subsidizes "importation of Mexican farm workers without providing for the full utilization of domestic labor at decent wage and work standards." Haywood warned:

"Americans will not stand by and allow hundreds of thousands of their fellow countrymen to be driven out of their jobs and into poverty, starvation and unspeakable degradation through the machinations of a small and willful bloc in Congress."

Five other CIO spokesmen supported Haywood's testimony before the subcommittee.

Kenneth Gillie, CIO representative in California, described conditions in the Imperial Valley, where the use of illegal Mexican "wetback" labor is "a general practice."

Disputing claims that farmers should not be penalized for hiring "wetbacks" because they cannot tell them from Mexicans brought into the country under government contract, Gillie pointed out that every legal entrant has an identification card with his picture on it.

"At one time," he said, "to get out of paying wages owed wetbacks at the end of the season, employers worked a racket. When they no longer needed their services, they'd tell the immigration office they had discovered a number of 'wets' on their property and the agents would take the unpaid Mexicans off their hands."

A description of his recent inspection of "rotten, filthy, unsanitary" migrant labor camps in Arizona was given the committee by Nicholas Dragon, CIO regional director in Arizona and New Mexico.

Contract Mexicans have minimum wage standards and workmen's compensation protection, he pointed out, while American farm workers do not. He said that most of the Mexican border was totally unmanned from midnight until six in the morning because of a shortage of immigration agents.

Farm wages fall way below normal wherever Mexicans are used, Dragon said. Whereas domestic labor in places where no Mexicans are hired is paid about $1.40 an hour plus packing bonuses, the rate paid legal foreign labor is 70c, while "wetbacks" are lucky if they get 40 or 50c.

Testifying on behalf of Pres. Karl Feller of the CIO Brewery Workers, Charles H. Lindberg told the committee that the U.S. Employment Service, in certifying a labor shortage to get foreign workers, considers a domestic worker employed if he works only one day a week.

Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.), subcommittee chairman, called this a "lousy definition" and directed the committee staff to ask the Labor Dept. to justify the use of this "low" standard.

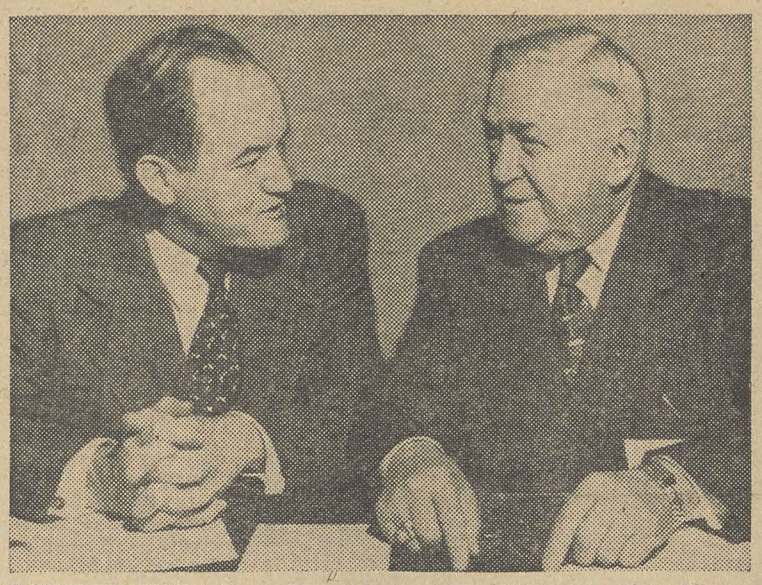
Lindberg turned over to the committee a number of petitions signed by merchants, as well as domestic farm hands, in the Florida citrus belt protesting against the use of foreign labor.

"There is no shortage of domestic labor in the citrus industry in Florida," he said. Employers are using foreign labor chiefly because they realize that this is an effective way of preventing union organization, he charged.

Collective bargaining rights, minimum wages and other benefits now guaranteed by law to industrial workers should be extended to farm workers, John W. Edelman, Washington representative of the CIO Textile Workers, told the committee. He also called for a decent federal housing program for migrants.

"There is too much blood, sweat and tears on the food we eat and the clothes we wear," CIO Auto Workers' Washington representative Paul Sifton testified.

He charged that Congress had scuttled workable migrant labor regulations of the Farm Security Administration in 1943 and has done nothing constructive to improve the conditions of domestice farm labor since that time.



AGREEMENT—Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.), left, Chairman of the Senate Labor subcommittee investigating the problems of migratory labor, expressed agreement with CIO Executive Vice President Allan S. Haywood's testimony last week that the U. S. Farm Placement Service does not give organized labor an adequate voice in shaping its policies.

'Meaningless' Bill Is Voted

Knocking out a provision that would have permitted the immigration Service to issue its agents warrants to search private property for illegal aliens, the House last week otherwise approved the "meaningless" Senate-approved bill to "control" Mexican "wetbacks" and other aliens entering the U. S. illegally.

The measure falls far short of President Truman's recommendations. It makes no provision for imposing penalties on farmers who hire "wetbacks."

Tunisian Workers Demand Freedom, End To Military Control And Democratic Gains

THE WORKERS of French-controlled Tunisia see the gaining of national liberty as a "must" before the North African area's free trade union movement can develop and prosper, according to the leader of its labor organizations.

Farhat Hached, general secretary of the Tunisian General Confederation of Labor, charged that the recent conflict in that country is a fundamental conflict between democratic social progress and military aggression.

Since Jan. 14, he said in a recent statement, 80 Tunisians have been killed, 500 wounded, 8000 arrested and hundreds interned or banished.

(Tunisia has been a French "protectorate" since 1881, and top governmental controls are in the hands of French-appointed officials. The country is about the size of Louisiana, and has a population of around 3 million. It is primarily agricultural, but also produces metals—and it is a big trading area.)

The Tunisian liberation movement, Hached asserts, "is in reality a movement of the workers, and its fundamental objective is the founding of a regime of social justice and progress, of economic and industrial improvement."

The unions (their French initials are UGTT) are affiliated with the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, to which the CIO is affiliated. In Tunisia, according to Hached, the absence of any real form of representative government 'leaves the destinies of the workers in the hands of an administration . . . who have no responsibility toward any representative of the people."

The result: "No solution can be found for any social problem and every action of the workers meets with the violent reaction of the repressive forces of the regime." And, said Hached, until the regime is "democratically transformed . . . we may be sure that neither force nor army will be able to bring back real and durable peace to Tunisia."

"Our trade unions," he continued, "are part of the world trade union movement on the march. We desire to liberate the workers not only from misery but also from servitude.

"Our unions will be in the forefront of progress in the countries of Africa, whose workers groan under the yoke of a colonial regime of exploitation and oppression. They will be on the side of the democratic forces in their fight for peace, the latter being inconceivable without liberty and human dignity."

The Tunisian UGTT unions have worked out big-scale projects for industrial and farm improvements, social security, vocational training, slum clearance, and education for the 700,000 children who now have little chance for getting to school.

"The UGTT could not conceive this role, in defense of the people's interests, without the establishment of a democratic regime in which the individual's human rights are guaranteed and in which the workers' organizations may influence the government."

'Nation Needs Work-Shirt Diplomats', Says Carey

"AMERICA needs work-shirt diplomats," CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey declared last week.

Addressing the Woodrow Wilson School of Public and International Affairs at Princeton, N. J., Carey said:

"America cannot be properly represented by diplomats who rise to ambassadors through business and political influence without regard to their background of rapacity and greediness.

"The people of the world are workers; the governments of most European countries are labor governments," he added. "But we send as our representatives men whose principle association with the local population is through a houseful of servants."

Carey, who is also president of the CIO Electrical Workers, pointed out "American labor has a special knowledge of a problem that confronts many of our allies today—the threat of Communist subversion and aggression.

"American labor has been beseiged by the Communists who realize that a stronghold in labor is a sure way to control or cripple that nation's productive capacity. But American labor," he emphasized, "has wiped out most beachheads of the Communists in the labor movement.

"It is largely organized labor that has made it possible for this country to boast of the effectiveness of the free enterprise system," Carey said. "The free enterprise propagandists shout about their own contributions, but it is noteworthy that they resisted every effort by organized labor to improve the working man's economic and social standing."

Give A Buck To PAC

BRIGHT AND CHIPPER are these delegates to the first five-day session of the Washington Legislative Institute of the CIO Textile Workers. They have just completed a day's activities.

'Blackmail Ultimatums' Scorned By Baldanzi

TEXTILE industry "ultimatums" to the union and the government — that plants will stay in New England only if management demands are granted — are a "form of blackmail."

That was the charge made by George Baldanzi, executive vice-president of the CIO Textile Workers Union, in a radio speech broadcast over New England's Yankee Network.

Baldanzi suggested that "our mutual economic problems" can be settled only by "calm appraisal of the facts" rather than by management threats and hysterical misrepresentation.

New England's economic problems, the TWUA officer said, can be considered on "only one sound basis," within the framework of the national economy.

In 1951, he said, industry generally rang up high profits, and textiles were no exception. Profits after taxes were as high as 20c on each dollar of invested capital.

The TWUA, Baldanzi added, recognizes that the industry is now in a slump. For that reason, it made no new wage demands in the woolen and worsted or in the cotton-rayon industry.

In view of the union's recognition of these conditions, textile workers "don't appreciate ultimatums as a substitute for collective bargaining," he told the radio audience.

"We serve notice on the textile industry not to make the mistake of misinterpreting the constructive policy adopted by our members as a sign that we are going to surrender the standards and conditions we have fought so long and so hard to win. We will not be stampeded. Let there be no mistake about this—in this fight, our union stands united. . . .

"We shall unitedly resist any attempt on the part of management to destroy what we have won, and resist with all our strength any attempt to impose conditions that are without economic justification and certainly without moral justification."

WSB Okehs Hike At Plane Plant

Suicidal Pay Slashing Campaign Is Revealed At TWUA Institute

The story was told by Michael Prokop, vice president of Local 181 of the CIO Textile Workers in Hazelton, and Ray Munts, educational director of the Penn Appalachian Joint Board of TWUA, while they were in Washington attending the union's legislative institute.

The Duplan Corp., the fifth largest weaver of nylon in the United States, told Local 181 negotiators 10 days ago that instead of increasing wages it wanted to cut them.

In the history of collective bargaining, such a proposal from an employer is not unusual, but it soon became apparent that the company's move was part of an organized campaign aimed at selling the entire community on the necessity of cutting the pay of the plant's 2000 workers.

A statement was issued by the Hazelton Chamber of Commerce advocating the pay cut—which wouldn't help storekeepers. The same day, a radio station operated by a director of the Chamber took to the air with hourly announcements calling for the cut.

The campaign played on the fears of a region already hard hit by unemployment. The Hazelton-Wilkes-Barre area in Luzerne County and the Scranton area in adjoining Lackawanna County are both areas of critical unemployment.

Unemployment there is so great that the Labor Dept.—the very week the wage cut was proposed—asked the special surplus manpower committee to authorize awarding defense contracts in the two areas even when the bids are not the lowest.

The two counties are in the heart of the anthracite (hard) coal region, where for many years the mines have been operating only two and three days a week.

Many of the members—and the leaders—of the TWUA locals in the two counties are former miners who went to work in the mills when they could no longer find work in the mines.

GETTING LOWDOWN: Delegates to the institute from the Pennsylvania anthracite region learn from the CIO News that unemployment is a nationwide problem.

St. Lawrence Power Vital To Textiles In New England, Institute Told

POWER from the proposed St. Lawrence Seaway could be used to help the New England textile industry, Dr. N. R. Danielian, executive vice president of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Association, last week told the Washington legislative institute of the CIO Textile Workers.

Dr. Danielian said the Seaway dam would make available plenty of cheaper electric power to operate the New England textile mills. Some textile mills have moved South and others have threatened to, claiming their New England operations are too costly.

The association official told the two score delegates to the institute that whether New England —which now has high rates— would benefit from the cheaper power would be up to the people of the area.

He said that cheaper power is "just as important for industry as for homes." Cheap industrial power, he said, makes jobs, and makes labor more productive.

Transmission lines would have to be built to carry the power to the mills, Dr. Danielian pointed out. He said that TWUA members and other citizens would have to "go to the state houses" to have agencies set up to erect such lines.

Dr. Danielian said that the principal opposition to the seaway comes from eastern trunk rail lines, the New England and New York power companies and eastern banking interests.

He said that through such holding companies as the Electric Bond and Share and through interlocking directories, these groups were able to use southern and western power and rail companies to bring pressure on congressmen from those areas.

Speakers at the five day conference included a number of Senators and representatives, government officials, CIO and PAC leaders.

The delegates visited congressmen from their states, Virginia, Pennsylvania, Maine, Minnesota and New Jersey, to urge support for the seaway, the Moody Bill, the Point Four Program and stronger rent and price controls, and action to repeal the Taft-Hartley Law.

The institute was arranged by TWUA Education Dept., which is directed by Lawrence Rogin, and was under the chairmanship of Pres. Charles C. Webber of the Virginia CIO Council.

'Could You Live On $22 A Week?' Workers Ask

Here are some letters written to Sen. Duff (R. Pa.) by unemployed members of the CIO Textile Workers who were formerly employed at the Nanticoke, Pa., plant of the Duplan Corp., which closed down several months ago:

Mrs. Rose Duncan wrote:

"We are now unemployed and cannot make ends meet with what little we get in unemployment compensation. When I get my check I go to the store to buy just a little food and more than half of it is gone.

"How are we supposed to pay rent, insurance and buy clothes for our families? No matter how hard we go look for work, they say they're not hiring. Please support the Moody Bill."

"Will you please vote in favor of the Moody Bill?" Mrs. Rose Riech asked. "So long as I have to pay 89c a pound for hamburg, the amount of my unemployment compensation is not enough. Also the prospect of receiving work here is very gloomy. There is not a single defense industry here . . ."

"My place of work has been shut down for in indefinite period," Margaret E. Meade pleaded. "I have signed for a new claim but instead of getting more I receive less. Could you live on $22 a week? . . .

"There are four members in my household to support. My father was laid off from the mines as his job was electrified. The unemployment here is very serious. Have heard about the Moody Bill and am asking you to consider this very deeply . . ."

Chiselers Pay Up

The wage and hour division of the U. S. Dept. of Labor cracked down on 14,215 employers for chiseling on minimum wages, overtime and child labor laws last year. The agency forced them to pay $6.6 million to 95,000 workers.

The Biggest Battle—

'Horsemeat' Congress Renews Assault On Price Law

(Last of two articles)
By MILTON PLUMB

NOT CONTENT with having reduced many Americans to eating horsemeat when they wrecked anti-inflation legislation last year, Congressional enemies of price controls are readying a new assault to weaken them still further.

Their main attack is a demand for "decontrol" because many items are now selling below ceilings. It is actually a demand for the elimination of price controls solely because, under the law Congress wrote last year, ceilings can't be set low enough to prevent rising prices.

To bolster this belief, price control foes are using still another will-o'-the-wisp. Nothing that has come out of the Congressional bog of whimsy has been more phony than the argument, offered to support the "decontrol drive, that OPS regulations require "unnecessary record keeping."

Lobbyists for the big Southern cotton growers, Western beef, sheep and potato growers, and other national business groups have been badgering congressmen in droves about the records required by OPS. They claim record-keeping costs money and then use this as a club to demand elimination of price controls.

Actually, OPS has done such a good job of reducing record-keeping requirements in its price orders to a minimum that even some members of Congress who advocate decontrol admit privately that they don't think the requirements could be reduced further without killing price controls.

Heres' why:

Probably no industry finds record-keeping more burdensome, because of the large number of different items involved, than the grocery business. OPS requires all grocers to keep for one year all their invoices, freight bills and other receipts indicating prices paid for food products.

If that seems unreasonable, consider this: Grocers normally would keep such records, anyhow, for they are of basic importance in establishing operating costs for income tax, general auditing, and other purposes.

Furthermore, OPS reporting requirements also have been slashed to the bone. Once manufacturers report their new price ceilings figured under a recent series of orders, they won't have to make any more reports unless they bring out new products.

The truth is that, although OPS gets the blame, the new reports which must be filed were made necessary by Congress when it adopted the "terrible" Capehart and Herlong Amendments. Those amendments shot prices upward, and made the new ceilings mandatory over OPS protests.

No business lobby has yet complained about the higher prices. However, since the new ceilings are based on former costs and markups they couldn't have been figured honestly if the records businessmen complain about weren't available.

The attacks on record-keeping rests on a hope that it will bring on legislation providing that most businessmen won't have to keep any evidence to prove they are obeying price regulations.

Under such conditions effective enforcement of even the present weak price controls would be impossible.

PROOF that the "excessive records" argument is only a Trojan Horse with which its users hope to kill all price controls is found in the fact that business spokesmen using it have now jumped all over OPS for trying out a "community pricing program" under which no records or reporting are necessary.

OPS undertook community pricing on an experimental basis at the urging of its Consumer Advisory Committee, made up of representatives of leading national consumer organizations. The experiment is being conducted in three cities—Fresno, Calif., Fargo, N. D. and Jacksonville, Fla.

There's nothing radically new about community pricing, which was the kind of price control that worked effectively during World War II. It differs from the kind of price control now in general effect in three important ways:

1. Ceilings are figured by OPS on a community-wide basis. Stores are placed in one of four classes, and the ceilings for each are adjusted to take into account different operating costs, but each store in the same class has the same dollars-and-cents ceiling for each individual item.

2. Charts giving the ceiling price for each individual product must be posted.

3. The need for record-keeping and price figuring by merchants is eliminated.

Under present regulations outside the experimental cities, each store figures its own ceiling prices. Such ceilings are not posted, and, as customers have no way of checking, they have no way of knowing what the legal ceiling is in any store.

Since businessmen had been complaining about the records OPS required, as well as the job of figuring and reporting their own ceilings, it's only logical to think that they would welcome "community pricing" in the three cities where it's being tried.

Instead, there has been a wave of protests. The Wall Street Journal, chief organ of the "decontrol - because - of - unnecessary-records" crowd, ran a page-one story ridiculing the Fresno test.

"Prices in Fresno have generally been unchanged by the new system," it claimed.

The truth is that the posting of ceilings in Fresno groceries immediately brought prices down a penny to 14c on about 20 commonly-used food items. These included such staples as lard, shortening, frozen foods, canned milk, canned peas and beans, canned meat, and salad and cooking oil.

THE Wall Street Journal article also said that, at a meeting of 250 heads of women's clubs called by OPS to explain the new system, a "housewife" got up and protested:

"I've known my butcher for years. I play bridge with his wife, and even if I bothered to check his prices and found he was charging too much. I would never report him to anyone."

The phoniness of the whole kill-price-control drive becomes clear when you identify this alleged "housewife." Since she spoke at an open meeting, that wasn't difficult to do.

The person identified as a typical consumer, we have learned, is actually the secretary of the Fresno Chamber of Commerce.

Samuel Jacobs, CIO representative on the OPS National Consumer Advisory Committee, says that despite published reports to the contrary, labor has been solidly behind the community pricing program. He urges consumers in other areas to push for its extension to their communities as a means of keeping prices down.

Big Lobbies Open Drive On Controls

A "secret" meeting of 150 representatives of big business lobbies was held in Chicago last week to map out a campaign to "scare Congress" into killing price controls.

The first result was a statement by Chauncey B. Watson, president of the Cornbelt Livestock Feeders Association, predicting a "huge nationwide meat shortage" by July. This same phony line was used by the meat lobbies last year to prevent pending rollbacks of beef prices.

Now It's The High Cost Of Dying, And Unions Act

WHILE continuing the fight against the high cost of living, CIO local unions in St. Louis, Mo., have decided to do something about the high cost of dying.

The St. Louis CIO Council has joined with four AFL unions in considering action to reduce funeral costs.

Present plans call for either the formation of a coop undertaking establishment by the unions themselves, or formulating a lower cost working agreement with existing establishments.

A union spokesman said the average cost of a funeral in St. Louis is $825 compared to $550 charged by some union-owned undertaking establishments in Illinois.

The Cooperative League of the USA recently asked the Federal Trade Commission to investigate high funeral costs in the country. Sec. Jerry Voorhis told FTC investigators that the cost of a funeral is 3.8 times the cost of the casket. The CIO Auto Workers in Detroit have an arrangement with some undertakers that saves an average of $369 per funeral.

The FTC at first voted down an investigation of the burial industry, then changed its mind. Commissioner John Carson revealed that FTC has been checking on the undertaking business for the last eight years.

13c Package By Gas, Coke In Carolina

A 13c-AN-HOUR "package" increase will bring an additional $46,400 this year for 213 employes of the Kopper Co. plant at Charleston, S. C., under the contract which has just been negotiated by the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers.

Features of the contract are safety bonuses, an escalator clause and three days off with pay for death in the family.

Other contract benefits include a 7c across-the-board pay increase, six paid holidays, shift differentials of 3c and 5c an hour and company-paid luncheons during overtime.

The contract is significant because it was only last December that Local 513 ousted the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers and voted to affiliate with the CIO union.

Calvin Keith, a member of the local negotiating committee, said that UGC&CWA had accomplished more in two months than MMSW had been able to do in four years.

MMSW took another lacing at the hands of UGC&CWA in Flat River, Mo., where the CIO union defeated the Communist-dominated organization 1414 to 901.

"I told him that I'd marry him if he promised me a five-day, 40 hour week, two weeks' paid vacation, and unlimited severance pay."

CIO Protests Move To Stall New Public Housing Units

THE CIO has challenged a strange theory that new public housing is inflationary but houses built by private industry are not.

The doctrine was indicated in recent Senate testimony by William Martin, Jr., former head of the New York Stock Exchange and now chairman of the Federal Reserve Board's governing committee.

Walter Reuther, auto union head and chairman of the CIO Housing Committee, challenged Martin's views, in a letter to Sen. Maybank (D. S.C.), chairman of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee. Reuther said Martin's testimony was a complete reversal of the Federal Reserve Board's position regarding housing financed under the government's housing program.

Martin had objected to the issuance of bonds by local public housing authorities for the construction of some 800,000 low-rent housing units, on grounds that such a financial move would feed inflation.

"The Reserve Board's disapproval of issuance of credit for public housing, while approving credit expansion for private builders, is an outright discrimination against low-income families who stand most in need of additional housing," Reuther told Maybank.

He said the board's position on severe credit restrictions on public housing and consumer credit "is in marked contrast to its policy and performance with respect to bank loans to private business."

"THE NEED for low-rent public housing, especially to provide for worker's families in critical areas, is desperate," Reuther wrote. "To permit private lending institutions or the Federal Reserve Board to destroy that program would create incalculable hardship for middle and low income families.

"The program which Congress has authorized in this field is certainly a minimum one, and it is unthinkable that the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board would propose to confine the housing starts of 1952 to high-cost, high-rent units which only well-to-do families can afford."

Shipbuilders Strike Date Is Postponed

NEGOTIATORS for the CIO Shipbuilding Workers last week agreed to postpone strike action against six East Coast shipyards of the Bethlehem Steel Co. until Mar. 30.

IUMSWA Pres. John Grogan said the action was taken to give the union and the company additional time to work out agreement on a new contract.

Bethlehem asked the Mar. 30 extention on the grounds that it has been tied up in negotiations with the CIO Steelworkers and could not devote full attention to the IUMSWA sessions.

Representing 32,000 workers, the ship union is demanding a 20c an hour wage increase and other benefits, including a $3000 guaranteed annual wage and a union shop.

"Sorry, but the only opening we have for non-union men in this firm is the exit!"

'Keep Uncle Sam Poor Club'—

Sales Levy Goal Of Lobbyists For Millionaire's Tax Bill

EXPERTS of two congressional committees last week issued a stinging denunciation of the proposal of "The Keep Uncle Sam Poor Club."

Their report gave the cost of the "club's" proposal to limit personal and corporate income taxes to 25% of annual income, by means of a constitutional amendment.

The staffs of the Joint Economic Committee and the House Small Business Committee said the proposed tax limitation would lop off $16 billion from current government revenues. Corporations alone would pay $14 billion less.

Even without such a loss, the government's estimated receipts of $62.7 billion for the fiscal year ending June 30 are expected to leave the Treasury $8 billion in the hole.

The experts warn that the "almost certain result" of the tax cut would be to force the government to rely upon sales taxes and deficit financing.

The congressional advisers also said that the revenue loss during the current period could be offset only by defense cutbacks or borrowing and it would be difficult to balance the budget, even when defense spending declines.

The Committee for Constitutional Government—one of the chief backers of the tax cut amendment—admitted that the proposal would put the government further in the red and would necessitate a federal sales tax and higher excise taxes.

A booklet just issued by CCG stated that the cut would reduce federal revenue by $9 billion, an increase of $7 billion over the loss that the proponents of the measure originally estimated.

CCG said that the revenue loss "could readily be made up by the levying of additional excise or sales taxes. For example, a manufacturers' excise tax of 10 to 12%, or a retail sales tax of 8%, would yield about $9 billion."

Other backers of the proposal are the American Taxpayers Association and the Western Tax Council.

Why such corporation-financed groups as the CCG want the cut was brought out by the congressional experts. They reported that the ceiling would reduce the 30% normal corporate tax to 25%, and would completely eliminate the 22% surtax on profits above $25,000 and the excess profits tax.

The staffs estimated that "only about 1% of all income taxpayers would benefit. Tax benefits would not start for a single person unless he had taxable income of more than $8000 a year. A married couple with children would not benefit unless their income was in excess of $20,000 a year.

The congressional advisers also said the ceiling would deal a "serious blow" to small business. It was explained that "just as it would tend to shift the individual tax burden from the rich to the poor, so it would tend to shift the corporate tax burden from the large to the small."

Number 28

Virginia became the 28th state whose legislatures have approved a proposed constitutional amendment putting a limit of 25% on individual and corporate income taxes.

If 32 states approve such a resolution, a constitutional convention would have to be called to act on the tax ceiling proposal. In a number of states, the legislatures have rescinded their action or governors has vetoed the resolution.

Bell Revenue Sets Record —And It Wants Still More

UP AND UP goes the revenue of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., which operates the Bell telephone system.

AT&T's gross operating revenue last year mounted to $3,639,462,365 compared with $3,261,528,032 in 1950, and established a new record.

But AT&T reported last week in its annual financial statement to stockholders that it was not able to pay as much on its stock in 1951 as it did in 1950. It said that its net income last year was $364,874,176 or $11.75 a share, but in 1950 it was $346,962,051 or $12.58 a share.

The gimmick is that the number of shares of stock issued by the company rose by 3,442,878 in 1951.

Cleo F. Craig, AT&T president, served notice that his company—the world's largest corporate enterprise—is going to continue to press for higher telephone rates.

He was critical of the "few" state regulatory commissions that have denied rate boosts.

"They served the nation well in 1951," Craig reported. "Their ability and good spirit are the foundation for confidence in the years to come."

Craig made much of the fact that costs are going up.

Will he remember that the cost of living has gone up now as new contracts are being negotiated with the CIO Communications Workers to which the Bell workers belong?

ICFTU Urges Rejection Of Franco's Bid To UNESCO

MOVES to admit Franco Spain to an affiliate of the United Nations and to enact anti-union legislation in Japan were strongly condemned last week by the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

J. H. Oldenbroek, ICFTU secretary treasurer, urged rejection of the Spanish government's application for admission to the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO).

Separately, the ICFTU secretary protested to Prime Minister Yoshida of Japan against pending bills in the Diet which, if adopted, "would seriously undermine the very foundations of free trade unionism in Japan."

Such proposals as an organizational control law, a collective demonstration control law, a ban on general strikes, and weakening of the labor standards act, Oldenbroek said, would block a "healthy growth of free democratic trade unions" in Japan.

Tax Loophole Cost Set At $4.5 Billion

SEN. HUMPHREY (D. Minn.) last week renewed his campaign to plug income tax loopholes which he said are costing the federal government more than $4.5 billion a year.

The loopholes, he said, benefitted almost entirely those whose incomes are more than $10,000 a year. Humphrey, who set forth his views in a pamphlet issued by the Public Affairs Institute, last year tried unsuccessfully to get Congress to plug the loopholes.

He again attacked the $5.6 billion tax increase bill which Congress passed last year, asserting that "it increased the inequities of existing law."

Humphrey listed six principal loopholes:

- Percentage depletion — $750 million. Owners of certain mineral products are permitted to deduct a certain percentage of their gross income as a depletion allowance in figuring their income taxes,
- Income splitting—$2.5 billion. Humphrey said that under this device which was enacted in 1948 to benefit married couples only 3% of the benefits went to married couples with incomes below $5000 a year.
- Failure to enact a provision for withholding of taxes on corporate dividend and bond interest payments—$400 million.
- Failure to tighten and increase the capital gains tax rate sharply—$400 million.
- A broadened family partnership provision in the 1951 law —$100 million. Humphrey said that an infant could be named a business partner, a device which allows splitting of income and gives lower rates on each segment of income.

'America Plus'—

Jim Crow Move Fought By Los Angeles CIO

IT'S A LONG WAY from the Mason-Dixon line to California, but the West Coast state is in a developing political battle over a proposal to legalize Jim Crow.

'Labor's Help Ignored In Civil Defense'

By HENRY SANTIESTEVAN

A SHARP attack on the nation's civil defense program as "virtually useless in the face of a major disaster" and for ignoring the organizational know-how and manpower resources of organized labor was leveled by CIO spokesmen in Los Angeles.

The criticisms were voiced at a Regional Conference on Civil Defense and Defense Community Problems, which brought together CIO leaders from eight Western states.

The meeting was sponsored by the CIO Department of Organization and Councils and the National CIO Community Services Committee. It was one of a series of similar conferences being held in various cities.

Richard T. Leonard, CIO national representative, representing Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice-president, opened the conference with a talk on CIO's role in the emergency.

Leo Perlis, director of the National CIO Community Services Committee, outlined the committee's program in the national emergency. The session was chaired by Irwin L. DeShetler, Southern California CIO Regional Director.

PERLIS sharply accused the National Association of Manufacturers and U.S. Chamber of Commerce as having declared publicly that they are opposed to, and will not participate in, any joint labor-management program of civil defense.

Tim Flynn, Northern California CIO Regional Director, reported "there has been no effort made to enlist the aid of the unions in the state of California in the civil defense program."

Maj. Gen. Walter Robertson, State Civil Defense Director, told the group the government was now organizing broadened committees which would include participation by CIO and other labor organizations.

Among other CIO participants were Adolph Germer, CIO national representative, and Manuel Dias and Robert R. Clark, presidents of the CIO-California Industrial Union Council and Greater Los Angeles CIO Council.

The proposal is an initiative proposition titled "Freedom of Choice."

Its chief sponsoring organization is an outfit called "America Plus," which critics have dubbed "America Minus."

And its goal is to get 305,000 signatures to put the proposition on the California ballot next Nov. 4.

Recognizing that the measure is aimed at labor as well as racial and religious minorities, the Greater Los Angeles CIO Council at its last meeting condemned "this evil proposal." It urged all CIO affiliates in the state to oppose the measure and "to warn their members against this anti-labor, anti-American proposal and place them on guard against inadvertently signing the petition."

HEADING up "America Plus" is State Sen. Jack B. Tenney (R. Los Angeles), for several years chairman of the Legislature's Un-American Activities Committee.

The "Freedom of Choice" initiative he is pushing wouldn't leave much freedom or choice. If enacted, it would:

- Repeal California's 50-year-old state civil rights act barring discrimination in public places.
- Outlaw any state or local Fair Employment Practices measures or other civil rights legislation.
- Legalize discrimintion in employment.
- Seek to legalize restrictive covenants in housing, which have been struck down by the U. S. Supreme Court.

The Los Angeles CIO Council warned "this proposal would make discrimination the legal and public policy of California, and would give the arbitrary power to refuse to hire any worker without any grounds, and would place in jeopardy the legality of union contracts."

THE council condemned the initiative "as subversive in its attack on traditional American freedoms and fair play; as destructive toward democracy in its savage attempt to impose the degradations of discrimination in the form of legal and public policy upon society; and as giving aid and comfort to the fifth column designs of the Communist Party by undermining freedoms of our country."

Sponsors of "America Plus" are reported to be raising $75,000 to finance their petition drive—paying out 40c per signature.

And they're preparing to move from California to other states. Associated with Tenney in the campaign is Aldrich Blake, an Oklahoma oil man who has set up national headquarters in Tulsa.

Blake is reported to have said "this California test is important to the entire nation. For should the amendment carry, the result would set an example for other states."

Wood Union Asks Substantial Boost

"A substantial wage increase," three more paid holidays and improvements in vacation and health and welfare programs will be asked by CIO Woodworkers in negotiations now getting under way in the Pacific Northwest.

Contact talks covering more than 60,000 IWA-CIO members are scheduled in five states. Present agreements expire on April 1.

Bosses Try Old Dodge; Fail Again

ABOUT the oldest claim of food industry employers in the Far West is that they are engaged in "agriculture" and that their packing shed workers are "agricultural laborers"—and hence outside the National Labor Relations Act.

This claim was raised recently in an effort to deny a representation election to the CIO Fresh Fruit & Vegetable Workers.

But it was tossed out the window in a decision announced last week by the National Labor Relations Board in Washington.

The "agricultural laborers" claim was raised by J. J. Crosetti and W. R. Scarborough, operators of a lettuce and tomato packingshed in Watsonville, Calif.

They also operate several farms, but the NLRB ruled that the packingshed is a separate operation and ordered that an election be held at the seasonal employment peak.

The Crosetti plant is one of several operations organized by CIO Local Industrial Union 78 since it won major bargaining rights in the fresh fruit and vegetable packingsheds in California and Arizona some 18 months ago.

Shoe Workers Challenge Commie 'Disruption' In N. Y.

FORTHCOMING elections in the CIO Shoe Workers' New York area will determine whether the union there "will carry on without internal disruption or will become the victim of Communist fanatics."

The issue was brought to the fore in a statement of a committee of CIO shoe local leaders in the New York region of the union. The committee is headed by Hugo Ciliberti, from one of the largest shops in the union's jurisdiction there, and John Noto.

A partial list of sponsors include officers of most of the union's locals in New York, including Locals 60, 61, 62, 66 and 129. The statement is also sponsored by Isodore Rosenberg and Fileno De Novellis, manager and secretary-treasurer of the union's New York Joint Council.

The committee is supporting Steve Ocuto for the USWA national executive board. Ocuto is opposing the re-election of Freda Casso.

The statement hailed the action of the N. Y. Joint Council in refusing to endorse the incumbent for re-election on grounds that "her political convictions and aspirations" are repugnant to the membership.

The statement charged that Communists would like to dominate the council, and would follow a "trail which leads to isolation, disruption and ruin."

Noting that Communist-dominated unions expelled by the CIO have withered away to "mere propaganda skeletons," the statement urged support of Ocuto who would do an "honest trade union job," without "confusion and political trickery."

Guild Recognized After Long Fight

A four-year-long organizing drive has paid off for the San Francisco-Oakland local of the CIO Newspaper Guild, as its bargaining rights were recognized voluntarily by management of the Santa Rosa Press Democrat.

In the midst of hearing by the National Labor Relations Board on the Guild's election petition, the publisher recognized SFONG as representative of 23 editorial employes. Contract talks will begin shortly, said Bob Brown, local secretary.

Named To Panel

William Kessler, CIO Steelworkers international representative, was named CIO member of the Wage Stabilization Board panel which will hear the USA's disputes with Aluminum Co. of America and Kaiser Aluminum Co.

Unions 'Best Salesmen Of Democracy'

SEC. OF LABOR Maurice J. Tobin said last week that labor unions are the nation's "best salesmen of democracy."

In the 39th annual report of the Labor Dept. to Congress, Tobin paid his highest commendation for labor's activities toward building international cooperation.

He said American trade unions offer the best hope of human freedom and a rising standard of living throughout the world.

The report, entitled "Mobilizing Labor for Defense," also covered manpower problems, mobilization impact on prices, wages and industrial relations, and labor legislation and court decisions.

Covering 20 years of government efforts in the labor-management field, the report outlined programs designed to develop and insure mass purchasing power in the nation.

Tobin listed these programs as encouragement of collective bargaining, establishment of old age pensions and unemployment insurance, minimum wages, prohibition of child labor and price support for farmers.

He pointed out that much remains to be done and emphasized the need for training apprentices, older workers and the handicapped for useful employment.

Tobin urged that defense contracts and new plants should, wherever possible, be located where there is an available supply of labor. He said employers should work through the public employment service so their needs can be coordinated with the needs of other employers.

The government's efforts in the field of labor-management were called "insurance policies against depression" by the Cabinet Member. He said these programs have paid off as follows:

- The national output increased from $104 billion in 1929 to $283 billion in 1950 and the physical quantity raised 80%.
- Wages and salaries tripled since 1929 to $152 billion in 1950.
- The average annual wage went up to $3000 in 1950 from $1400 in 1929.
- During the same period, farm output rose from $14 billion to $33 billion.
- Over the same period, he pointed out, corporate profits after taxes increased nearly one-third, to $24 billion a year.

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

THE WRITER last week appeared before the Senate Labor and Labor-Management Relations Sub-Committee on behalf of CIO and protested strongly against the barbaric labor conditions existing among many migrant agricultural workers.

Reg. Dir. Nicholas Dragon, of Arizona-New Mexico, and Field Rep. Ken Gillie, both of whom have been working among the fruit and vegetable shed workers of the West and Southwest, reported on the deplorable conditions and low wages existing among unorganized American and Mexican migrant workers. Dragon pointed out that under present laws for the importation of Mexican farm hands, legal foreign entrants are protected under minimum standards and workmen's compensation guarantees. On the other hand, native American farm workers do not have such protection.

Charles Lindberg of the Brewery Workers referred to the American migrants as "a forgotten group." The deplorable conditions and pitiful wages that these workers work under also have an adverse effect upon other workers in the area. I pointed out to the committee that Congress has failed to meet these undesirable conditions with appropriate legislation and appropriations.

The CIO pledges to do everything it can to correct these undesirable conditions and bring benefits and protection to the migrant workers that are enjoyed by other laboring groups.

Jack Lawson, an old British miner, visited me this past week. Since a boy in the mines, Jack has risen to a prominent position in British government. He was very interested in the achievements of CIO, its problems and its industrial structure. When he returns to England he is going to explain the CIO to the miners and other labor groups in Britain.

Reg. Dir. George Craig reports that the board of directors of the Philadelphia Civil Service Employees Association, an independent union that represents 5000 employes of the City of Philadelphia, voted unanimously to affiliate with the CIO Government Civic Employees Organizing Committee. GCEOC Chairman Federoff and Dir. Craig work diligently with this group.

Asst. Reg. Dir. Fullerton Fulton reports that in a representation election held at the St. Joe Lead Co., Flat River, Mo., the workers favored the Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers over the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers by a vote of 1414 to 901. Fifty voted no union.

Acting Reg. Dir. A. R. Kinstley reports that the Steelworkers won a representation election at the Goldblatt Tool Co., Kansas City, Mo., by the following vote: eligible 23, USA-CIO 13, no union 10. Intl. Rep. Harold Edwards was in charge.

Reg. Dir. Michael Livoda reports that in a representation election at the Eversman Mfg. Co., Denver, Colo., the UAW-CIO won out in a tough campaign in which the company applied every underhanded tactic possible to defeat them. The vote was UAW-CIO 26, no union 24. Credit for organizing this plant goes to Intl. Rep. Charlie Mall.

Reg. Dir. Chester Dusten reports that in a representation election held at radio station KELS, Kelso, Wash., the engineers voted unanimously to affiliate with the Natl. Association of Broadcasting Engineers.

Reg. Dir. The vote was 41 to 1. Reps. Tony Mata and Leonard Rhodes handled the campaign.

Sub-Reg. Dir. Ralph Tillotson reports that the UAW-CIO won a very important representation election victory at the new Willys-Overland plant in Erie, Pa. The plant is presently employing only a small skeleton force but is slated to become a large operation of some several thousand by late summer. The vote was Power Plant, UAW-CIO 10, AFL Engineers 5; Production Workers, UAW-CIO 67, IAM-AFL 26, challenged 2, void 1. UAW Rep. Jerry Biddle was in charge of the successful drive.

Act. Reg. Dir. Adolph Germer reports that the Steelworkers won a representation election at the Commercial Shearing and Stamping Co., Salt Lake City, Utah, by a vote of 10 to 1 for no union. USA Rep. Arthur Mullett worked on the election.

Reg. Dir. Loren Houser reports that the CIO Electrical Workers won a representation election at the Marion Machine and Foundry Supply Co., Marion, Ind., by a vote of 94 to 19 no union, 1 void and 1 challenged. This was the first victory for the IUE in that territory. Also the UE campaigned viciously against IUE but had to withdraw a few days before the election. IUE Rep. Phil Harrity conducted the drive.

State Dir. Ernest Pugh reports that the Steelworkers won a representation election at the Walker Foundry and Machine Co., Roanoke, Va., by a vote of 96 to 86 no union, with 6 not voting. Reps. Lawrence Marine and Ted Jennings were in charge of the organizational work.

Murray Urges Giving Freely To Red Cross

VOLUNTEERS now collecting for the Red Cross Appeal were praised last week by CIO Pres. Philip Murray as "the living symbols of a great American tradition—good neighbors helping one another without regard to race or creed."

Endorsing the appeal, Murray said:

"As President of the CIO, I want to ask you to contribute generously to the 1952 Fund Appeal of the American Red Cross.

"In 1952, the demands upon Red Cross services will be greater than ever before. For our boys in uniform, for the people here at home, the Red Cross can perform truly humanitarian services in time of emergency and in time of need.

"Natural disasters, like the great Missouri flood, bring suffering to thousands of families. These distressed persons turn to our Red Cross for help—help that can save lives and bring families together. Man-made disasters, whether it be cruel armed conflict or raging fire, also bring human suffering of the most intense sort.

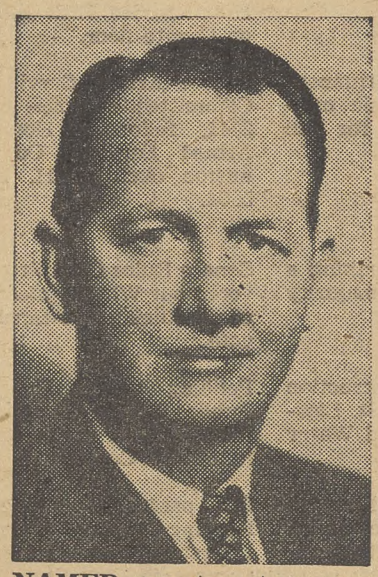
"At times like these, the American Red Cross steps in with a friendly spirit and a helping hand. It can do so because you give generously to the Red Cross Appeal.

"The Red Cross volunteers, who will knock on our doors in the month of March, are the living symbols of a great American tradition—good neighbors helping one another without regard to race or creed.

"Speaking for millions of union workers in the CIO, I know they will do their part in this most worthy cause. I hope that every American will contribute to the Red Cross in 1952."

Going In Hock

Americans are going in hock further than ever because of high living costs. According to the Institute of Life Insurance, personal debts climbed by more than $8 billion in 1951.



NAMED secretary-treasurer of the CIO Insurance & Allied Workers Organizing Committee is Richard T. Leonard, a CIO national representative who had led the John Hancock negotiations. He succeeds Harold Ash, who takes a union publicity post.

CIO Urges Grants For Medical Group

THE CIO has opened a counterattack against the attack of the American Medical Association and its allies who have successfully blocked a national health insurance system and federal aid to medical education.

In a letter to international unions; state, city and county councils, and local industrial unions, CIO Pres. Philip Murray and Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey called for "generous contributions" to the Committee for the Nation's Health.

"The committee has spearheaded the demand of the American people for federal legislation that will make possible medical care and services for all our people," the letter said. The affiliates also were asked to circularize their locals for contributions.

Murray and Carey pointed out that the AMA lobby "is spending approximately $2.5 million a year and that it is assisted by the big insurance companies and the real estate interests.

"We cannot, of course, expect to meet the tremendous lobby jackpot of the AMA and its allies," the letter continued. "We feel, however, that we and our affiliates can and must make it possible for the committee to continue to function and even expand its activities in this important year of 1952.

"National health insurance has become a leading campaign issue. We cannot permit the lying propaganda of the monopoly interests to go unanswered.

Checks should be sent to the National CIO and should be made payable to the Committee for the Nation's Health.

CIO Aids Welfare Group Working in Defense Areas

ALL OVER the United States, there are communities that are bursting their seams because of the influx of military personnel or defense workers.

It was to assist such areas to organize and expand their health, welfare and recreational facilities for civilians that the United Community Defense Services was set up.

The National CIO Community Services Committee is a participating organization of UCDS, which includes 15 voluntary health, welfare and recreation organizations.

UCDS is a member agency of the United Defense Fund, which is financed by Community Chests and United Red Feather campaigns.

The importance of UCDS was pointed out by Ted F. Silvey, CSC secretary, at the annual UCDS meeting in New York City.

"We must recognize the importance of the production worker," declared Silvey, who is a vice president of UCDS.

"The circumstances of military conflict force men in uniforms to go wherever they are sent; others—industrial workers — to go where the need exists. It is a fallacy to say that every individual and community is perfectly qualified to take care of their own needs.

"The help of UCDS and similar organizations to defense affected communities is imperative to the defense effort."

Other CIO representatives on the UCDS board of directors are CSC Director Leo Perlis, CSC Treas. John Brophy, and George D. Guest, Atlanta, CIO Auto Workers.

Correction On Bemis Slaying

The CIO News, in a story on Feb. 4 about the acquittal on a murder charge of Cecil Cook of Bemis, Tenn., described him as "a scab working in the struck Bemis Bag Company plant at Bemis, Tenn., where TWUA members have been picketing for more than three months."

In fact, Cook had not been working in the plant, which has been closed down since the TWUA called its strike some time ago. He had, however, been circulating a back-to-work movement petition among the strikers.

CIO Fights Power Grab In Northwest

CIO leaders in the Pacific Northwest have joined commercial fishing interests, sportsmen's groups and the Oregon Grange in fighting a grab by a private utility company that would cost power consumers thousands, and may cost them and the nation's taxpayers millions.

Portland General Electric Co. has obtained permission from the Federal Power Commission to build the Felton dam on the Deschutes river in Oregon. The reason given in PGE newspaper ads (paid for, of course, by PGE customers) is that Felton dam can produce "badly needed power."

But the power is needed now, and the $22 million dam would not be completed by 1954 or 1955, and even then would produce only eight-tenths of 1% of the projected Northwest power pool. Steam plants could be built faster and cheaper, would generate more power. And the dam would kill salmon and steelhead, ruining a flourishing industry. LPA

Pension Gain In N. Y.

More than 835,000 union members in New York are covered by 208 pension plans now in effect, according to Edward Corsi, state industrial commissioner.

GE, Westinghouse Workers Protest WSB Pay Stall

INCENSED OVER the failure to obtain negotiated pay increases, more than 120,000 members of the CIO Electrical Workers at General Electric and Westinghouse plants will hold mass meetings and demonstrations Mar. 4.

The protests are directed at the failure of the Wage Stabilization Board to act on increases won last fall in collective bargaining.

Reflecting the discontent of the rank-and-file, member of IUE's General Electric and Westinghouse Conference Boards authorized the demonstrations at separate meetings at New York City.

At GE the union is pressing for WSB approval of 2.5% pay rise agreed upon last Oct. 11. The board has approved—after long delay—a 1.08% cost-of-living adjustment at GE.

WSB also has failed to approve a 4.5c to 10c hour increased negotiated with Westinghouse.

IUE Pres. James B. Carey, who is also secretary-treasurer of the CIO, said the board's "unreasonable delay" was giving the companies full use of "millions of dollars that rightfully belong to the workers."

"Until such time as these wages are paid into the pockets of our union members, we demand that the companies pay interest on the money at the same rate they pay their stockholders for the use of their money."

Carey estimated that the interest rate due the workers would be about 8%.

An indication of the length of the WSB delay is the fact that IUE is ready to start new negotiations with both companies.

New demands include increases of 2 to 3% for rising productivity, pay boosts to cover the increased cost of living, minimum hourly wage of $1.25 an hour, equal pay for equal work whether performed by men or women, and profit-sharing programs.

At the GE Conference Board meeting, Carey installed John Callahan, Pittsfield, Mass., and Frank Fiorillo, Schenectady, N. Y., as board chairman and secretary respectively. Both were re-elected for two-year terms.

A meeting of the IUE's Radio, Television and Parts Conference Board held at Boston called for action to alleviate 47,000 layoffs in the industry. The meeting called for:

Expansion of copper production, the release of all excessive military stockpiling, an end to building new plants when present facilities are available, speedier action by the government in allocating contracts in critical unemployment areas, and more frequent consultation by government agencies with IUE, and supplemental federal aid to state unemployment funds when unemployment is high.

Poll Tax Or No, Labor 'Registers' Voters In Texas

Texas is one of those states which still requires a poll tax in order to vote. As a result, the percentage of voters to population has been lamentably low.

So this year, CIO and AFL unions in Fort Worth decided to do something. Still working for repeal of the law, they had some of their members deputized to sell poll tax receipts.

Now more people hold voting "permits" this year than ever before in the county's history. The total close to 120,000. The previous high, in the presidential election year of 1948, was 72,868.

"Permits" sold directly by deputized unionists exceeded 9000, but "the sum total of the labor vote can't possibly be tabulated," said L. Ross Mathews, president of the joint labor conference.

Hailing the record sale, he commented: "The more people who are voters, the more we all feel like abiding by their decisions." LPA

CRYING TOWEL for defeated UE is tossed in by Sally Varga, secretary of Middlesex, N. J., CIO County Council, after CIO Electrical Workers win Metuchen plant of Westinghouse Electric Corp. by vote of 140 to 18 for UE. Disgruntled UE organizers are Tony Rodriguez (top) and Archer Cole.

3 N. Y. Bills Seek Curb On Labor PAC

THREE BILLS aimed at hampering union political action have been introduced in the New York Legislature.

The bills provide that:

- No labor union would be able to make a contribution to a political campaign from regular union funds.
- Any union officer or agent would be prohibited from soliciting contributions from union members or using his influence to obtain such a contribution.
- A union would have to hold a special meeting, with 30 days' notice to all members, before it could impose any special dues or assessments for political purposes.

The bill was introduced by Assemblyman Travis (D. Brooklyn), who had Sen. Erwin (R. Geneseo) introduce it in the upper chamber.

After Sec.-Treas. Harold J. Garno of the New York State CIO Council objected strenuously to the measure, Paul E. Fitzpatrick, Democrat State Chairman, disowned the bills.

Travis, who represents the home district of Francis J. Sinnot, Brooklyn Democratic leader, said:

"If unions want to become political organizations, they should do so themselves and not set up the American Labor Party or the Liberal Party as fronts."

Senate Kills Statehood For Alaska

STATEHOOD for Alaska was killed by a one-vote margin in the Senate last week, and the fate of a similar measure conferring Statehood on Hawaii remained in doubt at presstime.

The 45 to 44 vote by which the Alaskan bill was sent back to committee scored a crucial victory for the reactionary Republican-Dixiecrat coalition that dominates the 82nd Congress. Southerners have fought the statehood proposals chiefly on civil rights grounds.

Republican Senators split 20-20, after Sen. Taft (R. O.) had urged recommital on the ground that Alaska is still a "principality of the Interior Dept."

Northern Republicans who voted with Taft to shelve the measure included Sens. Brewster (Me.), Bricker (O.), Bridges (N. H.), Ferguson (Mich.), Martin (Pa.), Saltonstall (Mass.) and Wiley (Wisc.).

Among the Democrats, chiefly from Southern States, who voted to kill the measure was Sen. Kerr (Okla.), who has been mentioned as a possible Presidential candidate if Truman does not seek re-election.

The narrow margin was the closest that the Dixiegop coalition has come to defeat on a civil rights issue since GOP leaders made a deal with Southerners.

Wilson Takes 'Half-Step' To Aid Idle

(See Page 2)

Wilson Takes 'Half-Step' To Aid 4 Jobless Cities

He announced the first list of cities to be given special consideration in awarding defense contracts.

On it were Detroit, one of the nation's major sore spots as far as unemployment caused by defense changeover is concerned; Providence, R. I., and Scranton and Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

Wilson ordered the Defense Dept. to allow employers in the four cities to match any price negotiated for defense contracts by firms in other areas.

UNDER a ruling issued almost two months ago by Comptroller Gen. Lindsay C. Warren, Wilson has the power to order that contracts be awarded in the areas of greatest unemployment even though the bids there are not the lowest.

(It has now been about five months since UAW Walter P. Reuther urged that such a move be made.)

Wilson said that the use of his full power is not necessary at this time. His manpower director, Arthur S. Flemming, said the situation will be reviewed in 30 to 45 days.

Wilson acted on a recommendation of the Labor Dept. approved by the Inter-Agency Surplus Manpower Committee in issuing the first list.

Wilson's order does not cover the textile and shoe industries, both of which are suffering from serious unemployment. These will be considered on an industry wide basis, he said, in order that contracts will not be taken from one area and given to another.

Southern Democrats in Congress had expressed fear lest southern mills might lose contracts. A demand for industry-wide consideration of textiles, clothing and cotton garments was made recently by Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Works. In a statement, Potofsky laid the responsibility for the threat of "ghost towns" in the three industries on the anti-union bias of Defense Dept. procurement officers.

Five other areas were being considered for preferential treatment on recommendation of the Surplus Manpower Committee, Flemming said. They were Lawrence and Brockton, Mass., both textile centers with thousands of unemployed; Pottsville, Pa.; Asheville, N. C., and Crab Orchard, Ill.

Further relief for hard-pressed Detroit was indicated shortly after Wilson acted when the National Production Authority committed itself to raise the ceiling on automobile production in the three-month period beginning April 1 to 1,050,000 and to increase other civilian production slightly.

NPA Administrator Henry H. Fowler said "there is no question" but that the ceiling would be raised from the 930,000 level for the quarter. It had already been boosted from 800,000 to 900,000 units before reaching 930,000.

He said it would be made possible by turnbacks by the military of enough copper and aluminum, the "easing" of steel supply, and inventories of these critical metals already owned by the producers.

A government task force had warned mobilization planners against cutting auto production at a faster rate than the creation of defense jobs for the idle would permit—a position previously taken by the CIO Auto Workers.

The "minimum initial problem," the task force said, is to create 32,000 new defense jobs at once.

ASSISTANT Deputy NPA Administrator Frank R. Creedon last week told a construction industry advisory committee that permission will be granted shortly to start projects in seven cities where unemployment has been created by restrictions on commercial construction. The cities are New York, Boston, Washington, D. C., San Francisco, Portland, Ore., Seattle, Wash., and Los Angeles.

The Moody-Dingell Bill permitting federal supplementation of unemployment compensation benefits in states having jobless crises was endorsed last week by the New Jersey State CIO Council.

Textron To Close N. H. Rayon Mill

New England's hard-hit textile industry took another body blow last week when Textron, Inc., announced that it will close its rayon mill in Suncook, N. H. Five hundred members of the CIO Textile Workers will lose their jobs.

In spite of the fact that the country's textile industry already can produce one billion yards a year more than it can sell, Textron is expanding production in the South.

It has imported steel from Belgium for a new $6 million cotton mill in Meridian, Miss., which is being constructed and equipped at the expense of the city, and for a synthetic plant at Williamston, S. C., costing $6.5 million.

It also has a new mill under construction at Elizabethton, Tenn., and is awaiting National Production Authority action on another in Munroe county, Miss.

Murray Salutes Girl Scouts On Fortieth Year

PRES. Philip Murray extended the congratulations of the CIO to the Girl Scouts on their 40th anniversary last week and pledged continued cooperation with the organization.

"Girl Scouting is not only a vital part of our democratic way of life," he said, "but by training millions of American girls of all races and creeds in homemaking, international friendship, wholesome recreation, self-reliance and unselfish community service, it is extending the frontiers of democracy in America.

"I know that many CIO men and women act as volunteer troop leaders. I know that the daughters of many CIO members are Girl Scouts. I know that CIO halls and facilities have been made available to Girl Scout troops. I know also that CIO members and their families contribute generously for Girl Scout work.

"May I assure you, on behalf of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, that this activity and cooperation will not only be maintained and continued but will be expanded during the coming years.

"It is a source of gratification to the CIO and to me personally that through our National CIO Community Services Committee you have a channel for continuing and developing this cooperative relationship."

Oil Dispute Sent To WSB

PRESIDENT Truman last week headed off a threatened nation-wide strike by the CIO Oil Workers and 21 other unions in the oil industry by turning the wage dispute over to the Wage Stabilization Board.

The President said he acted because a strike in the petroleum industry would seriously affect "the progress of national defense."

The CIO union, a number of independent groups and AFL oil workers had been poised to strike March 10 in support demands for a 25c an hour wage boost, increased shift differentials and other benefits.

The postponement marked the second time within two weeks the nation's oil workers agreed to halt strike action. On Feb. 28, OWIU Pres. O. A. Knight and the leaders of the other unions involved heeded a request from Cyrus S. Ching, federal mediation head, for a week's postponement.

IVAR H. PETERSON

Ivar H. Peterson, administrative assistant to Sen. Morse (R. Ore.), was nominated by President Truman last week to be a member of the National Labor Relations Board.

WSB Grants Retroactive Pay To UAW

THE WAGE Stabilization Board has decided that members of the CIO Auto Workers at the Douglas Aircraft plants at Long Beach, Santa Monica and El Segundo, Calif., should receive their 10% increase retroactive to last April 6.

But the board postponed action on the union shop issue.

WSB two weeks ago recommended the 10% hike plus 9c an hour and other benefits, but failed to decide the retroactivity and the union issues.

At Rockford, Ill., UAW reached an agreement with the George D. Roper Co., ending a nine-week strike. UAW won a 10c an hour increase, an escalator clause and other benefits for 1100 workers. Wage provisions are subject to WSB approval.

UAW also won a three-month strike at the Liquid Carbonic Corp., Chicago.

IUE Walkouts Finally Bring WSB Action

THE WAGE Stabilization Board, after months of delay, last week approved wage increases negotiated last October by the CIO Electrical Workers.

The decision brought pay boosts to about 330,000 employes of the General Electric Co., Westinghouse Corp., and Sylvania Electric Co.

At GE and Sylvania, it raises wages by 2.5%, based on productivity, and means about 4c an hour retroactive to Sept. 15. At Westinghouse, the boosts run from 4 to 10c an hour, averaging about 6c, and are retroactive to Oct. 15.

GE and Sylvania employes previously had received approval of a cost of living increase of 1.08%. No cost of living raise was included in the Westinghouse agreement, but the total approved is about equal to the total at GE.

The WSB decision was handed down March 6, the day after the IUE and GE began negotiations under a wage reopening clause dated March 15. It followed by two days a series of walkouts by IUE members in GE and Westinghouse plants throughout the country protesting against the board's delay in acting.

"THE militancy and unity of our 70,000 members in GE plants and our 50,000 members in Westinghouse plants," said IUE Pres. James B. Carey, "as shown in protest walkouts March 4, have won approval from the reluctant Wage Stabilization Board.

"After far too long a delay, the deck is now cleared for negotiations for the GE and Westinghouse wage reopeners."

The IUE-GE negotiations were being held in New York. On March 5 the company announced it had offered the union a cost of living increase to be computed on the "old" index of the Bureau of Labor Statistics for March 15.

Lemuel R. Boulware, GE vice president, said the company would be "glad" to reopen wage negotiations later in case of major changes in WSB regulations or the national wage policy by March 1.

The offer met only one of the IUE's demands.

GREETINGS FROM VEEP: Delegates to the second session of the fourth annual Washington Legislative Institute of the CIO Textile Workers are welcomed by Vice President Alben W. Barkley at his office in the Senate Office Building.

CIO GREETING: Adolf Schaerf, vice-chancellor of the Austrian Republic, received a warm greeting from President Philip Murray during a recent visit to CIO headquarters in Washington. Murray told Schaerf—who has long been associated with the Austrian trade unions—that American workers "have a high regard for the splendid efforts of the Austrian people to rebuild their economy and their democratic way of life." The CIO president also expressed hope that the "stalling tactics" of the Soviet government would be overcome and that an Austrian peace treaty—long delayed by the Russians' tactics—"will soon be signed."

At WSB Hearing

Alcoa's Antiquated Wages Blasted By Steelworkers

THE more than 22,000 employes of the Aluminum Co. of America "desperately" need a substantial wage increase which the firm can well afford to pay out of excess profits, a special panel of the wage Stabilization Board was told last week by the CIO Steelworkers.

The panel is conducting hearings on 22 contract demands presented by the union and denied by the company in collective bargaining. The union among other things is seeking a 15c an hour general wage increase; establishment of a job evaluation and job classification program; establishment of a standard hourly wage scale; equal pay for women; elimination of Southern differentials; the union shop and several long-range improvements.

Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes of the Steelworkers told the panel that the company's wage structure is "utterly chaotic," and added:

"The employes of the Aluminum Co. need a wage inequity program no less than they need a general wage increase."

Its "antiquated conception" of setting up wage rates, and the "grossly unjust wage structure it enshrouds," he said, "can no longer be tolerated."

THE employes need a program to end wage inequities such as was launched in basic steel in 1945 at the direction of the National War Labor Board, he said.

He explained that Alcoa's rate structure now approximates that which prevailed in basic steel before the industry and the union took on the task of classifying thousands of jobs, with varying rates, into uniform job classifications with specific rates for each.

"With its chaotic wage structures in each plant," Thimmes said, "Alcoa combines an equally irrational and pernicious system of inter-plant inequalities or differentials. Each plant operated by the Aluminum Co. has an entirely different base wage rate, unrelated to those at its other plants."

As an example, he pointed out that the base rate in the firm's Mobile, Ala., plant is $1.19 an hour—lowest in the Alcoa empire—while that at Detroit is $1.44, the highest. But, he continued, some of the more highly skilled jobs at Mobile carry higher rates than the same jobs do in Detroit.

Thimmes hit sharply at the company for raising the "false issue" of inflation in opposing the union's wage demands and branded "this sudden zeal" to fight inflation "a palpable sham."

HE DENIED that wage raises are responsible for any of the price boosts that have taken place in the country since the Communist invasion of Korea, and pointed out that corporate profits and dividend payments have soared while wage earners have "fought a discouraging battle merely to maintain their living standards."

The union gave the special panel a study which showed that less than 5% of Alcoa employes earn enough to meet the modest weekly budget which the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics has said is necessary to maintain a decent standard of living.

The BLS set its city family budget at $79.73 a week in mid-December. Average weekly earnings of Alcoa employes range from $8.03 to $13.39 a week below that figure, the study showed. It also showed that 61% of Alcoa's employes are paid less than $1.50 an hour and that starting rates are as low as $1.09.

THE USA quoted company financial statements showing that profits before taxes last year were at the rate of $120.7 million. Cash dividends on common stock went from $8.8 million in 1939 to $13.4 million in 1951. Meanwhile, the workers' share of the income dollar dropped from 41.5c in 1947 to 35.5c in 1950.

The union estimated that each cent of wage increase would cost the company $630,000 a year, or $9.5 million for the 15c asked.

"The entire amount could be met out of the wide margin of 'excess' profits," the study said, "and still leave the company earning enough profits so that it would have to pay sizable excess profits tax."

Murray W. Latimer, the Steelworkers' consultant on the guaranteed annual wage, presented the union's case on that demand. The plan was basically the same as that proposed in basic steel.

Labor members of the special panel are William Kessler, international representative of the Steelworkers, and Maywood Boggs, of the AFL Boilermakers. Chairman is Saul Wallen, Boston arbitrator, with Charles Killingsworth, of the Univ. of Michigan, the second public member. Industry is represented by David B. Buerger, Pittsburgh lawyer, and D. D. Reichow, of the Goodrich Tire & Rubber Co.

Annual Wage Is Won At Sugar Plant

Announcement of the agreement was made by Meyer Sterm, UPWA regional director. The company is committed to providing an average of a little more than 37 hours of straight-time work for 52 weeks. Overtime does not count against the guarantee.

The union also won an increase of 10c an hour, retroactive to Oct. 1, and other benefits.

Pay For Voting Time Off Upheld

Workers must be paid for time off for voting, the Supreme Court decided last week.

It made the decision in upholding the constitutionality of a Missouri law which requires employers to pay for time taken for voting.

Twenty-four states have laws for time off for voting, and 15 made it unlawful to dock wages while workers are voting.

Two CIO Men Named Jobless Pay Advisers

Anthony W. Smith, assistant director of CIO councils, and Harry Kranz, legislative and public relations director of the New Jersey CIO Council, have been appointed members of the Federal Advisory Council to the Bureau of Employment Security.

Pay More Or Lose Employes, Woodworkers Tell Industry

DEMANDS for higher wages and other contract improvements have been served on timber industry employers in the five northwest states by the Northwest Regional Negotiating Committee of the CIO Woodworkers, representing some 60,000 workers.

At the same time, the committee warned the employers that unless wages are boosted substantially and working conditions improved, they are going to lose their employes to other better-paying industries which cannot find enough workers because of defense demands.

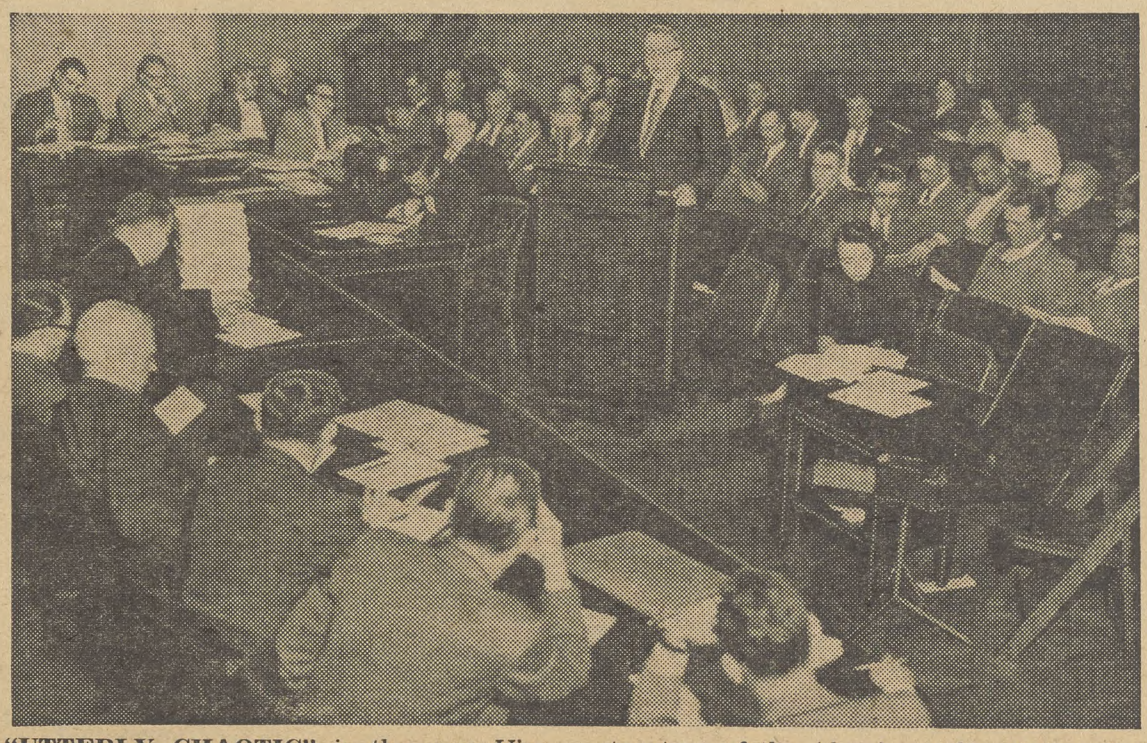
Industries will be bidding against each other for manpower, the committee predicted. At the same time more lumber will be needed for new housing, it added, and the timber barons may find themselves with too little lumber and not enough workers to produce it.

The committee is headed by A. F. Hartung, international president of the union. The contract expires Apr. 1. Negotiations are under way in Portland, Ore.

In addition to wage increases, the union is seeking an improved vacation clause, claiming the present plan denies many workers full vacations because of provisions which evade union aims and employer promises.

It also is seeking three more paid holidays, making the total six—as many other industries grant; better shift differentials, and improved clauses governing leaves of absence and rest periods.

The union shop is being demanded of the Weyerhaeuser Timber Co., largest in the industry.



"UTTERLY CHAOTIC" is the way Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes of CIO Steelworkers (standing) described the wage rate structure of the Aluminum Co. of America at a hearing before a special panel of WSB. He asked for a substantial pay increase.

Credit Union Grows

The CIO Brewery Workers Credit Union in Milwaukee, Wis., started 17 years ago with 24 members and $76, reached a goal of $1 million in savings after a vigorous campaign all through 1951.

Talking of Tax-Dodging

This week, chances are, you'll be joining with millions of other Americans in the annual wrestling contest with your income tax return.

No question about it, you're going to be paying a lot of money to Uncle Sam. A program to run the American government well, to help strengthen the free world, to build our military defenses, costs a lot of money.

The reactionary organizations and the conservative columnists would have you believe, of course, that taxation based on the ability to pay is the goal of demagogues—that talk of tax loopholes for the wealthy is nonsense—that the rich are paying every penny of taxes they possible can.

Now comes the Chrysler Corp. to prove that life can still be beautiful for the rich. The company announces a plan under which its 15 highest-ranking executives will be able to purchase 400,000 shares of Chrysler stock—at a 5% discount.

The profit from that 5% will not be taxed as income—but as "capital gains," and so, at a lower rate. The deal is a straight evasion of income tax for a privileged few.

A few weeks ago, when the steel workers asked for wage increases—on which they will pay full income taxes—there was an angry outburst from the corporations and their stooges. The public was told, falsely, that Uncle Sam would lose billions in taxes.

Will Chrysler, with its admitted tax-dodging scheme for executives, face a similar campaign? Will the Wall Street Journal denounce the project? Will newspaper editorials across the country bemoan the loss to the treasury of income tax from Chrysler's top 15?

You can give us the answer.

Some Progress Made...

A survey by the New York Times shows that America's lower-income families are better off than they were in 1939.

While economists may quarrel with some of the statistics, the Times study indicates substantial improvements for millions of families. In 1939, for example, "not one in fifty wage-earner families had an income of $5000 and over . . . ten years later, nearly one in five was in that class."

Or—"whereas only one in four wage-earner families had incomes of $2000 and over at the beginning, four out of five had such incomes at the end (of the 12-year-period).

Or—"one out of three wage-earner families had sub-standard incomes in 1939. Only one out of fifteen was in that class by 1949 . . ."

It's easy to exaggerate the meaning of the figures, to be sure. A $2000 income in 1939 brought a lot more groceries before World War II than it does today. And the definition of "sub-standard incomes" is open to many interpretations—for business economists tend to be pretty cheerful about how little money a worker's family needs.

But even despite this, the report is a tremendous endorsement of the effects of democratic trade unionism in America. For without the unions, those gains would have been simply impossible. The CIO can be proud of the part it has played in lifting American living standards.

How Much Can He Swallow?

Business-As-Usual Mobilizers Hit

The United States turned out more military goods in the 20 months before the Korean War started than it has since the conflict began, Robert R. Nathan, economist, charged in his March 1 broadcast for the CIO over the ABC network. The CIO program featuring Nathan is broadcast every Saturday at 7 p.m. over ABC. Excerpts from Nathan's speech follow:

RECENTLY some of our military objectives were cut back and one of the reasons apparently for the rescheduling was that we just weren't going to meet the prevailing schedules anyhow.

All kinds of flimsy excuses and double talk accompanied the reduction in schedules but in simple terms it was an attempted cover-up for a very bad job. Instead of aggressively breaking bottlenecks and going after the military production that this country can produce, we seem to have resigned ourselves to putting our national security and the security of other democracies in jeopardy. . .

There has been no sense of urgency at the top of the mobilization agencies. Rather there is pretty much of a business as usual attitude among the big business executives who are running the mobilization program.

There isn't much meaning to many of the big categories in the budget because the production schedules of many critical items are still not established. Requirements have not been timed by months and by quarters and by years.

Specifications have been so elaborate and changed so frequently that the military apparently still do not know what they want or when they want it.

If the top authorities don't insist on firm goals and go ahead with meeting these goals very little will be done. Up to now there has been no such firmness.

And it isn't because of any lack of authority. The directive establishing the Office of Defense Mobilization gave to Charles Wilson more power than was ever given to the head of any agency. This power just hasn't been used either effectively or intelligently.

Because of the lack of planning and programming there has been no realistic estimate of the critical materials needed for military mobilization. All kinds of guesses have been tossed around.

President Truman was told last fall by Charles Wilson that the military goals had to be cut or kept down or the civilian economy would be completely disrupted. Today Charles Wilson and a few of his associates are worried because they have been so dead wrong in evaluating the whole picture.

Material shortages haven't been nearly so drastic as President Truman was led to expect. Some parts of the economy are overloaded with inventories—yes, inventories of critical materials—while other segments, especially small business, are going into bankruptcy. . .

THIS country of ours has tremendous productive capacity. We can produce almost as much as the rest of the world put together yet we are failing miserably to meet even our very modest and unimaginative schedules.

We haven't done as well in the last 20 months since the war in Korea started as we did in the 20 months before Pearl Harbor. Yet this war has been going on and American soldiers, sailors, and marines have been losing their lives in combat. Even more serious, the menace of Communist aggression has not subsided. Most Americans believe that Russia can only be stopped by a show of power. Well, we have been talking about that show of power but we haven't done enough to back up that talk with real power.

We have much more productive capacity than we had during World War II and we are increasing our capacity to produce steel and aluminum and other critical materials. We could do more, and a lot more, without seriously cutting into our lush standard of living. Either we are serious about the threat of communism in the world or we have been kidding ourselves.

If we are serious, then we had better re-appraise what we need for our national security and for our potential allies and fulfill those needs. Without some changes in attitude, and especially in management, we are going to continue to blunder.

Russia undoubtedly knows how bad a job we are doing and if the only thing that is going to stop Russia is our military might, then the prospects for peace are not so good as they might have been and ought to be.

4 Of 5 Lack 'Dollars' For Adequate Medical Care

LACK OF HAVING sufficient "dollar bills" prevents four out of five Americans from being able to afford adequate medical care, Federal Security Administrator Oscar R. Ewing declared at a meeting at Chapel Hill, N. C.

He said that "at the very time when science has been making miraculous advances in discovering ways of prolonging life and making it healthier, we have apparently made almost no progress whatever in the economic or financial side of the nation's health.

"The trouble lies in the dollar bill.

"It is the dollar bill that prevents many American families from enjoying the benefits of the high quality of American medicine.

"It is the dollar bill that prevents medical schools from producing as many physicians, dentists, nurses or other health experts as we need in this country.

"It is the dollar bill that impels doctors to settle in the larger cities, where they can earn a decent livelihood, rather than in the rural and low-income communities, where patients are too sparse or too poor to assure a doctor of such a livelihood.

"It is the dollar bill that causes people to stint on the medical care they need, or go broke paying for it."

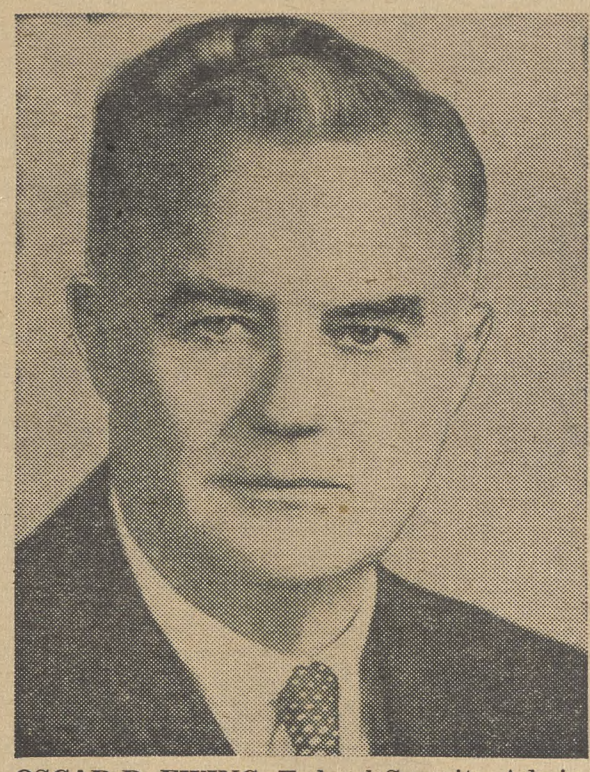
Ewing said that because of the high cost of medical care "there is no alternative but for us to see if we can solve the problem collectively."

The Federal Security Administrator said that it was the same lack of dollar bills that led to the establishment of the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance—which through the social security system makes the benefits of social security available "to three out of four American workers and their families." He added:

"We have not lost our liberties because of this solution. We have, on the contrary, strengthened our free society.

"I believe that we have that same right, that same duty, to deal with the high cost of maintaining or restoring health among the people of this country."

There are three ways of dealing with the problem of providing adequate medical care for the people, Ewing said.



OSCAR R. EWING, Federal Security Administrator, said that way back in 1934, the American Medical Association's Bureau of Medical Economics recognized the inadequacy of voluntary health insurance plans.

"No responsible person," he continued, "neither President Truman, nor I, nor any other members of the Administration, would ever want to see socialized medicine in the United States."

He said that the second alternative would be an expansion of the voluntary health insurance.

"The plain truth," Ewing added, "is that, although perhaps half of the people in America have some kind of health insurance, not more than one person in 20 has any kind of adequate health insurance. All the voluntary plans put together, at this moment, manage to take care of hardly more than 12% of the nation's health costs."

He quoted from the Bureau of Medical Economics of the American Medical Association to show that it recognized the inadequacy of voluntary health insurance.

"Without some form of compulsion," the AMA said in 1934, "voluntary insurance fails of its objective of distributing the cost of sickness among large classes of the population with even approximate fairness.

"The young and the healthy will not join and the aged and sickly, if accepted, will raise the cost to a prohibitive point, and, if rejected, remove protection from those most in need. Sickness insurance cannot distribute the burden of sickness among the low-income classes unless it is compulsory."

Ewing said that under the proposed national health insurance plan an employe would contribute 1.5% of his wages up to a certain amount and his employer would contribute an equal amount.

He said that these contributions would provide for medical and hospital care for "approximately 85%" of the population of the United States.

Ewing said that doctors could be paid by the fee system, or so much per person per year, or by salary. The doctor could arrange for a combination of these methods, could be fully in the plan, or fully out of it, or partially in or partially out.

"From the doctor's point of view," Ewing asserted, "national health insurance would mean only one thing—an alteration in the way in which he is paid for the services he renders. He would not be a government employe.

"He would not be told what he can or cannot prescribe. He would simply receive his payments from the insurance fund instead of from his patient. And he would therefore be able to prescribe the laboratory tests, the expensive medicines, the specialized care, that he thought his patients needed without worrying as to whether they could afford the costs."

Anti-Trust Suit Is Aimed At $6 Billion duPont Empire

THE government charged last week that 186 members of the fabulous duPont dynasty control five corporations with assets of more than $6,072,048,199.

The corporations are: E. I. Dupont de Nemours & Co., General Motors Corp., U. S. Rubber Co., Christiana Securities Co., and Delaware Realty & Investment Corp. The last two are holding companies owned entirely by duPonts.

The government sought to name 186 members of the family as class defendents in the suit charging violation of the anti-trust laws. Original defendants were the five companies and Pierre S. duPont, Lammot duPont, and Irenee duPont, brothers. All are descendants of Pierre Samuel duPont de Nemours, who came from France to found the dynasty.

THE government wants to name these three as class defendants along with the other 183, who are brothers and sisters, or their descendants, and include members of the families of nine duPont brothers and sisters and the descendants of a second cousin.

There are more than 800 in the family, but the others hold minor shares. Pierre is one of the chief backers of the "millionaires' amendment" to limit federal taxes to 25% and thus shift the tax burden to the poor.

The government charges that through the two holding companies the duPonts control the other giant corporations, and wants the court to order the duPonts to give up control of all five.

General Motors has assets of $3,582,955,972; Dupont, $1,973,663,082; U. S. Rubber, $463,211,159; Christiana, $52,217,986. There are no figures for the other holding company, Delaware Realty & Investment.

The 10 duPont families mentioned in the suit are those of Pierre S., Irenee, Lammot, William K., Henry B., Margaretta duPont Carpenter, Louise A. duPont Copeland, Mary duPont Laird, and Isabelle duPont Sharp, and their second cousin Felix A. duPont.

Latest corporation reports show the duPont firm owns 23% of outstanding GM stock and 60% of the common and 99% of the preferred of Remington Arms. The family has 17% of the stock of U. S. Rubber. In addition, Christiana has 170,000 shares of GM stock. (LPA)

Macy's Local Hits 'Biased' Report

The CIO United Department Store Workers Local 1-S in New York City has termed "biased" a report by Willmark Service System, Inc., which attempts to show an efficiency drop among Macy's workers.

Sam Kovenetsky, Local 1-S president, charged that understaffing and management inefficiency were the real reason behind alleged declining standards of customer service.

Local 1-S represents 8300 workers at the store.

K. Of C. Meeting Socks AMA Stand

AN "ALMOST angry demand" that organized physicians do something to provide adequate medical care at reasonable cost or let the government do it for them was voiced at a recent conference on social problems called by the Louisiana State Council of the Knights of Columbus.

An account of the meeting by Stephen P. Ryan appeared in the Mar. 1 issue of the Catholic magazine America. One section of the conference, he wrote, was devoted to medical ethics, with a young country doctor as leader.

"The attitudes here would, I am sure, be of special interest to the American Medical Association," wrote Ryan.

"The physician-leader intended to confine his remarks to the personal problems encountered by the Catholic doctor in the course of his practice and to indicate proper attitudes towards rhythm, birth control, abortion, family obligations and so forth.

"But the young doctor found himself the center of a whirlwind of questions relating to the controversy over so-called 'socialized medicine' or compulsory federal health insurance.

"SURPRISINGLY those who had been most active in decrying the dangers of the welfare state as it applied to labor and race relations, those who had cried 'socialism' the loudest, those who were opposed to the Rural Electrification Administration and a Fair Employment Practices Commission and federal housing, joined with the majority in condemning the stand taken by the medical profession and the AMA as its spokesman on proposals to provide adequate medical care at a reasonable cost for the middle-class population of the United States.

"Several spoke of the lying propaganda fed to the newspapers and magazines by the AMA.

"If I am any judge of the mass mind, the most complete agreement of the entire meeting was reached in this section. There was an almost angry demand that medical men take some action or let the government take it for them."

The conference drew some 40 Catholic priests and laymen who talked and argued informally about social problems for three days. It was held under the patronage of Most Rev. Charles P. Greco, Catholic bishop of Alexandria.

Union Acted Just In Time

A new disability plan for members of Local 9, CIO Packinghouse Workers, at the Hormel Packing Co. in Austin, Minn., went into effect just in time for Daniel Attlesey.

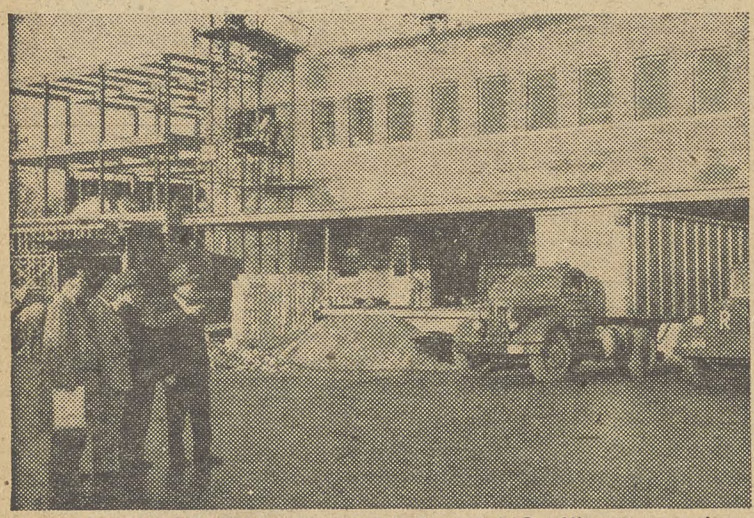
Three days later, a horse fell on Attlesey and broke his leg, probably incapacitating him until July 1, 1952.

Under the new disability plan, he will receive pay for a full 26 weeks if he is off that long. If he is off longer, he can draw on 47 days of benefits he had accumulated under the old plan. If only the old plan had been in effect, he would have received but seven weeks of benefits.

IUE Shows The Way

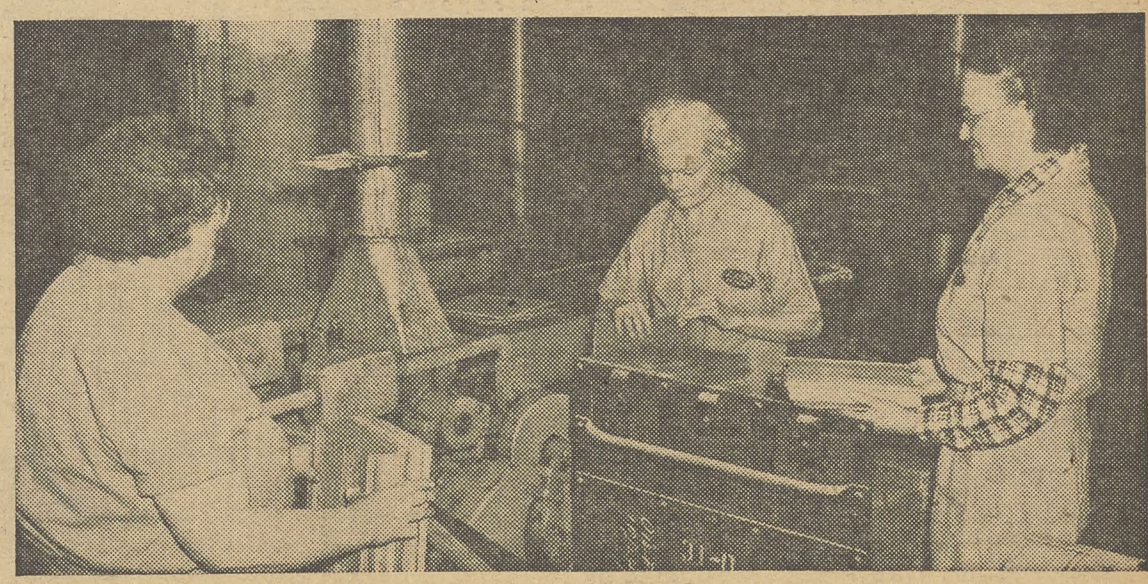
THESE PICTURES show how CIO unions are working in the shops to promote fair practices on the job. A strong anti-discrimination clause in the contract of CIO Electrical Workers Local 113 at Exide Battery Co., Philadelphia, pays democratic dividends. These workers do the same work, collect the same pay. IUE Pres. James B. Carey heads the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination.

BOTH STEWARDS: Mutual union problems probably are discussed by Charles Goff, chief steward at the Crescentville Exide plant, and William H. Brown (right), steward in the smelting department. Goff helped start the union in the 30's; Brown has 10 years' seniority.



THIS NEW BUILDING—which Local 113 officers are viewing—will house most of Exide Battery's Philadelphia works. Left to right: Joe Harkins, recording secretary; John J. Welsh, treasurer; Joseph Kelly, president, and Robert A. Cox, vice president. They say absence of bias is due partly to enforcement of a seniority clause. IUE Sec.-Treas. Al Hartnett, who is from Local 113, is chairman of the IUE Committee to Abolish Discrimination.

WORKERS' HEALTH GUARDED: This union has long advocated better medical attention for workers on batteries. Before the union sought greater health guards, the Exide company employed only one nurse and one doctor; now there are three doctors, nine nurses and several medical technicians in its new dispensary. George Flood and John Medina line up for the monthly lead check. Loretta Stellasie is the nurse. This health and welfare program is typical of CIO union gains.



FIRM SUPPORTERS of the IUE contract are these three women, who joined the union in 1933. They are Mae Kane, Cecilia Hannon and Carolyn Fleck. Their seniority at Exide totals 76 years. (Pictures from IUE-CIO News.)

Big Biz Plots 'Scare' Drive On Price Controls

By MILTON PLUMB

A CONSPIRACY of big business lobbies to conduct a campaign of terror that will "scare Congress" into killing price controls took place behind barred doors in the luxurious Crystal Room of the Hotel Sherman, Chicago, on Feb. 28.

It was a secret meeting. Members of the press and even representatives of business firms and associations not on the invited list were turned away.

About 150 persons — leading spokesmen for industry — attended the session. None of these present, with the exception of the chairman who had called the meeting, would give reporters their names.

Chauncey B. Watson, who presided, issued a statement to the press to launch the "scare" campaign. He predicted a "huge nationwide meat shortage" by July.

It was a repeat performance of the same scare techniques which the livestock feeders used in 1946 to kill OPA and in 1950 to prevent pending rollbacks in the price of beef.

NEVERTHELESS, the statement again got the headlines. No newspaper has yet told what actually went on at the meeting and the names of the groups and persons participating.

Because the plotting of these industrialists is not only of immediate concern to every worker but is a serious threat to the economic security of the nation, The CIO News is publishing exclusively and in full the "secret" list of organizations invited to the meeting.

As for what took place at the meeting and names of individuals participating, here's the story:

It begins with a letter sent out Jan. 31 by the Corn Belt Livestock Feeders Association, Chicago, of which Watson is president.

"Your Association wants to get rid of OPS and price controls. Our Association wants to get rid of OPS and price controls," Watson wrote.

"If you like the idea of making a well-planned fight, if you are willing to work with other organizations yet retain your own identity, then please attend a meeting in Chicago on Feb. 28. This will be a confidential meeting without publicity."

And to show that he meant business, Watson begged each person addressed to "come prepared for action."

"THIS association," he said "is prepared to place $1000 into a fund to carry on a united, well-planned campaign."

A copy of his second letter, giving the exact time and place of the meeting, is reproduced in the adjoining column.

Members of the Feeders Association's policy committee which sponsored the meeting include Fred H. Tomlin, Pleasant Plains, Ill.; Lawrence Brock, Wakefield, Nebr.; Frank B. Davis, Greeley, Col.; Carroll Poland, St. Louis, and Blythe Conn, Burlington, Ia.

The association's other officers besides Watson are Melvin Todd, Union, Nebr., and E. H. Mattingly, St. Louis, vice presidents, and Mark W. Pickell, Chicago, executive secretary-treasurer.

The CIO News is able to reveal that the program of the conference was as follows:

1. A call to order by Watson.

2. An outlining of concrete proposals for united action by Pickell.

3. An attack on OPS regulations for the retail meat and grocery trade by Charles F. Bromann, executive secretary of the Associated Food Dealers of Greater Chicago.

4. A demand for an end of price controls on cotton by John F. Maloney, of Memphis, Tenn., representing the National Cottonseed Products Association.

5. Proposals by Cliff D. Carpenter, president of the Institute of American Poultry Industries, to fight for elimination of OPS.

6. Proposals by C. B. Heinemen, president of the National Independent Meat Packers Association, ditto.

7. An attack on OPS by M. G. Van Buskirk, executive secretary of the Illinois Dairy Products Association, Inc.

9. One hour of similar attacks on price controls from representatives of other industries present.

10. Action on the real purpose of the meeting: the establishment of a "Production, Processing and Distribution Council" consisting of "all organizations opposed to OPS who desire to work together in a hard, well-planned campaign during the next 10 months."

THE purposes and activities of this council are described in detail by Pickell in a confidential statement now in the hands of this newspaper.

Each affiliated organization is called upon to start in March "an immediate campaign of its own through speeches, radio programs, press releases, etc., showing up the OPS program."

Those with radio time, it is suggested, should "invite in the representatives of other organizations when some startling bit of information could be broadcast that would bring resentment against OPS. The deliberate and planned attempt would be to make it as unsavory to the public as was OPA. It would be emphasized and re-emphasized that controls cut production and shortages bring high prices."

Pickell's program for the council also calls for chairmen in every state to:

• "See to it that each delegate to the national conventions of both parties is visited by a strong group representing different industries and affiliated with all branches of that industry, to impress on that delegate that the voters in his district believe that price controls are dangerous in time of peace and could be disastrous in time of war."

• "See to it that letters are poured into each member of Congress from his state, in a steady stream, all demanding that when and if the Defense Production Act of 1950 as amended is to be renewed as of July 1, 1952, that it first be amended to drop from that act the OPS."

• "See to it that material is placed in the hands of capable speakers to use in appearances before civic and women's organizations in each community, particularly stressing that price controls are an integral part of the British Socialism program which proved disastrous to England and have proved disastrous here."

Recently we wrote you proposing that the organizations opposing OPS form a PRODUCERS, PROCESSORS, AND DISTRIBUTORS COUNCIL to correlate their activities during these next six months.

The response to this proposal has been so favorable that we have decided to go ahead with the meeting. It will be called to order at 10 A.M. in the Crystal Room, Hotel Sherman, February 28, 1952.

There are two points we would like to make very specific in this. First, there is no intention of trying to supersede any other organizations or to limit or eliminate the activities of any other group. Our whole belief is that there is far greater chance of success if not only the livestock but the grain, milling, cotton, manufacturing, wholesaling and retailing industries and activities all work rather closely together in a well-planned campaign.

Secondly, we have no delusions that eliminating OPS will be an easy job. We would say that so far there has not been enough public suffering to turn the tide. Right now the odds would be against us. But nevertheless we believe the fight should be made in the hope and expectation that at least the Republicans will put a plank into their political platform condemning price and production controls--and if our campaign is smart enough and we can get enough people north, east, south, and west to display our slogan, to STAND UP AND BE COUNTED, we just might be able not only to get the Democratic Party to adopt a similar plan but to drop OPS rather than carry it into a presidential campaign.

The least that should come out of this conference is an exchange of ideas on the type of campaign that would have the most chance of success. We hope that you or a representative of your organization will be present prepared to give your ideas. We have neither pride of author-ship nor desire for leadership. What we want is to eliminate OPS. To do this, isn't it wise for all of us to work together?

Cordially yours,

C. B. Watson

DETERMINATION to map an all-out fight against price controls is the keynote of this letter from the Corn Belt Livestock Feeders Association inviting other groups to a Chicago meeting.

Wilson Warns Against Weak Control Law

TOP Administration spokesmen, including Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson, went before the Senate Banking Committee last week to support President Truman's request for a strong price control law.

Although they fought valiantly, the committee had already stacked the cards against them.

• The hearings are limited to 11 days.

• Only representatives of national organizations may appear.

• The committee has begun to write an amendment to the present law which automatically suspend controls on items selling below ceiling prices.

Wilson warned that this is no time for the nation to lower its guard against inflation.

Sen. Maybank (D. S.C.), chairman of the committee, and Sen. Capehart (R. Ind.) both pressured Wilson to give them a "decontrol" proposal.

When he replied that "suspending" of price controls should be done "administratively" and not by writing decontrol provisions into the law, Maybank and Capehart both predicted Congress would do so anyhow.

Lobbies' Plan Called 'Callous' By Arnall

In his first public address since becoming Price Stabilizer two weeks ago, Ellis Arnall last week branded the secret meeting of big business lobbies to kill price controls as "callous and irresponsible."

Without naming participants, he told the National Wholesale Frozen Food Distributors that the meeting had been called "to blueprint the latest plan for the destruction of the price stabilization program."

Here Is List Of Groups Invited To Kill-Controls Meeting

HERE IS the "confidential" list of organizations invited to the secret meeting of big business lobbyists in Chicago to map out a high-pressure campaign on Congress to kill price controls.

Since this is the invitation list, it is possible that not every organization actually accepted.

American Retail Federation, American Trucking Association, Inc., Associated Food Dealers of Greater Chicago, Associated Poultry and Egg Industries, Boston Wool Trade Association, Central Cooperative Livestock Association, Inc., Chicago Residential Hotel Association, Cooperative Food Distributors of America.

TWENTY-THREE MEMBERS of Local 801, CIO Electrical Workers, Dayton, O., who are retired on pensions, received gold inscribed honorary membership cards and IUE-CIO emblems at a membership meeting of the local.

'Home-Coming' Held For Pensioners

IT WAS "home-coming" day for 23 members at a recent membership meeting of Local 801, CIO Electrical Workers, Dayton, O.

The 23 are retired on pensions from the Frigidaire plant of General Motors Corp. and have a total of more than 575 years' service with the corporation.

Many of them spoke gratefully of the pension benefits, and urged members to take an active part in the union and seek higher pensions.

Other pensioners were unable to attend the meeting, many because of a virus infection widely prevalent in the Dayton area. Several residing elsewhere—some in Florida—sent messages.

"We have a beautiful citrus grove, a flourishing garden, and a nice home, thanks to Local 801 and the IUE-CIO pension plan," wrote the wife of one of the members residing in Florida.

Pres. Herman Saylor of Local 801 said that the pensioners "made the ultimate pension plan a reality and won countless benefits in the early years of organization."

"Their untiring work," Saylor said, "is a symbol of the future for all of us. We must strive to strengthen the pension program for our retired brothers and for those who will, someday, benefit from its payments."

Benton Says End Of Senate's Minority Rule 'Long Overdue'

A VIGOROUS minority report protesting that "the time to end minority rule in the U. S. Senate is long overdue" was filed last week by Sen. Benton (D. Conn.).

Benton differed sharply from the majority of the Senate Rules Committee in its recent action voting out the so-called Wherry proposal to end filibusters by a two-thirds vote of members present.

"Minority dictation in the Senate denies to each individual member and to the State he represents the Constitutional guarantee of equal representation," Benton charged.

Calling for rules which would cut off debate by majority vote, Benton challenged other proposals on constitutional grounds.

"At no point does the U. S. Constitution require a two-thirds vote of the entire Senate membership," Benton pointed out. "Yet this is the requirement of the present Rule 22 which is simply a procedural rule of the Senate."

Benton said that in all cases where the Constitution requires two-thirds vote — impeachment, expulsion, over-riding a veto, treaty ratification and constitutional amendment proposals—the only requirement is for two-thirds of a quorum, not two-thirds of the membership.

"APART from such extraordinary and clearly defined circumstances, the Constitution clearly establishes majority rule as the basic precept of congressional action," Benton said.

Amendment of the Senate rules to permit shutting off filibusters by majority vote is regarded by supporters of civil rights legislation as an essential first step. Under present rules, a handful of Dixiecrats have prevented action on all pending civil rights measures.

Offer Scholarships At Ruskin College

Three scholarships for study at Ruskin College, Oxford, England, are being offered to U. S. trade unionists who show possibilities of leadership and a talent for continued study of labor problems at the university level.

Application blanks may be obtained by writing before May 1 to the Institute of International Education, 1 E. 67th St., New York 21, N. Y. The scholarships are worth $710 each (250 pounds). They cover tuition, board and room from October to June, with half the sum left for personal use.

An additional scholarship at Coleg Harlech, Wales, 350 miles from London, also to be awarded for 1952-53, provides for tuition, board and residence. Other scholarships may be available later for workers' college centers in the north of England. Applications for the Ruskin scholarships will be considered for these additional opportunities.

Students will be selected by a committee headed by Pres. Harold Taylor, of Sarah Lawrence College.

Wanted: Men From Ranks

WANTED: Men from the ranks of Labor, particularly from the ranks of the Intl. Woodworkers of America, CIO, to serve their nation as candidates for local, state and national political office.

Must be sound of mind and body and proud of fact they would represent, through Labor's political and economic program, the best interests of the nation—the consumers and workers. Must be willing to sacrifice money and time and take a chance on defeat by those who serve the well-financed minority interests.

Must be able to stand up to abuse by much of daily press as representing a "special interest," namely the workers and consumers of the nation. Must be willing to battle for the Right and receive their reward through self-satisfaction in making a good fight.

Perhaps most important, they must be worthy of Labor's support as men of integrity, trust, sincerity of purpose and basic intelligence. Anyone knowing of such men, please contact us. We know they're out there.

Three Justices Dissent

N. Y. Teachers 'Loyalty' Law Is Ruled Legal

NEW YORK'S controversial Feinberg law which puts dangerous curbs on academic freedom under the guise of keeping "reds" out of the school system, was upheld six to three last week by the U.S. Supreme Court.

The majority decision was delivered by Associate Justice Sherman Minton, with Chief Justice Fred M. Vinson and Associate Justices Stanley Reed, Robert Jackson, Harold H. Burton and Tom Clark concurring.

The main argument of the majority was based largely on the idea that it is the right and the duty of the state to protect the immature minds of children from the propaganda of "subversive groups, particularly the Communist party and its affiliated organizations."

IN UPHOLDING the constitutionality of the Feinberg law, the majority opinion held that a person was not "thereby denied the right of free speech and assembly," although his "freedom of choice" between membership in an organization listed as "subversive" and employment in the school system might be limited.

"Certainly such limitation is not one the state may not make in the exercise of its police power to protect the schools from pollution and thereby to defend its own existence," the majority said.

A forceful dissenting opinion was given by Justice William O. Douglas, with Justice Hugo Black concurring. Justice Felix Frankfurter also handed down a dissent based on legal technicalities.

"The Constitution guarantees freedom of thought and expression to everyone in our society," Justice Douglas said in his dissent. "All are entitled to it; and none needs it more than the teacher." Under the Feinberg law, what happens "is typical of what happens in a police state," he declared:

"Teachers are under constant surveillance; their pasts are combed for signs of disloyalty; their utterances are watched for clues to dangerous thoughts. A pall is cast over the class room. There can be no real academic freedom in that environment. Where suspicion fills the air and holds scholars in line for fear of their jobs, there can be no exercise of the free intellect."

The Feinberg law, Douglas said, "proceeds on a principle repugnant to our society—guilt by association. A teacher is disqualified because of her membership in an organization found to be 'subversive.' The finding as to the 'subversive' character of the organization is made in a proceeding to which the teacher is not a party and in which it is not clear that she may even be heard."

The law, Douglas declared, "inevitably turns the school system into a spying project. Regular loyalty reports on the teachers must be made out. The principals become detectives; the students, the parents, the community become informers. Ears are cocked for tell-tale signs of disloyalty."

Under such a system, Douglas said, "supineness and dogmatism take the place of inquiry. It is the 'party line' of the orthodox view, of the conventional thought, of the accepted approach."

Justice Black in expressing his full agreement with the dissent of Douglas, added the thought that the Feinberg law "is another of those rapidly multiplying legislative enactments which make it dangerous — this time for school teachers—to think or say anything except what a transient majority happens to approve at the moment."

N. Y. State CIO Calls Law 'Vicious'

The New York State CIO Council denounced the Feinberg law "as a vicious instrument for incorporating thought control into our school system," and urged the State Legislature to repeal it.

In its legislative program, the Council stated that the same principles which make the CIO oppose communism also require it to oppose the Feinberg law, for the law attempts to combat "totalitarianism by adopting standard totalitarian techniques."

It stamps with approval the doctrine of "guilt by association," the Council declared, and "shifts the burden of proof from the accuser to the accused."

CIO, AFL Help Found Anti-Red Negro Group

THE CIO and AFL have pledged support to the newly formed anti-Communist Negro Labor Committee, U.S.A., in that organization's fight to extend civil liberties.

The committee is an expansion of a New York City group in existence since 1935.

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey told more than 500 NLC delegates at the founding meeting in New York that both white supremacists and the Communist conceal their advocacy of human slavery by deceit and treachery. About 130 union groups, including 20 internationals, were represented.

Carey, who is also president of the CIO Electrical Workers, said the members of the CIO "know that when the chips are down the white supremacists, the exploiting employer and the Communist stooges of the Poltiburo are in complete agreement."

He recommended enactment of the program proposed by the President's Committee on Civil Rights in 1947 as the best set of principles to achieve justice and equality in America. Carey was a member of the committee.

Pointing out that the CIO does not depend on declarations or written words to achieve justice in the field of civil rights, Carey reminded the delegates that the CIO organized the National CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination in 1943 to concern itself "with every aspect of human rights that arises in our national economy." He is the committee's chairman.

"WE DO not permit anyone to come to our unions and impose on our members their personal prejudices, or the vicious patterns of this or that community in which human rights are limited or suppressed altogether," Carey said.

"We stand by the record of our national committee, and we point with justifiable pride to the similar committees that have been set up all over the country by our international unions and state, county and city CIO councils."

Formation of the Negro Labor Committee was termed by Carey "a declaration of war" against the National Negro Labor Council, which was organized last fall in Cincinnati. He called that group "just another front for the Communist party."

Other CIO speakers included Pres. Willard S. Townsend of the Transport Service Employees, who is secretary of the Committee to Abolish Discrimination; Harry Read, who is acting director of the latter committee, and Helen Blanchard, national CIO representative.

Discussing the role of labor in Negro workers' problems and democracy, Frank R. Crosswaith, chairman of the committee, said the Negro could solve the problems confronting him "if and when organized labor recognized its common interest with the Negro through education and organization."

Lewis G. Hines, representing AFL Pres. William Green, said that while some AFL unions still discriminate against the Negro—a practice he said was deplored by the leadership of the federation—great progress had been made, especially in the South, where, he added, there are many mixed locals. He pledged the support of the AFL to the activities of the Negro group.

William Green, spoke at the founding meeting of the Negro Labor Committee in New York City. Committee Chairman Frank R. Crosswaith is in center. Knight To Get Human Rights Record Scroll

AN AWARD for his "consistent record of achievement and efforts in the field of human relations" will be presented to Pres. O. A. Knight of the CIO Oil Workers by the Denver B'nai Brith and associated groups Mar. 16.

The award—a handsomely framed scroll setting forth

O. A. KNIGHT

Knight's achievements in the field of human relations—will be presented at a brunch, at which CIO Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood will be the principal speaker.

On announcing the award, the B'Nai Brith chapter said that Knight has served on many organizations devoted to improving human relations since the OWIU headquarters were moved from Fort Worth, Tex., to Denver three years ago.

He was recently named to a three-year term as a member of the board of directors of the Urban League of Denver, and is a member of the Denver labor-management-citizens committee and the Governor's Commission on Human Rights.

Knight also was an officer of the Colorado Committee for Equal Employment Opportunities, which backed a state FEPC bill in 1951. He recently proposed that a U. S. shirt-sleeve division of 18,000 working men and women travel abroad to tell the people of other nations the good and bad points of our country.

B'Nai Brith also noted his achievements in the field of human relations while in Texas. Chairman of the brunch committee is Robert Adell.

Caterpillar Local Gets 12½c Boost

Twenty thousand CIO Auto Workers at the Caterpillar Tractor Co., plant in Peoria, Ill., have received Wage Stabilization Board approval for a 12½c hourly wage increase, according to Pat Greathouse, UAW-CIO Reg. 4 director.

CIO Marine Unions Win Benefits

APPROXIMATELY 50,000 members of three CIO maritime unions have won doubled welfare and pension contributions in wage review negotiations with East and Gulf Coast ship operators.

The welfare and pension payment increases range up to 50c a day for each employed member of the National Maritime Union, the Marine Engineers Beneficial Association and the American Radio Association. The NMU also gained a $30 monthly increase for members paid by the day.

MEBA and ARA members won a dual overtime rate, with premium overtime at $1.97 an hour and full overtime at $2.95. Premium rates are paid for certain work during regular hours and for watches on Saturdays, Sundays or holidays.

Working rules for the latter two unions were changed to bring them into line with those of other licensed officers.

All three unions have been in negotiations with the operators since November, 1951. The increases are retroactive to Dec. 15, last year.

UAW Expects 2500 Workers At Education Conference

SEVEN nationally prominent leaders in the fields of economics, history, civil rights, education and government will participate in the CIO Auto Workers International Education Conference.

The conference will be held in Cleveland from April 3-6, with more than 2500 auto workers expected to attend.

Purpose of the conference—the biggest educational program ever sponsored by the UAW—will be to give union leaders a background of information on current problems and to help anticipate future problems, said Brendon Sexton, UAW-CIO Education Dept. director.

The four recent additions to the speakers' list are: Arthur Schlesinger, Jr., history professor, Harvard Univ., and Americans for Democratic Action leader; Leon Keyserling, Chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers; Walter White, secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; Willard Goslin, former school superintendent in Pasadena, Calif., the central figure in the book, "It Happened in Pasadena."

Previously Senators Humphrey (D. Minn.), Benton (D. Conn.) and Morse (R. Ore.) agreed to take part in a conference discussion of congressional morality.

The UAW is planning panel methods so that each of the delegates will have a chance to take part in face-to-face talks with the principal speakers in discussion sessions.

The panel group will consider the role of science in factory work; social security in a period of atomic-powered factories; the union side of the world-wide fight of democracy against totalitarianism; civil liberties and equal opportunities around the world and education and workers' children.

2000 To Learn U.S. 'Know-How' In Mutual Security Program

THE MUTUAL SECURITY Agency's most ambitious program for teaching European workers American "know-how" is under way in Springfield, Mass.

More than 50 workers from six countries are part-time student at the American International College. They will be here a year during which they will have full-time jobs in factories in the Springfield area.

They are the vanguard of 2000 European workers, between 22 and 33 years old, who will come to this country for 12 months to learn about U. S. production methods, unions and home life.

Prof. John F. Mitchell, coordinator for the MSA program in the Springfield area, said that an "interesting phase of the program is that it is costing the U. S. very little—the government bears the cost of the train fare from the point of arrival to whatever school the arrivals are sent.

"These men and women will pay their own way, and we are sure, will return to their own countries and their unions with a true picture of American Life."

Included in the first group are 14 Danes, three Frenchmen, 17 Germans, five Swiss and a Norwegian. Among the trainees are Germans who were Russian wartime prisoners, Danes who were German prisoners and French who were aligned with the Americans against the Germans.

Better Pensions Won By N.Y. Guild

An improved pension plan, fully paid by the employer, has been won by the New York local of the CIO Newspaper Guild in a new agreement with Il Progreso, Italian-language daily.

The program calls for pensions ranging from $140 to $200 a month, including social security, at age 65 and after 15 years' service.

The new contract also provided for wage increases amounting to 13% of the payroll, with minimums ranging from $54 to $116 for a 35-hour week.

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

THE WRITER had the pleasure of attending the fifth annual convention of the Louisiana State Industrial Union Council in New Orleans on Mar. 1 and 2. This convention was one of the largest and best attended of any ever held, and those present displayed a great deal of unity and a spirit of cooperation.

The CIO has come a long way in the State of Louisiana. Our unions and organizational efforts there are dynamic and growing. The CIO Steelworkers, Auto Workers, Chemical Workers and others are making gains all the time. Fred Pieper, now CIO national representative, who was the first regional director in Louisiana, also addressed the convention. Both he and I noted and commended the great job being done by CIO Reg. Dir. Robert Starnes, officers and members of the Council and many other friends of CIO who have helped build a stronger CIO.

★

FROM NEW ORLEANS I traveled on to Cincinnati, O., where I had the honor and privilege of being a speaker at the convention of the Religion and Labor Foundation, at which time I presented a great lady, Miss Lucy Mason, with the Foundation's Social Justice Award.

It was a most deserving tribute to one who has performed great service for the CIO and one who has furthered Labor's cause in every possible way. The CIO is proud of Miss Mason.

The theme of the religious leaders and labor leaders in attendance was to achieve an even closer unity and cooperation in order to obtain the human objectives that both are striving for.

Prior to this victory, the plant was never organized. CIO State Dir. Ernest Pugh and Assistant Dir. Murphy George are to be congratulated for conducting this successful campaign.

Rep. W. M. Neal, CIO Steelworkers, reports that in a representation election at J. Trockman & Sons, Inc., Evansville, Ind., the workers voted in favor of USA-CIO by a count of 28 to 24 over the AFL.

Reg. Dir. W. A. Copeland reports that a raiding attempt of the AFL Butchers upon the CIO Packinghouse Workers at the Nat Buring Packing Co., Memphis, Tenn., failed miserably. When the votes were counted, all the AFL could muster was 20 votes while UPWA-CIO tallied 57. UPWA Rep. G. E. Boone was in charge of this drive.

Reg. Dir. George DeNucci reports a representation election victory for the CIO Retail, Wholesale Workers at the Moores Store Warehouse, Newark, O., by a vote of 23 to 19 for the AFL Teamsters. This was the second victory for CIO in 10 days in Newark, an AFL stronghold.

REG. DIR. MICHAEL MANN reports that in a representation election at the Grand Woodworking Co., Chicago, the CIO Furniture Workers emerged victorious by a 56 to 27 vote over no union. At the Union Asbestos Co., Bloomington, Ill., the CIO Textile Workers were favored by the workers by a 36 to 1 vote. At the General Felt Products Co., Chicago Heights, Ill., the Textile Workers won by a 20 to 1 vote. The two latter shops have several hundred people when in full operation.

Reg. Dir. Charles Dusten reports that the CIO Broadcast Engineers won a representation election over the AFL at Radio Station KWJJ, Portland, Ore., by a vote of 4 to 3.

Reg. Dir. "Sarge" Kinstley reports that in a representation election at the Wichita Desiccating Co., Wichita, Kan., employes favored the Packinghouse Workers by a vote of 23 to 6 for no union, with 2 challenged. The campaign was conducted by Intl. Rep. Frank Brown of the UPWA.

Chemical Union Wins At Radford, Va.

The CIO Chemical Workers have won an overwhelming victory at the Radford, Va., plant of the Hercules Powder Co. in a National Labor Relations Board election.

Out of 4897 eligible workers, 3206 voted for UGC&CWA, 216 for the AFL Chemical Workers and 1166 for no union.

UGC&CWA has two other plants of the company under contract, one in Mississippi and one in Michigan. UGC&CWA Pres. Martin Wagner hailed the victory and said the union is prepared to negotiate a contract which will "improve wages, hours and working conditions of the Hercules workers in Radford."

Potofsky Hits Sentencing Of Spaniards

THE DEATH sentences meted out to nine members of non-Communist unions in Franco Spain were vigorously protested last week by Chairman Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO International Committee.

Potofsky also is president of the CIO Clothing Workers. Convictions of the nine, on alleged charges of crimes against the state, in reality were "convictions on the charge of devotion to democracy," he declared.

He called upon the State Dept. to forward his statement to the Spanish Foreign Office and to Sec.-Gen. Trygve Lie of the United Nations.

"Nine members of the non-Communist National Confederation of Labor (CNT) in Franco Spain have been sentenced to death after trials that make a mockery of the ideals of our democratic civilization," Potofsky said.

"These workers, and others convicted in recent mass trials at Seville and Barcelona, were arrested, tried and sentenced by the dictator's courts for the 'heinous crime' of trying to build free, democratic, responsible labor unions.

"AT A time when Gen. Franco is appealing to the statesmen and military leaders of the democratic nations for sympathy and money — lots of money— Spanish citizens face death because of their conviction on the charge of devotion to democracy.

"The members of the CIO, together with members of other democratic unions affiliated with the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, condemn the sentences imposed on these workers for their bona fide union activities. We demand their freedom, and demand that the Franco regime cease its persecution of honest, democratic leaders of the workers—a persecution that continues year in and year out, regardless of whether in the field of foreign relations Dictator Franco is fawning upon fascist dictatorships for funds, or fawning upon democratic governments for funds.

"The arrest and sentencing of these workers offers fresh evidence that the United States has made a serious strategic error in granting aid to the dictatorial Franco regime. Franco Spain, whatever the strategic value of its geographical position, is a positive and deadly liability to the efforts of the free peoples of the world to fight Communist totalitarianism and aggression."

Potofsky said the CIO joined with the ICFTU in hoping that UNESCO will refuse the bid of the Spanish dictatorship for membership in that UN organization.

Scholarship Sought For Wilson's Son

Friends of the late Manley J. Wilson, editor of the CIO Woodworkers' official organ and an Oregon State Senator, have formed a committee to raise funds for the education of his son, James S. Wilson, 7.

Russians Get Guns, But Very Little Butter

THE PEOPLE of the Soviet Union are getting their guns all right, but apparently they're getting precious little butter. In other words, Russia's armed might is growing, but the living standards of her people aren't improving despite what Red propagandists say.

The United Nations Economic Commission for Europe, on the basis of a study, reported recently that Russia "has devoted a substantial and at present increasing amount to defense and a somewhat larger and steadily rising amount to investment, while the amount assigned to consumption has so far increased only moderately above pre-war levels."

The 1951 increase in civilian consumption—one of the measures of living conditions—"appears to have been much more moderate than in recent years," the study showed.

THE INTL. CONFEDERATION of Free Trade Unions, through Gen. Sec. J. H. Oldenbroek, has filed a strong protest with the Japanese government against pending anti-labor legislation.

The protested legislation includes bills controlling organization, prohibiting general strikes, controlling collective demonstrations, and an omnibus measure designed to weaken labor standards which are guaranteed by the present Labor Standards Act.

The last-named bill besides impairing standards would suppress democratic rights by making unions subject to government interference, outlawing the right to strike in some industries, restricting it in others, and infringing upon the basic rights of association and assembly.

Oldenbroek reminded the Japanese government of its pledge "to realize the objectives of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights," and of the fact that the ICFTU supported the country's admission to the Intl. Labor Organization on the basis of a promise to respect free trade unionism.

LIFE IN A SOVIET factory, as reported by a fugitive Russian technician and made public by the ICFTU:

"The safety technique organization was a farce in our factory. There was a halfwit . . . who looked after it . . . If a worker was killed or maimed, a commission of factory trade union representatives was set up to investigate . . . It always tried to report that the worker himself was to blame . . ."

"The Soviet trade unions . . . help the employer (the state) to force the employe to work harder for less pay."

"It was sufficient to have been 21 or more minutes late on any single occasion to be sentenced by a court."

"Political studies took place once a week . . . The groups were always led by a non-party member; nobody wanted to take on this job but they were always talked into doing it."

CIO Goes To Bat—Again—For St. Lawrence Project

MORE JOBS, lower prices and higher living standards will follow development of the St. Lawrence River Seaway and Project, CIO Vice Pres. Joseph Curran predicted in testimony recently before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

The committee was conducting hearings on the bill authorizing the United States to join with Canada in making the long-discussed improvements in the waterway. Canada has announced its intention of doing the job alone if the U. S. delays longer.

Curran, who also is president of the CIO Maritime Union, told the committee the development opens up opportunities to increase the prosperity of the Middle West and economically hard-hit New England. It would help workers, farmers and business, he maintained.

The American people, he insisted, "have the right to expect" that the Senate "will put the welfare of the people and the nation above the selfish interests of special groups" which oppose the project.

"The hydro-electric energy available from the St. Lawrence Project is the cheapest, best and most powerful supply of undeveloped power in the country," he asserted.

"It would prove of great benefit to the entire New York-New England area. New England's homes, farms and factories are run on the most expensive electricity in the U. S. This area is the natural outlet for the hydro-electric potential of the St. Lawrence."

Curran warned that unless the Great Lakes area is provided with cheap water transportation which the project would afford, "the very heart of our industry will become dead."

While recalling that the CIO has always supported the St. Lawrence project, Curran declared that the pending bill does not contain satisfactory labor-management relations provisions.

"THE CIO has always insisted on TVA principles in these matters," he said. "A statutory guarantee of the payment of not less than prevailing wages, and statutory authorization to the public agencies involved to deal collectively with their employes and enter into collective contracts.

"It is imperative that provisions be included in current legislation covering the prevailing wage question and affording workers the right to organize and bargain collectively."

Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto-Workers and Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers offered statements supporting Curran's testimony.

Reuther declared that UAW endorsement of the Seaway "is grounded in the firm conviction that what helps one part of our nation helps all."

"WE believe that prosperity promotes prosperity," he said. "We totally reject the false philosophy that the economic advancement of one part of the country or one industry is achieved only to the detriment of other areas or industries.

"Those who oppose the project because of its alleged great cost are equally mistaken," he added. "To harness the water flow of this river and at the same time convert it into a lane for ocean-going commerce will provide direct and measurable benefits far in excess of the cost."

Rieve's statement was presented by John W. Edelman, Washington TWUA representative. Calling for legislation for the Seaway "to be enacted without delay," the statement declared that TWUA "sees no merit whatever" in objections offered on grounds that interests of some workers would be menaced by the Seaway's construction.

"This project will increase employment locally and nationally, and stabilize industry in sections where more plentiful and cheaper power is essential," Rieve declared.

Dixiegop 'Purity' Cry Strictly For Others

DESPITE pious demands for "states' rights" and "morality" in government, the Dixiegop coalition running the 82nd Congress has shown that it's ready to sacrifice these "principles" when they fail to serve the coalition's true motivating force: narrow self-interest.

In the more than two months since Congress reconvened, the chief attention of the Senate has been focused on only two main issues. Those are statehood for Alaska and Hawaii, and the current debate over the so-called "tidelands."

On the first issue, despite contrary platform pledges by both major parties, Republican leaders, including Sen. Taft (O.), mustered enough support for the Dixiecrats to vote down the Alaskan bill and shelve the Hawaiian measure.

That saved the coalition, which the Republican leadership has found useful in its "wrecking crew" assaults on President Truman's legislative program.

TO BRING this about, however, "principles" had to be tossed out the window. Republicans sacrificed lip-service to civil rights legislation. The Dixiecrats in turn departed from their own "states' rights" philosophy, which they insist means simply local self-rule instead of federal regulation.

The statehood bills would have brought local self-government, which the Dixiecrats demand for themselves, to two territories now run completely by the federal government. However, the southerners fought them on purely civil rights grounds, fearing the new senators created would add four votes to those who want an effective cloture rule to end filibusters.

The national interest, of course, was sacrificed in the decision. Top military leaders have said that statehood would materially strengthen our Pacific defenses. It also would offset the damaging effects of Communist propaganda charges of U. S. "imperialism" in Asia, most critical spot in the cold war.

IN THE case of "tidelands" legislation, the coalition is acting on a matter dear to the South, which would reap most of the benefits if pending bills were passed. Republicans with ears glued to the oil lobby, however, also have a direct interest.

Hence, the coalition — which has screamed for "morality" in government at least as loudly as anyone—is pressing for passage of "states' rights" tidelands legislation. Such a law would not only flout the U. S. Supreme Court but would actually hand out fabulous "rewards" for open thefts of natural resources belonging to all the American people.

The violators in this instance are state governments—notably those of California, Louisiana and Texas — which have gone right on leasing "tidelands" oil concessions to private oil firms even after the Supreme Court ruled they hadn't any right to do so.

A "compromise" bill was reported out by the Senate Interior Committee and is the measure being debated by the Senate. This would recognize leases already made by the states and give the states 37% of rents and royalties.

Thirty-five Senators are supporting a move led by Sen. Connally (D. Tex.) to substitute the House bill for this proposal. They have strong backing from the oil lobby.

American Woolen Talks Open Again

THE CIO TEXTILE Workers have scheduled a meeting in New York City Mar. 10 with representatives of the American Woolen Co. in an effort to avoid a Mar. 15 walkout by 18,000 TWUA members.

Negotiations were broken off Feb. 17, when the union refused to consider a company proposal that bargaining be restricted to a mill-to-mill basis rather than company-wide in all 21 American Woolen plants where TWUA has contracts.

American Woolen earlier announced that it intended to cancel its contract with TWUA, which expires Mar. 15—and the union said that its members will not work without a contract.

Shortly before the February meeting, the company had submitted a union-busting program which called for doing away with escalator clauses, continued worker cooperation on the work load problem, reduced vacation privileges, elimination of paid holidays and other items.

In response to rumors that the company would submit a profit-sharing plan at the Mar. 10 meeting, TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve declared that "if the company thinks that we are going to trade established benefits for profit-sharing they are greatly mistaken."

Iowa Unionists Start Lobbying When It Counts

Labor cannot afford such big, year-round lobbies like those of utility and some business interests but it can overcome some of that deficiency by having members call on candidates for state legislatures, the Iowa CIO Council News-Letter pointed out.

"Voters after all are the best lobbyists," the news letter said.

"Union delegations should start now to call upon the candidates for the legislature; both Democrats and Republicans—not to pressure but to discuss and explain the issues in which we are interested (a good labor law, workmen's and unemployment compensation, better schools, FEPC, housing, reapportionment, public utilities commission and issues of local interest).

"The delegation would be more effective if composed of AFL and CIO, shouldn't be large (four or five persons), should know something about the issues. Divide the issues, let each person acquaint himself with one. This program can be effective if started NOW."

NO CHAIN GANGS HERE!—Wearing prisoners' garb, CIO Transport Workers picket on 42nd St. in New York City to protest against Gov. Thomas Dewey's plan to turn city's subway system over to Triborough Bridge and Tunnel Authority, headed by Robert Moses. TWU members wore convicts' stripes because they're overworked, underpaid—and things would be worse under Dewey's proposal "with high fares and coolie wages." TWU members heard their union president, Michael Quill, denounce the proposal at an outdoor meeting. (See Page 2.)

Sure Is Tough For Subsidized C. of C. Lobbyists!

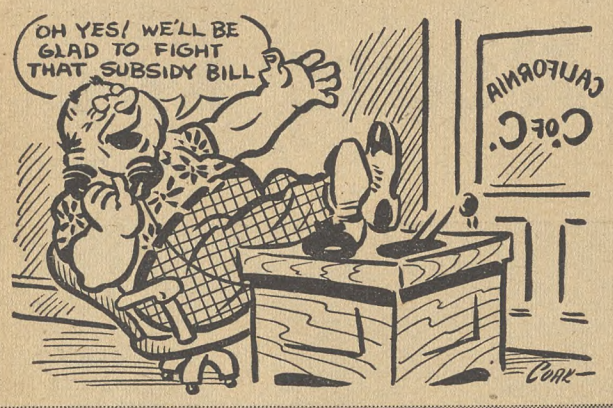
For years, Chambers of Commerce up and down California have been tapping taxpayers for up to 4c per $100 on their city or county real estate taxes.

Supposedly, the C. of C. "fat cats" get this subsidy for what California cities and counties call "advertising and promotion"—you know, bringing in tourists, industry and new residents.

But a good part of the "touring" by the taxpayer-subsidized advocates of free enterprise has been in the direction of Sacramento every time the California Legislature meets.

And a good part of the "promotion" has been to kill decent bills and promote new anti-labor measures in said Legislature.



Now California labor, led by the State CIO Council, is trying to kill this $3 million-a-year subsidy by the people to big business, Chamber of Commerce opponents of the people.

(Chambers of Commerce, locally, statewide and nationally, of course are equalled only by the National Association of Manufacturers in their fervent denunciations of the "welfare state," "subsidies," etc. But, like most businessmen, as a look at U. S. history reveals, they aren't reluctant to put a bite on the public treasury.)

To stop this "treasury raid" to subsidize a business lobby, the CIO-California Industrial Union Council in recent weeks has circulated an initiative petition to outlaw such grants to the C. of C. If petition signatures qualify, the proposed constitutional amendment will go on the ballot in November.

Emphasizing importance of getting the proposition on the ballot, the California CIO Council said:

"If this measure passes—and it will if the people know the facts and what the measure is trying to do—we, the taxpayers of this state, will no longer be paying monies to the chambers of commerce and other privately controlled organizations for their use in influencing legislation by lobbying with our money-against issues beneficial to the little taxpayer and working population and for issues that shift the tax burden from big business and onto the backs of the little guy.

"Do you know that $2 million of your tax money is given away yearly by your county boards of supervisors and another $1 million by California city councils to chambers of commerce and other privately controlled organizations?

"The county boards of supervisors have given more than $34 million of your tax money to those groups in the past 25 years . . . and this figure doesn't include the millions handed over by various city councils!"

13 More Jobless Areas Named For Aid; Action Waited On Moody Bill

THIRTEEN more unemployment crisis areas were added last week to the list to be given special consideration in awarding defense contracts, bringing the total to 18.

Acting on the recommendation of the Inter-Agency Surplus Manpower Committee, Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson last week signed papers requiring the Defense Dept. and the General Services Administration to award contracts in the 13 areas whenever possible—as a step to relieving critical unemployment.

The areas are: New York City, which embraces nine counties; Ashville, N. C., Brockton, Fall River, Lawrence and Lowell, Mass.; Manchester, N. H.; Cumberland, Md.; Flint, Grand Rapids and Iron Mountain, Mich.; Herrin - Murphysboro - West Frankford, Ill., and Pottsville, Pa.

Wilson ordered the two government departments, the big federal buyers, to allow employers in the four cities to match any prices negotiated by firms in other areas. Industry in several of the areas is largely textile, to which the order does not apply.

The policy for awarding contracts in the textile industry—and in the shoe and apparel industry—will be determined at hearings which are scheduled to begin Mar. 20.

Wilson earlier ordered preferential treatment be given employers in Detroit, Mich., Providence, R. I., and the Wilkes-Barre and Scranton, Pa. areas.

The Senate Finance Committee was scheduled to consider late last week the Moody Bill to give federal funds to states with high unemployment, but there was some question as to whether it would reach a decision.

IN THE House, Rep. Dingell (D. Mich.) was trying to pursuade the Ways and Means Committee to schedule early hearings on the companion bills which he and several representatives introduced.

"Look behind the government figures on today's 'full employment' and you'll find a lot of idle hands," said the Journal.

"This spotty picture may be at least partly responsible for today's sluggish traffic over the retail sales counters. Nationwide department store sales for the week ending Feb 23, latest reported, were 12% below a year ago."

There was a move in Congress last week to assure states that they would be able to pay unemployment compensation claims.

Two companion bills were introduced by Sens. Green and Pastore (D. R. I.) and the other by Rep. Forand (D. R. I.)—to establish a "Federal Unemployment Account" to which all unemployment tax collections would be credited.

The fund would be used to make grants to states whose unemployment reserve funds are nearly depleted. The fund also would be used to pay the costs of administering the unemployment insurance program and running public employment offices.

The Treasury now pays for both state and federal unemployment programs from its general funds.

FORAND pointed out than unemployment tax returns always are higher than state and federal costs. They were some $55 million higher during the last fiscal year alone.

"The present situation has been criticised in that the government is making a profit on this tax," he said. " . . . There is no justification for a tax on payrolls to meet the general expense of government."

The Interstate Conference of Employment Security Agencies is backing a House measure simply to lend federal funds to hard-pressed states for unemployment insurance.

Introduced by Rep. Mills (D. Ark.), the bill would not meet the problems of Rhode Island, which consistently faces a rate of unemployment higher than the national average.

The Mills Bill, which the CIO opposes, contains a dangerous feature for returning excess unemployment tax collections to the states, thus weakening the federal powers to appropriate and see that the federal funds are used in conformity with the federal act.

Employers are reported to be pressuring the committee to approve this feature, and to sidetrack the Moody Bill.

ACWA Presents Jobless Case

Representatives of the CIO Clothing Workers—headed by Gladys Dickason, an ACWA vice president—will tell a congressional group and procurement officials on Mar. 18 how the "senseless procurement policies of the Pentagon" have caused increasing unemployment in the men's clothing industry.

The hearing has been called by Rep. Celler (D. N.Y.), who has invited a number of congressmen from New York, New Jersey, Connecticut and Pennsylvania as well as officials of the Office of Defense Mobilization, the Labor Dept., and procurement offices of the Defense Dept.

Carey Named To Atom Panel

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey has been named to a seven-member atomic plant expansion advisory panel. The panel, headed by Lewis L. Strauss, will advise the Joint Congressional Committee on Atomic Energy.

TWU Demonstrates Against Dewey's Transit Scheme

FIVE THOUSAND members of the CIO Transport Workers demonstrated in New York City against Gov. Thomas E. Dewey's proposal to place control of the city's transit system in the hands of the Triborough Bridge and Tunnel Authority.

Quill, the principal speaker at the demonstration, assailed Dewey, members of the Republican party, Robert Moses, chairman of the authority, former private owners of the IRT and the BMT subways and "Wall Street politicians."

He said that a transit authority would mean a 25c fare for subway riders and economies at the expense of the workers.

Quill tore up a copy of the engineers' report to the Board of Transportation which he said called for a 12% reduction in the service and the curtailment of a million bus miles per year. The reports, Quill said, had cost the city $400,000.

"If they use these reports against us, we'll sue the subway book of rules against them," Quill said. "We have a book, too."

"If they try to put one page, one paragraph, one line into practice, we'll haul out the book of rules and dare them to run the subways of New York.

"If we have to we'll battle in the subways as we did in 1946 when they tried to sell the power houses to Consolidated Edison. They lost then and they'll lose again."

House Blocks Squeeze Play To Starve Small Business

A "SQUEEZE PLAY" to curtail defense contracts for smaller business firms—and thus help a few giant firms—was defeated in the House late last week.

The House reversed the recommendation of its Appropriation Committee to deny funds to the Small Defense Plants Administration and liquidate it. Instead, the House tentatively voted the agency $825,000 to stay in business until June 30, as was strongly recommended by CIO Pres. Philip Murray.

The vote was on an amendment offered by Rep. Fogarty (D. R. I.) to give SDPA the money. Fogerty and Rep. Patman (D. Tex.) were leaders in the floor fight to save SDPA, which is headed by Telford Taylor.

"Defense needs and the strength of our economy require that the facilities of small business be fully utilized in developing our maximum military potential," Murray wrote the House members.

"The SDPA was created by Congress for this purpose. The appropriation which it requested was necessary to enable it to discharge the responsibilities Congress placed upon it.

"In our last convention, CIO expressed concern over an acceleration of monopoly trends caused by defense procurement agencies of both military and civilian agencies of the government. These policies result in the placing of a disproportionate number of defense contracts with a small number of large industrial corporations.

"By convention action, CIO supported 'the fullest possible participation of small business in defense production.' A large proportion of the CIO membership works in plants that come under the classification of small business.

"As our convention said, failure to reverse the trend of government procurement policies will result 'in undermining the very principles of democracy that we are mobilizing to defend.'"

Steel Locals Get Strike Orders As Truce Nears End

TIME is running out in the 80-day steel truce, and 600,000 CIO Steelworkers in the basic industry last week put in motion preparations to hit the bricks.

With the steel truce—twice extended by the union—expiring on Mar. 23, there were these developments:

- Emergency strike preparations, including manning of picket lines and organizing strike relief, were under way in USA locals all over the nation.
- The Wage Stabilization Board and its special panel, which heard the union and management cases through lengthy, angry hearings, met over the weekend with the hope of drafting the government's recommendations for a contract settlement by late this week.
- The industry was continuing what USA Pres. Philip Murray has called a campaign to hi-jack "new and completely unjustified price increases."
- An industry magazine, Business Week, predicted the steel firms may force a strike in an effort to get their price boost demands.

In the background is the stand of the Steelworkers, voiced last month, that "the patience of our members is running out" and that the union will not "consider further postponements."

By action of the union's executive board and Intl. Wage Policy Committee, Murray now is authorized to call out the steelworkers on or after Mar. 23 "in the event of fair basis for an equitable settlement of the dispute is not forthcoming by that date."

Instructions to get strike machinery—which has been on a standby basis since late last year—rolling went out from USA Sec.-Treas. David J. McDonald to local unions after a meeting with union district directors in Pittsburgh last week.

In the foreground as the strike truce nears its expiration is the "filibustering" effort of U.S. Steel Corp. and other producers to get a hefty steel price increase—before they'll even consider whatever wage and other contract recommendations the WSB has yet to make.

Last week, according to press reports, steel makers turned down a proposed regulation of the Office of Price Stabilization which would grant the industry a $2-a-ton increase.

(For comment on the union shop issue in the steel dispute, see Page 5.)

Steel Bosses Dig Out The Crying Towel For Lawmakers

THE STEEL industry last week was broadening its campaign for a price increase by taking its case to the Pennsylvania congressional delegation.

Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp. opened the drive at a Capitol luncheon meeting at which Admiral Ben Moreell, C. L. Austin and W. R. Elliott, respectively chairman of the board, president and a vice president, spoke.

Most of the talking was done by Moreell who pictured the "plight" of Jones & Laughlin. One of the congressmen said Moreell "virtually wept and gave the impression that J&L would have to stop paying dividends if it failed to get a price increase to compensate for a prospective wage increase."

Congressmen said the Admiral was all set for full steam ahead as he presented a resolution which said in part:

"The financial condition of the basic steel industry is such that added costs cannot be absorbed without grave risk of serious impairment of the industry's ability to perform its functions in the national defense and the risk of possible bankruptcy of major companies within the commonwealth of Pennsylvania and elsewhere."

The delegation, however, was not ready to be stampeded into action and referred the resolution to a committee for further study, congressmen reported.

The committee decided later that "no concerted action" would be taken on the proposed resolution. It decided to meet later to draft a letter to Economic Stabilizer Roger Putnam, asking that the Pennsylvania steel industry be given a fair price increase, according to Rep. Eberharter (D. Pa.).

Each representative would have to decide whether he wanted to sign the letter, which would not refer to the demands of the CIO Steelworkers for contract improvement now before the Wage Stabilization Board, the Congressman said.

Eberharter said that the members of the committee did not feel that it was "competent" to decide that the industry should get a price increase if the steel union is granted a wage increase.

Livingston Gets New UAW Post

John W. Livingston, vice president of the CIO Auto Workers, has been named by Pres. Walter P. Reuther as director of the union's General Motors Dept.

Livingston now is one of three CIO members on the Wage Stabilization Board, and is director of the UAW's aircraft department. As GM director he will succeed T. A. Johnstone.

CIO Pushes For Price Curbs In 'Stacked' Senate Hearing

CIO TESTIMONY on price and other economic control provisions of the Defense Production Act will be presented before the Senate Banking Committee by Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey on Monday, Mar. 17.

His appearance will follow a week of hearings consisting almost entirely of bitter assaults on price controls by spokesmen for the big special interest lobbies.

As was the case last year, the list of 64 national organizations which the committee is permitting to testify is heavily loaded in favor of business groups opposing price control legislation.

Only a token handful of spokesmen for consumers has been squeezed in between the bevy of lobbyists seeking relaxation or an end of controls affecting their special interests.

Last week's attack began with a demand from the dairy industry that price controls be lifted from all dairy products. P. L. Haymes of the Dairy Industry Committee, unlike most other anti-control witnesses, at least was honest enough to admit that a price increase would result, but he insisted it would be only "moderate."

The National Grange followed up by demanding that there be no price ceilings on any agricultural products unless they are so scarce that rationing is necessary. Grange Master Herschel D. Newsom also said that he sees "no reason" for restoring slaughtering quotas on beef.

Another special interest spokesman was Rep. Herlong (D. Fla.), who urged congressional action forbidding any ceilings on one of the main products of his state—processed citrus fruits, including oranges, grapefruit and tangerines.

Price Stabilizer Ellis G. Arnall had previously told the committee that Herlong's provision is so inflexible that the Office of Price Stabilization must approve percentage price increases even on excise taxes imposed on manufacturers.

Arnall also said that the Capehart Amendment had caused $750 million in price increases in seven months. Increases on autos and auto products alone have cost consumers $420 million, he told the committee.

Increases on other major products brought on by the Capehart amendment, he said, included: $93 million on machinery, nearly $22 million on grocery products, $69.9 million on home appliances, $15.9 million on home furnishings, and $14.6 million on chemicals.

Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson warned the committee that this was only the beginning. He said the Capehart amendment would cost the public at least three-quarters of a billion dollars more unless repealed.

Public Faces 'Rooking' On 'Fair Trade'

A SECOND committee of the House last week approved a so-called "fair trade" bill that—in the words of its chairman, Rep. Celler (D. N.Y.)—would let manufacturers and retailers give the public a "rooking."

The bill, approved by the House Judiciary Committee by a 13-to-8 vote, would restore "fair trade" laws in 45 states. These laws, scuttled last year by the Supreme Court, permit a manufacturer and any one dealer to set minimum retail prices on name brand products, and would bind all other retailers in the state even if they hadn't signed the price agreement.

Celler pointed out that "fair trade" bills "are nothing more than price-fixing bills which are designed to enrich certain retailers by fixing prices upward and not downward."

'Ike,' Kefauver Win First Primary

THE LID was formally blown off the 1952 presidential campaign when traditionally Republican New Hampshire held its primaries last week.

The dominant Republicans gave Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower a clean sweep over Sen. Taft (R. O.). He won all 14 delegates to the GOP national convention, and polled 46,441 votes to 35,691 for "Mr. Republican,"

The less numerous Democrats gave Sen. Kefauver (Tenn.) all 12 convention delegates as well as 20,240 votes to 16,128 for President Truman.

Taft, disgruntled to learn of his defeat while campaigning in Texas, at first gave an ill-tempered refusal to requests for comment. Later he said he was a "little disappointed."

Truman, vacationing in Key West, smilingly said "no comment."

From Paris, Eisenhower said he was proud, "by golly," and "deeply touched," while Kefauver called the New Hampshire outcome "a wonderful victory."

In the Republican race, Pres. Harold E. Stassen of the Univ. of Pennsylvania polled 6673 votes, which he said was more than he had expected, and William R. Schneider, a lawyer of St. Louis, received 243. Gen. Douglas MacArthur had 3160 write-in votes. Truman and Kefauver were the only major candidates in the Democratic contest.

Other write-in votes reflected apparent confusion in the minds of some voters. In the Democratic primary, Eisenhower had 110 such votes, MacArthur 97, Taft 24, and Stassen 13. James A. Farley, former Democratic national chairman, received 45 and Gov. Adlai Stevenson 34.

The 129,085 votes cast compared to slightly more than 75,000 four years ago.

New Hampshire's was the first of several important presidential primaries before the national conventions. Dates for important coming primaries: Minnesota Mar. 18, Wisconsin Apr. 1, Illinois Apr. 8, New Jersey Apr. 15, Pennsylvania Apr. 22, Massachusetts Apr. 29, Ohio May 6 and Oregon May 16.

(There were two workers in Manchester, N. H., who presumably didn't vote for Taft. One was the bellhop at the Hotel Carpenter, who didn't get a tip for lugging Taft's bags. The other was a waiter. He didn't get a tip either.)

The Little Americans

Just four years after approval of the Marshall Plan, the Congress once more is entering into a momentous debate on foreign affairs.

Once again, "the little Americans" are offering their counsel of despair, their counsel of abandoning the peoples of the world to Soviet political, economic and military aggression.

President Truman's recent mutual security message asked $5.3 billion for direct military aid "to help other nations defend themselves—and thereby to help defend us." It asked $1.8 billion for defense-supporting assistance.

And he asked for $650 million for economic and technical assistance, including the Point Four program, for those many parts of the world where, as the President said, "the plow can do a better job in maintaining stability and democracy than tanks and war planes and machine guns . . ."

On the one hand, the Byrds, Georges, Tafts and Connallys boasted of the meat-ax they were going to wield, some going so far as to predict the total elimination of all funds for economic rebuilding abroad.

On the other hand, McCarthy, McCarran and their followers are continuing to build up the inquisitorial atmosphere which—as one result—prevents realistic consideration by the American people of the world of 1952.

That situation is that millions of the world's peoples want a better way of life and freedom and liberty—and for all of these things they look to America with hope. The peoples of Europe, Africa and Asia are our best friends and allies.

Russia and her Communist stooges everywhere know that full well. No wonder their opposition and attempts to sabotage the Marshall Plan. No wonder their derision of Point Four, which still needs to become the "bold new program" once envisioned.

To American workers considering the debate over foreign aid, it is no surprise that those who advocate "penny wise, pound foolish" budget slashing abroad are the same lawmakers who would "balance" out of the budget at home funds and programs for decent housing, medical care, real price control and civil rights.

What they are trying to do, as the President said, is "to sell a high cost plan for national insecurity. And I don't think the people of this country are going to buy it."

Dove That Goes Boom

Remember the Stockholm "Peace Petition" and the world wide Communists lie of "U. S. warmongers"? Soviet Russia has just boosted its military budget to another record figure—war preparations are taking 77% of Soviet funds, plants and equipment, according to the UN—and the Communist East German puppets are following suit. Maybe it's time to dig out those peace petitions again.

Oliver Twist Up-To-Date

Let The People 'See'—And Vote

Speaker Rayburn's recent ban on televising House proceedings moved Sen. Moody (D. Mich.) — former Detroit newspaperman — to take to his typewriter to tell why the House should pass the resolution of Rep. Javits (R. N.Y.) on television. The 1950 CIO convention went on record in favor of televising Congress. Moody wrote:

THE PEOPLE'S right to watch their government in action—to get the direct facts on issues and personalities in Congress at first hand—has been challenged by the ban against televising proceedings of the House of Representatives.

No other leader on Capitol Hill but Speaker Rayburn could have begun to get away with his order throwing television cameras and radio "mikes" out of committee hearings.

Senate hearings can be televised, and are. Until recently, the camera's eye has turned on such House inquiries as California's Rep. King's Internal Revenue inquiry and Indiana's Rep. Madden's investigation of the horrible massacre of Polish patriots at Katyn.

But then, Rayburn told Chairman Madden to cut the television off. When the Un-American Activities subcommittee headed by Georgia's Rep. Wood prepared at Detroit for a weeklong unveiling of Communists in Detroit, the Speaker told him "nix," too.

The writer happened to be in Detroit when the hearings were to open, and called the Speaker by long distance to ask that the ban be lifted. The Speaker declined to yield. He said that there is nothing in House rules permitting broadcasting or telecasting of proceedings, that House rules apply to committees and that he interpreted the lack of specific authority as tantamount to a prohibition.

The Speaker did not say so then, but his friends agree that behind his decision lay a deep-seated aversion to anything that might turn congressional proceedings into a "circus." He knows that once under way what is said and done in a committee, and to a witness, is largely in the hands of committee chairmen, and some chairmen have been criticized for the tone of their hearings.

It is typical of congressional confidence in Rayburn's fairness that the Javits resolution places discretion in his hands on the point of whether a specific hearing is suitable for television.

While there may be some reasons for not televising committee procedures, though few if any that could not be corrected by a chairman devoted to getting the facts rather than staging a hippodrome, the affirmative reasons for "letting the public in" on hearings seem to me to outweigh the negative overwhelmingly.

In 1952 and thereafter, government will be making decisions which will chart the course to peace or atomic war; decisions which may be decisive in the very survival of the nation and freedom.

It is imperative that just as many people as possible participate in those decisions, and that they be fully informed when they do participate. There is no education so effective as visual education. There is no way to size up a situation so well, to sort and analyze facts so surely, to size up personalities so keenly, as to be "there"—to watch the participants and to hear the facts spelled out.

THE MORE open, direct, uncolored lines of communication between the people and their government, the better for the country.

The public is not dumb. Give it a chance to see senators and congressmen in action, and it will soon learn who are the ablest, the most sincere, the best informed—and vice versa.

Give it a chance to hear policy in the making and those who seek to tear down constructive programs, for political or any other reason, will soon hear from home.

In recent national elections, less than 50% of eligible voters have cast their ballots, which in nearly any other country which has the great privilege of choosing its own government would be considered a disgrace.

It is a disgrace here.

Television and broadcasting—direct, unstrained, uninterpreted facts flowing straight to the people from those who represent them—will over the long-run be a factor in better government. Today, by stimulating interest and disseminating facts, it may help to keep us out of a general war.

Steel Industry 'Just Doesn't Wanna' Union Shop

The $64 question in the recent steel dispute hearings before a special panel of the Wage Stabilization Board is: Why does the steel industry oppose the CIO Steelworkers demand for the union shop? The answer is given in USA's pamphlet, Facts About The Union Shop:

What Is The Union Shop?

● The union shop is the most widely employed of the three common forms of union security.

In a factory covered by a labor-management agreement on the union shop, every worker must join the union, and every new employe must join the union shortly after accepting employment. Under union shop conditions, the employer may hire anybody he wants, so long as the worker affiliates with the union after he takes a job. The employer has full freedom to hire as he pleases; the worker has full freedom to seek employment where he pleases.

● The union shop differs greatly from the closed shop, which has been made illegal by the Taft-Hartley Act. Under the closed shop, the employer may hire only members of the union.

● A third form of union security is maintenance-of-membership. That system, which was devised by the War Labor Board in World War II, provides that all present members of the union in a factory must keep their membership, but there is no responsibility on new employes to join the labor organization. Maintenance of membership, which once was widely incorporated in union agreements, is rapidly being displaced by the union shop. The basic steel industry is one of the very few large industries where union shop agreements have not yet been signed.

Has Industry Accepted The Union Shop?

Yes—almost everywhere.

A study by the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the U. S. Department of Labor in 1951 found that:

"The relative importance of the union shop over other union security provisions is revealed in a recently-completed survey of 2651 agreements, covering 5,581,000 workers . . . 61% of those contracts had union shop clauses."

Similar figures were reported in a study made by the research department of the United Steelworkers. That study covered agreements with firms each employing over 5000 workers, or a total of 3,196,000 workers. About 63% of those contracts, covering 75% of the workers involved, provided for the union shop.

Such auto corporations as General Motors, Ford and Chrysler; such rubber manufacturers as Firestone, Goodyear and Goodrich are among the hundreds of big companies now operating under union shop conditions.

As a matter of fact, the union shop is common in the steel industry—outside the large corporations that produce basic steel. More than half the steelworkers' union contracts—with fabricating companies and with such basic steel producers as Crucible and Kaiser—provide for the union shop.

Indeed, the very companies in basic steel which oppose granting the union shop to United Steelworkers have scores of other union shop agreements with other unions—and, for some of their operations, with the Steelworkers union itself. Workers in mines, on steamship lines, on railroad systems, on construction firms owned and/or controlled by the big steel companies, are protected by the union shop.

It is clear that the steel companies have no moral principles against granting the union shop; they merely refuse to agree to a union shop covering the steel workers themselves.

Does Uncle Sam Object To The Union Shop?

No, indeed. There is no federal law, no principle of administration, no Supreme Court precedent against the union shop. On the contrary, the 82nd Congress has made it easier for workers to sign union shop agreements.

The Taft-Hartley Act, passed in 1947, preserved the legality of the union shop. That law did provide, however, that a majority of workers in any plant must vote affirmatively for the union shop before their union could ask the employer for it.

In 1951, the 82nd Congress passed the Taft-Humphrey law, which removed the voting requirement—because the record showed almost every union shop election won by tremendous majorities. In 1951, the Congress also passed a law permitting, for the first time in history, adoption of the union shop on the nation's railways. And in a recent recommendation on a railroad labor-management dispute, a federal government agency operating under the Railway Labor Act recommended the signing of a union shop contract by the railroad industry.

So the record shows that Uncle Sam does not oppose the union shop; if anything, he favors it.

Do Workers Like The Union Shop?

The answer is a resounding "Yes"—and it's based on government statistics.

During the first 26 months of Taft-Hartley, the National Labor Relations Board conducted secret ballot union shop elections in hundreds of plants. Nearly 3,400,000 industrial workers voted in those polls. In 97.3% of all the elections, the workers asked their union to seek the union shop; and 93.8% of those eligible to vote cast their secret ballots for union security. In 1950, the union shop was approved in over 96% of the special elections conducted by the NLRB. In a series of similar elections in the steel industry itself, the overwhelming majority of the workers favored the union shop.

It is clear that American workers—in steel and other industries—want the union shop.

Why Do Workers Want The Union Shop?

Workers in industrial America want and like the union shop because it is democratic majority rule in practice. Every worker in a factory benefits when the union wins higher wages, or a pension-welfare program, or improved handling of shop grievances. American workers justly resent "free riders," who accept all the benefits the union wins without sharing the responsibilities and burdens.

Secondly, workers know that when management grants the union shop, their organization has won a strong measure of security and acceptance. Countless studies of industrial practices have shown that a sense of union "insecurity" hampers good labor-management relations, breeds suspicion on both sides, and can reduce production, either through poor morale or through a hyper-readiness to resolve every plant problem through economic conflict rather than by a determined effort to achieve peaceful agreement.

The union shop in steel would improve what the companies call the union's "state of mind"; it would reduce tensions in the shop; and it would help improve relationships with management.

Why Does Steel Oppose The Union Shop?

That is the $64 question, to which nobody has found a real answer.

The industry spokesmen, ignoring practical experience both in the steel industry and other industries, have offered only theoretical objections to a practice that is widely accepted in American industrial life.

The industry has spoken in defense of the "free rider," who takes all the union's benefits and contributes nothing to the union's welfare. The industry has said that if it were to grant the union shop, the worker's freedom of choice would be abridged—when on the contrary, under the union shop, an employer's right to hire and a worker's right to take a job are not abridged in any way at all.

The argument is one, the industry would have Americans believe, of "principles"—yet the industry ignores those very same "principles" when it signs union shop contracts with other unions.

The steel industry has quoted the late Supreme Court Justice Brandeis to support its resistance to the union shop. In doing so, the industry has been forced to "pick and choose" among the sentences of Mr. Brandeis' statements, for Justice Brandeis favored the "preferential shop"—a form of union security greater than the union shop. His reasons support the union shop, as is apparent from the following statement:

"I should say to those employers who stand for the open shop, that they ought to recognize that it is for their interest as well as that of the community that unions should be powerful and responsible; that it is to their interest to build up the unions, to add as far as they can in making them stronger, and to create conditions under which the unions shall be led by the ablest and most experienced men. A large part of all union activities today, and in the past, has been devoted to the struggle for existence; and that fact accounts also for a large part of union excesses. As nearly as possible union existence should be assured so that the efforts of the leaders might be devoted to solving the fundamental and difficult problems of discipline and organization, and the working out of other problems of the trades." (Testimony of Mr. Brandeis in 1915 before the United States Commission on Industrial Relations, published as Senate Document, 64th Congress, First Session, Vol. 26 (Vol. 6936).

The fact is that the industry's only practical argument is that "it just doesn't wanna" sign a union shop agreement; and since it "doesn't wanna" sign itself, it also "doesn't wanna" union shop in steel recommended by the government, either. The steel industry's only real answer to the legitimate proposal for a union shop coming from a responsible union like the United Steelworkers is, in the words of the industry spokesman: "We recommend . . . that the Union withdraw its demand."

Can The Government Recommend A Union Shop?

Yes. In fact, it has already done so, in a case involving hundreds of thousands of railway workers. The Wage Stabilization Board can make a similar recommendation in the case of the United Steelworkers of America.

Recommendations on union security are nothing new for Uncle Sam. In 1942, the War Labor Board in the Little Steel case, and in hundreds of subsequent cases, recommended "maintenance of membership" clauses. The principle of union security in those cases was substantially the same as in the present steel dispute.

The issue of "personal freedom" was used by the industry in the Little Steel case of 1942, just as it is in the 1951-52 steel dispute. In 1942, the industry used much the same language to persuade the government against maintenance of membership, as it is using it today against the union shop. With one difference—the steel industry now accepts the right of the government to have recommended maintenance of membership a decade ago. Ten years from now the steel industry will undoubtedly recognize the right of the government to recommend a union shop in 1952.

You And The Union Shop In Steel!

The United Steelworkers of America want you to know and understand the facts in this issue, free of the haze of propaganda with which the steel companies are seeking to becloud the union shop.

The USA-CIO, at the request of the President, postponed its strike, despite the refusal of the steel companies to agree to a single one of the union's proposals. The President, recognizing that sacrifice, asked the Wage Stabilization Board to consider and make recommendations on each and every one of the union proposals. The USA-CIO has presented a complete case, which we think supports the fairness and justice of those proposals.

The steel industry would deny us the union shop, and they would have the government refuse even to consider the facts and merits of our union shop proposal. The industry has initiated a high-pressure propaganda campaign to force WSB to ignore completely our demands for union shop—or, failing this, to have Congress deny to the WSB the right to consider disputes of this character.

The United Steelworkers of America does not believe that a government agency like the WSB should be subjected to such pressure, as it seeks to find a solution that will insure fairness and labor-management harmony in the steel industry. We do not believe that Congress should change the rules in the midst of a pending case before WSB—particularly when Congress, through its defeat of the Lucas Bill in 1951, in fact endorsed those very rules.

We do believe it worthwhile, in view of the industry's pressure campaign, for every American citizen—and particularly the members of Congress—to remember that the WSB has a mandate to consider all the issues in this dispute, and to make fair-minded recommendation for their settlement.

That is all the United Steelworkers want. That is precisely, we are convinced, what decent Americans want their WSB to do.

Financial Page Comment

A FINANCIAL columnist took a look last week at the hue and cry over the union shop, and predicted this important security clause will be gained by CIO Steelworkers.

He was Joseph Livingston, writing in the Washington Post and several other U. S. newspapers.

Livingston reported that the Wage Stabilization Board office in Washington is being flooded with identically-worded letters from businessmen against the union shop, reflecting "well-organized opposition." He added:

"Not all employers oppose the union shop. Some feel it avoids union-versus-nonunion factionalism.

"The argument against the union shop—Why should a worker join a union if he doesn't believe in it? can be reversed: Why should a union member be forced to work alongside a non-union worker? The majority has rights as well as the minority . . ."

Point 4 In Action

REVOLUTION: That's the only word that tells what happened to India's farming when this steel plow-head was introduced. Produced by local blacksmiths at cost of about $2.50, it replaced wooden plow used for thousands of years. At Lakhna Training School, Etawah, student instructors (above) learn use, repair, adjustment.

IMAGINE growing 63 bushels of wheat where 13 had grown before! Neghu Ram, of Sonbersa village, near Etawah, harvesting his crop at left, did just that after using better seeds, methods, introduced by Holmes (center). Harish Chandra Seth (right), deputy development officer of Etawah TCA pilot project, admires the crop.

Foreign Aid Foes Feud Over Hatchet Job

(Editorial comment on Page 4.)

By MILTON PLUMB

AMID SIGNS of growing isolationism in the controlling Dixiegop coalition, Congress last week began deliberating the crucial question of U. S. foreign policy in a world threatened by Communist aggression.

Despite President Truman's warning that upon their decision may depend the very "survival of civilization," leading coalition spokesmen made it clear that they intend to place partisan politics first.

One after the other they called for heavy cuts in the administration's $7.9 billion Mutual Security Program to provide military and economic assistance to friendly nations abroad. Moreover, in their eagerness to hack away at foreign aid, Dixiegop leaders became entangled in heated jurisdictional squabbles over who should do the cutting.

Chairman Russell (D. Ga.) of the Senate Armed Services Committee forced the Senate Foreign Relations Committee to permit his group to conduct joint hearings.

The chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, Sen. Connally (D. Tex.) had already indicated that his group's action would be greatly influenced by what he called "the unbalanced state of the budget."

GOP Senate leader Bridges (N.H.), who is also the ranking minority member of Russell's committee, predicted that Congress will certainly pare the program. The most drastic proposal, however, came from Sen. Johnson (D. Colo.) who said the program "ought to be cut squarely in half—and even that is being generous."

An identical trend seemed to be developing in the House.

Chairman Richards (D. S.C.) of the House Foreign Affairs Committee said the administration would do "pretty darn well" if it escaped with only a billion-dollar cut.

The present fight is over so-called "authorizing" legislation to continue the program after June 30. If Congress follows last year's pattern, even deeper cuts will be made in the appropriations bill that also must be passed to provide money for the program authorized.

Significantly, Sen. McCarran (D. Nev.) who is chairman of the Appropriations subcommittee that handles the annual State Dept. money measures, has called for a slash of $1 to $2 billion. He also indicated that he believes all further economic aid should be discontinued.

All of these coalition assaults came after President Truman had warned Congress that every penny of the $7.9 billion asked is needed because "the ultimate decision betwen the free world and the slave world lies in the balance."

The President's concern was reflected in the fact that he made three separate appeals for the program within 24 hours after sending Congress his request.

Carrying the issue to the people in a nationwide address over all radio and TV networks, he warned that what Congress does "may make the difference between life and death for many of you who are listening to me tonight."

Striking out at the isolationists, "economizers" and those who want to give only military aid and deny further economic assistance, Truman branded their policies "self-defeating."

"Instead of saving money," he said, "we would have to spend many times more than we do now to make up for the loss of materials and armed forces we now get from our allies. What is worse, we still would not be secure."

Obviously concerned by such ill-considered demands as that of the Chamber of Commerce that all American economic aid be discontinued, the President told his radio audience that our allies are making "real sacrifiices" to carry out their part of the program. He pointed out that Great Britain already limits each citizen to 16c worth of meat a week.

"They would have more if it weren't for their defense effort," Truman said. "Do you think we ought to ask them to cut that 16c down to a dime's worth—or a nickel's worth? Do they have to do that to do their share"?

Support for the President came from Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.), who said that the "Point IV program of aid to under-developed areas is vital if the peoples and free governments of Asia are to save themselves from being enslaved by Communist power."

And Sen. Moody (D. Mich.) hit at the false "economy" behind the drive to kill the program by pointing out "it costs twice as much to train and equip a division in the United States as in one of the NATO countries."

Last year Congress cut $1.2 billion from the President's request for $8.5 billion to finance the mutual security program.

GOP Gunning For Acheson

Diversionary tactics — which the Dixiegops used last year to shift attention from isolationist maneuvers, including damaging cuts in foreign aid funds—apparently are in the cards again this session.

Rep. Smith (R. Wis.) last week repeated one key 1951 GOP performance in demanding Dean Acheson's ouster as Secretary of State. He accused Acheson—in words which some think apply more aptly to himself—of "creating a state of disunity which imperils hope of complete victory over the Communist menace to the world."

Last year, while Administration forces were concentrating their attention to beat back GOP attacks on Acheson, the coalition sneaked through several riders designed to cripple U. S. foreign policy.

Harriman Warns Against MSA Cuts

W. Averell Harriman told Congress last week that any "substantial" cut in President Truman's $7.9 billion Mutual Security program "would gravely impair our own security."

The Mutul Security Director opened hearings on the foreign aid program before a joint session of the Senate Foreign Relations and Armed Services Committees and the House Foreign Affairs Committee.

"I am convinced that any decision to cut the Mutual Security program," Harriman said, "is a decision to reduce the strength which is being built in the free world for our common defense against the threat of the Kremlin."

CIO Urges More School Lunch Aid

APPROXIMATELY $150 million should be allocated to meet the 1949 standards of the school lunch program, a CIO spokesman told the House Appropriations Subcommittee on Agriculture last week.

George T. Guernsey, associate director of the CIO Education and Research Dept., said the allocation for the program each year for the past six years ranged from $70 to $83.5 million, but a number of factors necessitate a larger fund.

He declared that the number of children receiving lunches has risen from 6 million in 1946-47 to an estimated 9.25 million in 1951-52, but "during this entire period the federal budget for the program has not been increased."

"In fact," Guernsey continued, "last year the allocation was slightly decreased."

Guernsey said that the value of surplus commodities given to the school system dropped from $38.5 million in 1949-50 to $13.2 million in 1951-52.

THE RISE in food prices, he said, also necessitates a larger allocation for the program.

"Since June 25, 1950, the price of food, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, has gone up 14.4%," Guernsey said. "While it appears that food costs may not go up as much during the coming year, the failure of Congress to provide an adequate price control law has actually made less food available under the hot lunch program during the past 18 months."

The CIO education aide said that the Bureau of Census reported that in 1949 there were 11 million in families with a cash income of less than $2000 a year, or $38.50 a week.

He said that there "are millions of our citizens who have come to believe" that a hot lunch should be served once a day to children coming from these homes.

"Not only the members of CIO, but millions of citizens in the Parent-Teacher Association, farm groups, women's club and other organizations, have indicated their belief in this type of program," Guernsey said.

New York Guild To Give Acheson, Goldberg Awards

Acheson, honored in the field of public affairs, was chosen for his "staunch insistence on the Administration's foreign policy despite severe criticism." He was a speaker at the ANG 1950 convention in Washington.

Goldberg was named in the field of labor for his contributions to labor solidarity in the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, the United Labor Policy Committee and the CIO jurisdictional arbitration setup.

Awards in journalism will go to Oliver Pilat and William Shannon, of the New York Post, for a recent series of articles on Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.).

Productivity Pay Gains Guard Against Recession, Outlook Says

WORKERS' income must "keep pace with industrial progress" if the nation is to avoid economic recession, the CIO Economic Outlook said last week.

As current high levels of business spending for new plants and equipment tapers within the next year or two, rising levels of consumer buying power will be a necessary "cushion" to prevent recession, said the publication of the CIO Dept. of Research and Education.

"Failure of wage stabilization policy to permit workers to share in benefits of industrial progress would undermine the consumption base of our economy.

"Industrial progress and increased efficiency achieved at present will carry over into the period when defense production will decline to a new and lower level.

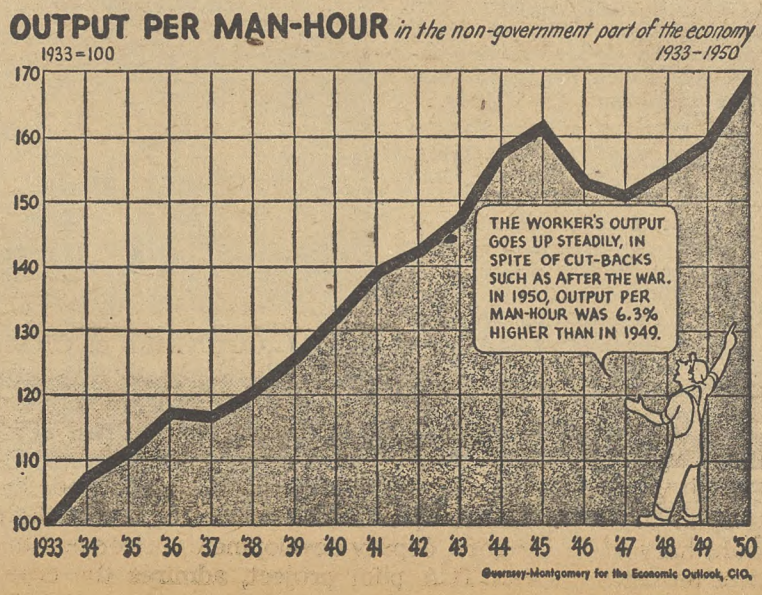
"If workers' incomes are not permitted to keep pace with industrial progress, the buying power of consumers will not be sufficient to maintain high levels of production and of employment.

"We would, under such circumstances, enter the new period with income and purchasing power relationships that may twist industrial progress into mass unemployment instead of the improved living standards it could provide."

Pointing out that the Wage Stabilization Board is now considering if labor will share in the benefits of increasing productivity, the Outlook said that failure by the board to approve wage increases based on productivity "would represent an unfortunate and unjust intervention by the government in the sharing of national income."

"Productivity increases" are a rise in output with the same or fewer man-hours of work. They are due to many factors and the contribution of many groups—including workers, management and the nation's accumulation of technical knowledge.

Citing official government figures showing that output per man-hour increased at an average rate of 4% a year from 1948-1950, the report predicted that further rises in total output will take place as the new and improved facilities get into full-scale operation.



Output per man hour in the private part of the economy from 1933 to 1950 "increased nearly 70%, or at the average rate of 3 1/8% a year, compounded annually."

"If workers do not share in the fruits of rising output per man-hour, business will receive all—or the lion's share—of the benefits increased productivity," the Outlook said. "Workers should rightfully share in the benefits of the increased productivity of the national economy as a whole."

"From the viewpoint of justice and economic reality, the fruits of rising output per man-hour should be shared by workers, industry and consumers—through wage increases for workers, lower prices for consumers and business profits that arise from an increasing volume of sales at lower unit margins. In that way, the entire nation can share—through rising standards of living—in the benefits of the increased output per man-hour of the national economy."

Haywood Says—

'Labor, Religion Are Partners For Freedom'

ORGANIZED labor and religion are "logical partners" in combating communism and fascism, and are co-defenders of the democratic way of life, Allan S. Haywood, executive vice president of the CIO, told the convention of the National Religion and Labor Foundation in Cincinnati.

More than 200 delegates attended the sessions. John G. Ramsay, director of community relations for the CIO Organizing Committee, and Rev. Francis W. McPeek, industrial relations secretary of the Congregational Christian Churches, were re-elected co-chairmen.

Haywood told the convention that the aims of religion and the union movement are parellel. Both stress the dignity of the individual, he said, and "stand for the right of all men to equality regardless of race, creed or national origin."

"I can be conservative when I have something to conserve," he said, "but I can be radical when I'm fighting an injustice."

He asked members of churches to regard the labor movement as a whole and not to condemn unionism because of the sins of a few.

"If Christ were now on earth," he said, "He would be a union member and He would be at this meeting because He was a Jew."

Haywood presented the Religion and Labor Foundation Award for Social Justice to Lucy Randolph Mason, 70-year-old social worker and daughter of an Alexandria, Va., Episcopal clergyman. Since 1937 she has been a southern representative of the CIO.

"In your work," said Haywood in citing her, "you have recognized that without religion our civilization would be destroyed but you have equally recognized that without organized labor our liberty and justice would be a mockery.

"You embody at one and the same time the voice of the church speaking to the ranks of labor and the voice of labor speaking to the church. Ever since childhood you have been battling for the working people of the South . . .

"We honor you for your religious faith, we honor you for translating your faith into a life of service on behalf of unionism, social justice and human rights."

Dr. McPeek called on free labor and free management to work together with the churches "to put bread into the stomach of the worker and religion into his soul." The aim of the foundation, he explained, is to "put the voice of labor in the church and the voice of religion in the halls of labor."

RESOLUTIONS adopted suggested widespread observance of May Day on the basis that "it should not be left to exploitation by Communits," recommended informal local association of clergymen and labor leaders as an approach to the problems of industrial unrest and economic injustice, and warned lest inflation become a vested interest "because of its apparent advantage to some individuals and groups."

Others called upon the Senate to ratify the genocide convention and to end the filibuster which has blocked civil rights legislation, and called for enforceable state and federal FEPC laws.

CIO members re-elected to the executive board were Sec.-Treas. Jacob S. Clayman of the Ohio CIO Council; Joseph Schlossberg, secretary-treasurer emeritus of the Clothing Workers; Rev. Charles C. Weber, president of the Virginia CIO Council; Rev. David S. Burgess, executive secretary of the Georgia CIO Council; Pres. Joseph Beirne of the Communications Workers; James B. Carey, CIO secretary-treasurer and president of the Electrical Workers; Harry Read, executive assistant to Carey; Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the Auto Workers, and Ben Segal, associate director of the CIO Dept. of Education and Research.

Jersey CIO Calls On 'Idle' Lawmakers

THE NEW JERSEY CIO Council will hold a legislative mobilization conference at Trenton Mar. 24 to let its members visit "the do-nothing State Legislature."

"Although not a single major bill has yet been passed, the Legislature plans to adjourn for the year within a month of their reconvening" on Mar. 10, Council Pres. Carl Holderman and other council leaders said in the conference call.

"Since the legislators only meet once or twice a week, this means that attempts will be made to ram bills through the State Legislature by the bushel.

"In the rush a number of anti-labor, anti-consumer bills may be pushed through, while the real needs of the people of our state are likely to be ignored, unless we make our voices heard in Trenton."

Michigan CIO Leads Drive For Redistricting

A DRIVE opened last week in Michigan to win equal representation in the Legislature for its citizens.

Spearheading the campaign to get 250,000 signatures on petitions calling for a constitutional change to provide equal representation are the Michigan CIO Council and the CIO Auto Workers. The League of Women Voters and other organizations are participating.

The proposal calls for dividing the state senate and house districts on a strict population basis, taking reappropriation from the Legislature and placing the responsibility in the hands of the secretary of state, against whom legal action could be taken for failure to act.

The Legislature has refused to reapportion itself every 10 years as provided in the constitution and violations cannot be taken into court.

The Michigan CIO is arranging 28 meetings throughout the state to explain the proposal. Pres. August Scholle of the Michigan CIO announced that the League of Women Voters and other organizations will join in the drive for signatures.

The AFL refused to participate in the united campaign; instead it is circulating petitions simply calling for enforcement of the present constitutional provision for reapportionment every 10 years.

UAW Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey said that "all the techniques" used in organizing should be used in the campaign—he warned that "big business will do everything possible to try to kill this drive" and said that a registration campaign would be combined with the drive.

UFW Aids NAACP

New York Local 76 of the CIO Furniture Workers has contributed $1250 to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

LOCAL COUNCILS of CIO in New Jersey are holding legislative conferences preparatory to statewide meeting in Trenton later this month. Here Pres. Joseph W. Smith opens that held by Passaic County Council in Paterson. Waiting to discuss phases of CIO legislative program are (left to right) Council Executive Sec. Christopher J. Frawley; Carl Platzer, manager of Paterson office of U. S. Employment Service; State Sen. Vincent Hull; Treas. Victor Leonardis, N. J. CIO Council; Pres. Charles Lazzio, TWUA Dyers' Local 1733; Harry Kranz, State CIO legislative director; Charles Joelson, Passaic Council attorney; Assemblyman Frank Shershin, Assemblywoman Emma Newton and Assemblyman John Junda.

"THE KEY to victory is block organization of our own people," Mrs. Esther Murray tells CIO Communications Workers legislative and political action committee meeting in Washington. Mrs. Murray is a CIO-PAC national representative. Ben Blankenship, CWA legislative director, directed the meeting. CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne said "CWA has always given PAC work an important place. This year it will be more important than even." Many CWA members have done outstanding PAC work.

Five More Wool Firms Renew TWUA Pacts

FIVE WOOLEN and worsted companies—including one of the largest—have renewed contracts with CIO Textile Workers. The contracts were due to expire Mar. 15.

Two of the companies revoked their notices of cancellation of the contracts, including one of the largest firms in the industry, the Wanskuch Co., which has three mills in Providence, R. I., employing 200 workers.

Oakland Worsted Mills, Oakland, R. I., with 500 workers in two plants also revoked its cancellation notice. Contracts were renewed by three smaller companies, George Mabbett & Sons, Plymouth, Mass.; Hartford Woolen Co., Hartford, Vt., and Thayer Woolen Co., North Oxford, Mass.

"This is a further indication of what our union has maintained from the beginning—that the woolen and worsted industry has no real complaints about our contracts," said John Chupka, TWUA's woolen and worsted director.

"Those who have cancelled were simply following the actions of the American Woolen Co."

Twenty-seven companies originally followed contract cancellations, but all the others allowed their contracts to renew.

Negotiations were resumed at New York and Boston last week between TWUA and American Woolen, which extended its contract for a month for further bargaining.

New Regime Comes To A Quick End

"THIS IS the new regime," a St. Louis foreman for the Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. told four linemen, members of the CIO Communications Workers, as he ordered them to work on rain-soaked poles.

They refused and were docked six hours' pay and suspended.

This was the spark that set off the strike of 6000 CWA members in the St. Louis area. The phone workers' resentment had been smouldering because of the failure of the company to settle other disagreements through the grievance machinery.

After a four-day work stoppage, the company last week came to terms with the union, only an hour before the walkout was scheduled to spread to all of Missouri, Arkansas and key cities of Texas, Oklahoma and Kansas.

CWA gains included pay for time lost because of bad weather and improved grievance procedure.

Long Bemis Strike Won

SOME 1900 members of the CIO Textile Workers have won a 16-week strike against bag plants of Bemis Brothers in Indianapolis and Cannelton, Ind., and Bemis, Tenn.

They emerged with ranks solid and new contracts despite a union-busting drive by the company.

The new agreement provided for a 4c an hour general wage increase, nearly twice the firm's best previous offer; pensions, which previously had been given only to those picked out by the company, and a 2% Christmas bonus, averaging about $60 for each striker, which the company had withheld.

In addition, contract clauses governing seniority, job bidding and leaves of absence were improved.

Inquiry Demanded—

Dollar Buccaneers Of Textile Industry Scorched By Rieve

A CONGRESSIONAL investigation of "financial buccaneering" in the textile industry which is "arbitrarily depriving many workers of their livelihood through no fault of their own" was urged last week by the CIO Textile Workers.

In a letter to Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.), chairman of the Senate sub-committee on labor-management relations, TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve said the industry's financial "tactics would arouse serious concern even in normal times."

"At present," he continued, "with 150,000 textile workers unemployed — and the Lawrence (Mass.) area in particular distress—the impact is still worse.

"The current difficulties in textile and other soft-goods industries are troublesome enough without the further handicap of financial buccaneering."

Rieve asked specifically for an investigation of:

- "The increasing use by financial speculators of the capital-gains provisions in the income tax laws."
- "The growing tendency of states, counties and municipalities to use their credit to issue tax exempt bonds for the construction of factories, subsequently leased, loaned or given to private, profit-making enterprises."

To drive home the first point, Rieve submitted a case study of the financial transactions of Albert L. List and associates. TWUA's Research Dept. found these operators:

1. Received more than $24 million in cash and securities as a result of dividends and liquidations—on an investment of $7 million in 1943.

2. "Enjoyed" capital gains of more than $16 million, which are "taxable at markedly lower rates than ordinary income."

3. Securities with a book value of more than $19 million were received by stockholders of the National Refining Co.—the name of the enterprise in which List and associates invested $7 million in 1943—and successor companies.

"This is in addition to receipts which List and associates may have received from personal holdings of stock in liquidated corporations," the union said.

4. "Rode rough shod over the workers and the communities" by liquidating the Nonquitt Mills, New Bedford, Mass., throwing 1000 employes out of work despite the fact that the mills reported earnings of $349,000 in 1948—the year before their liquidation.

5. Closed the wool-combing division of the Arlington Mills, Lawrence, Mass., and were reportedly planning to shut the entire plant, which would throw 6000 workers on the street.

The researchers reported that the Lawrence action was taken despite the owners' "excellent profit record." The firm earned more than $20 million before taxes in the four years ending Nov. 30, 1951, and $3.3 million before taxes and $1.7 million after taxes in the last fiscal year.

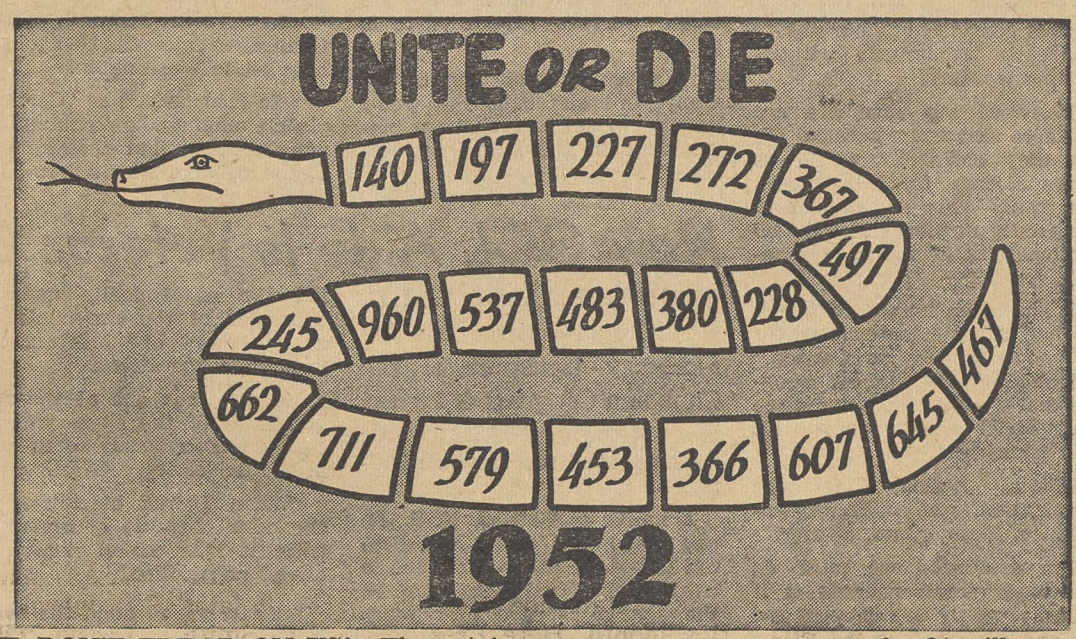
"Earnings before taxes during the five-year-period aggragated 127.5% of the net worth at the beginning of the period," the survey said.

"The misuse of state and local credit and federal tax exemption for the benefit of private employers is perhaps an even more dangerous matter," Rieve said.

"Such tactics have been employed recently in Kentucky, Mississippi and Tennessee. Other states, including Arkansas, Maine and Louisiana appear on the point of following suit. Massachusetts and Rhode Island are discussing comparable operations.

"If the trend continues competition will force the spread of this practice throughout the country." Rieve said that the union is prepared to prove:

- "The industries thus attracted are not new industries but transplanted ones . . .
- "Too many" of the industries which have yielded to these inducements "have gobbled up the preferred benefits, and then, after a few profit-heavy years, departed once more, leaving the community with empty buildings and a heavy bond issue."
- Giving plants to companies was denounced by the Southern States Tax Officials Association at Atlanta, Ga., last September as "inequitable and unfair to industry in the state and detrimental to the taxpayers of the state because what is given away must be paid for by other businesses and individuals."
- The bonds issued for the "free" plants are exempt from federal taxes and the corporations "have capitalized their 'gifts' in their corporate tax structure, further reducing their federal tax payments."



AND DON'T TREAD ON US!—The original "Rattlesnake" battleflag of the U. S. Revolution has been brought up to date by CIO Textile Workers in showdown negotiations with American Woolen Co. Giant textile firm wants to kill single contract, substitute separate agreements for 21 mills represented by TWUA. Flag symbolizes the separate Textile locals, and the warning "Unite or Die." Union members are wearing miniatures of the flag as symbols of their determination to stick together.

Rising Prices, Fewer Jobs Plague Workers In Canada

By GERVASE N. LOVE

IF A CIO member in the United States were to cross the border and settle down in Canada—or vice versa—he'd be quite likely to wonder if he really were in another country.

For the problems that would beset him and his union in his new home would be pretty much the same as those he'd left behind.

That's the opinion of Pres. A. R. Mosher and Sec.-Treas. Donald MacDonald, of the Canadian Congress of Labor—and they have plenty of facts to back them up.

CIO unions in Canada are affiliated with the CCL, along with Canadian national unions, directly-chartered local unions comparable to CIO local industrial unions, railroad workers and the Mine Workers.

They agreed on the need for wage increases to offset the boost in the cost of living, rising unemployment growing mostly out of defense mobilization, the necessity of political action and improved social legislation, and the need of greater union organization.

Mosher added the housing shortage to his list—something else that strikes a familiar note to many a U. S. worker.

No Wage Controls

Between them they could find but one trouble the U. S. union member doesn't have to worry about — immigration. On the other hand the Canadian worker has no wage controls to contend with.

Mosher noted an increased resistance by management to pay increases to meet the sharp rise in Canada's cost of living—greater than in the U. S.—and to improved social security legislation and the intention of organized labor to secure an adequate voice in industry.

"Unlike the United States," MacDonald observed ruefully, "we have no wage controls except the kind the employers have always exercised, but they're pretty effective."

Dr. E. A. Forsey, CCL research director and a former professor of economics at Montreal's famous McGill Univ., pointed out that since wartime price controls started to go on Apr. 1, 1946, the cost of living as measured by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics has jumped approximately 60%.

Between Jan. 1, 1951, and Jan. 1, 1952, it soared 12.8%. Measured between the middles of the same two months, figures of the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics show a rise of 8.6% according to the old index. A lot of Canadians now claim it costs as much if not more to live in their country than it does in the United States.

Average dollar industrial earnings have increased in Canada from $30.37 a week in 1946 to $51.62 last November, or about 70%.

"But most of that increase represents inflation," Forsey declared, "and it is distributed unevenly. The real increase, as measured in 1946 dollars, is but $2.24 a week. The actual improvement in the standard of living has been but a little better than 1% a year.

"Since 1939, real income in Canada has increased an average of 50%, and it certainly should have. But it hasn't increased evenly. Farm income is up 90%, compared to but 31% for urban industry. Between the fall of 1946 and last spring, real income decreased in some industries, notably logging, and transportation and commerce."

Unemployment, Mosher said, may be facing a rather sharp increase as industry is converted from civilian to defense production. Tied in with it is the immigration problem.

Canada has absorbed thousands of displaced persons from Europe, far more in proportion to her population than the United States.

DP's A Problem

"What we have," said Mosher, "is an immigration policy that does not consider duly our ability to absorb immigrants without harming workers.

"Many of our members are unable to find work because the jobs they ordinarily would go to are already filled by recent immigrants—this is particularly true among members of the CIO Woodworkers in British Columbia."

"We need an immigration policy that shows some concern for the people already in Canada," said MacDonald, "but we recognize that we must take our share of displaced persons along with other countries."

Political Action Committee organization is of continuing importance, Mosher said, adding:

"I'm convinced we must do something effective about it if we are properly to represent the workers. We can't do everything in collective bargaining, because we are constantly meeting handicaps to bargaining growing out of legislation.

"We have to elect our own people to provincial legislatures and Parliament if we are ever to get the laws the working people of Canada need. We hope to accomplish this through education and PAC work. It isn't an easy job, but we're going to do it!"

Both Mosher and MacDonald —like practically all other labor leaders—regard organization as the prime problem of trade unionism.

"We have to get more people organized," MacDonald asserted. "The proportion already in unions is too small. When we do, organized labor then will have the voice it should have, and legislatures and Parliament will listen to us."

Mosher pointed out that less than 50% of Canada's workers are organized (that's still a greater proportion than in the U. S.). He feels the reason is because the labor movement lacks enough trained people and doesn't have the funds to do the job properly.

"Heavy industry is fairly well organized," he said, "but in the retail and distributive trades, the professional fields and white collar workers generally, it is poor.

"We have done nothing, for instance, in hospitals, and we won't be able to until we make a bigger dent in the stores and offices."

Austria Slaps At WFTU, Denies Permits For Officials

THE AUSTRIAN government, which gives Soviet Russia more lip than lip service although the Reds share in control of the country, has gone to bat with the Communist-dominated World Federation of Trade Unions.

It has denied residence permits to non-Austrian officials of the WFTU—a ruling which was handed down just as the Stalinist stooge organization was holding an international conference of metal workers in Vienna's Soviet sector. The government charged the WFTU had failed to file a registration to obtain legal status in the country.

The WFTU appealed. It has had its headquarters in Vienna since it was ousted from Paris and Marseille by the French government about a year ago.

THE PERON-CONTROLLED General Confederation of Labor in Argentina acts as if it were moving closer and closer to communism.

A few weeks ago one of the captive union's newspapers quoted the Daily Workers in support of its fantastic charge that the CIO and AFL are "agents of imperialist capitalism."

Now another of its journals has come along with photographs of Dictators Peron and Stalin and an article showing how their careers have developed in reverse, as it were. Peron, the militarist, became head of a civil government, it points out, while Stalin, a civilian, as boss of Russia became commander of that country's armed forces.

COLLECTIVE bargaining in Sweden—mostly on an industrywide basis—has resulted in an average wage increase of 10% for 1952.

The boost comes on top of a 23% raise in industry wages last year. A spokesman for the employers, of all people, pointed out that while the 10% cannot be regarded as "moderate" in itself, it has to be posed against last year's sharp price increase.

Candidates for secretary-general of the new organization must be working Irish railwaymen and must take an examination—prepared by the NUR—in Dublin. The person chosen will be given six months' training in his new duties at NUR headquarters in London, with all expenses and salary paid by the NUR.

THE BRITISH National Council of Labor, which represents the British Labor Party and the Cooperative Union, has bluntly warned the Communists—without naming them—against trying to use trade unions to achieve their political ends by strikes.

The campaign of the "subversive elements," the council declared, is "part of a world conspiracy to undermine the industrial power of the nation." It called on union members to form a solid front and "emphasize, through constitutional channels, the legitimate aspirations of the British people."

FREE TRADE UNIONS in the Russian zone of Austria have maintained their strength despite all the Communist sales talk, Vice Chancellor Adolf Schaerf told Sec. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin during his visit to Washington.

In firms seized as "German assets," the Russians hire only people claiming to be Communists, he said. But somehow, he added, when secret ballot shop steward elections are held, only 8 to 10% of the winners turn out to be party members.

New CCL Aide Is Veteran Of Mines, Coops

DONALD MacDONALD, who recently became secretary-treasurer of the Canadian Congress of Labor, is a veteran of Nova Scotia's widely-studied cooperative movement.

A native of Halifax, N. S., he was taken to Sydney, Cape Breton Island, as a boy. He went to work in the coal mines there at the age of 17, and four years later was president of his union, Local 4560 of the Mine Workers.

In the early days of the cooperative movement at Antigonish, N. S., he worked closely with Rev. M. M. Coady, of St. Francis Xavier Univ., Antigonish, who led the economically-depressed fishermen of the community to a measure of independence through cooperatives.

He also was one of the first graduates of the co-op training course Father Coady established at the university.

"When I was blacklisted in the mines because of my union activity, the co-op kept me alive," he recalled.

"It saw me through the heaviest medical expense of my life, it housed me in a co-op house, and it fed me. And when I still couldn't get a job, it gave me one as manager of a store."

MacDonald thinks a cooperative must be something more than a device "to save 5% or 6% on a grocery bill" to be successful.

"Co-ops will always fail," he maintained, "without a philosophical background and the knowledge to be gained through study courses. Cooperation has to be seen as a way of life. Labor can learn much from it and use it to better the lot of the worker."

MacDonald was regional director for the CCL in the Maritime Provinces when he was called to the secretary-treasurer's post. He served in the Nova Scotia Legislature from 1941 to 1945 and was leader in the lower house for the Canadian Commonwealth Confederation.

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

THE WRITER had the pleasure of attending a dinner meeting of the Montgomery County CIO Council in Norristown, Pa., on Mar. 7 and addressing members of CIO unions affiliated with the Council. I pointed out to those in attendance the proof of our rapid strides in union organization. As one proof, I offered the dinner meeting we were all attending without any fear of attack.

Just a few short years ago such gatherings would have been impossible. Organization among the unorganized workers in the Norristown area has grown and labor's voice is respected. This same proof is before us all not only in Norristown but throughout this great nation of ours.

Pres. Harry Travis and others of the Montgomery County Council have contributed much to building our great movement in their area. We have done much; let us all pitch in and do more in organizing the unorganized.

FROM NORRISTOWN, I travelled to Philadelphia to attend the executive board meeting of the Insurance & Allied Workers Organizing Committee, CIO. This organization is making gains and is now in process of getting stabilized. Negotiations are in process with the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., where we recently won elections in Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and the metropolitan area of New York City. The board confirmed the appointment of Brother Richard Leonard as secretary-treasurer of IAWOC-CIO, where he will continue to do a fine job.

The time is rapidly drawing nigh when a decision in the steel situation will be forthcoming. The decision will be keenly watched by workers in all industries. The Steelworkers' local union members are preparing for any eventuality. All members are being alerted to stand by to meet any situation that might develop as a result of the decision.

Wood Union Pushes PAC

A PLEA for the collection of voluntary contributions to the CIO Political Action Committee has been sent to every local of the CIO Woodworkers in the United States by Sec.-Treas. Carl Winn.

"The day has long gone when we as trade unionists can be content with merely trying to get better working agreements," he wrote.

"No matter what improvements we make in contracts, Congress immediately tries to take them away through tax subsidies to big business, higher taxes for the working man and higher prices to all consumers.

"That's what has happened since 1950 when workers stayed away from the polls in droves and Congress became packed with mis-representatives pledged against a liberal labor program."

N. Y. CIO Warns Demos, GOP On Bills To Curb Political Action

AN emergency meeting of more than 100 New York State CIO leaders met in Albany last week to attempt to defeat three pending bills which would drastically curb union political activity.

They warned Democratic leaders that if the measures go through the Legislature, they will be held equally responsible with the Republicans.

The bills were sponsored by State Sen. Austin W. Erwin (R.), of Genesee county in upstate New York, and Assemblyman Anthony J. Travia (D.), of Brooklyn.

One would bar unions from making political contributions from general funds. Another would prohibit union officials or agents from soliciting members for political funds. The third would require a union to hold a special meeting, on 30 days notice, for a vote on an assessment for political purposes.

THE bills are ready for action in both branches of the Legislature. At the Albany meeting, Pres. Louis Hollander, of the State CIO Council, repeated his charges that Francis J. Sinnott, Kings county clerk and Democratic boss of Brooklyn, is responsible for them. Travia represents Sinnott's home district.

"The purpose of these bills is to put labor into a political concentration camp," he said.

Sec. Morris Iushewitz, of the New York City CIO Council, said Democratic opposition to the measures has "not impressed" the CIO.

"We have been asked by one Democratic leader," he said, "not to issue any statements or make any more attacks on them.

"They wanted us to lay off and said they would take care of things. We won't lay off. We think this is a bipartisan affair."

Opposition to the bills has been registered by the AFL and the State Democratic, Liberal and American Labor parties. Additional opposition came from U.S. Rep. Roosevelt (D.-Lib. N.Y.), in telegrams to Democratic State Chairman Paul E. Fitzpatrick and minority leaders in the Legislature.

HE described the measures as discriminatory legislation of the "worst kind," and said they go "far beyond even the most restrictive limits" of the Taft-Hartley Act in "limiting and confining legitimate political expression by working people."

"These measures would severely limit the constitutional right of labor union members to participate effectively in political action," his wire added.

"Voters in the lower and middle income brackets must be encouraged to join together to make their voices heard in the political councils of New York State and the nation.

"They should not be limited in any way from contributing their nickels, dimes and dollars to support of political parties and candidates espousing their welfare."

In an earlier statement, Hollander called the bills "machine politics at their worst." He declared Sinnott "would like to bring back the days when the votes of workers were bought in the back rooms of neighborhood saloons."

THE GENERAL executive board of the CIO Rubber Workers worked out plans at a meeting in Cleveland last week to block the stepped-up program of anti-union activity by some of the industry's major employers.

Reports from many parts of the country, said Pres. L. S. Buckmaster, indicate a "concerted efforts on the part of many important rubber producers to try to break or at least to cripple our union." Some of them, he charged, have engineered deals with unions outside the CIO in a plot to drive membership from the URW.

Other firms with which the union has long had friendly relationships have begun to stall negotiations and to quibble at length over minor points, he added, while a few have deliberately provoked strikes. He blamed the "campaign of harassment" on the Taft-Hartley Act.

The board session was to be followed by a four-day meeting of all URW staff members at headquarters in Akron—the first in 10 years—for briefing on union objectives and training in new techniques forced by changing conditions.

This week the union's wage policy conference will be held in Cleveland. Delegates representing the full membership of 175,000 workers will draw up a collective bargaining program, based on recommendations of the general executive board, which will be presented to employers as contracts expire or wage reopenings fall due.

PAC Funds Increased By Louisiana CIO

THE ANNUAL convention of the Louisiana State Industrial Union Council, held in New Orleans, amended the constitution to raise dues by 4c a member per month and earmarked the additional income to finance its political action program.

The delegates acted after addresses by Allan S. Haywood, executive vice president of the CIO, and Jack Kroll, director of the CIO Political Action Committee.

Haywood said CIO support of candidates in next fall's election will be based on a desire to elect "a progressive and humanitarian Congress and president."

HE ALSO told the convention that benefits such as hospitalization and pensions rightfully should come from industry rather than government.

"No one wants too much government," he declared, "and American industry should be dynamic enough to recognize the need for humanizing itself."

One of several resolutions passed urged the State Legislature to enact a "little Wagner Act" to protect employes in intrastate commerce, and to set State minimum wage levels at $1 to $1.25 an hour. Another asked Congress to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act and re-enact the original Wagner Act. Congress also was asked for "adequate" funds for education."

Roger L. Travis, of Shreveport, a member of Auto Workers Local 3411, was elected president; Hazel Behenna of Paperworkers Local 1101, vice president, and Frank Marchese, Brewery Workers Local 121, recording secretary. Paul Fourcade was named to another term as secretary-treasurer.

Morris, Fairbank Stand Up To Senate Inquisition

TWO Congressional committees got called down last week by witnesses not afraid to hit back at the growing campaign of intimidation, browbeating and slander that is being conducted behind the protective immunity of certain House and Senate hearings.

Professor John K. Fairbank of Harvard Univ. led off by telling the Senate Internal Security subcommittee, headed by Sen. McCarran (D. Nev.), that its methods have "a disquieting similarity" to those of Russian Communists.

And Newbold Morris, the Republican named by President Truman to investigate corruption in government, lashed out at three fellow Republicans on the Senate Investigations subcommittee by angrily protesting against "insinuations by diseased minds in this chamber."

Fairbank had been kept waiting five months for a chance to appear before the McCarran committee at his own request to refute hearsay testimony by ex-Communist Louis Budenz. Budenz had said that the Harvard professor and Prof. Owen Lattimore of Johns Hopkins University were Communists. Both have vigorously denied it.

One of the nation's foremost experts on modern China, Fairbank told the committee that he agreed wholly that it is necessary to expose Communist subversion. But, he added, the McCarran committee's methods have aired "erroneous" and "untrue" testimony that has damaged innocent persons.

"There is a disquieting similarity," he continued, "between one aspect of the procedures of the Communist Russians and this committee — both have been jumping to conclusions on the basis of hear-say evidence and scattergun accusations."

Fairbank pointed out that the committee treated Budenz, who until recently—and during most of the war years was in the top inner conspiracy of the Communist Party, with utmost respect, while it has bullied his victims and denied them a fair chance to defend themselves."

McCarran's announcement that future witnesses will not be permitted to read prepared denials is apparently the result of the effectiveness of Lattimore's earlier statement, which took him several days to read because of constant committee heckling.

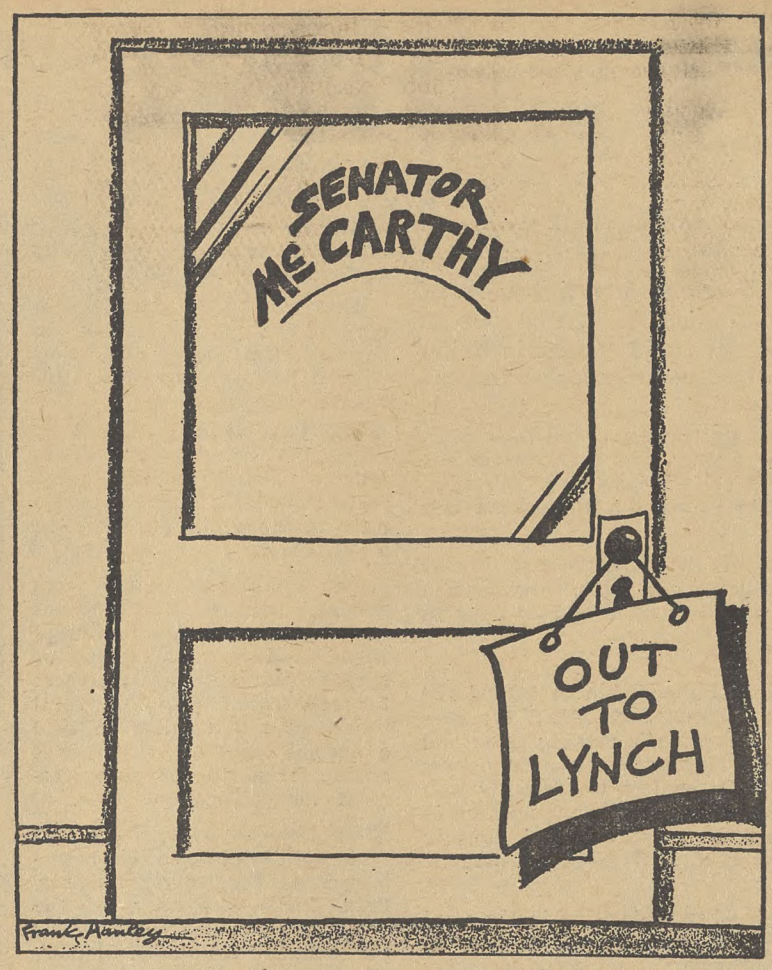
McCarthy also was denounced last week in an exchange with Morris before the Senate Investigating subcommittee.

Accusing McCarthy of going after him "like a dog," Morris told him:

"You have knocked off a lot of characters but you're not going to knock me off."



—By Frank Hanley in The Advance

He, too, likened McCarthy's methods to those of the Communists, saying that he was attempting to "wear me down like they did Cardinal Mindzenty."

After the session, Morris told a press conference that all the time he was in the witness chair "I couldn't help but think of what this new system of character destruction is doing to injure both the spirit and the letter of the Constitution."

The American Bar Association indicated that it also feels a similar concern. It created a "Special Committee on Individual Rights as Affected by National Security" and adopted a resolution referring to the rights of individual citizens as "the cornerstone of our form of government."

The Senate Elections Subcommittee—which for months has been investigating a move to oust McCarthy from the Senate—has put off immediate action on this demand by Sen. Benton (D., Conn.). With the support of the Senate Rules Committee, the election unit is going to ask vote of confidence of the entire Senate.

In this action, Chairman Gillette (D. Ia.) of the Elections Subcommittee branded McCarthy's charges against the Senate unit as "scandalous, intemperate, outrageous, unwarranted, undignified and wholly unjustifiable."

Funds Denied For Wetback Enforcement

THE HOUSE last week passed a bill which won't do much to block the flow of illegal wetbacks into the country from Mexico, then turned around and refused the Immigration Service enough money to enforce it.

The so-called control bill sets up penalties of $2000 in fines and five years' imprisonment for those who recruit, transport or "conceal or harbor" an illegal alien, with employment not to constitute "harboring."

Then it effectively prevents the Immigration Service from doing any detective work by requiring its agents to wear uniform or otherwise identify themselves when searching a ranch or farm without a warrant.

In the Southwest, where the exploitation of illegal Mexican workers has been greatest and where their willingness to work for any wages has beaten down the already depressed rates paid citizens, the gates of farms and ranches are often miles from their living centers.

Thus when an Immigration Service agent identifies himself at a gate, word is passed along and by the time he reaches the ranch or farm house, any illegal employes have been carted miles away by truck—a common practice.

The restriction also effectively offsets another provision giving the agents the right to search without warrants any premises, excluding dwellings, within 25 miles of the Mexican border.

On the enforcement appropriation, the House voted tentatively to deny the service $1,390,000 it had asked for this purpose. The item was cut out of the $68 million third deficiency bill, but is subject to ratification when the entire bill is put to a vote.

Senate Okehs Truman Tax Reform Plan

BEATING BACK a partisan political move by several Dixiegop leaders, the Senate last week approved by a 37-to-53 vote President Truman's reorganization plan to take politics out of the Internal Revenue Bureau.

Hereafter, all tax collectors except the chief of the Revenue Bureau will be chosen through civil service instead of political appointment.

Earlier, a majority of the Senate Government Operations Committee had voted out a resolution to kill the plan. The resolution was submitted by Dixiegop leaders George (D. Ga.) and Millikin (R. Col.) over the strong protests of Sens. Humphrey (D. Minn.), Monroney (D. Okla.) and Moody (D. Mich.).

Heated floor debate followed, during which George, Millikin and other anti-Truman Senators launched bitter personal attacks upon the President. Truman had said that the vote on the reorganization plan would offer a chance to see who is talking about corruption in government and who is doing something about it.

In replying to the Dixiegops' attacks, Humphrey said that the issue was simply "whether we want political patronage politics in the Bureau of Internal Revenue or whether we want the business of that bureau conducted on the basis of competency, skill, technical knowledge, background and experience."

Plant-A-Day Organized By Auto Workers

ON A YEAR-around average, CIO Auto Workers are organizing a new plant each and every working day.

In the past year, the UAW got recognition in more than 300 new plants and set a membership record of more than 1,250,000, according to Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey.

Mazey also reported substantial increases in the financial reserves of the union, with an audit setting net worth at $8.8 million, including a strike fund of $4.6 million.

Union Is Ready To Resume Bargaining

"WE'LL JUST HAVE TO WAIT."—Press and TV correspondents kept a close watch on officers and executive board members of CIO Steelworkers who waited out Wage Stabilization Board recommendations on steel contract. At informal press conference in CIO headquarters on Mar. 20, USA Pres. Philip Murray tells reporters that Steelworker officers and Wage Policy Committee are on a "standby basis." Flanking Murray are Sec.-Treas. David J. McDonald and Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes of the union. WSB recommendations for 17.5c wage increase, union shop and other improvements finally brought steel union meeting late that night. USA agreed to continue working, while talking with steel companies. ACWA Protests Get Congress Moving On Job Layoffs

By FRED ROSS

CONGRESSMEN last week were highly critical of Defense Dept. procurement policies in the clothing industry.

Dissatisfied by the answers given by the department's procurement officers at a hearing called by Rep. Celler (D. N.Y.), they decided to name a committee to examine the policies more closely.

The hearing was called at the request of Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers who charged that the department is letting contracts to non-union "chislers and fly-by-nights" instead of reputable well-established firms.

The union's case was presented by Gladys Dickason, an ACWA vice president and the union's research director. She warned that procurement policies would have to be changed to alleviate the unemployment crisis in the clothing industry, particularly in New York, New Jersey, New England and Pennsylvania.

She cited figures showing high unemployment in the industry. In New York, joblessness was 40% higher in the last quarter of 1951 than in the corresponding period in 1950; in Philadelphia and the Allentown area, unemployment also is high, and in Troy, N.Y., Shamokin and Pottsville, Pa., there are no contracts for Army shirts in plants that have been operating for a number of years.

FACTS ON HAND: Rep. Green (D. Pa.), left, tells Army Quartermaster Gen. George A. Horkan that he will give facts on Defense Dept. jobs farmed out by the successful bidder to subcontractors because he was not equipped to do the job on time. Others in photo are Rep. Morano (R. Conn.) and ACWA Vice Pres. Gladys Dickason.

Celler, who was unable to be at the hearing because of an important meeting of the House Rules Committee, said he will ask about nine senators and representatives, to serve on the probing committee.

It was also decided at the hearing that the committee could recommend changes in the law governing procurement policies, which Major Gen. George A. Horkan, Quartermaster General, said would be necessary.

A score of congressmen, including Sens. Lehman (D. N.Y.) and Ives (R N.Y.), were at the meeting which also was attended by about an equal number of representatives of the Defense Dept. procurement agencies and other branches of the government concerned with the problem.

Many of the representatives came from the area affected by clothing industry unemployment and their critical questions and remarks showed that they had been giving serious thought to the problem.

Rep. Green (D. Pa.) asked Gen. Horkan whether contracts were ever let to firms, who sublet the work because the successful bidders were unable to do the job on time.

Rep. Roosevelt (D. N.Y.) said that a high-ranking officer at the chief procurement office of the Defense Dept. in New York City said that if there is $500,000 to spend, $400,000 would go to the low bidder and $100,000 would be awarded through negotiated bids to aid a depressed area.

A remark by Rep. Seely-Brown (R. Conn.) that perhaps procurement would be better handled by a civilian agency brought John Small, chairman of the Munitions Board, to his feet with a defense of the present system of procurement.

Rep. Rhodes (D. Pa.) called attention to a bill he introduced to bar from interstate commerce goods made in rent-free plants. Such plants are being offered by southern communities to lure industries from the North.

Mrs. Anna M. Rosenberg, assistant Secretary of Defense, said that the Defense Dept. was "keenly and sympathetically aware" of the unemployment problem in the clothing industry. She said that the problem had been brought to the attention of Defense Secy. Robert A. Lovett last September by Potofsky.

Lovett ordered a speed-up in clothing procurement to help tide the industry over the "off season," but the problem was not solved. The bids came in from all areas and were "lower than expected," she said.

Mrs. Rosenberg said that the department had no choice but to award the contracts to the lowest bidder.

Army Secy. Frank Pace, Jr., attended the hearing but did not participate in the discussion.

Arthur S. Flemming, assistant to Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson, called attention to the series of meetings to decide what is to be done about unemployment in the textile, shoe and apparel industries.

Flemming is chairman of the Inter-Agency Surplus Manpower Committee which will conduct the hearings. In ordering that contracts be awarded in high unemployment areas to contractors who equal the prices offered by the low bidders, Wilson exempted these industries.

Miss Dickason concluded the hearing by saying:

"We do not have to await the hearings to meet the problem. Enforcement of the Defense Dept.'s agencies own regulations would go far to solving the problem."

'GOP Offers Nominations For Sale'

JACK KROLL, national director of the CIO Political Action Committee, said last week the Republican nomination for President "is 'For Sale' to the highest bidder."

And he predicted Sen. Taft will be the high bidder.

Speaking at the Cincinnati Joint Board of the CIO Clothing Workers, of which he is manager, Kroll said:

"If Taft will have to buy election support and drum up artificial sentiment at the Republican convention, he will probably do that, and I think he'll get away with it."

Whatever the status of the GOP nomination, Kroll added, he didn't think the Presidency "can be bought in the same manner."

IN ANOTHER comment on the '52 campaign, Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president and director of organization and councils, strongly condemned Taft.

Speaking in Denver, Haywood said Taft "never labored a day in his life. He was born with a silver spoon in his mouth. He couldn't be expected to understand the struggle for human betterment and security."

In Massachusetts, three CIO officials are among delegates-at-large to the Democratic convention. J. William Belanger, state CIO president, was named delegate, while Salvatore Camelio, state CIO secretary-treasurer, and Edward Doolan. CIO Textile Workers area director in Fall River, were named alternates.

NAM Tears A Gap In Lobby Law

A SPECIAL three-man federal court in Washington last week blasted a hole in the Lobby Act wide enough for the National Association of Manufacturers to drive an injunction through.

It ruled several key sections of the act invalid and in the opinion of some observers to all practical purposes has ended effective control of lobbying activities. The Dept. of Justice will appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court.

The special court held six sections of the act unconstitutional. Five, Sections 303 to 307, require that all persons who seek "to influence, directly or indirectly, the passage of any legislation by the Congress" and who use contributions for that purpose, to report them to the clerk of the House.

These clauses were thrown out on the ground that they contravene the due process guarantee of the 5th Amendment "in failing to define the offense with sufficient precision and to set forth an ascertainable standard of guilt."

The other, Section 310, is the penalty provision. The special court ruled it illegal because it prohibits anyone found guilty of violating the law from attempting to influence legislation for a period of three years. Such a proviso, it held, violates the 1st Amendment by interfering with free speech, free assembly and the right to petition the government for redress of grievances.

The NAM, which started the suit in 1948, was given a permanent injunction prohibiting the government from prosecuting it for alleged violation of the act. The court was composed of Judges Alexander Holtzoff and Henry A. Schweinhaut of the District of Columbia District Court and Justice Wilbur K. Miller of the U. S. Court of Appeals for the District.

Sen. Monroney (D. Okla.), who helped draft the original law, said he will immediately draft new legislation to meet the court's objections.

'So Long, Good Neighbor'

AT A TIME when political tides are running high, we'd like to address a brief and non-political message to a very good neighbor, the President of the United States.

For CIO's neighbors, the Harry S. Trumans, are in the process of moving back to the White House from temporary quarters at Blair House. And Blair House is back-to-back—just 50 feet or so—across the alley from CIO's national headquarters.

For nearly three years, while the White House has been rebuilt, we have stared across the alley at our presidential neighbors—in good times and in bad.

We've known the excitement of a harebrained and dastardly assassination attempt, after which our common alley swarmed with cops and secret service men.

We've been able to see, through the lattice work on the garage roof, the hats of the ladies when Mrs. Truman entertained at tea in the back yard, and the shine of silk toppers at diplomatic receptions.

We've watched the development of the television age as workmen put up not one, but three TV antennas, on the presidential roof. We've killed spare moments, as sidewalk superintendents, the day the new awning was placed into position on the garage door that faces the alley just under our window.

We've waved, and our kids have waved, to the President as his limousine has swung up the alley at the end of a hard day's work at the White House, and been pleased with the friendly greeting from our Chief Executive.

Most of all, perhaps, we've been impressed with the security precautions, the split-second timing that must necessarily dominate the comings and goings of the friendly man who carries the burdens of the Presidency of the United States. During a period of tremendous world problems, of hard military and diplomatic decisions and super-human defense efforts, we have been proud of our good neighbor, the President.

From across the alley from Blair House, we shall miss him, the man with the doughty smile and the cocky courage. We think he will deserve the greater comfort, the greater space and freedom of movement that the restored White House and its big yard provide.

So, as Harry S. Truman starts to move back to 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, we feel like saying "so long, good neighbor."

WSB Comes Up With Steel Plan At Last Minute

THE WAGE Stabilization Board, after two dramatic midnight sessions, last week recommended that the CIO Steelworkers and the country's basic steel industry settle their contract dispute on the basis of a 23c an hour package, the union shop and an 18-month agreement.

The wage recommendation would give some 650,000 members of the union a general wage increase of 17.5c an hour in three installments, and slightly more than 5c in collateral items.

In two equally dramatic late-hour meetings, the Steelworkers' executive board and its Wage-Policy Committee voted to accept the recommendations.

They also voted to heed the request of Nathan P. Feinsinger, WSB chairman, to postpone the strike which had been scheduled for on or after Mar. 24, and to give all employers 96 hours notice of a walkout if negotiations have not been completed by Apr. 4.

The WSB recommendations accepted some of the union's proposals, rejected others, and accepted still others in part. A number were referred back to the parties for further negotiation, including the important guaranteed annual wage issue. Some of those referred back bore WSB recommendations, others did not.

"It is obvious that the WSB has not by any means granted all the union's demands," said the USA Wage-Policy Committee in a statement.

"IT IS equally obvious that the WSB has not accepted the steel companies' reactionary attempt to say 'no' to all of our proposals and to refuse to grant improvements of any kind."

The statement also said:

"We express the complete readiness of the United Steelworkers of America to resume negotiations with the steel companies, in the hope and belief that a satisfactory settlement can be reached on the basis of the Board's proposals by Apr. 4.

"We propose that to this end the steel companies meet with us in continuous negotiations beginning not later than Monday, Mar. 24."

There was no immediate reaction from the steel industry itself, but industry members of the WSB strongly condemned the proposed settlement.

The WSB recommendations would give the steel industry's workers a general wage increase of 12.5c an hour effective on the expiration dates of the old contracts—generally Jan. 1, 1952—or on the appropriate wage reopening dates; 2.5c in July, and the remaining 2.5c on Jan. 1, 1953.

The recommendation for the union shop was returned to the parties to permit them to work out "the exact form and condition."

The WSB also proposed that the industry cut the north-south wage differential, at present 10c a hour, to 5c; that it give its workers their first paid holidays—six of them—with double time if worked; that three-week vacations be allowed after 15 years of service instead of the present 25 years, and that USA local unions be given "adequate seniority lists which shall be kept reasonably up to date."

It recommended that time and one-quarter be paid for all Sunday work as such beginning Jan. 1, 1953.

It sent back to the union and the employers the USA demand for a guaranteed annual wage, "with a view to reaching a mutual understanding by the time of the next negotiation," and recommended that the parties use the "services and advice" of a neutral party or parties.

It also returned for further negotiation the union's demands for severance pay and a reporting allowance, with a recommendation that they be considered in connection with the annual wage.

It sent the question of incentive rates back for further negotiations, with the opinion of the special WSB panel that conducted public hearings in the case to assist them, and recommended that the union withdraw its demand for settlement of long-standing differences regarding technological demotions.

ALL OTHER issues were also referred back to the parties.

The finale — the USA Wage Policy Committee's acceptance of the WSB proposals and its vote to delay the strike—came at 2 a.m. on Mar. 21, the climax of two tension-ridden days.

Things began shaping up the afternoon of Mar. 19, when the WSB began consideration of a recommendation worked out by the public members.

For most of the time, the labor members were in one room and the industry members in another, with Feinsinger and the other public members shuttling back and forth between them.

From time to time all three sections met for discussion and debate—much of it fiery, short-tempered and bitter.

The sessions ended abruptly just before 7 a.m. on Mar. 20 when Feinsinger, still weakened from auto accident injuries suffered last summer, collapsed from exhaustion. A doctor found him not to be in serious condition, and another meeting was scheduled for 2 p.m.

Meantime, that morning members of the steel union's executive board and its Wage Policy Committee were waiting around Washington for the WSB to act. Several meetings were scheduled tentatively, but all had to be called off because there was not yet anything to consider.

At 2 p.m. the WSB began its meetings, the labor and industry members huddled separately and the public members again shuttling back and forth between them.

Finally, about 5 p.m., they all got together to vote on what Feinsinger described as "a darn good settlement." For six hours the public members tried to sell the two other sides on a unanimous recommendation.

Their effort failed. But shortly before 10 p.m. a majority agreement was reached, with the labor and public members voting together on most issues, and the industry and public members on a few.

By 10:30 p.m. Arthur J. Goldberg, general counsel for the Steelworkers and the CIO, who had been standing by at WSB headquarters, had the recommendation in final form.

He rushed them to USA officers who were waiting in Pres. Philip Murray's hotel room, and all went promptly to Washington's Hotel Roosevelt, where both the executive board and the Wage Policy Committee were waiting with diminishing patience.

The executive board went into session about 11 p.m. By midnight it had acted—to advise the Wage Policy Committee that the WSB recommendations be accepted and that the strike be delayed.

The committee huddled shortly after midnight on Mar. 21. It considered each recommendation carefully and in the light of the union's original 22 demands. Shortly after 2 a.m. it announced its decision—and the tension, at last, was broken.

THE THREE CIO members of the WSB all were present when the decision was reached. They were Pres. Joseph Beirne of the Communications Workers, Vice Pres. John Livingston of the Auto Workers, and Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers.

"Some of the recommendations are fair, some could have been improved," they said, "and the CIO members opposed still others as unsatisfactory.

"We believe the demands of the Steelworkers are completely justified. We also feel, however, that this series of recommendations offers a solid foundation upon which the parties should be able to work out a sound, fair, honest collective bargaining agreement that will benefit the workers, the industry and the entire nation.

The industry members issued an angry statement terming the recommendations "unfair and inequitable," and the wage recommendations "absurd" and "entirely antagonistic to the principles of stabilization."

Digest Of WSB Steel Proposals

The recommendations of the Wage Stabilization Board to settle the basic steel dispute were:

A general wage increase of 17/5c an hour effective as follows: 12.5c on expiration of the old contract (Jan. 1, 1952 in most cases) or on the effective reopening date; 2.5c six months later, and 2.5c six months after that.

The union shop, the exact form to be negotiated. An 18-month contract dated Jan. 1, 1952.

Reductions of the present southern wage differential of 10c an hour to 5c, with other differentials involved in the union's demands to be negotiated.

Increase in shift differentials from the present 4c to 6c for the second shift, and from the present 6c to 9c on the third shift.

Six paid holidays, with double time if worked.

Three weeks vacation after 15 years instead of the present 25 years.

Time and one-quarter for all Sunday work as such beginning Jan. 1, 1953.

Local unions to be given adequate seniority lists kept reasonably up to date, the details to be worked out in negotiations; other seniority issues referred back to the parties without recommendation.

The guaranteed annual wage to be subject to further negotiation "with a view to reaching mutual understanding by the time of the next negotiation," and with the union and the industry to use a third party to assist; severance pay and reporting allowance to be considered simultaneously.

Agreement by the parties on premium pay for irregular rescheduling of individual hours contrary to the contract, and for irregular changes in individual starting and quitting times! adoption of the principle of avoiding split shifts, with some form of premium for individuals forced to work split shifts.

The union withdrew its demands on the contracting out of work and on technological demotions.

Further negotiation on incentives, with an opinion by public members of the WSB special panel that conducted hearings in the case to assist the parties.

No change in provisions governing local working conditions, management rights and job structure.

All remaining issued were referred back for negotiation without recommendation.

Steel Text: We're Ready To Meet In Continuous Negotiations

Following is text of a statement adopted by the CIO Steelworkers International Wage Policy Committee, meeting in Washington last week:

THE WAGE STABILIZATION Board has now issued its report and recommendations in the steel dispute.

These recommendations accept some of the more important of the Union's proposals, both economic and non-economic. Other Union proposals which we believe are right and just are rejected by the WSB.

Some of our proposals are accepted in part and rejected in part. Still others of our proposals are referred back to the Union and the companies for further bargaining without any recommendations by the WSB.

It is obvious that the WSB has not by any means granted all of the Union's demands. It is equally obvious that the WSB has not accepted the steel companies' reactionary attempt to say "no" to all of our proposals and to refuse to grant improvements of any kind, economic or non-economic.

After thorough study of the Report and Recommendations of the WSB, the International Wage-Policy Committee of the United Steelworkers of America, CIO, is convinced that they can serve as a basis for the negotiation of satisfactory agreements between the United Steelworkers of America, CIO, and the various steel companies. We are ready to enter upon such negotiations.

The United Steelworkers of America, CIO, throughout the course of this lengthy dispute with the steel companies has endeavored constantly to serve the welfare not only of its own members but of all people of American during this period of great international crisis.

This Union—beset as its members are by pressing needs for wage revisions and redress of their other grievances, and despite the continued unwillingness of the companies to engage in good faith in collective bargaining with the Union—has on these occasions, at the request of the President of the United States, extended its strike deadlines.

We have been called upon once again for postponement, this time by the Chairman of the WSB. He has proposed that "no later than three days after receipt" of the recommendations of the Wage Stabilization Board, the Union and the companies "enter into collective bargaining negotiations with a view to reach a settlement and with the understanding that the steel companies and the Steelworkers will continue work and production and that if by April 4 a mutually satisfactory agreement has not been reached and the Union intends to strike thereafter, it will give 96 hours prior written notice to the companies."

After full and careful consideration, the International Wage Policy Committee has determined to comply with this request of the Chairman of the WSB.

We express the complete readiness of the United Steelworkers of America to resume negotiations with the steel companies, in the hope and belief that a satisfactory settlement can be reached on the basis of the Board's proposals by April 4.

We propose that to this end the steel companies meet with us in continuous negotiations beginning not later than Monday, March 24, 1952.

Worthwhile Probe

The problem of protecting the rights of free democratic unionism in America, while at the same time checking the spread of Communist infiltration in labor, is one that requires serious and constant consideration. Thus, the Senate Labor Sub-committee headed by liberal Sen. Hubert Humphrey (D. Minn.) is performing a valuable service in its current hearings on this subject.

Senator Humphrey has long since proven himself a steadfast friend of labor. He recognizes that a blunderbuss approach, which would do more harm to decent unions than to the Communists, will not provide a democratic solution and will in fact harm the national welfare.

Thus, the Humphrey hearings are providing a forum for serious and thoughtful discussion of both facts and suggested remedies.

The remains of the Communist-dominated bloc of unions in this country are not large. They do, however, hold contracts in some plants of very considerable strategic importance.

The CIO, as President Murray pointed out in a letter to Sen. Humphrey a few weeks ago, recognizes the problem but does not believe that special legislation is the answer. If there is any demonstrable weakness in our present sabotage and espionage laws, those statutes should, of course, be strengthened. The Communists, of course, are fighting both legislation and security regulations, to save the skin of their stooge unions, and they have attempted—with more noise than logic—to smear Sen. Humphrey in the process.

Obviously, such propaganda is nonsense. The CIO fully recognizes the value of Sen. Humphrey's investigation, and feels confident it will add to our understanding of how to protect and strengthen democratic trade unions from attack or infiltration by any outside group seeking control and perversion of American labor's program and policies.

More Of The Same

Almost unnoticed, the Senate Banking Committee is going through the motion of hearings on the Defense Production Act and the requests of President Truman for a much stronger law.

"Going through the motions" describes the situation, because committee members are talking more about decontrols—that is, raising high prices still higher—than about doing anything effective to stop inflation.

Day after day, representatives of the National Association of Manufacturers, Chamber of Commerce, Farm Bureau, meat packers, food processors, wholesalers and retailers have been parading before the committee, urging what CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey last week called the "political trickery" of decontrol.

The plain facts are that the cost of living is at an all time high, that it has gone up almost every month since Congress voted the present fraudulent law, and that the real wages and living standards of workers are going down.

And more of the same is in prospect. If you don't like that prospect, why don't you tell it to your congressman?

At Stake—At The Stake!

Why America Is Suspect

Below are excerpts from a letter to The Commonweal, Catholic weekly magazine, commenting on points raised in an earlier letter on the Negro "question" by a Houston, Tex., correspondent. The author, Rev. Leon Sullivan, a Franciscan missionary, is a brother of James Sullivan, aide to Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers. Rev. Sullivan was brutally mistreated while a prisoner of the Chinese Reds and was in a U.S. hospital for months before recovering.

I AM A Northerner by birth, spent about 12 years in China, where I lived two years under communism, was thrown into jail and finally given one of communism's famous "public trials" in which I was condemned as an "enemy of the people" to perpetual banishment from the land and provided with an armed escort for the five-day trip to the Hong Kong border.

I landed in America last September, and I am now (for one month) the pastor of a little Negro mission in the southeast corner of Arkansas.

I have not been living in the South long enough to justify a know-all attitude.

But my observation tells me that "inequality and injustice" is the "atmosphere in which the Southern Negro daily lives." He is pushed to the rear of buses, denied entrance to restaurants, confined (Crucified Christ forgive us!) to the rear pews of the church, stuck into inadequate, overcrowded wards in hospitals, restricted to ramshackle, ill-equipped schools that are very poorly staffed.

I agree that the "Negro deserves better than sentimentalizing"; I agree that we should not put him on a pedestal merely because he is colored; I agree that the solution consists in "seeing the Negro as another child of God."

Practically, however, as far as the Negro is concerned, that means, among other things, that you let his children study in the school of his choice, that you let him sit, like you, where he pleases in a bus; eat, like you, in any restaurant in which he can pay the bill; kneel, like you, in any pew in which he feels he can follow the Mass with the greatest devotion.

Above all, the test of your tolerance and Christian character does not consist in how calmly you throw a Negro into jail for life, but in how calmly you let him sit next to you in the bus, kneel next to you in church, sit at your table in a restaurant, occupy the bed next to yours in a hospital ward, or in how calmly you let his child sit behind yours in school.

Around here, white people don't do those things calmly. They don't do them at all.

It's time we were honest with ourselves and took a firm stand on principle. Too long have we played with expediency and opportunism, and compromised one of the most fundamental doctrines of our Christian Faith.

We had better face the problem we have as Americans, too. In the two years I spent under communism, I became convinced that the Communist plan for the conquest of America revolves largely around our so-called race question! If we don't solve that question, and solve it quickly in an American, Christian manner, the Communists will solve it for us. And I am quite sure my white Southern neighbors won't like the Communist solution. I didn't. The Communists don't make any color distinctions.

First-hand observation in Asia tells me that in that dark-skinned world the dominant white-skinned class in America is suspect because of the oppression and injustice which the dark-skinned people of our own country suffer at our hands.

Just recently, a friend told me that last November, James Carey of the CIO told him that he (Carey) and the other labor people along with the State Dept. folk "were astounded when the labor groups of Asia told them that the formation of a strong right-wing, pro-America-Democracy bloc was impossible with strong Asiatic 'dark-skinned' ethnocentrism on the rise. These labor groups of Asia said they could not feature any common ground with America because of what they called our 'national hatred' of the darker-skinned people of our own country."

Moreover, I suppose my white Southern neighbors love the freedoms and liberties they enjoy as white-skinned Americans. I hope they don't take them for granted.

Half the world is now without those freedoms. They can be taken from us, too. And, with the world as it is today, you cannot expect to enjoy your own liberties and freedoms for very long, if at the same time you deny them to a large segment of our population.

Dixiegops Scheme To Kill Rent Lids, Public Housing

HUMAN SIDE OF HOUSING: A Los Angeles family of 12 (eight of them shown here) lived in this three-room ramshackle "house." It had no hot-water nor bath, and members of the family bathed at a relative's home.

THE SAME FAMILY is now living in a four-bedroom public housing project where the children have plenty of room to play as the photo shows. The National Association of Real Estate Boards halted additional projects.

BY MILTON PLUMB

EGGED on by the high-pressured National Association of Real Estate Boards and other landlord construction industry lobbies, Dixiegops running the 82nd Congress last week threw their strength into a drive to kill rent control and emasculate the public housing program.

By resorting to behind-the-scenes maneuvers and parliamentary trickery, the Congressional foes of rent control and housing won a distinct advantage.

In one quick swoop, taking only a matter of moments, the Housing Appropriations Committee cut the authorized public housing program from 50,000 to 25,000 units. Then the House slashed it to 5000.

1. The Senate Banking Committee gave foes of rent control a full day of hearings; at the same time it denied supporters of rent control a chance to testify.

2. The House Appropriations Committee assumed legislative functions in voting to reduce the number of public housing units authorized. In doing so, it acted with almost certainty that the Dixiegop-dominated Rules Committee would waive points of order involved in such an action.

3. The rider to the Independent Offices Appropriations Bill, which makes the cut, changes the basic intent of the Housing Act of 1949 by reducing the total number of housing units to 25,000 for each succeeding year and not just for the next fiscal year to which the appropriations measure applies.

4. A vote on the measure was scheduled for Friday—a day when the so-called "Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday Club," consisting of congressmen from near-by states usually return home. Such absenteeism enables the Dixiegop coalition to function most effectively on Mondays and Fridays.

The hand of the real estate lobby was also evident in cuts which the committee made in administrative budgets for the several housing agencies. These were slashed 25% or more. The Public Housing Administration alone was cut $1.5 million below this year's budget.

Although over 125,000 urgently needed units had been scheduled for construction under the public housing program, President Truman's budget reduced the number that actually could be undertaken to 75,000.

Lobbyists Win In Indianapolis

The landlord-realtor-big builder lobby against public housing has won a second important victory.

By a 6-to-3 count, the Indianapolis City Council tore up the local Housing Authority's agreement with the federal Public Housing Administration. The Indianapolis program called for the construction of seven low-rental projects to house 1500 families.

CIO and AFL spokesmen unsuccessfully sought to defeat the anti-housing move, with Pres. Miles Lloyd, Jr., urging the councilmen to "take a day off and go out and look at the slums. Don't let the slums of Indianapolis be a breeding ground for Communists," he warned.

The PHA announced it will sue Indianapolis to recover $257,000 in federal funds advanced toward the project.

The House slash thus comes at a time when even the total program requested is woefully inadequate to meet current public housing needs.

The full implications of the House Appropriation Committee's action can only be understood in the light of the big-moneyed, nationwide drive on public housing that the NAREB, the National Association of Home Builders and other real estate lobbies have been conducting for several years.

Besides their outright drive to either kill or cut the program, the realtors are presently seeking to persuade Congress to take away the tax-free status of the bonds issued by local housing authority programs.

The chief local fight at present is in Los Angeles. There the lobby has persuaded the city council to reverse itself and block a 10,000 unit, $110 million project which it previously authorized and which the housing authority has been trying to start for the past 18 months.

Since the Public Housing Administration has already loaned the city $12 million to start the project, the issue is now facing a showdown in the California Supreme Court. The decision will have an effect on the public housing program now under way in 989 communities throughout the nation.

Supporters of public housing in Los Angeles point out that the attempt of the real estate lobby to kill the project is nothing more than a land grab. They contend that the realtors hope, if the federal government is forced to foreclose, to buy up for a fraction of its value the hundreds of acres of land already purchased by the city authority.

Although the real estate lobby got its way in persuading the Senate Banking Committee to hear only its side of the argument on rent control, its chief wheelhorse, the National Association of Real Estate Boards, was given an uncomfortable time by Sen. Moody (D. Mich.) when it testified last week.

MOODY got NAREB Spokesman Harry J. Fitzgerald to go on record that he thought 20% of income was the "fair amount for rent. Then he read BLS figures showing that the percentage of income for families earning between $2000 and $3000 averaged 58% in new dwellings in Chicago and was 25% or higher in seven other cities included in the survey.

Even Sen. Capehart (R. Ind.) exclaimed "That doesn't make sense!"

But Fitzgerald's roughest time came when Moody then read to him a passage from a text published by the NAREB on the principles of real estate management showing how to bring about a 50% boost in rents in times of housing shortage. Those principles, he reminded Fitzgerald, are being taught in 127 university courses under NAREB sponsorship.

It's Workers Who Pay A Hefty Tax Subsidy For Slums

BY IRVING FAGAN
For Labor Press Associated

"IN THE PAST 20 years," said Joseph W. Lund, "the private housing industry has tremendously improved the quality of its product."

As president of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, one of our most potent lobbies, he was patting the industry on the back for the "superior housing" made available by private industry.

But almost at the same time, a Congressional committee was announcing that complaints of shoddy building have been coming in by the thousands from former servicemen.

The group, headed by Rep. A. Rains (D. Ala.), said it has barely scratched the surface in hearings in northern New Jersey and New York, and has now moved into Texas and Oklahoma. It is planning to look into Detroit and Chicago, where conditions are reported as bad as or worse than those already uncovered. Said Rains:

"There is a vast amount of the shoddiest and poorest construction I have ever seen in my life. Lots of veterans are being sorely cheated because of lack of inspection and because of fly-by-night builders."

Lund, of course, took a dig at government housing, especially low-rent housing, declaring a "few chosen tenants are picked to get a rent discount at the expense of the taxpayers."

That sneer in many communities has scared the citizens into voting down proposals for public housing, and has brought a rash of bills in various legislatures (inspired by the real estate lobby, of course) to compel referendums on slum clearance projects.

The fact is, of course, that taxpayers now pay a heavy subsidy for slums. Who benefits? The real estate men. They make excellent profits from owning, managing and selling slum properties.

Take New Jersey. There the taxpayers contribute $38 million a year in hidden subsidy to the slums, according to Irving Rosenberg, vice chairman of the Newark Housing Authority.

There are more than 163,000 substandard dwellings in New Jersey's cities. A 1945 survey in Newark showed every slum dwelling costs the local government $230 a year for health, welfare, police and other services not required by standard housing. That's an average of $32.76 from the pockets of each of the state's 1,150,000 urban workers.

According to Rosenberg, a wage-earner making $4000 a year and with three dependents would contribute for public housing just 17c a year out of his income tax. And for the 17c, New Jersey would get 10,301 modern, low-rent dwellings. Said Rosenberg:

"Public housing is the taxpayer's best buy. Private enterprise has never been able to build low-rent housing. It has no plans for doing so. The only aim of the realtors is to prevent the building of low-rent public housing because it threatens their profits from slums."

CIO Farthest North: It Sure Gets Cold

EXECUTIVE board of Steelwork

By GERVASE N. LOVE

THE ROAD SIGN across the street from the hotel said 45 miles to Toronto—and it pointed almost due south. By rail, from the depot down the street, the route was some 30 miles longer. Most of it follows the highway south.

The sign at the rail terminal bore the name of the city—Timmins. It's the metropolis of Northern Ontario, the Canadian province that ranges from the icy waters of Hudson Bay to the Great Lakes, and it's the largest city for a thousand miles or so of sparsely settled forest, water and rock on the east and the west.

The Mettagami River, which touches its western border, meanders northeast to James Bay—the watery "finger" at the southern tip of Hudson Bay that sportive whales sometimes use for an aquatic playground. Moosonee, on James Bay, is only 160 miles away.

It's NORTH, all right. There are cities and towns farther north where there are CIO members, but no place so close to Santa Claus' igloo has them in such quantities. And few places anywhere, it might be interjected, have 'em of such quality.

Timmins is the capitol of the Porcupine Camp, that fabulously rich area dappled with gold which has yielded uncounted millions to mine owners. Its population is about 30,000. Another 10,000 or so live in the rest of the camp and on its outskirts.

And 5000 of them are union members—all but about 150 in the CIO. Most of the rest belong to unions of the Canadian Congress of Labor, with which CIO locals in Canada are affiliated.

There are an even dozen gold mines in a 14-mile area. The Steelworkers have all of them organized except one — Dome, where the nucleus of the working force is made up of miners who had to leave England for scabbing in the 1926 general strike.

USA Has 10 Pacts

In the 11 other mines the Steelworkers have about 4000 members. With 10 of them it has contracts—and they're not union shop contracts. The eleventh, Hollinger, is the only mine within Timmins' city limits. It flows out over the countryside from Gillies Lake, on the eastern side to the city.

It employes about 1000 men. They've been fighting for three disheartening years —since certification of their union—for their first contract. They had a strike last summer, but they are such good union members that more than 900 paid dues for February to USA Local 4305.

It gets cold in Timmins. Down to 40 and 50 below at times, but never too cold to kill unionism. There is plenty of snow, too. Sometimes it blows in on the heels of a furious blizzard and piles high; other times it drifts in softly as waltzing sweethearts on a dance floor, but it never buries the spirit of the workers.

The Steelworkers dominate the Porcupine area so far as numbers are concerned, but other CIO unions are just as active on a smaller scale. The Communications Workers have a local in Timmins, one of four, with a total of a little more than 400 members, that cover a thousand bleak miles.

Variety Of Unions

Two locals of the Brewery Workers have contracts with three plants. The Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union has organized nine groups ranging from cooperatives to lumber yards.

There are CCL locals, too. The National Union of Civic Utilitiy Employes, for instance, represents the public works departments of Timmins and of Tisdale township, four miles away. The United Office & Professional Workers—no relation to a late and unlamented union of the same name kicked out of the CIO for its communist control—bargains for the office workers employed by Timmins and Tisdale township. A directly chartered local—similar to a CIO local industrial union—represents many Timmins dairy plant workers.

The guiding genius behind all this activity is Leo S. "Buck" Behie, a stalwart six-foot plus former semi-pro baseball player, the Steelworkers' area supervisor, a man with a family of nine young children and a gracious wife. Instead of preening himself with pride over organized labor's accomplishments in his bailiwick, it's all he can do to control his frustration at the thought of so many unorganized workers.

Assist For AFL

Behie does practically all the negotiating for miles around, even for an occasional AFL union. He operates on a theory that's simplicity itself: If wages and working conditions in the community don't improve, his Steelworkers are bogged down.

"Two years ago, when we first organized the Town Hall office workers," said Ronald Doucet, secretary of the CCL-UOPWA local, "the top girl got $115 a month. Now the lowest-paid girl gets $125 a month. Salaries would be the same now as then except for the Steelworkers' staff."

The staff, in addition to Behie, consists of Al Brunet, a case-hardened organizer and negotiator and a veteran of union work among his fellow French Canadians.

Gold-Plating Job

Timmins was named for the Timmins family, active for a half-century in Canadian metal mining.

Jules Timmins, head of the family and president of the Hollinger mine, took the silver millions he inherited from his father, the late Henry T. Timmins, and joined his uncle, the late Noah T. Timmins, in developing gold mines. One of his friends once quipped, according to a recent article in a Canadian magazine, that "he was born with a silver spoon in his mouth and has spent a lifetime gold plating it."

He has large interests in the new Labrador iron ore deposits, in brokerage firms, in steel, copper, hotels, insurance and entertainment. He is the father of nine children and one of Canada's most ardent hunters and fishermen.

Deep Diggings

It's axiomatic among the miners of Canada that "gold is where you find it."

In the Porcupine Camp it's usually far below the surface—sometimes 7000 feet or more. It's hidden in stone — soapstone, quartz rock, porphyry — that has to be drilled, blasted, broken, crushed, pulverized, treated with various chemicals and put through presses under pressure before it yields its hidden treasure.

Some of the ore in the Timmins area is high grade, most of it low grade. Sometimes a ton of ore after treatment gives an amount of gold about the size of the eraser at the end of a lead pencil. The yield of the ore determines how deep a shaft will be sunk; if the return isn't large enough it doesn't pay to go too far down.

The establishment of free, democratic trade unionism in the gold fields was no job for panty-waists. It's a dramatic story of sacrifices and double-crosses, of broken skulls and stubborn unity, that can only lose in the recounting. It's one of those stories that had to be lived to be appreciated.

Just where it begins is a little uncertain. Maybe it was back just after World War I, when Tom McNeil, blacklisted for his union activity in the steel mill at Sydney, N. S., scanned a map of Canada and found that Timmins was the only place in the country with a labor member of Parliament.

Union Pioneer

So to Timmins he went. Quickly he became involved in organizing with the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers. In the early 20's the Workers Party was strong in Northern Ontario. McNeil, after expressing disagreement with one of its aims at an open meeting, suddenly found himself a member. Immediately it was impressed upon him that its strength lay in its discipline.

In 1925, he was elected a delegate to the national convention in Toronto. There the name was changed to the Communist Party of Canada.

"I lost interest," he recalled dryly. "I was dropped a few months later for nonpayment of dues."

McNeil has spent the years since then opposing communism and trying to get legitimate trade unionism established in the area. Maybe that was the start.

Or maybe it was some four or five years ago, when the miners finally got fed up with the "sweetheart" contracts, unkept promises and constant agitation of the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers—the same union expelled from the CIO because of its Communist domination.

The union had channelled all members from all mines into local 241, with headquarters in Timmins. There weren't many members, and they didn't pay dues very often. The MMSW, they finally became convinced, didn't want a strong union.

Behie was the highest-paid international staff representative in the area. He quit his job and went to work for the budding insurgents at $20 a week—some weeks. Brunet was vice president of the local. They and others defied the international and a veritable donnybrook was touched off.

Mine, Mill moved in a small army of organizers headed by former Pres. Reid Robinson himself. There was a series of fights for the union hall, with local or provincial police occasionally taking over just to keep the building intact.

Old friends became violent enemies and swapped blows on the streets. The families of the free union leaders were intimidated and threatened. They themselves were smeared and maligned as only the Communists can do it. The line was drawn right down the middle and there were no neutrals—you were either for the Commies or against 'em.

But they kept on fighting, fighting, fighting. They met in each others' homes. They organized in church basements when the pastors weren't looking. They preached honest unionism wherever they went.

With empty pockets, they rented a hall across the street from the MMSW hall and pledged themselves individually to pay $200 a month rent. Robinson threw the local into receivership. Local 241 meetings became secret—and not even a petition signed by 400 members for an open meeting had any effect.

"Eventually we built up an organization that just swamped Mine Mill," recalled Larche, who has been fighting the Communists for 20 years. "We were too many for them. We knew we needed a union, and we knew that Mine Mill wasn't it. We're proud of the one we have now.

"We think our success in fighting them down into the ground was a factor in starting both the CCL and the CIO to get rid of them."

'Political Concentration Camp' Bills Defeated In New York

By BERNARD RASKIN

LABOR in New York last week won its battle against "an effort to put workers into a political concentration camp."

The State Legislature wound up its regular session without acting on the Travia-Erwin bills drastically curtailing political action by unions.

Defeat of the bills was hailed by Louis Hollander, state CIO president, who called them "concentration camp" measures. The victory, he said, "would not have been achieved except for the vigorous and determined efforts of thousands of CIO members throughout the state."

The victory ended a month-long batle between labor and an undercover coalition of big city political bosses and assorted reactionaries. At stake was labor's right to participate in political action.

The Travia-Erwin "package" of three bills would have:

- Made it a penal offense for unions to use their funds for PAC.
- Made it a penal offense for union officials to ask voluntary contributions for PAC. (A man could be jailed for saying "let's all give a buck to PAC.")
- Require a special membership meeting, with approval by a majority of all local members (not a majority at the meeting), for every expenditure in connection with political action.

As ominous as the bills, themselves, was kind of support they received.

THE BILLS were slipped quietly into the legislative hopper late in the session by an obscure Democratic assemblyman from Brooklyn (Travia) and an equally obscure upstate Republican senator (Erwin).

The State CIO Council, after alerting its affiliates, sought to obtain repudiation of the bills by party leaders. There efforts met with a wall of indifference on both sides of the capitol.

Among the Republicans, only Arthur J. Wicks, Senate majority leader with a consistent labor-hating record, was willing to admit that he favored the bill.

On the Democratic side, a prompt repudiation of the proposals was issued by Paul Fitzpatrick, Democratic State Committee chairman. But the Democratic legislative leaders refused to make any public statement of their stand.

Hollander issued a direct attack against Brooklyn Democratic boss Francis J. Sinnott. He charged him with "pulling the strings" on the Travia-Erwin bills. Travia represents Sinnott's home district.

The Travia-Erwin bills began to go places with almost unprecedented speed. They quickly cleared all committees with favorable reports and were set for action on the floor. The smell of a deal grew strong.

But the CIO continued the battle. Rank-and-file committees made weekend visits to legislators in their home communities in all parts of the state. Wires and letters from CIO members poured into the capitol.

AN EMERGENCY conference of leaders in Albany on Mar. 10 climaxed the campaign. One hundred leaders visited key legislators to express labor's unqualified opposition to the bills.

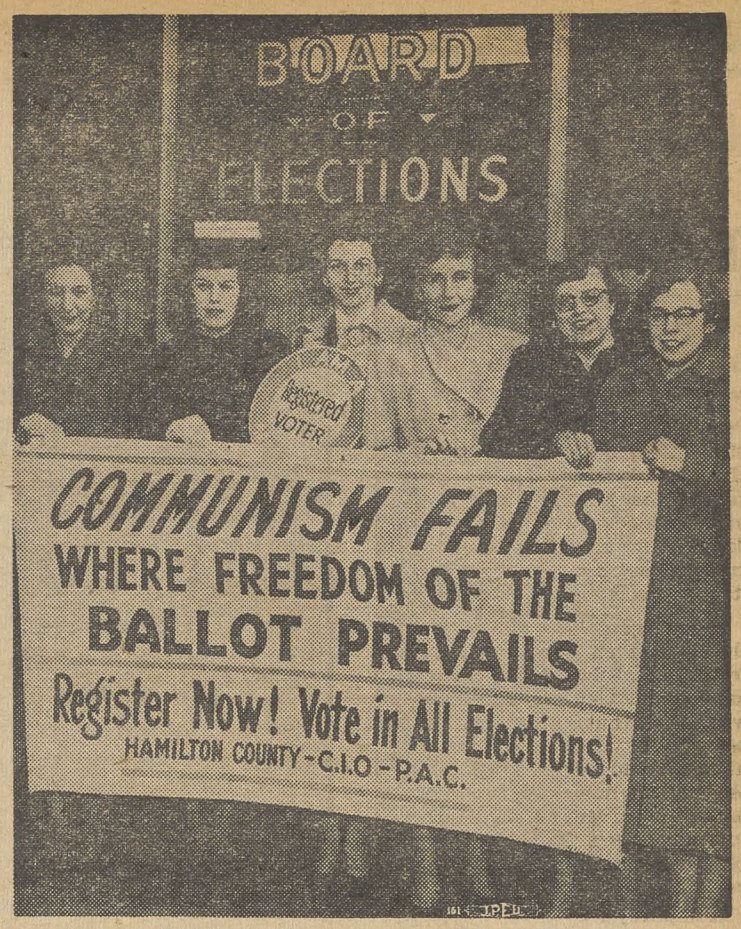
"The gains which unions make for their members in wages and conditions can be cut away by legislation," Hollander and Council Sec.-Treas. Harold J. Garno pointed out in a letter to lawmakers.

"Therefore union funds spent to support worthy candidates for public office cannot be considered different from the funds spent to enforce collective bargaining agreements. It is for such comprehensive service that union members pay their dues.

"The bills are a direct attack on organized labor," the officers charged, "and a flagrant effort to deny the democratic rights of working men and women."

After defeat of the bills, Hollander and Garno praised the help given the CIO by Willian Morgan, a representative of farm co-operatives and New York State Farm-Labor Committee treasurer.

"Morgan's diligent efforts to impress legislators with the dangers of these bills won considerable support for labor's position among representatives of farm areas," they said.



A FREE VOTE and all-out registration is democracy's answer to communism, say these CIO telephone workers pushing registration drive in Cincinnati. These members of CWA Local 4351 are one of several union groups joining in "Register the Unregistered" drive of Greater Cincinnati CIO Council.

Taft Keeps Mum On T-H Debate Challenge

A WISCONSIN CIO leader's offer to debate Sen. Taft on the merits of the Taft-Hartley Act has gone unchallenged.

In his campaign for votes in the Republican presidential primary April 1, Taft has gone about the state extolling the virtues of the law he had a major part in writing.

His claims led Alec Revell, president of the Dane County CIO Council and a vice president of the State CIO, to issue his challenge.

"You have emphasized some of the minor benefits of the act and studiously avoided discussing vast segments of the act which are not only repressive but could in a time of unemployment cripple the labor movement," said Revell.

Wisconsin CIO leaders denounced the self-styled Wisconsin Labor Committee for Taft, who met the Senator in a recent visit to the state.

Two hundred union members met Taft—which led Bill Abbott, State CIO legislative and public relations director, to say:

"This isn't too surprising when you think that high-priced Taft pushers have been at work on this thing for months.

"If all they can find is 200 pro-Taft people out of nearly 400,000 organized workers in Wisconsin we can conclude that labor is not too favorably disposed toward the Senator.

"We urge tolerance for these people. We ask all loyal CIO members not to cut down their betrayers, but rather to go out and work constructively for a strong labor political action program that nobody can destroy.

"A man who is a traitor to his fellow workers must live with his conscience—and that is punishment in itself."

Wisconsin labor was encouraged by the two-to-one lead of Mayor Frank P. Zeidler of Milwaukee over Leonard Fons in the recent non-partisan city primary.

Zeidler was endorsed by Labor's Political League, composed of CIO, AFL and independent unions. Zeidler and Fons will be the sole candidates for mayor in the final election April 1. All other labor endorsed candidates also won in the primary.

A CIO Guildsman, Bill Proxmire, who formerly edited the Union Labor News, which serves CIO and AFL locals in south central Wisconsin, is running for Democratic nomination for governor. Proxmire is generally believed to be the Democrat most likely to oppose Gov. Walter J. Kohler, GOP candidate for re-election.

CIO Urges Maternity Care For Servicemen's Wives

CIO UNIONS have received many letters from their fellow members in the Army in Korea "wanting to know why provision has not been made for maternal care for their wives, and infant care for their children."

That's what William Lavelle, assistant director of the CIO Legislative Dept., told the health subcommittee of the Senate Labor Committee.

The subcommittee is considering two bills to provide government-paid medical and hospital care for maternity cases and children. A similar program was in effect during World War II.

At present, the dependents of servicemen are entitled to medical care at military hospitals, if facilities are available. If the wives do not live near hospitals, the government does not foot the bill.

Lavelle said that CIO representatives have explained to such "young mothers that we would help them, that there are community agencies with which we have developed a close relationship.

"We have told these young mothers that this was not charity. That some of these agencies were tax supported. That others were supported by voluntary contributions, and were to be used as a right.

"The answer is a hurt look. A look of shame and despair.

"And why should they feel this shame and despair? Why? Because they bear the children of the men who fight and die for our way of life.

"That is your question to answer."

Lavelle said that the CIO favored the Lehman Bill (S. 2337) to provide government-paid medical and hospital care for maternity cases and for children up to five years old. He said that the CIO also supported the Humphrey Bill (S. 1245) to provide maternity care but limiting infant care to the first year.

Jerome Pollack, consultant to the CIO Auto Workers' Social Security Dept., told the subcommittee that the dependents of servicemen often are the beneficiaries of union-won health security programs but that they lose this protection when their husbands and fathers enter the service. He pointed out that 100 days of hospitalization would completely consume a serviceman's allotment for a year and half.

Representatives of the American Medical Association and the American Hospital Association opposed the bills because there was "no demonstrated need."

Rubber Workers To Ask More Pay

THE CIO Rubber Workers this year will press a seven-point program headed by a demand for higher wages, and increased pension and insurance benefits.

The program was drawn up by URW's 200-member policy committee last week at a meeting at Akron, O.

"Rubber industry figures show a 4% annual increase in productivity over the past few years, a rate higher than most industries," URW Pres. L. S. Buckmaster said.

"Since the principle of a worker sharing in increased productivity is recognized generally today, we feel our members are entitled to a portion of the gains made by the rubber industry."

He said that productivity increases and cost-of-living wage adjustments will help rubber workers at least to maintain their economic position in the face of rising living costs.

The policy committee blamed Congress for failing "to roll back prices to reasonable levels . . . permitting prices to rise sharply" and legislating "in the interest of business and industry."

The committee's statement added that industry took advantage of this situation to raise prices, accumulate high profits and reserves and to expand at the expense of the taxpayers.

During this period, the URW said, "wage earners, millions of consumers, pensioners and others on fixed income have in sharp contrast had their living standard slashed."

In addition to wage hikes, the committee called for:

- Improvement of premium pay, night bonus, vacation pay and other fringe benefits.
- Greater benefits for the employes entering the armed services.
- Completion of the drive for the full union shop and for adequate contract provisions to prevent speed-ups and rate reductions, and to assure fair and uniform work loads.
- The right to reopen wages for negotiations at any time upon 30 days' notice or less and the right to cancel an agreement if the wage demand is unsettled.
- A meeting of the Canadian section of the committee to draw up a program consistent with the full committee's policy and the economic conditions north of the border.

The first major URW contract to expire will be that with the B. F. Goodrich Co., which ends June 30.

Senate Hearings Open On Party-Line Unions

(Editorial Comment, Page 4)

THE SENATE LABOR subcommittee last week opened hearings in its long-awaited investigation of the problem of Communist-dominated unions.

Under the chairmanship of Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.), the sincere and orderly hearings were in striking contrast to the proceedings going on before another Senate committee only a short distance away. The latter, run by Sen. McCarran (D. Nev.), made a mockery of fundamental democratic principles and "discredited in advance any findings it may make."

A stinging denunciation of the McCarran committee came from Gerard Swope, former president of the General Electric Co., who said that "many innocent persons have suffered" at its hands. He added that "it must be obvious by now to most unprejudiced observers that the Senate subcommittee's investigation is very far from being an impartial inquiry."

Humphrey's committee, on the other hand, managed to restore the dignity of purpose and integrity that has been lacking from many congressional investigations in recent months.

UNLIKE the McCarran group, which had set out as if its only interest were to prove preconceived charges, the Labor subcommittee made it clear from the beginning that it is "investigating" in the true sense of trying to find answers which it does not now have.

The first week's testimony raised many questions and answered none. On the other hand, it emphasized a general belief on the part of government officials that the problem of national security makes the problem of Communist unions a particularly serious one in today's world.

Most important, however, every witness—and every member present of the committee itself—expressed a great concern that no action be taken that would deny basic union rights or fundamental civil liberties.

In opening the hearings, Humphrey called the problem of what to do about Communist-dominated unions and national security "extraordinarily complex" and "highly emotional." It is made more difficult, he said, by enemies of labor who use the Communist label "indiscriminately, maliciously and inaccurately."

"The truth is that the American people owe the trade union movement a great debt of gratitude for the way they have kept their house clean," Humphrey declared. "Some people have done a great disservice to their country by wickedly branding labor as subversive."

HE EMPHASIZED the basic question "of paramount concern" to the committee was the safeguarding of essential constitutional liberties of the individual in any effective program of Communist line union regulation.

Humphrey said that while the committee would consider the advisability of recommending new legislation, "there should be no assumption that we will finally settle on a legislative approach." He said the fact that Communist - dominated unions still are strong enough to threaten national security shows the ineffectiveness of the Taft-Hartley non-communist affidavit.

John D. Small, chairman of the Munitions Board, said that the party-like unions are a "very dangerous threat" to national security but that a solution "must be and can be found."

Small pointed to the fact that the United Electrical Workers, which the CIO expelled as Communist-dominated in 1949, is the collective bargaining agent for many facilities working on important defense contracts. "We must be alive to the potential menace presented," he added.

"CONGRESSIONAL reports extensively document . . . the charge that the leadership of the U.E., the American Communications Association and the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers Union, to mention the most important, have consistently followed the foreign policy line of the Soviet Union," Small pointed out.

Chairman Paul H. Herzog of the National Labor Relations Board said that he does not believe there is a "perfect answer" to the problem of ridding unions of Communist control. He suggested that labor itself may have provided the best answer.

A proposal that Congress consider stripping Communist-dominated unions of bargaining rights by placing them in the same category as company unions was made to the committee by Sec. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin.

"Justification for this approach can be found in the fact that Communist-dominated unions do not act in the ultimate interests of the employes they represent," Tobin declared. "The political objectives of such unions are paramount and the economic interests of their members are subordinated to these objectives."

Tobin said that he appreciated the dangers inherent in the proposal since "many employers still are not yet ready to accept principles of fair collective bargaining." He suggested it as the best plan he knew but did not give it unqualified endorsement.

Flaxer Cited For Contempt

ABRAM FLAXER, president of the CIO-expelled United Public Workers, last week was cited for contempt by vote of the U. S. Senate.

The action was taken at request of Sen. McCarran (D., Nev.), chairman of the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee.

McCarran said the subcommittee questioned Flaxer's claim of privilege in refusing to testify and because of his "completely unjustified, willful refusal" to produce subpenaed records.

The committee earlier released testimony by Mrs. Vivian White Soboleski, Flaxer's former wife, and Henry W. Wenning, a former UPWA official. Both witnesses described Flaxer as a Communist and said the UPWA was Communist-controlled.

UPWA was among the organizations expelled from CIO two years ago as under Communist domination.

"I'm glad you get paid every two weeks—One week's wages is so insufficient these days!"

CIO Locals Warned On Party Fronts

ALL CIO local unions in northern California have been warned against attempts of four party-line organizations to use them to advance the "Communist conspiracy."

The locals were informed in a letter from Tim Flynn, CIO regional director in San Francisco, that the four organizations "are not endorsed or supported by CIO."

The organization are the Provisional Trade Union Committee to Repeal the Smith Act, the Northern California Trade Union Committee to Repeal the Smith Act, East Bay Trade Unionists for Peace and the National Negro Council.

"All of the above listed organizations are undeniably part of the pro-Russian agitational propaganda apparatus operated by the Communists in our country to serve the interest of the Soviet Union," Flynn wrote.

"It is a well established fact that the Communists, in carrying their main objective of serving the interest of the Soviet Union, habitually associate themselves with worthy causes in an effort to cloak their real activities.

"We urge all local unions to confine their activities in relation to the repeal of the Smith Act, the McCarran Act and the Taft-Hartley Act, as well as to the cause of elimination of discrimination, to union sponsored programs initiated by the CIO or by your own international or national union."

Auto Union Takes Over In Big Ford Local 600

CIO AUTO WORKERS acted last week to "put an end to Communist influence and manipulation" in the big Ford Local 600 at River Rouge.

Acting after several hearings, repeated warnings to Local 600 officers, and a 13-hour session of the international executive board, the UAW named a six-man board of administration to govern the Ford local pending a special election.

The administration board, headed by UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther, took possession of the Local 600 headquarters, opposite the River Rouge plant, without incident early last week.

Commie-line policies, activities and publications of the Local 600 officers, the UAW executive board said, have resulted in "providing anti-labor corporations and other enemies of our union with propaganda with which to weaken our collective bargaining efforts and our organizational and legislative work."

The international union charged Local 600 officers, headed by Pres. Carl Stellato, with "open conflict with the established policies and program of the UAW-CIO," despite many past warnings.

IN DESCRIBING the situation in Local 600, with an estimated 50,000 members, a UAW statement said:

"In the opinion of the international executive board the difficulties in Local 600 arise from the manipulation of a small but well disciplined Communist group which exerts influence far beyond its actual numbers. The evidence . . . proves beyond doubt that this disciplined Communist minority was able to subvert the policies, programs, and publications of Local 600 to their own ends and against the best interests of the union membership.

"Action by the international executive board was taken to put an end to Communist influence and manipulation so as to protect the good name of the International Union, UAW-CIO, to strengthen the collective bargaining power of Local 600 in dealing with the practical day to day problems of workers in the Ford Rouge plant and to strengthen the organizational and legislative work of the union."

The international union said it hopes to co-operate with the River Rouge workers "so as to place Local 600 on a sound union basis at the earliest possible date."

"It is most regrettable," the UAW said, "that a major portion of the strength and energy of Local 600 has been dissipated because of the disruptive efforts of a small Communist minority to advance the interests of the Communist Party at the expense of the Ford workers.

"They have been more interested in fighting the international union and its policies than in solving the practical day to day problems of the Ford workers. The underlying and motivating drive behind the Communist group in Local 600, as elsewhere, is complete subservience to the foreign policy needs of the Soviet Union."

THE UAW international added it "is proud of the manner in which the rank and file members . . . have successfully met with courage the Communist penetration into labor unions" and it said "we are confident that the workers at the Ford Rouge plant will meet this challenge with equal courage and success."

Key charge against Stellato and other Local 600 officers was violation of the UAW's constitutional ban against holding of elective or appointive office by any person a member of or "subservient" to the Communist Party or Nazi or Fascist organizations.

After a lengthy hearing last Oct. 12, the international union warned Local 600 to "cease and desist" from violating this constitutional ban and from "sponsoring of programs and policies contrary to the programs and policies official and democratically adopted by the UAW-CIO."

NAMING of the board of administration followed a UAW executive board session on Mar. 14. Board members, with Reuther, are Vice Pres. John W. Livingston and Richard T. Gosser, Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey, and UAW Reg. Dirs. Joseph McCusker and Edward Cote of Detroit. McCusker is a past Local 600 president.

The administrators took over the Local 600 headquarters on Mar. 17. Their first action was to fire five minor unit officers, all of whom were convicted by a Local 600 trial committee two years ago of Communist activity. The board said "similar action will be taken in other cases where it appears beyond reasonable doubt that others are ineligible to serve."

Stellato and other top Local 600 officers—Vice Pres. Patrick Rice, Recording Sec. William Hood and Financial Sec. William Grant—were retained in office "for the present," but the activities of each of them were subject to veto by international union representatives.

The UAW international union action in the case of Local 600, while long pending, came after several days of hearing conducted by the House un-American Activities Committee in Detroit. At these hearings, several Local 600 officers and employes were named as Communists, while the editor of Ford Facts, the local paper, described it as a "minor edition of the Daily Worker."

15 Local Officers Quit UE To Protest Commie Control

FIFTEEN officers of Local 715 of the Communist-dominated United Electrical Workers have resigned "to assert our loyalty as American citizens by severing all connections with the UE international."

UE Local 715 represents 1500 employes at the Reliance Electric Co. plants at Cleveland and Ashtabula, O. The CIO Electrical Workers have petitioned the NLRB for an election to determine the bargaining agent for the workers.

The resignations followed testimony by John Janowitz, former president of the local, before the Senate Internal Security Committee that he had been an FBI undercover agent in the Communist Party in Ohio. He named several UE officials as Communist functionaries.

"We sincerely hope that our resignations at this time will serve to emphasize that the employes of the bargaining unit at Reliance are good Americans who would not for one moment support any organization or program whose purpose or program is contrary to the best interests of our country," the resigning UE officers said.

CIO Asks New Hearing On Immigration Bill

DESCRIBING the McCarran immigration bill as "drastic" and one which "would serve the country ill," the CIO last week sent a letter to all members of the House urging them to refer it back to the Judiciary Committee for further—and this time "adequate"—hearings.

The bill, which proposes far-reaching changes in the immigration, naturalization and nationality laws of the U. S., has already been approved by that committee. The House is due to vote on it in the near future.

Nathan E. Cowan, director of the CIO Legislative Department, in the letter pointed out seven major objectionable features of the bill and added that there are other provisions which the CIO wishes a chance to criticize in detail. The bill's weaknesses, he said "deserve far more careful and informed consideration than they have yet been accorded."

Although the proposed legislation would make one of the most thorough revisions of U. S. immigration laws ever undertaken, the CIO so far has been denied an opportunity to tell Congress its views. A year ago, it requested time for this purpose, but the hearings were curtailed and the measure was railroaded through without waiting to hear CIO objections.

Cowan hit particularly at provisions in the bill which would perpetrate racial discrimination, expand the grounds for loss of citizenship and curtail basic civil and legal rights. Besides working injustices on aliens, he said, it "would work unnecessary hardship upon American citizens and impede foreign travel by representatives of American organizations, including labor unions."

"While purporting to eliminate racial discrimination in our immigration law, H.R. 5678 in fact perpetuates such discrimination," Cowan charged. "The CIO, on the other hand, consistently has advocated abolition of racial discrimination in every form."

Cowan also struck at the measure for expanding the grounds for loss of citizenship by both naturalized and native-born citizens even beyond "the unduly broad grounds for denaturalization" contained in the Internal Security Act of 1950, also authored by Sen. McCarran (D. Nev.).

He charged that the bill would "emasculate judicial review, and authorize arbitrary administrative practices." By abolishing existing statutes of limitation and by creating and making retroactive new grounds for deportation, it "jeopardizes the status of the resident foreign-born."

'Jumping Joe' Hits And Runs But Gets Caught By Benton

THE "HIT AND RUN" Senator, "Jumping Joe" McCarthy (R. Wis.) didn't run fast enough last week after he had misrepresented the position of his chief Congressional critic, Sen. Benton (D. Conn.), in a nationwide telecast.

He got caught this time—and good—when Benton, getting the Senate floor on a matter of personal privilege, renewed his earlier charges of McCarthy's "fraud and deceit" and demonstrated that the Wisconsin Senator was guilty of still further "fraudulent" misrepresentations concerning him.

McCarthy told TV viewers that Benton had insisted on congressional immunity when he filed 30,000 words of charges against McCarthy and demanded his ouster from the Senate.

Benton told the Senate that this was "wholly at variance with the facts." He read the official TV transcript to show that McCarthy had falsely quoted him in claiming Benton had asked for immunity.

Then he proved his point by offering "unequivocally to waive any immunity which I may enjoy under the Constitution or under the Senate rules." He later signed, and sent to McCarthy. a statement accepting "full legal responsibility" for every statement in his charges.

Benton said that McCarthy was also guilty of a "calculated error" in saying that he had criticized his abuse of immunity, under which he cannot be sued for anything he says on the Senate floor or before a Senate committee.

What he had actually condemned, Benton pointed out, was McCarthy's boast that he would "resign from the Senate" if he ever used his immunity. Subsequently McCarthy refused publicly either to waive it or to resign.

The issue in McCarthy's case, Benton said, is "not immunity but honesty."

Republican Leader Bridges (N. H.) at this point tried to cut off Benton's remarks. The Senate voted, however, to let him continue.

BENTON said that "there is no more urgent matter before the Senate" than the inpending vote "reaffirming our confidence in the honor and integrity" of the Senate Elections subcommittee looking into his charges. The subcommittee had asked for such a vote after McCarthy had "maliciously" accused it of "dishonesty and improper motives."

Noting that seven months have elapsed since he made his charges, Benton asked for a speedy conclusion of the investigation. He pointed out that it is less than four months until the Republican convention and less than eight until election day.

McCarthy is "a very talented propagandist of the Soviet type," Benton said, adding that he uses "the tactics of Hitler." He reported that when he was abroad last year many European had asked him fearfully if McCarthy "would take over the government of the United States."

McCarthy was not present during his speech, although Benton had personally called his office to notify him before he spoke.

"They're saying so many appetizing things about dogfood lately that I thought I'd give it a try!"

CIO Unions Urged To Join Drive To Aid Small Plants

NATIONAL and local CIO unions were urged last week to join with small businessmen in a drive for adequate funds for the Small Defense Plants Administration.

CIO Executive Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood and Legislative Dir. Nathan E. Cowan asked the unions to help secure Senate approval of both an $825,000 appropriation and a $10 million revolving fund for the Small Defense Plants Administration.

The $825,000 deficiency appropriation for the agency was approved in the House, but the $10 million fund proposal was defeated by 12 votes. The issue is now before the Senate Appropriations Committee with floor debate and vote due shortly.

"This appropriation will greatly improve the chances of getting defense contracts into the plants of small manufacturers, to offset reduced employment on civilian production," Haywood and Cowan wrote to CIO affiliates.

"A large majority of local unions in our affiliated national organizations represent employes of small business."

The letter suggested that CIO national unions, regional directors and state and city CIO councils "get in touch with all small businessmen in your industry, state and local community who are likely to see the stake they have in this measure."

The letter suggested that labor and small business should "work in every possible proper way to generate maximum demand for favorable final action by both Senate and House.

"The CIO and the nation as a whole have a big interest and concern in insuring the survival and prosperity of small business during and after the defense emergency."

Benefits For All Over 65 Proposed

A bill to make all persons 65 and over eligible for minimum old age benefits and to raise the minimum benefits from $20 to $30 a month has been introduced in the House as a means for ending "shame lists" for old people.

Rep. Rhodes (D. Pa.), the bill's sponsor, estimated that the legislation would cost about $1.75 billion.

About half of the cost would become available immediately, he said, because $800 million now paid by the federal government to the states for public assistance to aid the old could be saved. He added that the remainder could be raised "by closing a few tax loopholes."

Textile Boss Faces NLRB Criminal Suit

YEARS of stalling negotiations with the CIO Textile Workers has provoked the NLRB to resort to criminal action—a rarely used procedure—to make a Connecticut textile mill obey its orders.

The NLRB brought civil and criminal contempt of court charges against the Israel Putnam Mills, Wilsonville, and their manager, Michael A. Bergin, before the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New York.

Judge Jerome Frank ordered Bergin to appear on Apr. 7 and show why he should not be adjudged guilty and punished for "having knowingly and willfully, and with intent to do so, disobeyed and disregarded the decree of this court."

The court early in 1950 ordered the firm to bargain in good faith with TWUA. TWUA continued to attempt negotiating with the firm five times in 1950 and 1951.

TWUA reported that "the attitude of the company was so provocative at the July, 1951, meeting that the employes walked out on strike."

A month later the Connecticut Mediation Service got the two parties together, and the strike was called off, but nothing was accomplished in the 20-minute session. There have been no further meetings despite repeated efforts of the regional NLRB office in Boston.

Bergin put up a "poor mouth." NLRB told the court that Bergin said that the firm was poor and that even the non-monetary demands cost money — "if only the cost of paper for such things as the seniority list."

(The list would not take much paper. TWUA reported that there are between 50 and 75 persons employed at the plant.)

The mills are known in the trade as "shoddy" and rework used fabric. Other "shoddy" plants under contract with TWUA usually pay close to the standard wool industry minimum of $1.265 an hour, but the Putnam Mills, TWUA reported, pay only 1c or 2c above the legal minimum of 75c an hour.

NMU Election Gets Started

THE CIO Maritime Union will hold elections beginning Apr. 1 for 108 elective posts in the union, with 281 candidates contesting for office.

Conducted by the Honest Ballot Association, mail ballots will be sent 45,000 NMU members. They must return their votes by midnight June 30.

Of the slate of national officers running for another two-year term, only one vice president, John B. McDougall, is opposed. Pres. Joseph Curran, Sec. Neal Hanley, Treas. M. Hedley Stone, and Vice Pres. Hulbert B. Warner, are unopposed. McDougall is opposed by Mrs. Madlyn Ford, a New York port patrolman.

Curran has headed the union since it was organized in 1937. He predicted a vote of at least 30,000, pointing out that NMU members always turn out a high percentage of votes in a national election.

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

THE WRITER traveled from Washington to Denver, Colo., last week to address the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith on Mar. 16. The B'nai B'rith breakfast meeting honored O. A. "Jack" Knight, president of the CIO Oil Workers, for his manifold and significant contributions to the improvement of human relations.

In speaking to the gathering, I pointed out the role CIO has played through the years in working for social and economic betterment and the improvement of human relations for all citizens, regardless of race, religion, nationality. I had the pleasure and honor of presenting Brother Knight with an award for his outstanding contributions on behalf of the B'nai B'rith.

Many of our CIO people, including Reg. Dirs. Michael Livoda and Michael Mann and Natl. Rep. Adolph Germer, were in attendance along with many community groups. I extend my thanks to the officers and members of B'nai B'rith and the Mayor and his associates for making my visit such a pleasant one. May we continue to further racial tolerance and brotherhood of man by such methods as these.

THE CRACKING of the iron curtain around Communist-controlled unions continues, as shown by the recent action taken by the Farm Equipment-UE local union in Rock Falls, Ill., representing 400 Intl. Harvester workers. They voted on Mar. 16, with only 2 dissenting votes, to disaffiliate from FE-UE and affiliated with the UAW-CIO.

Local Pres. Kenneth Fouke, whom the UE attempted to suspend from office, chaired the meeting at which the vote was taken. Congratulations to the UAW on this achievement and also to those UAW representatives who made it possible.

Cuban Labor Gets Pledges Of Batista

THE POSITION of the Cuban labor movement in the wake of the military coup led by Gen. Fulgencio Batista was clarified last week by Francisco Aguirre, general secretary of the Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers.

The clarification was made public by Serafino Romualdi, ORIT assistant secretary. He conferred with Aguirre when the latter passed through Washington en route to Brussels, Belgium, for a meeting of the Emergency Committee of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions. The ORIT is the western hemisphere affiliate of the ICFTU.

One of the first things Batista's revolutionaries did was to seize the Workers' Palace in Havana and arrest Eusebio Mujal, general secretary of the Cuban Confederation of Labor (CTC). Top CTC leaders called a general strike, which was effective, in support of the constitutional government. However, there was no call for general support of the fallen government The strike was called off to avoid bloodshed.

THE DAY after the revolution, Aguirre told Romualdi, Batista offered the return of the CTC headquarters. The offer was rejected until Batista gave guarantees that unions would be able to function without military interference. More than 100 CTC leaders, at an open meeting, reaffirmed their confidence in Mujal, who was quickly released.

At a meeting with Batista, the ORIT leaders recounted, the CTC leadership agreed to cooperate with his government, as it had with previous governments, on the following conditions:

- That Batista pledge publicly that all labor gains, conditions and agreements be respected and that legally elected leaders of the CTC and its affiliates be recognized and given guarantees for the conduct of their union affairs.
- That the Dept. of Labor continue to represent the government in all industrial disputes, and that military authorities observe neutrality in them.
- That the government support the determination of the CTC and its affiliates to resist any Communist move to regain influence in the Cuban labor movement.
- That the ORIT be allowed to maintain its headquarters in Havana and continue all activities, including militant opposition to governments which have suppressed union rights and civil liberties.
- That specific action be taken to restore constitutional guarantees, which had been suspended for 45 days.

According to Aguirre, Batista accepted the first four conditions. On the fifth, he agreed to include the CTC in consultations he is holding "with the view of reaching an agreement that will be satisfactory to the largest possible number of political and parliamentary groups."

Batista also agreed to make public announcement of the agreement. This pledge he carried out the next day, Aguirre reported, and on the following day the army evacuated the Workers' Palace.

KU KLUX KLAN warning that he leave town or be burned out is held by Louis Freeman, striking member of the CIO Furniture Workers at Elkin (N. C.) Furniture Co. The threat didn't materialize.

Labor Overseas—

Norwegian Visitors To U. S. Tell Plant Contract Gains

A NORWEGIAN labor-management team of specialists which visited the United States last year under the Technical Assistance Program stressed the advantages of wage agreements for each plant in the report to the people at home.

Wages in Norway are generally negotiated on an industrywide scale. In discussing the report with Oslo newspapermen, Reider Danielsen, of the Ministry of Industry, said the common American practice of separate wage agreements makes American labor and management more independent of their national organizations than in Norway.

Other members of the team were Egil Ahlsen, of the Federation of Labor, and Kaare Hansen, of the Employers' Association. The three also reported that job evaluation methods as used in the United States would help stimulate higher productivity in Norway.

THINGS have come to a pretty pass in Csorna, according to Spotlight, the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Union's uncensored accounting of life behind the Iron Curtain.

Csorna is in a farming section of Hungary. It has a Communist youth organization, but that body's official paper doesn't think much of it. Morale is at a low ebb, according to a recent article, because the boys "behave and dance in the dandy style, and disapprove of peasant boys wearing boots." Worse still, it continued, they "play cards and burn up table drawers if they feel cold," and moreover are "lazy and fond of drinking."

Worst of all, "they dance with Ilona Orban, daughter of the former proprietor of the YCL premises." Tsk, tsk!

FIVE members of the Spanish Trade Union Federation, among a group sentenced to death after trials on charges of "attacks against the security of the state," have been executed, according to word from Barcelona.

They were charged with murders, bombings and holdups, but organized labor throughout the world declared they actually were executed for activities during the 48-hour general strike in Barcelona in March, 1951. Vigorous protests were filed by the CIO, while the ICFTU asked intervention by the U. S., British and French foreign offices.

The sentences of six other strikers also due to be executed were commuted to life imprisonment.

A detailed study of the sometimes overlooked industrial potential of the Soviet satellite countries in Europe, entitled Fuel and Power in Middle Europe, has just been published by the Mid-European Studies Center of the National Committee for a Free Europe.

The author is Jan Wszelaki, economist and pre-war member of the Polish diplomatic service. He shows that the captive nations have tremendous potential sources of fuel and power that may be developed, and discusses the difficulties the "practical implementation" of such a "vast program" faces. A foreword, however, points out that the western world may be underestimating Russia's captive European empire.

Carey Hits 'Political Tricksters' On Decontrol

THE CASE for continued —and stronger — price control legislation was presented to the Senate Banking Committee in testimony by the CIO last week.

CIO Secy.-Treas, James B. Carey struck out sharply at pending proposals to "decontrol" items selling below ceiling prices and charged that the foes of price control are playing "a political game with the living standards of the American people."

Pointing out that some business groups have asked Congress to lift price controls while keeping wages under control, Carey called the proposal "class legislation" that would add "a gross inequity to existing inequities" for consumers.

Most of the other witnesses before the committee last week, however, pushed forward the steamroller assault on price controls that is being engineered by the National Association of Manufacturers, Chamber of Commerce, Farm Bureau Federation, and virtually every national trade or business group.

Carey charged that the groups advocating decontrol are "political tricksters." He said that they are advocating decontrol in this election year "in the hope that an ensuing wave of price rises will embarass the administration. They know that a dismantled price control machinery cannot be rapidly built up again, especially in the heat of a political campaign."

ENEMIES of price control are playing "a political game with the living standards of the American people," CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey (testifying) told the Senate Banking Committee at a hearing on extension and revision of the present controls law. Sen. Maybank (D. S.C.), committee chairman, is at far right.

DESPITE the talk about "soft" prices, the cost of most items is still going up at the retail level, Carey pointed out. He reminded the committee that the latest consumer price index was at the highest point in history.

"The "small number" of market prices below OPS ceilings, he said, are "soft" only in relation to the high ceilings which the Office of Price Stabilization was required to set under the Capehart and Herlong Amendments.

"Soft prices are largely the creations of public relations men," he charged. "There is an attempt under way to hoodwink the American people into believing that the high prices they pay are low, in reality. This propaganda, emanating from the swank offices of the publicity experts, is an insult to the intelligence of the consuming public."

Calling the present big business drive to decontrol prices a "conspiracy," Carey refused to retract the word when Republican Sens. Schoeppel (Kans.), Bricker (O.) and Capehart (Ind.) pressured him to do so.

"I think instead that maybe next year you'll be joining me in that conspiracy charge," Carey said. He cited the secret meeting of business groups in Chicago last Feb. 28 to map out a campaign to "scare Congress" into lifting price controls.

Sen. Capehart agreed with the CIO on one important point.

When Carey told the committee that a big business proposal to keep wages under control while prices are freed from control would be "completely one-sided and discriminatory."

"I'm sure this committee would never consider decontrol of prices without decontrol of wages," Capehart interjected.

"Well, I'm certainly glad to hear you say that," Sen. Benton (D. Conn.) exclaimed.

SCHOEPPEL, Bricker and Capehart tried to place blame for high prices on President Truman because he did not impose price controls as soon as the Defense Production Act was passed.

Democratic Sens. Benton (Conn.), Moody (Mich.) and Douglas (Ill.) pointed out, however, that the act had required the President to try voluntary controls first. Douglas quoted testimony last year by former Economic Stabilizer Eric Johnston to the effect that voluntary controls had been tried almost immediately but that only a small number of businessmen "played ball."

Carey said that under the present law an undue share of the defense burden has fallen on workers and low-income families generally. He called for "strengthened, rather than weakened" controls over prices, rents and credit for two years from next June 30, when the present law expires.

Meanwhile, OPS revealed the court cases against businessmen violating OPS regulations "are becoming too numerous to report in detail nationally."

In the metals industry alone, OPS Enforcement Director Edward P. Morgan said, 1500 complaints are being investigated.

In one case of unauthorized price increases, the Dept. of Justice has filed a suit for over a third of a million dollars against the Pennsylvania Railroad.

Despite such widespread evidence of open flouting of the law, OPS is apparently getting ready to knuckle under to "decontrol" advocates.

Price Stabilizer Ellis Arnall told the Senate Banking Committee last week that he hopes to suspend ceilings on some items in about two weeks.

IWA Votes On Strike Action In Northwest

FACED BY the unyielding attitude of the principal operators' groups, 60,000 CIO Woodworkers in the Northwest are voting on strike action.

A minority of 250 employers represented by the principal employers' associations in Montana, Idaho, Washington, Oregon and California apparently forced IWA to take the strike vote.

These groups have offered only to renew present contracts. Industry-wide contracts expire Apr. 1.

Negotiations were continuing with the majority of operators —some 350—in the area.

Because of the adamant attitude of the 250 operators, IWA Pres. A. F. Hartung called a special session of the union's Northwest Regional Negotiating Committee and district officers, which decided to take a strike vote.

Strike votes will be counted Apr. 17, and another meeting of the committee and the district officers will be held the next day to plan further action.

The Woodworkers are asking for a 20c an hour wage rise, a more liberal vacation clause, shift differential pay, three more paid holidays to make six in all, leave of absence clause, travel time for loggers, rest periods and minimum crews on power saws.

12c Pay Hike Proposed For Wright Local

THE WAGE Stabilization Board has recommended a general wage increase of 12c hourly for approximately 12,000 members of the CIO Auto Workers at the Wright Aeronautical Div. of Curtis-Wright Corp. Woodbridge, N. J.

In addition to the wage boost retroactive to last Oct. 15, the board recommended additional increases ranging from 2c to 11c. These would be effective as of Jan. 31.

UAW Local 669 members struck the plant last September, after more than nine months fruitless negotiations for a new contract. President Truman referred the dispute to WSB, stating that it threatened the national defense effort, and the strike ended on Oct. 18.

In a strongly-worded dissenting opinion, labor members of the WSB opposed the board's recommendations on two counts.

1. The ruling that an employe shall not receive holiday pay provided in previous contracts if absent without justification either the day before or after the holiday.

2. The decision to limit retroactivity for the recommended additional wage increases for the top labor grades to Jan. 31, 1952, rather than to the date of general 12c increase.

The labor members said that by the latter action, WSB "has put American workers on notice" that submitting their differences with employers "may prove costly." They warned that the decision "would not go unnoticed."

Wilson Stopped In Tracks In Move To Knife WSB Steel Pay Proposals

—SEE PAGES 2 AND 3

"CIO IS IN THE SOUTH to stay—and to grow!" That's what Franz Daniel (left), North Carolina director of the CIO Organizing Committee, tells group of brick workers at an outdoor rally beneath a southern red oak. The 200 workers, half Negro and half white, at the Pine Hall Brick & Pine Co., Pine Hall, N. C., maintained a united front during a recent three-month strike. Police held daily target practice and exercised bloodhounds near the picket line in unsuccessful attempt to intimidate strikers. In the last 16 months, CIO has won nearly 250 organizing victories through the Southern Drive in eight states, with 46 of them in North Carolina. (See story and pictures, Pages 6 and 7.)

'Wrecker' Wilson Hit For Move To Set Aside WSB

AT THE REQUEST of the President of the United States, the United Steelworkers of America on four separate ofcasions during the last three months have postponed a strike in steel.

During the same period, also at the request of the President, both the union and the industry have spent weeks presenting their case to the Wage Stabilization Board—the only duly-constituted authority to hear disputes of this character.

Last Thursday (Mar. 20), purusant to its mandate from the President, the WSB issued its recommendations to the President and the parties, for a fair and equitable settlement of the dispute. The recommendations of the board, reached after three months of hearings and study, were expressly found by the board to be not unstabilizing.

At the request of the President, and at the direction of the WSB, the union and the steel companies have agreed to meet in collective bargaining conferences during the next 48 hours to attempt to negotiate a settlement in the light of the WSB recommendations.

These, it is to be hoped, provide a method for averting a strike in steel.

The Steelworkers have followed these lengthy procedures at the request of the President, in the national interest and through the only agency established and competent to handle these complex problems.

Now, Charles E. Wilson, if he has been correctly quoted, has summarily stated that the WSB recommendations threaten the country's stabilization program, thereby seeking to undermine the board's own finding that its recommendations were clearly consistent with stabilization policies.

Mr. Wilson does not know the issues; he does not understand them; and his only knowledge of the issues comes from the steel company executives, who summoned him to New York for a hasty briefing session.

By his statement, Mr. Wilson has:

1. Attempted to wreck the entire wage stabilization program by summarily dismissing the findings and recommendations of the WSB.

2. Created a situation in which no self-respecting union would consent to bring any dispute before the WSB, for extensive consideration of its merits, only to have Charles E. Wilson—a self-proclaimed big business man—attempt to reverse the decision without regard to the merits.

Under the circumstances, therefore, it is clear that no constructive purpose can be served by attendance at a meeting with Mr. Wilson at which—in accordance with his prior, biased and uninformed judgment of the issues—he will attempt to set aside the findings of the Wage Stabilization Board in favor of an industry-dictated arrangement.

Accordingly, the United Steelworkers will attend no such meeting with Mr. Wilson. In accordance with our commitments to the President and the Wage Stabilization Board, we shall enter collective bargaining discussions with the steel companies during the next 48 hours in the strong hope that a fair and equitable agreement may be reached before April 4.

Labor Members Say WSB Steel Pay Plan Short of Price Hikes

Following is the joint statement of CIO and AFL members of the Wage Stabilization Board on the board's recommendations for a steel settlement:

THE BOARD'S recommendations have not given recognition to many of the Union's requests or to the compelling arguments which supported those requests.

Nevertheless, in keeping with labor's traditional sense of social responsibility and its devotion to the overriding needs of our country, we voted for most of the resolutions offered by the public members of the board.

We voted in favor of the public members' proposals regarding the general wage increase only in this spirit. A wage increase of 16c an hour would have been required on Jan. 1 of this year simply to enable the steel workers to catch up with the increase in cost of living since their last contract was negotiated.

Only 12½c Rise

The board's recommendations would provide only a 12½ general wage increase; and even after July 1, 1952, the additional increase recommended would still leave the Steelworkers 1c an hour short of the increase which has already taken place in the cost of living.

Furthermore, the public members of the board have admitted that the Steelworkers are entitled to recognition for their contribution to the consistently increasing productivity of the industry, which, by the industry's own figures, approximates 3% annually. This amount alone applied to the Steelworkers' wage rates would justify an additional wage increase of 5½c per hour for each year since 1950.

Even after the 2½c to be paid on Jan. 1, 1953, is added to the wage increases, the Steelworkers will not have received full recognition for the rise in the cost of living which has already taken place and the increased productivity of the industry, since the total recommendation of 17½c falls far short of covering these factors.

Moreover, the Steelworkers, under the board's recommendations, are not protected against the hazards of further increases in the cost of living during the 18 months of the new contracts because the recommendations would foreclose use of the six-month wage reopenings customarily permitted by the board for this purpose. Yet, we have voted for this inadequate wage increase proposal in order to assure the steel production our nation must have.

For this same reason we also voted with the public members on other issues although their proposals are not, in our judgment, adequate to meet the situation. Thus, we voted to eliminate 5c of the geographical wage differentials but to retain the remaining 5c, although nothing in the record offers any justification for the retention of any differential.

Similarly the board has recommended that the longstanding inequity suffered by the Steelworkers through the denial to them of premium pay rates for Saturday and Sunday work be fully retained.

The proposal that only after Jan. 1, 1953, shall they receive a meager concession of ¼ time premium pay for Sunday work, is a far cry from the double time for Sunday work and time and one-half for Saturday work now generally enjoyed by American workers. Nevertheless, we have reluctantly voted for this recommendation.

Public interest, of course, will focus on the board's wage recommendations. However, there were submitted to the board approximately 100 other issues relating to working conditions of vital importance to the employees in the industry. These working conditions have far reaching economic and social significance.

By the Presidential certification to the board, the board was mandated to make recommendations on all issues in dispute. This the board has failed to do, by a vote of the public and industry members of the board.

Disappointed

We are keenly disappointed by this action of the board in failing to recommend long overdue improvements in the working conditions of Steelworkers. Steel contracts have not been subject to negotiation on these conditions for five years. During this period other American workers have made substantial gains in improving contract provisions under which they work.

However, we have acquiesced in the board's total recommendations in the spirit of genuine tripartitism and with the profound conviction that the time is surely not far off when the Steelworkers will win correction of these industrial abuses.

Among the significant issues on which the board has failed to recommend a basis for resolving the dispute is the union's request for a guaranteed annual wage. This vital issue is returned to the parties for future study and negotiations, not withstanding that this matter has been the subject of a prior study recommended by a prior governmental board.

We had no choice but to vote for this unsatisfactory recommendation since the alternative would have been a vote of the public and industry members completely rejecting any consideration of this vital issue.

Surely it must be recognized that the action of the board in recommending the union shop for the steel industry was the only possible answer to the stubborn unwillingness of this industry to give to the union of its employees the same kind of recognition and protection which has been accorded by most of American industry, and which has already been recommended by a public board to the nation's railroad industry. This board could do no less.

The reaction of the industry members to the recommendations is surprising to us in light of the modest recommendations proposed by the public members and made by the board.

We voice the hope, that on reflection, the moderate character of the board's recommendations and the force of public opinion will compel the steel industry to meet its obligations to the national interest by expeditiously negotiating new contracts with the union on the basis of the board's recommendations.

Vatican Comments On Pegler Yarn

The Vatican has "no knowledge whatever" of a "high authority who advises the Pope" on labor matters and to whom Columnist Westbrook Pegler wrote that he talked during a trip to Europe, according to a statement being distributed in this country by the National Catholic Press Service.

"When inquiries were made at the Vatican," said an NCPS dispatch from Rome, "official sources there stated categorically that no Holy See official had been authorized to treat with anyone concerning union problems or personalities in the U. S.

"The same sources had no knowledge whatever of the possible identity of the so-called 'official' mentioned in the Westbrook Pegler story, and they disavowed any Holy See association with the Pegler attacks on U. S. unions and union leaders."

Wilson Retreats In War On WSB Steel Plan

(See Editorial Comment, Page 4)

By WILLIAM MILLIS

CHARLES E. WILSON tried to gum up the steel situation last week and promptly got stuck in his own big-business fly-paper.

The head of the Office of Defense Mobilization denounced and repudiated the Wage Stabilization Board's proposed steel settlement as a "serious threat" to the nation's economy.

And he suggested efforts to undercut the WSB's recommendations for a graduated 17½c hourly wage increase, the union shop, and other non-wage improvements for 600,000 CIO Steelworkers in the basic steel industry.

Wilson's maneuvers came just 36 hours before the USA-CIO was to begin negotiations with U. S. Steel Corp.

They quickly brought a strong, angry statement from USA-CIO Pres. Philip Murray, who made plain that the Steelworkers expect contract settlements along lines of the WSB proposals by Apr. 8—or else.

Wilson's condemnation of the proposed steel settlement came as he returned to Washington from a conference with President Truman in Key West on the steel situation. Wilson said flatly:

"There is no question in my mind but that, if the wage increases contemplated under the WSB's recommendations are put into effect, it would be a serious threat in our year-old effort to stabilize the economy."

That started the fireworks, which soon forced Wilson to backtrack.

For the Steelworkers, Murray warned that Wilson has:

1. "Attempted to wreck the entire wage stabilization program by summarily dismissing the findings and recommendations of the WSB.

2. "Created a situation in which no self-respecting union would consent to bring any dispute before the WSB, for extensive consideration of its merits, only to have Charles E. Wilson—a self-proclaimed big business man—attempt to reverse the decision without regard to its merits."

Murray scathingly declared that Wilson—past president of General Electric — "does not know the issues; he does not understand them; and his only knowledge of the issues comes from the steel corporation executives, who summoned him to New York for a hasty briefing session."

Murray refused to participate in any meeting in which Wilson would "attempt to set aside the findings of the WSB in favor of an industry-dictated arrangement." (Text of statement on Page 2.)

In Congress, a surprise maneuver by the Dixiegop majority in the House Rules Committee forced out a resolution for congressional investigation of the WSB—and particularly its recommendation for the union shop. (See adjoining story.)

In the Senate, Chairman Maybank (D. S.C.) of the joint "watchdog" committee on mobilization condemned the WSB steel proposals and offered Wilson a forum for further attacks on the Steelworkers' wage case.

The three industry members of the wage board issued another blast at the steel recommendations and urged disbanding the WSB.

From Joseph A. Beirne, president of the CIO Communications Workers and a CIO member of the WSB, came a denunciation of Wilson for "definitely aligning himself with management" and "agreeing with a profit hungry industry on a base for seeking a price increase."

Beirne said:

"Apparently the steel management briefed Mr. Wilson on the position of the industry, and he accepted such briefing without the common courtesy of inquiring from the members of the WSB what facts and information they may have.

"Mr. Wilson's injudicious statement suggests strongly also that he ignored the recommendations of former Price Stabilizer DiSalle, whose studies show that the steel industry could absorb a substantial wage increase without any increase in the price of their product.

"IT IS apparent that Mr. Wilson is agreeing with a profit-hungry industry on a base for seeking a price increase."

By mid-afternoon on Tuesday, Wilson was backing up. He attempted to draw a line between his "personal views" of unconcealed hostility to wage improvements for steelworkers and his official views as defense mobilizer. Wilson said:

"In view of the comment caused by my answers to reporters' queries at the airport last evening, I should like further to clarify my position on the WSB steel recommendations.

"Without changing the personal views I expressed last evening, I believe, first of all, there is an obligation resting on all of us in the government—and upon labor and management as well—to prevent a work stoppage in an industry so vital to the national defense.

"Secondly, I know that the WSB's recommendations were reached after much study by a duly constituted government agency.

"In view of the above, it is therefore appropriate that these recommendations should be used as a basis for trying to work out a settlement that would prevent a strike."

That cleared the way for direct negotiations between the Steelworkers and the basic producers, but Wilson's outburst (after months of behind-the-scenes maneuvers against the union) added to the tension. The union has given until Apr. 4 for negotiations, when—if there is no settlement—it will give four-day strike notices effective on Apr. 8.

Wilson's attack on the WSB recommendations came after a meeting with Truman at which they discussed a two-step steel price boost.

1. Increases under the Capehart amendment.

2. Revision of existing regulations of the Office of Price Stabilization to allow flexible and graduating price increases to equal any wage increases—which is the No. One industry demand.

Under present OPS regulations, the steel industry is too profitable to be in line for price increases because of wage boosts. OPS has said a firm's profits must fall below 85% of the three best years from 1946-49 to be eligible for a price hike.

In the case of U. S. Steel Corp., profits before taxes averaged $300 million a year for that period, while in 1951 profits before taxes for Big Steel were $658 million.

The dickering over prices continued as USA-CIO negotiators met late last week with officials of U. S. Steel in Pittsburgh, Bethlehem and Colorado Fuel & Iron in New York, Republic in Cleveland, Inland in Chicago and other producers elsewhere.

Murray had voiced a "strong hope" for a contract settlement. But he added:

"The responsibility for a strike is up to the industry now."

Play-By-Play

In 24 tumultuous hours last Monday and Tuesday, there were these consecutive developments in the steel situation:

- Charles E. Wilson, defense mobilizer, met in Key West with President Truman on reported plans to give the steel industry a price hike.
- Roger L. Putnam, economic stabilizer, met with 12 top steel executives in New York, said there is "no question" that the Wage Stabilization Board's recommendation for a 17½c hourly wage increase for steel workers conforms with existing WSB regulations.
- Wilson returned to Washington, repudiated WSB proposals as "a serious threat" to the U. S. economy, tried to undercut those recommendations.
- Philip Murray, CIO Steelworkers president, angrily denounced Wilson as "a self-proclaimed big business man" trying "to set aside the findings of the WSB in favor of an industry-dictated arrangement," and rejected any meeting with Wilson.
- Three industry members of WSB urged it be dissolved.
- Dixiegops on House Rules Committee rammed through resolution for investigation of WSB.
- Wilson backtracked from his earlier attack on WSB steel proposals, said they were his "personal views" but that WSB recommendations "be used as a basis for trying to work out a settlement that would prevent a strike."

Bargaining a la U. S. Steel Corp.

CIO Steelworkers didn't get anyplace when they finally met with Big Steel in Pittsburgh last week.

The meeting was quickly recessed, with Vice Pres. John Stephens of U. S. Steel Corp. saying:

"We are still considering the recommendations of the Wage Stabilization Board.

"We choose to consider them further.

"When we have reached a position we will resume the conference."

Jack Livingston Resigns As CIO Member Of Wage Board

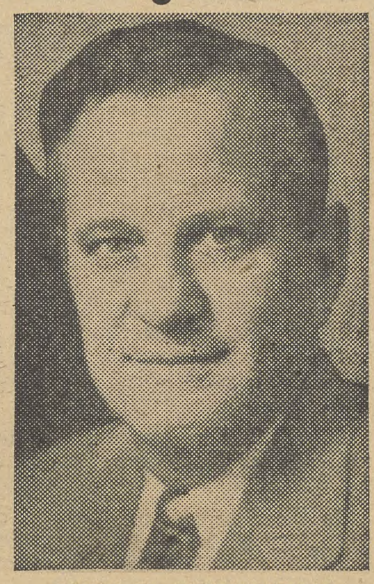
JOHN W. LIVINGSTON, vice president of the Auto Workers, has resigned from the National Wage Stabilization Board.

Livingston has been a member of the board since its inception last May. In his letter of resignation, he wrote President Truman that "recent additions to my responsibilities as an officer of our union make it impossible for me to continue as an actively participating member of the board."

He recently was appointed director of the UAW General Motors Dept. For some time he has headed the union's Aircraft & Agricultural Implement Dept.

UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther praised Livingston's work as a WSB member as "efficient, tireless and conscientious. He richly deserves the thanks of all organized labor."

Other CIO members of the board are Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers and Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the Communications Workers. Livingston's successor is expected to be appointed soon by Truman.



JOHN W. LIVINGSTON

THE ATTACK by Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson on the Wage Stabilization Board was quickly exploited by congressional foes of labor.

A few hours after Wilson denounced the WSB's proposals for a steel settlement, a Dixiegop majority rammed through the House Rules Committee a resolution to investigate the wage board with the hope of fashioning a few more restrictions on labor.

Rep. Madden (D. Ind.) labelled the move for what it was—"a hatchet to be used against the steel workers."

And Chairman Celler (D. N.Y.) said approval of the investigatory resolution was "outrageous."

Approved by the committee, by a reported 7 to 5 vote, was the long-pending resolution of Rep. Allen (R. Ill.) to investigate the WSB.

PURPOSE of the inquiry would be a move to strip the wage board of its power to act on non-economic matters, such as the union shop which it has recommended for the CIO Steelworkers

The Allen proposal has had a big hand from the Committee for Constitutional Government, National Association of Manufacturers, and other business groups.

What they want are restraints on the right to strike, government wage controls, but sharp limitations on powers of the WSB in recommending settlements—all of which would enhance managements' positions.

CELLER said that proposal was "forced through" by a Dixiecrat-Republication coalition for "political reasons." He added "rush action on this legislation is unwarranted and unjustified."

Celler said that proposal was "forced through" by a Dixiecrat-Republican coalition for "political reasons." He added "rush action on this legislation is unwarranted and unjustified."

Madden, who is from the steel center of Gary, Ind., condemned Wilson for "taking up the ax on behalf of the steel barons." And he said Congress should not join in "wielding the hatchet."

The Gary congressman warned that approval of the Allen resolution "at this stage of the steel negotiations would be like throwing gasoline on a fire."

The Dixiegop coalition went ahead nevertheless, but it still faces a vote on the floor of the House on the Allen resolution.

Action Needed

All CIO international unions and state and local councils were alerted last week to start "an avalanche of letters, wires and phone calls to congressmen" against a pending House move to investigate and curtail the Wage Stabilization Board.

Protests against the Allen resolution, H.R. 532, were urged by Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president, and Nathan E. Cowan, CIO Legislative Dept. director.

They warned the resolution "is an unconscionable move to use congressional coercion and intimidation" against the CIO Steelworkers.

Quick, Watson, The Facts

Millions of words have been written about the steel dispute, the Wage Stabilization Board's recommendations, and kindred matters. Rarely has the public been treated to a verbal soup in which the factual meat stock has been so scanty.

At the risk of seeming old fashioned, The CIO News would like to provide some factual answers to some current questions about the steel case:

Q. Did the WSB violate, or stretch, its formulas on steel?

A. No. The steel workers received a pay raise recommendation of 12.5c; under the cost of living formula of the WSB, they would have been entitled to 16c an hour. The fringe benefits of some 5c and hour are less than many unions have received in the past.

Q. Isn't the recommendation in the steel case the largest wage increase ever approved by the Wage Stabilization Board?

A. No; AFL building trades unions have negotiated, during the stabilization period, for greater wage increases; the teamsters have recently been granted as many paid holidays as were recommended to the steelworkers.

Q. Did the editorial writers, the commentators and the ODM get excited about those WSB recommendations?

A. Not that anybody ever noticed.

Q. Why?

A. Don't know.

Q. Well, the steelworkers union got just about everything it wanted from the WSB, didn't it?

A. No, again. For instance: the union wanted more wage increases than it got, and elimination of the southern differential; it was turned down for half the differential. The union got less than half its proposals for shift differentials. It asked for eight paid holidays—standard in many industries—and got only six. It asked for premium pay for Saturdays and Sundays, and received only a small amount of premium pay for Sundays only. And on many other points, the Board simply declined to make any proposal. It ducked the important issue of guaranteed annual wages, for example.

Q. Well, the package proposed by the WSB must cost a whale of a lot of money, anyway, doesn't it?

A. The public members of the WSB estimate that the recommendations, if put into effect now, would come to about 17.5c an hour. The industry simply has no basis for claiming the "package" would cost 30 or 60c an hour, or whatever figure the companies are using on this particular day.

Q. U. S. Steel says the wage package would cost the company $12 a ton. Is that right?

A. Let's try simple arithmetic for a change—even though that's getting old-fashioned, too.

1. The wage package, the WSB said, is 17.5c an hour.
2. U. S. Steel has about 200,000 workers covered by the union contracts.
3. On the average they work 40 hours a week, or 2000 hours a year.
4. So, you can compute the annual cost to the company for each cent of wage boost by multiplying 1c by 2000 hours by 200,000 employes. Thus, each penny wage boost costs the company $4,000,000 a year.
5. If each penny rise costs $4,000,000—then a 17.5c wage rise would cost 17.5 times as much—or $70,000,000.
6. The steel industry has a present capacity of 110 million tons a year; U. S. Steel has about 30% of that capacity; it produces about 33 million tons of steel a year. Divide those 33 million tons into the $70 million extra cost—and you get a $2.10 per ton increase—which is a far cry from the $12 a ton the companies claim is the cost of the WSB recommendations.

Q. Couldn't the companies absorb that increase?

A. Yes, because profits are at near-record highs.

Q. In asking for $12 price increases aren't the companies trying to break the government's price formula?

A. Yes.

Q. Do ODM Director Charlie Wilson and the press criticize the industry for asking for $12?

A. Not so you could notice it, with or without an ear trumpet.

Q. Do ODM Director Charlie Wilson and the press criticize the union for accepting a WSB recommendation that is less than the union originally asked, and within present WSB formulas?

A. Yes, they have. Read your local daily paper for details.

Q. Why do they not criticize the industry for trying to bust formulas and why do they criticize the union for merely trying to live within the formula?

A. Santa Claus will give you $64 if you give us the answer.

Spotlight On Segregation

The following article by James B. Carey, CIO secretary-treasurer and president of the CIO Electrical Workers, is reprinted from The Catholic Standard, Catholic weekly in Washington:

MOST AMERICANS think of our national defense in terms of rallying the greatest possible number of young men around the flag with guns in their hands.

Too few of our people are giving consideration to the moral and ethical course we could and should be taking in a world that is beset with confusion and chaos.

This is not the plea of a pacifist. It is rather the plea of one who believes that moral principle is more powerful than physical force.

The Cross and the Flag should march together.

The history of nations and peoples since the dawn of history all serve to prove the correctness of my position.

The United States emerged as a national entity in a world of governments that were virtually all ruled by political absolutism and commercial greed. The new philosophy was not hailed with acclaim by other governments; there was, rather, outright opposition.

It is these moral considerations that we must continue to proclaim and demonstrate if we are to give leadership in the world. We know we can win a war of physical force, and I believe we are prepared to pay the bill for any such war that is forced upon us.

We do, however, appear to be reluctant to pay the bill for an overwhelming demonstration of moral force, a tiny price that consists of repudiating our prejudices.

In the course of my term of office during the last 17 years as a national officer of the CIO, I have journeyed abroad on many occasions. I have been in Moscow, and I was in Prague on the very day that the Iron Curtain descended on Czechoslovakia.

The workers of every other land were naturally interested in their own security, but they were also interested in the people of the United States.

Hundreds of them asked me what we could do to strengthen the determination of all the peoples to win recognition of the human rights and dignity of man.

Coupled with these questions was a deep interest in what we are doing here at home to carry out our boasted guarantees of human rights to all persons within our border regardless of race, creed, color or national origin.

Now this is an embarrassing question for any American.

The only answer I could give was that we have in our system a set of principles and a code of laws that make it possible for us to solve this domestic problem of ours.

I was totally unable, of course, to account for the slowness with which we are moving, or for the attitudes of various and sundry individuals who oppose equitable treatment for Negroes, Mexicans, Jews, Japanese, American Indians and other racial or religious groups who are the targets of the white Gentile supremacists and the Communists as well.

I DO NOT need to go into the deep South for illustrations. I find plenty of examples here in Washington, our Nation's capital, as well as in many of our large cities throughout the United States.

I point to segregated schools, segregated recreational facilities, to the segregation policies of many hotels, restaurants, department stores and even some churches.

Of course, when I denounce these things I am called a Communist. I don't mind the name because the Communists have called me much worse names.

I do object, however, to the behavior of stupid people who give all the credit in the winning fight for human rights to the Communist Party.

Anyone who believes that the Communist is interested in human rights doesn't know that intellectual animal.

He really wants segregation of every type and description so that long reports can be made to the Kremlin Politburo for dissemination to the working people of every land under the sun including, of course, the teeming masses of darker skinned peoples.

Book Review—

How Little Shots Become Big Shots On Your Dough

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

YOU HEAR and read a lot these days about the "welfare state." It's a favorite term to hurl when unions seek social legislation for the benefit of workers and the general citizenry.

What the people who yell "welfare state" mean is that they are opposed to a concept of government which holds that the welfare of all citizens is its concern.

They claim to believe that it turns the government into a huge charity outfit to appropriate money for jobless insurance, pensions, health programs, school lunches for undernourished children, and other aid for those who may be without necessary income to take care of themselves. They hold that such funds as are spent by government for low or no-income Americans should be pared down to the bone and further aid left to private charity.

And yet many of these same people who speak scornfully of a "welfare state" themselves receive huge benefits from government agencies. They belong to what Blair Bolles' new book, "How to Get Rich in Washington," calls "the rich man's division of the welfare state."

This is a book that should be read by millions of Americans inside and outside the labor movement, and should be in every union library in the country. It ought to be a best seller.

Don't be mislead by the breezy title of Bolles' book, "How to Get Rich in Washington." It is a serious and careful study of corruption in our government backed up with documented facts. It will scandalize you. For it tells in sordid detail the disturbing story of how some American business men and government officials fleeced you and all other taxpayers out of billions.

Part of the story has been told, of course, in the press, but it came out in bits and pieces scattered over so long a period that its connections and full significance got lost as the months and years passed. Bolles ties it all together and shows how "the infiltration of law-breakers into positions of influence menaces the principles of democracy."

The three main sources from which flow the special favors that let business interests grab taxpayers' money, as listed by Bolles are:

1. Simple gifts by government to the favored, such as overpayments to industrialists in war and defense contracts.

2. Protection given by government to vested interests, such as the Interstate Commerce Commission gives to the railroads; the Dept. of Agriculture to sugar refineries; and Civil Aeronautics Board to the big airlines.

3. Most opulent source of all, discriminatory tax laws. "The tax laws are responsible for the worst of the confusion in Washington over the role of government in the United States today," he says. "The Administration, Congress, and a great many citizens chant about private enterprise and the American success in preserving it, while enterprise every day becomes more dependent on the Federal government. It is so dependent now that it scarcely can be called private enterprise at all."

Confusion has been added by the development of "military socialism" under which the government nurtures defense production. "The cold war with the Soviet Union," Bolles says, "has inured the public to this novel turn in the American system."

The postwar moral decay of Washington began during World War II, he writes, originated "in the military services which fell into the habit of playing Lady Bountiful to favorite Americans with other people's money . . . Congressional laws and military policy in effect guaranteed a profit to the war contractors no matter how improvident and inept they might be as businessmen."

Contract settlements provided great opportunity for milking the government, and extravagance "was systematized along lines that lead to privilege today," Bolles says.

Reports of the Comptroller General submitted to Congress later showed evidence of executive or fraudulent payment in more than a thousand of the limited number of cases studied—or in one out of seven. He estimated that at least $500 million went astray. But when evidence of fraud was submitted to the Dept. of Justice, says Bolles, the cases were seldom prosecuted.

The government's "haphazard adventures" in disposing of war surplus property that cost $42 billions, are also described. For example, there's the story of the truck dealer who paid the Philippine government $200 to $250 each for 872 trucks which were given to that government for free. In the U.S. the truck dealer found customers willing to pay $3400 to $5500 for each truck.

Ships that cost the taxpayer roughly about $4.5 billions were sold at a loss of more than 50%. Through ship subsidies, the taxpayers foot 33⅓ to 50% of the cost of constructing a ship.

Bolles traces the recent scandals that involved the Reconstruction Finance Corp. (RFC) from its origin in 1932 when it was conceived as "a buttress for a drooping economy," during the depression, down to the recent scandals that have dragged its name in the dirt.

The much publicized "mink coat" affair is peanuts, barely mentioned in the amazing recital of the shoddy intrigues undertaken to obtain loans through political influence and "knowing the right people," that were revealed at Senate committee hearings.

About all you can say for the RFC, Bolles says, is that if it was a debased agency, "it was debased in a democratic way," and "pandered to greed without being snobbish about it." For it was dedicated, he said, "to the cause of small business. Most of the loans which got the RFC into trouble went to borrowers with fewer than 500 employes . . . "

Bolles criticizes both President Truman, the Senate investigating committee and Congress for failing to take any definite measures to correct the abuses brought to light.

He says that after stubbornly defending RFC and dismissing the committee's report as "asinine," the President later merely replaced the five former RFC directors with a single administrator, leaving the basic moral problem unchanged. The Senate committee merely made a few mild recommendations that did not go the heart of the matter.

Only the American people have the power to remedy the corruption of government, Bolles writes. And to do this they will have to get rid of their apathy and laziness about public affairs, and become intelligently aware of what is going on.

In a democratic government, he says, "the people are to blame for the sins of their government. . . Politics in America is what Americans make it."

Anyway, Bolles has done a good job of informing the public about things going on in Washington that it should understand. You can't correct evils without knowing how and why they exist.

ICFTU Condemns French For Repression In Tunisia

THE EMERGENCY Committee of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions at a meeting in Brussels, Belgium, protested strongly against French repression of the nationalist and labor movements in Tunisia.

The committee pledged ICFTU support for the Tunisian General Federation of Labor (UGTT) in its struggle for the trade union and national causes, and called on affiliates to express solidarity with Tunisian workers. The French have used harsh measures to combat the country's growing independence movement.

"The ICFTU protests strongly against the warlike and repressive measures inflicted on the Tunisian people and against infringements of the freedom of speech and assembly," said General Sec. J. H. Oldenbroek. "It condemns especially the arrests of many trade unionists and demands that they be set free immediately and that concentration camps be abolished . . .

"The ICFTU considers that the demands of the Tunisian workers are fair and reasonable, guaranteeing as they do the rights of the French minority, including the right to work and security. In the face of this reasonable attitude, the ICFTU has no doubt that the cause of democracy and free trade unionism will prevail in Tunisia."

The committee also heard reports on developments in the ICFTU regional program, and approved proposals to give the free union movements in a half-dozen countries organization and educational aid.

"Clay pigeons are going to seem dull after this."

Commies Hunt Sucker Businessmen In Promoting 'Trade' Conference

COMMUNIST propagandists throughout the world are having a field day in a drive to dupe greedy capitalist suckers into attending the forthcoming Intl. Economic Conference.

The conference is set for Moscow for Apr. 3 to 10. Its programmed aim is to revive trade both ways through the Iron Curtain. Its actual aim—disguised with more subtlety than the Reds usually show—is to bolster the Soviet war machine.

The party is expressing this sudden desire for bigger and better business through a front for the World Peace Council, itself a CP front organization. The council is the outfit that circulated the phony Stockholm peace pledge throughout the world.

A few weeks ago it began to express concern for the businessmen and workers of capitalist nations it found were suffering from lack of trade with Russia and her satellites. Before that it had been blasting them as warmongers bent on ruination of the Soviet world.

The Communists expect 400 to 450 people to attend the conference from nations all over the world. They would include manufacturers, economists, farmers, businessmen, technicians, union members and cooperators. This hope has aroused some wonder in various circles. For wherever the Communists have taken over the country, manufacturers, farmers, businessmen and co-ops have been put out of business, and unions, technicians and economists went to work for the state or not at all.

There appears no doubt that businessmen in the free world would profit by trade with the Soviet bloc. Some of the profit might even trickle down to their workers in the form of employment. This is the bait the Reds are using.

But the real gainer would be Russia. As much as the western nations want Russian raw materials, the Soviet war machine has greater need of some of the things available only in the free world, according to a detailed study made recently in Europe and now being circulated in this country.

THE STUDY cited particularly some of the rare metals. The Soviet war machine can't run at top speed without them, and Russian agents are paying fantastic prices for them in black markets.

Observers pointed out that any country which stabilizes its economy by trade with the Soviet bloc will find itself more vulnerable than ever. Politics always outranks business in the Communist mind. Any country facing a crisis would quickly find its trade with the Communist nations cut off if the Reds saw a possibility of using the situation to seize control of the government.

CIO's Southern Drive Is Looking U

Elections Won For 10,000 In Month

(First of a series)

By WILLIAM WEISS

"Those who think the Southern Drive isn't making progress should volunteer their services and go down there and try it for awhile."

The speaker was Allan S. Haywood, CIO Executive Vice President and Director of Organization. He made the remark speaking in support of the Southern Drive at the last CIO convention.

He added that any volunteers would get a "real experience on resistance to worker's unions and real bias and religious prejudice."

Today, six years after the drive was inaugurated under the direction of the late Van A. Bittner, organizing in the South continues to offer a challenge to the men in the field.

The opposition is ever present and varies in intensity, depending on the amount of progress being made in a given situation.

If the campaign is going along satisfactorily, the organizer knows he can count on the book being thrown at him. This usually takes the form of concerted opposition from the owners of the plant, from citizen committees, from labor-baiting attorneys, and in some instances from the local clergy and the press.

On the other hand, if the campaign is just in the initial stage or has bogged down for some reason or other, the opposition usually remains in the background.

The antagonism of the clergy, when it occurs, is probably the most difficult to refute. Plenty of apparently successful campaigns have been turned into disastrous routs by the intervention of a minister on the side of the mill owner.

Because of the factors involved, the undertaking must of necessity be considered a long-range proposition. In the matter of manpower alone, Drive Dir. John Riffe and the directors in the eight southern states constantly face the problem of deploying their limited forces in the most advantageous manner.

Organizers must be ready on quick notice to move into a situation possibly hundreds of miles away, sometimes into another state, if assistance is needed.

The CIO Organizing Committee headquarters in Atlanta is the hub from which all activities are directed. Riffe, through the various state directors, is kept in constant touch with the whereabouts of every organizer assigned to the drive.

If a call for additional men should come from Franz Daniel in North Carolina, for example, Riffe is in a position to reach other state directors who will dispatch men they can spare within a few hours.

This centralization of direction has been one of the main reasons for the success of the drive of late.

Recently Virginia Dir. Ernest Pugh decided he needed help during the final stage of an organizational drive. A telephone call to Atlanta brought in additional men from North and South Carolina who reported to the organizer in charge of the campaign.

How well they fitted into the situation may be judged by the outcome of the vote —an overwhelming victory for the CIO.

Organizing in the South offers little in the way of personal glory and sometimes can be extremely disheartening. The southern organizer has to be an extremely versatile individual. He must be thick-skinned and level-headed and be able to pass off taunts tossed his way by company stooges.

Tense situations have a habit of springing up at the least unexpected moments in the Southern Drive. Countless times, organizers have averted trouble at mill gates by keeping cool under the most trying circumstances.

The ability to control an explosive situation has stood many an organizer in good stead. Some southern employers are not above deliberately attempting to create trouble in the hope that the union will be blamed for the consequences. Sometimes they are aided and abetted in their efforts by the police force of the community.

The anti-union attorney presents a very real problem in the efforts to organize the South. Men like Whiteford Blakeney, who operates in North and South Carolina, and Frank Contsangy in Georgia, have made careers out of fighting the CIO.

They are sought out by mill owners who are determined to keep the CIO out at any cost. But the effectiveness of their propaganda has been decreasing of late, organizers report.

Riffe and his assistants emphasize advisability of his men "living in South" in all senses of the word.

The average organizer may or may be a native southerner, but he is encaged to become a part of the commu in which he lives, settle his family, jo local church and register as a voter. M than a few of the northern organizers h married southern girls.

South may have had an adverse effect a union membership in the North, but th process may prove eventually to be of ue to unions in the southern area.

t is a foregone conclusion that the new nts being built on a hitherto unknown le will have to be manned in some of more skilled jobs by northern labor ported for that purpose.

Some of these new workers are bound o be union men and women who can form he nucleus for intra-plant organization ves. This is a feature which has been lly lacking and which is blamed for the ficulty in setting up functioning organ- g committees within many plants in past.

When the Southern Drive first got under y, and for some time afterward, CIO anizers were about as welcome in most thern towns as the plague. Often it s impossible to secure lodgings of any t near the project on which the or- izer was working.

Businesmen tended to be openly antag- stic and "Citizens Committees" were stily formed for the purpose of combat- g "these outsiders in our midst."

t took a lot of courage for a worker to seen talking to a CIO organizer in those ys and many paid the penalty by being mmarily discharged. Meetings, when ey were held, took place in workers' omes, usually at night.

Changes have come about during the st year, however, which account for the ptimistic feeling these days among every- connected with the Drive.

Last month alone, bargaining rights re won for 10,019 southern workers. ection petitions to the National Labor

Biggest plant won by the Southern Drive so far this year is the giant Hercules Powder Co., Radford, Va.

Relations Board covering 13,000 more have been entered.

The most impressive victory to date this year was at the Hercules Powder Co. at Radford, Va.

This campaign, conducted in close cooperation with CIO Chemical Workers officials, was cited as an excellent example of the teamwork existing betwen Southern Drive activities and various CIO international unions.

As a result of this victory, UGCCW gained approximately 7500 new members, with the possibility of adding 2500 more when plant expansion plans are completed.

Terming the entire campaign "an organizer's dream," Pugh stressed the important part played by excellent community relations maintained during the Hercules drive.

He called the Radford victory "the opening wedge" in organizing the unorganized in Virginia and predicted that the CIO will win bargaining rights for twice as many workers this year as it did in 1951.

Mistakes have been made in the past, but today the Southern Drive is operating at a high rate of efficiency with little lost motion. The men assisting director Riffe in the Atlanta headquarters—Loren Nelles, his assistant; Sec.-Treas. Oral Garrison; John Brownlee, in charge of NLRB matters; John Ramsay, director of Community Relations; and Dick Conn, publicity director, to mention a few—are all experts in their respective fields.

The CIO can be proud of the job these men are doing in the difficult job of organizing the South. With the continued whole-hearted cooperation of the state directors and the men in the field, the number one organizational goal of the CIO will be realized.

Church Recognizes Rights Of Labor

MUCH of the credit for the gradual breaking down of the barriers confronting the CIO in the South is due to the unceasing activities of John Ramsay, director of CIO Community Relations.

Ramsay, who is a vice-president of the National Religion and Labor Foundation, and his assistant, Miss Lucy Randolph Mason, have made fruitful contacts in all professional groups, with distinct emphasis on church people.

A large mailing list of ministers and lay people in every city of any importance in the South is maintained.

The result of this work has been gratifying as indicated by the following resolution passed by the Southern Baptist Convention, representing more than six million members in more than 26,000 churches in the South:

"We recognize the right of labor to organize and to engage in collective bargaining, to the end that labor may have a fair and living wage, such as will provide not only for the necessities of life, but for recreation, pleasure and culture."

'Crime Against The People'—

Chicago CIO Takes Stock of The Big Job Still Ahead

By BOB SENSER

"The court will now hear the case of the Conscience of the People vs. the Chicago Community. You the jurors will hear the evidence and then leave the courtroom to reach your decision."

Witness after witness testified on "The Crime Against the People" at the 7th annual conference of the Chicago Industrial Union Council.

A mock trial and eight "jury sessions" (work-shops) gave 350 CIO members a chance to take stock of the big job they still have ahead of them in Chicago. The conference was held Mar. 22.

With a political reform sentiment sweeping Chicago at the present time, the conference again and again underscored its theme:

"Poor housing, inadequate welfare services, and bad human relations are just as much crimes against the people as the political scandals now receiving so much justified attention."

The case was documented by four of the council's committees: Community Services, Human Relations, Housing, and Armed Services and Veterans.

"Judge" Abraham Brussell, attorney for the Illinois CIO Council, did not declare the verdict. The jurors were too busy figuring out ways to prevent further crimes.

The stiffest indictment came in the field of housing. Said Willoughby Abner, Auto Workers regional education director:

"Chicago has failed, and failed miserably, in providing decent shelter for its people."

LIKE others, Abner laid the blame primarily on the doorstep of Mayor Martin Kennelly. "The mayor," said Abner, "has not provided the kind of aggressive leadership that is needed to supply Chicago with public and private housing."

Mike Mann, secretary-treasurer of the CIO Council, revealed the results of a recent housing survey made by CIO volunteers. "In our survey," said Mann, "we found that 25% of the tenants were paying rents above the legal ceiling."

The shortage is so bad, Goodman pointed out, that Chicago families with incomes between $2000 and $3000 are spending an average of 58% of their income on housing. (Real estate men consider 20 or 25% as "proper.")

Goodman charged that real estate interests in Chicago "are consciously and deliberately holding down the production of housing, because the shortage gives them the chance to raise rents."

He reminded CIO members that Chicago is the national headquarters for the "central core of the real estate lobby"—the National Association of Real Estate Boards, the National Association of Home Builders, and the U.S. Savings & Loan League. He charged that Chicago gas being used as "a laboratory for working out a non-housing program."

The housing session unanimously agreed that the Chicago CIO locals must redouble their efforts on a program to get more homes built.

"We have taken a worse beating than any other city in the country," Ted Robinson of the Government & Civic Employes said, "and the citizens haven't really gotten mad about it. It's time we stop being suckers."

Chicago's record in the field of human relations is only a little better. Many private hospitals still discriminate against Negro patients, a speaker from a welfare agency declared.

LEADING OFF the 7th annual conference of the Chicago CIO Council was a mock trial indicting Chicago for its failure to solve community problems. From left: Witness Willoughby Abner, Council vice president and UAW regional education director; Prosecuting Atty. Jewel Rogers, of the Legal Aid Bureau of United Charities; Defense Atty. Herman Will, Methodist Peace Commission; Judge Abraham Brussel, CIO attorney; Witness Robert Neal, Welfare Council, Metropolitan Chicago; and Witness Leo Goodman, secretary of the CIO Housing Committee.

Lucius Love of the Steelworkers pointed out that some advance was being made in fair employment.

"ONE LARGE Department store, Carson Pirie Scott," he said "hires people on the basis of merit. But another store, Marshall Field & Co., now celebrating its 100th year, uses white skin as a job qualification. Marshall Field's doesn't employ a single Negro, not even for janitoring."

Other sessions had similar down-to-earth discussions on "The Larceny of Liberty" (civil liberties), "Indictment of Isolation" (world affairs), "Are These Deaths Necessary?" (industrial safety), and "Defendants: Chicago's Children."

At these sessions and at the evening banquet the council did more than indict. It also applauded. The loudest applause went to the winners of the council's annual award for "outstanding service to the community." Recipients were Clifton Utley, Chicago radio and TV commentator, and his wife, Mrs. Frayn Utley. The Utleys have long been prominent in promoting better human relations and in other community endeavors.

The annual award for "excellent labor-management relations" went to Plant 68 of the American Can Co. and the 2000 employes who are members of Steelworkers Local 1478. Among their joint accomplishments: a blood donor service for vets, a high safety-consciousness, acceptance of disabled veterans and handicapped civilians as employes, and a "mutual trust and respect in carrying out the provisions of the union contract."

Other awards for outstanding work in promoting better human relations and community services went to Local 1059, UAW, at the Doehler-Jarvis Corp.; Local 1422, USA, at the Inland Container Corp.; and Local 6, UAW, at the Intl. Harvester Co.

World Facing Return To Barbarism

THE WORLD is threatened with a return to barbarism without realizing it, James B. Carey, secretary-treasurer of the CIO and president of the CIO Electical Workers, last week told a rally of the League for the Rights of Man.

He spoke at a meeting in Freedom House, New York, protesting the execution of a group of Spanish trade unionists.

"One of the most frightening tragedies that has overtaken man in the second half of the twentieth century," said Carey, "is his growing inability to respond to tragedy.

"We are slowly becoming men whose senses are blunted. We can no longer feel sick-hearted—as once we could—at outraged justice. We are no longer sensitive—as once we were—to individual human suffering, persecution and the deliberate taking of life.

"We are no longer capable of terrible indignation when human dignity is trampled on; we are no longer able to weep tears of pity and wrath over tyranny and torture.

"We have become—or are in danger of becoming—men whose minds are dulled by mass slaughter. Our intellects, our senses, cannot grasp the meaning of the 22 million human beings killed in World War II. The wounding of 34 million others in the same war is too vast, too horrifying for us to comprehend.

"The coldly planned extermination of seven million Jews is so enormous and unbelievable a tragedy that it can hardly make an impact on us. The enslavement of 15 million laborers by Soviet Russia's bloody tyrants leaves us numbed and with a feeling of something unreal.

"We are threatened with a return to barbarism—not simply because man has devised means for the mass slaughter of his fellow-men, but because he no longer feels the meaning of that slaughter.

THE MIRACLE of the human life no longer seems miraculous. The preciousness of the individual and the inviolability of his God-endowed rights belong increasingly to the past.

"We accept much of this loss without being conscious of our losing it. We tend to a contagious fatalism which implies that tragedy on a world scale is inevitable.

"And yet the future of the world, the dwindling promise of peace and sanity and of all human values, depend on our hearing the voices of such men as these condemned to death in Spain. Even more, the survival of human decency and dignity depends on the voices of such men—in prisons, in death cells, in slave labor camps—reaching the millions who are still free.

"For our own survival, for the rights of men to walk again with their heads high, for the freedom of our children and the generations to come, we must not only hear those voices; we must recapture the capacity to be aroused by them.

"NINE MEN in a cell in Spain, condemned to death—nine obscure men, as obscure as Sacco and Vanzetti were—they are our brothers more intimately than any mortal kinship could make them."

In another New York speech, before an assembly on the Bronx campus of New York Univ., Carey discussed labor and ethics.

He told the students about the Statement on Ethical Practices adopted at the National CIO convention last November, and pointed out that the CIO was the "first major organization of any sort or description" in the U. S. to take a position on ethical practices.

In the CIO, he added, ethics involves more than financial considerations. Ethics are "ground into the dust," he explained, when individuals are denied their human rights, their equality at the ballot box, or because of race, creed or color, a chance to work.

Canadian Rail Union Ousts J. E. McGuire

J. E. McGUIRE, veteran Canadian trade unionist and national secretary-treasurer of the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway Employes and other Transport Workers, has been removed from office and expelled from the union, the national executive board announced last week.

The brotherhood is one of the larger affiliates of the Canadian Congress of Labor, with which CIO locals in Canada are also affiliated.

McGuire was expelled after a trial by the board on charges that included circulating false and misleading information, "villification of a fellow officer and member, namely, the National President," "disregarding constiutional authority without proper approval," and "general desregard for supervisory authority."

THE president he was found guilty of villifying is A. R. Mosher, who also is president of the CCL. Mosher did not sit as a board member during the trial, and appeared only as a witness. McGuire did not appear, but asked a postponement because of ill health.

"The board took note of the fact that Brother McGuire," the board said in its report, "despite his claim of illness, was carrying on extensive activities from his home, was able to travel, organize and attend meetings."

McGuire was not represented by counsel, although he had that right. He also has the right to appeal to the next convention, which will be held in Ottawa in September.

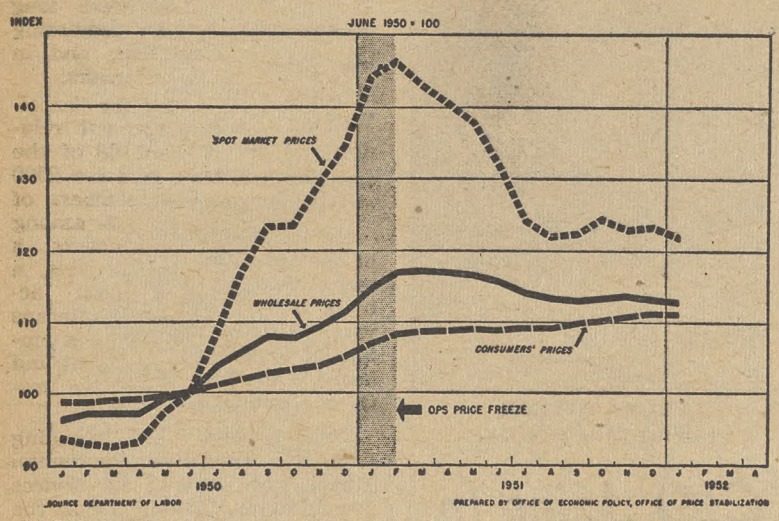
"We have come to the irresistable conclusion that the charges have been proved to be true," the board said.

Mosher said: "I do not think I am thin-skinned or vindictive.

"I can, and do, readily forgive any attack on me personally, but my duty and responsibility to the membership which has honored me with its confidence since our organization was established in 1908 is something that cannot be brushed aside.

"I have had occasion to perform many unpleasant tasks in my 44 years in office, but this experience was the worst."

Price Index Goes Down-- Just Part Of A Fraction



CONSUMERS don't gain from wholesale price decline. This OPS chart shows how spot raw material prices (wool, wheat, cotton, copper, etc.) have dropped from post-Korea 50% increase, while wholesale price index is leveling, but there hasn't been any sizeable drop in consumer prices.

★

THE COST OF LIVING in the period between Jan. 15 and Feb. 15 registered its first drop since last July, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics' Consumers' Price Index.

The drop followed months of declining wholesale prices. It was small—six-tenths of 1%—but it was the largest since December 1949. The index itself—the "new" one—sagged from 189.1 on both Dec. 15, 1951, and Jan. 15, 1952, to 187.9 on Feb. 15.

Ewan Clague, BLS commissioner, warned the decline doesn't mean the bottom has dropped out of prices. It does not necessarily indicate either a long-term trend of a "weakening in basic prices," he said, but mainly reflects sharp seasonal drops in food prices.

Most of the drop in food costs was in fresh fruits and vegetables, which were off by 7.4%. Meats, poultry and fish declined by four-tenths of 1%. Paradoxically, wholesale fruit and vegetable prices registered sizable increases during the week before the new BLS figure was announced.

Sen. Moody (D. Mich.) described the decline as "good news" but warned against those who would try to use it to get rid of price controls. The modest drop he claimed, proves that controls "have worked and are working."

Here are the cummulative figures for the "new" BLS Index:

Senate Unit Stages Preview Of Price Control Hatchet Job

A PREVIEW of the full-scale Congressional free-for-all ahead on continuing price and rent controls was staged last week by the Senate Banking Committee.

After many intramural tussles, in which rent controls survived by only a one-vote margin, the committee decided to draft legislation continuing the Defense Production Act — with certain changes—for another year beyond June 30. President Truman asked for a two-year extension.

Before taking this step, the committee voted down a motion by Sen. Dirksen (R. Ill.) to let wage and price controls die with the present act. Republican Sens. Bricker (O.) and Schoeppel (Kan.) were the only members to support Dirksen's move.

Then a motion by Sen. Capehart (R. Ind.) to continue price and rent controls only until next Mar. 31 was rejected 9 to 4.

The landlord lobby's proposal to kill rent controls, introduced by its loyal followers Dirksen and Bricker, was turned down 7 to 6.

In other actions, the committee:

1. Refused to restore livestock slaughter quotas, which Congress banned last year at the request of the meat and cattle lobbies.

2. Voted 9 to 3 to keep the Herlong Amendment which forces OPS to allow wholesalers and retailers their pre-Korean percentage markups. By the same margin, it also broadened the inflationary effects of this provision by amending it to permit the percentage markups to wholesalers and retailers whose ceilings were set before it was adopted.

3. Approved a "hamstringing" rent control amendment requiring a public hearing before controls could be restored in any community that has been decontrolled.

4. Rejected an amendment by Sen. Lodge (R. Mass.) directing defense agencies to channel orders into distressed industrial areas with high unemployment.

5. Defeated motions to relax restrictions on installment plan buying and ease down payment requirements on automobiles, furniture, radio and television sets.

All of these committee actions had been opposed by the CIO.

In extending the Herlong Amendment, however, the committee also changed it to prevent price markups for increases in excise taxes — a practice President Truman criticized as inflationary and unwarranted. It also voted to liberalize provisions for import restrictions on cheese, butter and certain fats and oils.

Recalling that last year Congress further weakened even the inadequate measure reported by the committee, it is expected that most of the issues acted upon in drafting the bill will be fought all over again when the measure reaches the floor.

Dixiegops Spurn Bills For Consumer-Aid Unit

SEVERAL proposals to set up committees to protect consumers have been given a cold shoulder by the 82nd "Horsemeat" Congress.

The Dixiegop coalition has simply kept them bottled up in committees. The only one even to get a hearing so far is the proposal of Sen. Gillette (D. Ia.) and 23 other Senators to create a Select Committee on Consumer Interests.

Most of the consumer-aid proposals have been pending in the House and Senate since last summer.

Gillette's measure, introduced last July, was finally given a one-day hearing by a Senate Rules subcommittee Mar. 22. It ran into considerable Dixiegop opposition.

Gillette stated bluntly that "the greatest failure by Congress has been in ignoring the problems of consumers." He said jurisdiction over such problems is now scattered between several Senate committees, none of which is in a position to give special attention to consumer interests.

He pointed out that 10 of the 13 members of the Senate Labor Committee, "which certainly comes as close to any committee in dealing with the problems of millions of consumers who are members of labor unions," are sponsors of his resolution.

National labor, consumer, cooperative and teacher groups have urged its passage.

Sen. Aiken (R. Vt.), speaking for the Senate Agriculture Committee, said that there is no need for the proposed committee. He contended that consumer problems of all kinds are now handled adequately by the regular committees and Government agencies.

Similar views were expressed by Sen. Ellender (D. La.), chairman of the Agriculture Committee, Chairman Maybank (D. S. C.) of the Banking Committee, Chairman Johnson (D. Colo.) of the Commerce Committee, and Chairman O'Mahoney (D. Wyo.) of the Senate-House Economic Committee.

Bills calling for the creation of a committee similar to that proposed by Gillette have been introduced in the House by Reps. Dingell (D. Mich.), Javits (R-Lib. N.Y.) and Multer (D.N.Y.)

Scrapping Of Old Workers Decried By Textile Aide

OLDER WORKERS are being wasted in the nation as a whole, but in New England they are being scrapped, according to Solomon Barkin.

Barkin, research director for the CIO Textile Workers, spoke at a Conference on the Aging in Boston sponsored by the United Community Services of Greater Boston.

"Some employers in this region," he said, "are reducing their work forces either by closing enterprises or extending work assignments or increases in work tasks. Both reduce the normal complements of workers. Employers and New England capital have neglected the basic regional economy and thereby aggravated the position of the older worker."

N.Y. Labor Unity Move Collapses

COLLAPSE of a CIO-AFL unity committee in the New York City area was indicated last week following a dispute over bargaining rights for 5500 northern New Jersey brewery workers.

In its first major test two months after its formation, the committee designed to end raiding and cross-picketing between CIO and AFL groups, disbanded following charges and counter charges of bad faith.

Morris Iushewitz, secretary-treasurer of the New York City CIO Council, said his organization would not "yield one inch" in its determination to back the CIO Brewery Workers in the dispute with the AFL Teamsters.

He recalled that the New Jersey beer workers had belonged to the Brewery Workers (then in the AFL) for many years until raided by the Teamsters and are now demanding to return to the CIO union.

CIO Locals, Councils Take Lead In Fight Against Rent Gougers

CIO throughout the country is taking the lead in helping tenants defeat the relentless campaign of the National Association of Real Estate Boards and other landlord lobbies to kill rent controls.

Some of the highlights of the fight were outlined last week by Leo Goodman, secretary of the CIO Housing Committee, which has coordinated many local efforts.

He praised particularly the work done by CIO locals and councils in Chicago, Ill.; Hammond, Gary and East Chicago, Ind.; Pittsburgh, Wilkinsburg and Lycoming County, Pa., and Oak Ridge, Tenn.

"These communities are representative of many others where CIO action has been all-important in the fight on rent gouging," Goodman emphasized.

Lobby Hit

Recalling that the real estate lobby singled out the Chicago CIO for separate attack before the Senate Banking Committee two weeks ago, he explained that this was not surprising since one of the most successful fights for rent control has been waged by the Chicago Council.

This was conceded by the National Apartment Owners Association when it complained bitterly at the Senate hearings that two CIO members of the Chicago Rent Advisory Board had joined with other public members so that the board has acted "consistently in favor of the tenant." The landlords, of course, want it the other way.

"The significance of continued rent control in Chicago is obvious in view of the fact that the real estate lobby has succeeded in getting rents decontrolled in nearby cities like Milwaukee, Gary and Hammond," Goodman said.

A move to secure recontrol of rents in the last two communities, as well as in East Chicago, Ind., was launched last week by the Lake County CIO Council. Helping to shape the plans were John F. Milasich, secretary of the Lake County IUC, Lester Thorton and Joe Geniske of the CIO Steelworkers, George Lamb, president of the East Chicago City Council, and Bernice Fisher, secretary of the Chicago IUC-CIO.

The Gary-Hammond-East Chicago area has just been designated a "critical defense housing area" by the government as the result of action initiated by the CIO. As a result construction of 2700 rental and 300 sales housing units has been programmed by the Housing and Home Finance Agency.

Local builders and landlords are fighting the move as "unjust and unnecessary." At the same time, they indicated that they would move to build the low-rent and low-cost houses to forestall such action by the government, which the law authorizes to undertake the project if private builders don't do so within 90 days.

Production Hurt

How urgently the new rental units are needed is indicated by the fact that personnel directors of leading industrial plants in the area have pointed out for more than a year that the lack of low-rent housing is delaying important defense production. These included representatives of the Youngstown Sheet and Tube, Inland Steel and Continental Foundry and Machine Cos.

The lead in the Pittsburgh fight has been taken by Westinghouse Local 601 of the CIO Electrical Workers. A delegation composed of Fred McAllen, Stanley Jozwiak and Carl Schake carried the fight to defense mobilization officials in Washington.

The local is immediately concerned over the recent action of the borough council of Wilkinsburg, a Pittsburgh suburb, in voting rent decontrol. It is currently working to get 25,000 signatures on a petition asking that Wilkinsburg be declared a "critical" area—and rent controls be restored.

Because the NAREB tries to gain decontrol in suburbs as a prelude to an assault on the city itself, the CIO has asked that the whole of metropolitan Pittsburgh be included in the "critical" area.

A similar assault by the landlords in Williamsport, Pa., has been bitterly fought by the Lycoming County CIO Council, whose efforts last December prevented a vote by the City Council on decontrol. The CIO Council has asked that a Census Bureau housing survey be undertaken before the rent decontrol proposal is acted upon.

Pres. Harvey Lemon of the Lycoming County IUC, Charles Horton, business agent of the CIO Textile Workers local, and Robert Parks, president of the CIO Auto Workers local, came to Washington last week seeking to persuade mobilization authorities to declare the region a "critical" rent area.

Rent Boost Halted

At the atomic city, Oak Ridge, Tenn., the efforts of the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers have been instrumental in saving tenants of the 17,400 government-owned housing units there, and in Richland, Wash., and Los Alamos, N. M., an estimated $150,000 a month rent hike since last August.

UGC&CWA Pres. Martin Wagner has taken an active part in the fight, as has Jerry A. George, president of Local 288 at Oak Ridge. The union's battle began when the Atomic Energy Commission, acting on advice of a realtor - controlled panel, announced that it would impose a 20% rent boost.

AEC contended that government housing was exempt from rent control. After the CIO had called the absurdity of this claim to the attention of the House and Senate Banking Committees, Congress last year amended the Defense Production Act to make it clear that rent control does apply to government-owned housing.

Furniture Local Fights Decontrol

Fifteen persons appealed for the retention of rent controls and one landlord asked for decontrol at a hearing held by the Davidson County (N. C.) Commissioners.

But the commissioners voted to decontrol rents in the rural areas of the county. Local 286 of the CIO Furniture Workers at Thomasville, N. C., is using leaflets, petitions and telegrams to various public officials urging them to use their influence to reinstate controls.

As an example of rent gouging, the local was able—while controls were in effect—to have the rent paid by a World War II veteran for a 5-room shack reduced from $37.50 to $20 a month. Such relief is now impossible.

IUE Strikes Runaway Sylvania Unit

MORE THAN 400 members of Local 744 of the CIO Electrical Workers are out on strike at the Sylvania Products plant in Shawnee, Okla., because they have been refused wages, hours and working conditions in effect in other Sylvania shops.

Two days after they walked out, the company suspended operations. The plant is one of several that have been opened in the South by major firms in the electrical industry in the hope of imposing substandard wages and working conditions on non-union employes.

The IUE-CIO organized it a few weeks ago, won a National Labor Relations Board election and is seeking its first contract. Sec.-Treas. Al Hartnett of the IUE-CIO pointed out that the local manager refused the Shawnee workers the same things granted Sylvania employes at Huntington, W. Va., when he directed operations there.

The issues include wages, the union shop, a grievance procedure, checkoff, time study, night differentials and other protections for the workers.

The strikers are not eligible for unemployment compensation. The union is raising funds among its members in locals throughout the country to aid them.

CIO Joins In Parley On Handicapped

A CIO spokesman last week promised that local CIO unions will aid the physically handicapped—18% of the population—get jobs.

The promise was given by Frank L. Fernbach, associate CIO research director, who took part in a panel on epilepsy at the National Conference on Placement of the Physically Handicapped at Washington.

He urged physicians and social workers to take the job problems of the physically handicapped to local union halls, where he assured them they would receive cooperation.

More than 100 physicians, placement officers of the U. S. Employment Service, social workers, management and union representatives—and the handicapped themselves, some of them in wheel chairs—attended the meeting.

Participants in the panel on various crippling ailments included Pres. Martin Wagner of the CIO Chemical Workers; Sec.-Treas. James J. Mitchell of the CIO Shoe Workers; Paul Sifton, Washington legislative representative of the CIO Auto Workers; William Hanscom, Washington legislative representative of the CIO Oil Workers; and Ben Blankenship, legislative representative of the CIO Communication Workers.

Taylor Wins Presidency Of Shoe Workers

RUSSELL J. TAYLOR, national legislative representative of the CIO Shoe Workers, was elected president of the union in a referendum held Mar. 18, an official tabulation showed last week.

He defeated Emerson T. Pence, of Portsmouth O., the union's territorial representative in Ohio, by a better than three to one vote. Fifteen members of the international general executive board also were elected, 10 of them incumbents.

Taylor succeeds the late William E. Thornton, of Lynn, Mass., who died in December. The election was a regular one under the union constitution, and Taylor will serve for two years from his installation on May 5.

Shoe workers in a referendum next year will vote on a secretary-treasurer and six territorial representatives.

Taylor has been USWA legislative agent in Washington since 1947. He is a veteran worker in the industry, having been employed by the International Shoe Co. of St. Louis for 25 years before accepting national office. While in the plant he served as vice president, financial secretary and executive board member of Local 56-A.

Before coming to Washington, he represented Component Parts locals of the union, which are scattered all over the country, on the general executive board.

In only one general executive board contest was communism an issue. In New York, Steve Ocuto, with the support of the administration of the union's Joint Council No. 13, defeated Freda Casso, the incumbent. The leadership of the Joint Council is pledged to carry out the members' mandate to give unqualified support to the National CIO

UWUA Aide Named To N.Y. School Board

Ed Gideon, an official of the CIO Utility Workers, has been named to the board of the Willow Brook (N.Y.) State School for mentally retarded children. Gideon is financial secretary of UWUA Local 1-2.

CIO ELECTRICAL Workers appeal to Rep. Eberharter (D. Pa.), center, to use his influence to have Wilkinsburg, Pa., declared a "critical" area subject to rent control. Wilkinsburg is near the large East Pittsburgh Westinghouse plant, and the Wilkinsburg Council has voted to decontrol rents. Secy. Leo Goodman of the CIO Housing Committee (right) helps present IUE's case. IUE petitions demand recontrol.

Organizationally Speaking

TORNADOES ripped Arkansas on Mar. 21, and according to reports from Reg. Dir. Lee Tucker the results were devastating. It is estimated that 111 persons were killed, 788 additional people were injured, and property damage will exceed $25,000,000.

Dir. Tucker states that many of the dead and injured are CIO members, belonging largely to either the CIO Woodworkers or the CIO Shoe Workers.

National Dir. Leo Perlis of the CIO Community Services has sent Rep. Ferguson Donovan to Arkansas to extend all possible aid to the victims, and to cooperate with the Red Cross and other relief organizations in the area.

THE WRITER last week addressed a meeting of representatives of CIO affiliates in Akron, O. Legislative Rep. Frank Hoffman of the Steelworkers and Legislative Rep. Tom Owens of the Rubber Workers also spoke. It was decided that CIO would support Walter Huber for Congress. Mr. Huber has always shown that he is for the worker 100%. Executive Sec. Leo Dugan of the Akron IUC presided over a very good meeting—one that reflected the spirit of '36.

From Akron I traveled to Pittsburgh to attend the convention of the Pennsylvania State Council. Pres. Philip Murray was present and addressed the delegates. He presented the facts of the present steel controversy in which Charles E. Wilson has tried to set aside the findings of the Wage Stabilization Board, despite the fact that the WSB is the duly recognized agency to handle such matters.

The CIO Steelworkers have cooperated in every way with the board and on requests from them and the President of the United States have postponed strike action. When the board handed down its decision, the Steelworkers voted to accept the decision although it did not represent all that was asked for.

★

SOME REACTIONARY congressmen, taking their cue as always from big business and their representatives, are talking about legislation to interfere with the function of the WSB. Labor will fight their efforts all the way.

The convention was one of the largest ever held by a state council. Harry Boyer, president, and Harry Block, secretary, have done a fine job and are to be congratulated for an excellent convention.

The steel situation points up the fact that we must remain strong, and the one way in which we can do this is to continue to organize the unorganized—organizing all workers is paramount—lets go!

The CIO Local Industrial Union No. 78 has won two more representation elections in El Centro, Calif., according to word from Reg. Dir. Iwrin L. DeShetler. At the Atlantic Commission Co., the vote was CIO 28, no union 16; Dave Freeman Co., CIO 72, no union 1. Reps. Clayton Coon and Richard Perry of the local and CIO Rep. James R. Spangler directed the organization work.

Sec.-Treas. Ross Blood of the CIO Shipbuilding Workers reports that in a representation election at the H. B. Nevins shipyard, City Island, N. The board certified the IUMSWA as the bargaining agent.

Jumping Joe Sues Benton For $2 Million

THE SENATOR who has probably damaged more reputations than any other person in U. S. history last week contended his own is worth $2 million.

Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.), who faces possible expulsion from the Senate for character assassination, filed a libel and slander suit for that amount against his chief critic, Sen. Benton (D. Conn.).

Benton had invited such a suit by waiving his Congressional immunity and accepting "full legal responsibility" for the charges he made against the Wisconsin demagogue in calling for his ouster.

McCarthy's strategy in filing the suit at this time is evident. The Senate is due to act in the near future on a "vote of confidence" called for by the subcommittee investigating him. The chairman of that group has charged that McCarthy falsely and maliciously slandered the subcommittee during its probe.

At a press conference, McCarthy said he intends to serve as his own lawyer in the case so that he can cross-examine Benton under oath during the trial and pre-trial examinations. That will enable him to go on a wild "fishing" expedition, since slander trials allow a wide range of questioning.

In his suit, McCarthy — who has himself steadfastly refused to waive Congressional immunity —charged that Benton has pro-Communist friends and had protected bad security risks. Benton, of course, cannot file a countersuit against McCarthy as long as he hides behind his Senatorial immunity.

Declaring that he agreed "completely" with Benton's evaluation of McCarthy's actions, Sen. Lehman (D. N.Y.) said he was glad McCarthy "has been forced to accept Sen. Benton's challenge."

CIO Urges Senate Unit Okeh For 2 Health, Safety Bills

SPOKESMEN for the CIO, the Auto Workers and the Steelworkers testified before the Senate Health Subcommittee last week for two bills aimed at advancing the health, safety and welfare of American workers.

One, sponsored by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.), sets forth a national policy on occupational health and safety covering products that move in interstate commerce. The other was introduced by Sen. Murray (D. Mont.) and provides grants-in-aid to state agencies to improve standards and performance at that level.

Harry Read, executive assistant to CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and director of the National CIO Committee on Health, Safety and Welfare, read the subcommittee sections of the resolution adopted at the 1951 CIO convention deploring the rising toll of death and accident in industry and reiterating the CIO position that high health and safety standards be set by law.

The two bills under consideration are not mutually exclusive, he pointed out.

"The adoption of enforceable federal standards as to goods moving in or affecting interstate commerce would not solve the whole problem," he said.

"There still remains a tremendous number of manufacturing establishments operating wholly intrastate. Only a state labor agency can properly deal with these under the police powers of the state."

Testimony on behalf of the Auto Workers was given by Paul Sifton, national legislative representative; Lloyd Utter, director of the Health and Industrial Safety Div., and Heinz Szeve, assistant director of the Foundry Dept. Frank Burke, health and safety director appeared for the Steelworkers.

TWUA Fights Rug Firms' Move To Cancel Contracts

IN AN APPARENT move to head off any demands for wage increases, three leading carpet and rug companies have cancelled their contract with the CIO Textile Workers.

The three companies — Bigelow-Sanford Carpet Co., Alexander Smith, Inc., and A. & M. Karaghuesian, Inc. — employ about 12,000 workers. The union has more than 25,000 carpet and rug workers under contract, but the three concerns customarily set the pattern for the industry.

Cancellation notices were received by TWUA from the three firms shortly after delegates from all of the union's rug and carpet locals met in New York City and reaffirmed their 1951 program of a 15c an hour increase and a cost-of-living pay clause.

"The demand of the three companies was received shortly after our conference adjourned and before any announcement of our decision had been made," said Jack Rubenstein, TWUA's carpet and rug director.

"Obviously the industry wants to cut wages and weaken contract benefits, rather than to keep in step with American industry as a whole.

"THE ACTION of these employers is shocking in view of the way they have lagged behind the rest of the textile industry, during the last 18 months.

"A wage increase of 15c across the board would not even require approval of the Wage Stabilization Board."

Rubenstein added that he had advised the local unions to "take whatever action they deem necessary to prepare for our coming struggle."

The contracts expire June 15. On the urgent request of the employers, TWUA carpet and rug workers refrained last May from making any demands, but allowed the contracts to renew for a year.

TWUA Tells Government How To End Ghost Towns

THE CIO Textile Workers last week told the government how to ease unemployment and prevent ghost towns in New England and other textile centers.

TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve and Solomon Barkin, the union's research director, testified before a U.S. Surplus Manpower Committee panel. The committee is advisory to Charles E. Wilson, defense mobilizer.

Pointing to an unmeployment rate running as high as 23% in such a typical textile center as Lawrence, Mass., the TWUA officials proposed:

- Spreading the work, with government work assigned to idle and work-slack plants.
- Stop awarding contracts to mills working two 40-hour shifts.
- Declaring the textile industry "a depressed industry."
- Preferential negotiation of contracts with textile mills and all other plants in distressed manpower areas.
- Designating as critical areas certain areas now included in larger manpower areas listed by the Labor Dept. (Such sub-areas—which are not listed by the Labor Dept.—may have a larger unemployment proportionately than the areas in which they are included.)
- Open bidding on all government contracts not awarded in distressed areas among plants that are not working two 40-hour shifts.

THE panel chairman, J. Forrester Davison, appeared to be concerned by the language of Manpower Policy Order No. 4—issued by Wilson—which referred to promoting the general welfare of the country. The panel was set up, under the order, to see what steps can be taken to relieve the textile unemployment crisis.

Davison's judicial approach led Rieve to declare "we've got to keep the workers' morale fit during the world-wide struggle" against communism. He explained that jobless workers are dispirited workers.

"There is more at stake than the productivity of a particular employer," Barkin reminded the panel. He told of letters written in 1949 by many TWUA members in Lawrence, Mass. — which he described as "the No. 1 depressed area" in the industry—to relatives in Italy which helped prevent the Communists from winning the general election.

He quoted official Massachusetts figures showing that there were 13,000 unemployed in Lawrence during February—23% out of a total work force of 50,000. Barkin said that in addition there were 5000 in Lawrence who have been out of work so long that they have lost all claim to unemployment compensation.

"The contraction in employment which we have spelt out in the statistics cannot disclose the great misery which has overwhelmed textile communities,'" Barkin said.

"MOST mills are located in either single-industry communities or localities in which the textile industry predominates.

"As a result the textile recession has cast a greater pall upon the areas involved than would be suggested by the figures on the decline of the industry itself. . . .

"We are endangering the economic well-being of entire regions in which the textile industry is concentrated. . . . The other large industries in which the Surplus Manpower Committee is interested (apparel and shoes) are also substantially located in the textile regions so that recession in all these consumer goods has had a cumulative effect on these areas."

DIRE NEED of the nation's 150,000 unemployed textile workers is described to a special panel of the Surplus Manpower Committee by Emil Rieve and Solomon Barkin, president and research director of the CIO Textile Workers.

S.F. Bay Council Re-elects Bruhl

The Contra Costa, Calif., County CIO Council has re-elected Jack Bruhl as president for a third term. He also is president of CIO Oil Workers Local 587.

Sec.-Treas. E. J. Amiot, of CIO Auto Workers Local 560, also was returned to office.

Big Lobbyist For Oil Grab Moves In On Senate Floor

CONGRESSIONAL subservience to special interest lobbies reached a new low last week when the Senate suspended its rules to let a $1500-a-month oil lands lobbyist sit on the floor to advise Sen. Holland (D. Fla.) during debate on the oil bill.

It was probably the first time in history that such a spectacle had occurred. Senate Secretary Leslie L. Biffle and several other veteran Senate attaches said they could recall no precedent for the action.

Holland and the oil lobby are trying to persuade Congress to give away oil and natural gas deposits worth about $40 billion which the Supreme Court declared unequivocally belongs to all of the American people. The Dixiecrat has authored a "States rights" proposal giving coastal states title to the tidelands.

Sen. Hill (D. Ala.), on the other hand is seeking to use revenue from the rich offshore deposits for federal aid to education in all States. He took the floor after Holland's speech to declare that tidelands oil and gas are a national asset "too great to be dealt with as the plaything of a political game or the pawn of a financial grab."

When Holland began his speech, he asked unanimous consent that Walter R. Johnson, who has been a registered lobbyist for "States rights" tidelands legislation since 1948, and John Madden, assistant attorney general of Louisiana, be permitted to sit on the floor beside him.

Only a few Senators were on the floor and none objected. The two sat there about three hours, but no Senators protested. During his long speech, Holland referred to them from time to time and occasionally conferred briefly with Johnson.

55,000 CWA Members Vote Strike Okeh

CIO Communications Workers locals representing more than 55,000 telephone workers have voted strike approval by a better than a 4 to 1 margin.

No date has been set for strike action, CWA headquarters in Washington announced last week.

Workers involved in the strike balloting are employed by Michigan Bell (18,000), Ohio Bell (15,000), Western Electric (15,750) and Pacific Tel. & Tel. (7000, in Northern California).

Contracts covering these workers expired between Feb. 15 and Mar. 9 and have been extended on a five-day notice basis.

CWA began neogtiations with AT&T companies last January. Company offers made so far are far below what the union says it is entitled to under wage stabilization regulations.

In addition to a general wage increase, CWA is seeking to improve fringe items — seniority rights, grievance and arbitration machinery, contract provisions covering discharges and demotions, plus certain local items.

This cluster of wage negotiations is the first group of CWA-AT&T contracts to come up for renewal this year. Other Bell System agreements are set to expire shortly and by mid-1952 negotiations will be under way —or will have been completed— for all the 314,300 Bell System employes represented by the union.

Factory Job Layoffs Grow

THE LABOR DEPT.'S latest report shows that 383,000 more factory production workers were jobless in February this year than in the corresponding month last year.

"Over the year, employment reductions of 5% or more were reported in the apparel, leather, furniture and textile industry groups, reflecting decreased demand for consumer goods and restrictions on nondefense construction," the department said.

"In the leather and textile industries, employment levels this February were even lower than in February, 1939, in contrast to a gain of over 60% in total factory employment over the period." The year 1939 was a depression year.

Between February, 1951, and February, 1952, employment of production workers declined as follows: Textile, 150,000; apparel (men's and women's), 66,000; lumber, 85,000; leather, 32,000, and furniture, 31,000.

Steel Bosses Won't Budge

Price Gouge Demand Forces Workers Out

A strike in steel is set for 12:01 a.m. on Apr. 9, as the nation's big steel corporations refused to budge from their demand for super-price increases and the government redoubled efforts to avert a work stoppage.

Pres. Philip Murray of the CIO Steelworkers dispatched the strike notice to union locals and to the companies early Friday, Apr. 4, in line with a previous pledge to give the companies 96 hours' warning of a shutdown. Throughout the nation, steel mills began to bank their furnaces.

Murray, in making public the strike call, placed direct blame for the stoppage on the industry's greed for greater profits. He said:

"The strike should be recognized for what it is—a strike caused by the adamant and provocative stand of the steel companies against the government, against our stabilization program and against the American people."

Throughout his lengthy statement, Murray reviewed the history of negotiations with the companies since late last November. His theme: the union had accepted the recommendations of the Wage Stabilization Board as within the framework of wage stabilization policy—but the companies have refused to accept the price stabilization policy.

As The CIO News went to press, the government asked union and company negotiators to stand by in New York for possible further meetings over the weekend.

John Steelman, acting head of the Office of Defense Mobilization since Charles E. Wilson quit in a huff, announced that he had asked Nathan Feinsinger, chairman of the Wage Stabilization Board, to sit in

How To Change A Congress That Picks Pockets From Behind

"For every dollar we have gained in wages, Congress has assessed the working man a dollar in taxes and higher prices!"

That's the bread-and-butter reason why political action is more important than ever in 1952, the CIO Woodworkers said last week.

"Labor has a fight on two fronts: legislative and contractual. We're winning the latter. We'd better start winning the first!"

That's what IWA Pres. Al Hartung, Sec.-Treas. Carl Winn and other international officers of the wood union said in a joint statement.

Their statement touched off an IWA register, vote and PAC Dollar drive.

But the "pork chops" urgency of political action—addressed to Woodworkers in the Pacific Northwest, Midwest and South—applies to all unionists.

Union members who aren't good citizens, who fail to register and vote, are "destroying the effectiveness of their own contracts," the IWA officers warned.

For example, they cited what's happened to workers' wages in current dollars:

In 1945, the "all manufacturing" net average income for a worker family of four was $33.08 (that's for "real dollars," what they will buy at the grocery store.)

Today, said the IWA, it is only $33.19.

"We have only ourselves to blame if we fight a hard battle to win better contracts," the IWA officers continued, "then turn around to find a Congress which does not represent us has picked our pocket from behind."

There's no question what has caused "creeping inflation."

The IWA officers cite the Capehart and Herlong amendments to the Defense Production Act with their "escalator clauses that automatically prevent wages from catching up to prices," profit-grabbing by big corporations, scare buying for inventories by business firms, and the "unjust" loophole-ridden tax laws.

The IWA officers add this warning:

"No Woodworker should feel he is doing enough for himself and our fighting union until he has invested at least 2c a week in the CIO Political Action Committee.

"Two cents a week may easily bring returns of 100%. Where else can you find such an investment?

"Or do we want to look at our pay checks in 1959 and say:

"Oh, look! Our real wages are up another 11c in 7 years???"

Truman's Withdrawal Spurs '52 Campaigners

By GERVASE N. LOVE

THE NATION'S gently simmering political pot bubbled furiously last week in the wake of President Truman's decision not to try for another term and the primary elections in Wisconsin and Nebraska.

The CIO and its Political Action Committee were sitting out the scramble that followed the President's announcement of his decision not to run again.

They were more concerned now with pushing registration drives and at least for the time being were taking a greater interest in candidates for the House and Senate than for the presidency.

They were interested, of course, in the speculation about Gov. Stevenson of Illinois as a candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination with the apparent blessing of Truman, and the relative strength of the three aspiring Senators—Kefauver (Tenn.), Kerr (Okla.) and Russell (Ga.).

But they pointed out that while the race for presidency is more dramatic, the make-up of Congress is more important, in the long run, for the workers of the country.

They were also interested in the returns from the Republican primary elections in Nebraska and Wisconsin. They cited the fact that in Nebraska, the only state where Sen. Taft (O.) did not make a series of personal appearances, he made his best showing to date, with a clearcut write-in victory over Gen. Eisenhower.

How many electoral votes Taft will get out of Nebraska was not immediately clear, but he predicted he will have 12 or 14. Convention delegates in that State are not required to support the popular choice, but several had announced they would. Some others, who campaigned as supporters of Eisenhower, former Gov. Harold Stassen of Minnesota, or Gen. MacArthur, also had indicated they would back the popular choice. The Eisenhower forces claimed they did little campaigning.

In Wisconsin, another victory gave Taft forces new and badly needed hope. The win was said to have halted a desertion of his ultra-right wing supporters to the MacArthur camp.

TAFT picked up 24 delegates out of 30 in Wisconsin. Gov. Warren of California got the remaining six. Stassen, who had promised to give half of any he won to Eisenhower, finished third and won none. Eisenhower was not entered.

The Republicans tried to read into the results whatever meaning appealed to them. To Taft supporters, it was the biggest thing that has happened to the GOP since the Hoover victory. Eisenhower workers said Taft won Wisconsin by default and Nebraska because write-in voters had trouble spelling their candidate's name.

On the Democratic side, Kefauver snagged all of Wisconsin's 28 delegates and four in Nebraska. Kerr, who waged a vigorous campaign in Nebraska, ended up with six.

During the week Taft also picked up four disputed delegates in Tennessee. He was expected to pile up additional votes at Republican state conventions in Iowa, Idaho and Michigan.

Primary elections were to be held this week in Illinois. Stevenson is a candidate for the Democratic nomination for governor and will not be a factor in the presidential contest. As the week ended, he had not announced his availability for the presidential nomination, but at the same time refused to say he would turn it down if drafted.

CIOer Elected To Congress

Leo W. O'Brien, long-time member of the CIO Tri-City Newspaper Guild and a veteran newspaperman, was picked by the voters of Albany, N. Y., to represent them in Congress in a special election last week.

A Democrat, he was named to fill the unexpired term of the late Rep. William T. Byrnes (D.). He goes out of office when the 82d Congress ends in January, but presumably will be a candidate for reelection in November.

O'Brien becomes the only CIO member in Congress. He has spent most of his 30 years as a newspaperman covering the New York State Capitol for the Albany Times-Union and Intl. News Service.

Wage Board Gets Case Of Ore Miners

THE WAGE Stabilization Board last week was considering the demand of 26,500 iron ore miners—members of the CIO Steelworkers—for eliminating long-standing pay inequities.

This demand highlighted the program which the Steelworkers presented to a panel, which last week reported to WSB. With the exception of the pay inequity plea, the iron ore program was the same as that presented by USA-CIO for the basic steel industry.

The union is seeking the same 5c an hour differential between job classifications as prevails in steel plants under contract with USA-CIO.

Steelworkers' representatives told the panel that jobs at the mines now pay from 18c to 41½c an hour less than the same jobs in steel plants.

The WSB panel chairman was Dr. Harry Shulman, Yale Univ. law professor.

"IT IS fitting that WSB now has an opportunity to recommend rectification of the discrimination against iron ore workers which was caused by a fortuitous change in the stabilization policy which governed its predecessor — the War Labor Board," the union's representatives said.

CIO Phone Union Set For Strike Deadlines

APPROXIMATELY 16,000 key telephone workers were set for a national strike at 6 a.m., Monday, April 7, to gain substantial pay increases.

They are the Western Electric installers and warehousemen, connected with the Bell Telephone System in 43 states and the District of Columbia.

They are members of the CIO Communications Workers, as are 41,000 other telephone workers in Ohio, Michigan and Northern California who also are scheduled to strike at the same time.

Faced with inadequate pay offers, all these CWA members have voted four-to-one to strike.

The three state CWA groups, which were set to hit the bricks last Thursday, postponed that strike deadline at that time at the request of CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, who is also a member of the Wage Stabilization Board.

In keeping with his promise to seek peaceful settlement of the dispute, Beirne last Thursday flew to Detroit to assist in negotiations for the Michigan workers. A Michigan agreement may set the pattern for the other states.

Up until midweek no offer had been made to 18,000 operators and plant craftsmen in Michigan and 7000 plant craftsmen in Northern California, the union said. The offer from Ohio Bell is worth only 9c an hour, which is substantially less than the workers are entitled to under current wage stabilization regulations, CWA reported.

Offers made by Western Electric also are far below what the government would approve, according to CWA.

"CWA will not settle for less than those wage increases permitted under wage stabilization regulations," Beirne said.

"CRITERIA established by the WSB entitle our members to substantial wage increases based upon increased productivity, living costs and loss of place in the American economy due to the lag between their wages and those of workers employed in other major industry.

"The Bell System and Western Electric can well afford to pay substantial increases, of the order permitted under stabilization regulations."

Beirne last week pledged CWA's support to the strike of the AFL telegraphers against Western Union. He sent Pres. W. L. Allen of the AFL union a copy of a letter sent to all CWA locals calling on them to respect the telegraphers' picket lines and to refrain from using Western Union facilities and services during the strike.

WSB Panel Backs UAW

A WAGE Stabilization Board panel last week upheld the CIO Auto Workers in its dispute with Borg-Warner Corp.

The panel advised the company to explore the possibilities of a company-wide agreement on national issues combined with local bargaining on local issues.

UAW struck last October over the issue, but its members walked back after President Truman referred the matter to the WSB.

The majority of the panel, which was headed by Dr. Harry Shulman, Yale Univ. law professor, said "the determination of whether they should make a single agreement is a matter beyond the concern of the NLRB and wholly for the parties themselves—just as is any other item in bargaining." Industry members disagreed.

Borg-Warner has insisted on separate contracts for each plant.

Steel Price Gougers Force Workers Out on any union-company meetings that may be held within the next few days.

Murray, in announcing that the strike notices had been sent out at the expiration of the union's fourth postponed truce period since Jan. 1, said:

"I am quite pessimistic and believe now that a strike will definitely take place." He added that he felt a "sense of outrage" about the companies' position.

Later, in his formal statement, Murray explained that "sense of outrage" in greater detail.

Noting that the Wage Stabilization Board's recommendations were far less than the union's demands, Murray said the union nevertheless was willing to bargain with the companies on the basis of the WSB package.

But, he commented bitterly, "the companies refused to bargain on the subject. In the meetings which began on Mar. 26 (after the WSB proposals were made public), they did not simply say 'no.' They said, 'no comment'."

The USA-CIO president charged that the companies wouldn't discuss the WSB's economic recommendations until they could get "prior assurance" of "price increases so big they'd make a profit out of it."

Blames Industry

"The responsibility for this strike lies solely with the steel corporations, which have sought to extort from the government and the American public an increase in their already fabulous profits as the price of making a reasonable settlement with the Steelworkers Union."

Murray charged that the steel companies sought to break the price regulations established for other industries, and to launch an inflationary spiral through price increases far higher than could be possibly justified.

"They sought their pound of flesh from the government and the public as a price for bargaining with their employes," he said.

The companies' desire to keep their abnormally high profits, and to get price increases far higher than they might be entitled to under the Capehart amendment, was made clear during the week of Mar. 31, Murray charged.

Pointing out that the union had waited three days in New York for meetings with the big steel producers during the week of Mar. 31, he said that the bargaining sessions didn't take place as scheduled "because special favors (sought by the industry from the government) didn't materialize."

When the industry's dickering with the government for special price privilege finally failed, he commented, "the industry, on Apr. 3—129 days after the negotiations first started—made its first and final offer to the union."

That offer, he said, amounted to just a bit more than half of what the WSB had recommended —and the union accordingly turned it down.

The approach of the strike deadline came after the industry stalled off for three days negotiations with the USA-CIO in New York, while trying to pry a price boost out of federal agencies in Washington.

Pres. Ben Fairless of U. S. Steel Corp. met with Ellis Arnall, head of the Office of Price Stabilization, trying to get more than the $5-a-ton price boost which Wilson reportedly recommended before he resigned as defense mobilizer.

Wilson's resignation, announced Mar. 23, was accompanied by a charge that President Truman "changed the plan we agreed upon" to grant a steel price boost beyond the $2-a-ton possible under the Capehart amendment.

The industry was holding out for $12-a-ton — for more than all direct or indirect costs of the WSB's steel recommendations.

Wilson's parting blast that the proposed WSB settlement "violates my sense of justice" and "still amounts to a serious threat to the stabilization of our nation's economy" was answered directly by Truman.

The President indicated that he got only a partial story on steel prices from Wilson, saying that since their Key West meeting a fortnight ago, "I have had a chance to go into the matter more thoroughly, and I find that the proposed changes in wages and working conditions are by no means unreasonable and do not, in fact, constitute any real breach in our wage stabilization policies."

These major WSB proposals are a 17½c wage increase graduated over a 12-month period, an 18-month contract, six paid holidays, the union shop, and (next year) premium pay for Sunday work. Total estimated cost is some 23c hourly.

Cites Earnings

The President also pointed to the high earnings record of the steel industry—which is the basis of the refusal to date of Arnall and Roger Putnam, economic stabilizer, to give in to the industry's sky-high price demand.

"For example," Truman said, "it seems to me to be quite material and important that the profits amount to a good many times as much as any increased costs they would incur under the recommendations of the WSB."

But the major steel producers were adamant, putting off the meeting they called with the Steelworkers, refusing to engage in collective bargaining, and building up for a situation which will amount to a lockout of both the men in the mills and the nation itself by the multi-billion dollar steel industry.

A few medium-sized and smaller steel firms, bargaining independently, did reach interim or final agreements with the USA-CIO along lines of the WSB recommendations. These include Kaiser Steel in California, the Detroit Steel Co., Ohio River Steel Corp. in Toronto, Ohio, and the Belmont Iron Works and Alan Wood Steel Co. in Pennsylvania. But all told these agreements covered only some 15,000 of the 650,000 workers in the basic steel industry.

Picket-line preparation and other strike machinery has been on a "standby" basis in the steel locals for months, and last week other CIO unions were alerted for strike assistance for the Steelworkers.

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey said the CIO's national and local council Community Services Committees have been advised to give aid in strike relief if the USA-CIO is "forced into striking."

The end of the steel truce—which has been extended four times by the union since Jan. 1 —brought these contradictory possibilities in Washington:

1. A hint that Truman might order government seizure of the steel industry.

2. Demands by Sen. Taft (R. O.) and others that the government slap a Taft-Hartley injunction and another 80-day delay on the union.

A study by the Justice Dept. of possible government seizure of the industry was ordered by John R. Steelman, presidential assistant who was named temporarily to the post Wilson quit.

In this connection, Sen. Murray (D. Mont.), chairman of the Senate Labor Committee, ordered a bill drafted for "actual seizure rather than token seizure."

Steel management made plain they would fight any seizure action in the federal courts.

Taft cried for injunctions while Dixiecrat Sens. Maybank (S. C.) and George (Ga.) denounced the WSB.

Humphrey Blasts

Ex-Mobilizer Wilson and reactionary congressmen were attacked by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) for "misrepresenting" and "misunderstanding" the WSB steel proposals.

Humphrey warned that the proposal by Sen. Dirksen (R. Ill.) to strip the WSB of power to act on non-economic matters would result in "unrest, confusion and strikes."

CIO officers, led by Murray, earlier warned the Senate that enactment of the Dirksen proposal "would make it impossible for any responsible free trade union to participate in the stabilization program."

In another congressional development, Sen. Lehman (D. N. Y.) indicated he believed the steel companies were striking against the government.

Lehman said that avoidance of a steel strike "requires negotiation in good faith with the union.

"As the situation is now developing, the threat of a stoppage of steel production is now being directed by the companies against the government to force unjustified rises in steel prices."

Oh, How Their Paychecks Grow

U. S. Steel Corp. is handing out salary increases up to 26.5% to its top brass, all the while moaning the sky would fall in if steel workers got a 12½c wage increase now with 5c more in the next year.

Pres. Ben Fairless: He got $261,000 in 1951, an increase of $47,033 or 22% over the previous year, and is in line for $70,000 a year on retirement at 65.

Enders Voorhees, chairman of the finance committee: He got $211,400 last year, an increase of $44,233 or 26.5%. His annual pension will be $75,000.

Irwin Olds, chairman of the board: He got $211,000, also with a $44,233 or 26.5% boost in '51, and his pension guarantee will be $55,000.

Protests Urged On Dirksen Bill

The CIO has called upon all unions and councils to help defeat legislative attacks on the Wage Stabilization Board.

It has asked that members of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee be advised immediately that organized labor strongly opposes the Dirksen Amendment, which is identical with the Lucas Amendment, killed in the House last summer. It would restrict the WSB to the single task of recommending inflexible wage ceilings and create a new board with a majority of public members.

The Senate committee is headed by Chairman Maybank (D., S.C.). Other members are Sens. Fulbright (Ark.), Robertson (Va.), Sparkman (Ala.), Frear (Del.), Douglas (Ill.), Benton (Conn.) and Moody (Mich.), Democrats; and Capehart (Ind.), Bricker (O.), Ives (N.Y.), Schoeppel (Kan.) and Dirksen (Ill.), the sponsor, Republicans.

'. . . And Restored To Arrogance'

A timely statement:

"In the face of these astounding profits under the present Administration, big business will never be able to convince the American people that it has been imposed upon, destroyed or even threatened. It has merely been saved from ruin and restored to arrogance . . . The only just criticism that can be made of the economic operation of the New Deal is that it has set out a breakfast for the canary and let the cat steal it . . . The unvarnished truth is that the government's recovery program has succeeded nowhere else so effectively as in restoring the profits of big business. Labor has had no such advance."

The statement was made by Supreme Court Justice Robert Jackson—then assistant attorney general—in 1938, during a discussion of profits and wages.

The words would apply with equal force today to the efforts of the steel workers to win a justified pay increase and to the screams of opposition from the steel industry.

Truman Upholds WSB Proposals

In accepting Charles E. Wilson's resignation as defense mobilizer, President Truman repudiated Wilson's claim that the WSB steel wage proposals are a "serious threat" to the nation's economy. Truman's letter to Wilson said in part:

AS FAR as steel wages are concerned, our discussion last weekend at Key West covered among other things what you described to me as the very unstabilizing effects of the wage settlement recommended to the parties by the Wage Stabilization Board.

Since that time, I have had a chance to go into the matter more thoroughly, and I find that the proposed changes in wages and working conditions are by no means unreasonable and do not, in fact, constitute any real breach in our wage stabilization policies.

As far as steel prices are concerned, it is true that I agreed as to a "possible necessity" of allowing some price increase. However, I understood the necessity for doing this was to be thoroughly explored in your talks with the steel companies and otherwise, before a final decision was reached on the matter.

The price control law requires that price ceilings be fair and equitable. I expect to see that that law, like every one, is faithfully executed.

If the eventual settlement of the wage negotiations is such that a price ceiling increase is required on grounds of fairness and equity or otherwise in the interest of the defense effort, it will be granted; otherwise, it will not. Such a determination should obviously be made only after a thorough examination of the facts.

For example, it seems to me to be quite quite material and important that the profits of the steel industry are continuing at extraordinarily high levels — that their profits amount to a good many times as much as any increased costs they would incur under the recommendation of the WSB.

I appreciate your attitude that both wage and price controls should be administered fairly and without regard to the special demands of pressure groups. I feel exactly the same way. I consider it is my duty and my responsibility to see that the public interest in a strong defense economy is placed above any private interest. I believe this should be done on the basis of the facts as they actually exist. I expect to continue to do my best to see that this is accomplished.

"I never reconsider, Simpson! You're fired — and don't let me catch you hanging around the premises!"

The President's Decision

Reactionaries will be able to take little joy from President Truman's decision not to seek re-election. For a generation more, Republicans will remember the 1948 campaign and their mistaken notion that it's possible to play fast and loose with the hopes and ideals of the American people.

In stepping out of the race, President Truman forces the opposition into the abandonment of a personal vendetta and the adoption of a policy program which it must try to sell to the American public. And in promising to campaign for the Democratic nominee, the President is placing his great talents once again at the disposal of the liberal forces of the nation.

This is no time to write a review of the Truman Administration; it still has 10 eventful months in office, and much history will be written before we inaugurate a new President.

But even now it can be safely said that President Truman has made his mark in history. He has shown the Soviet that the democratic world will not idly tolerate aggression; at the same time, he placed the hand of restraint on those who would have ruptured what little peace this battered world does enjoy.

The President, moreover, will be remembered for his Point Four program—a program of down-to-earth aid to backward areas that may, over the long run, prove to be our most effective antidote to the poison of Communist propaganda.

At home, the President has fought the good fight—against Taft-Hartley, against inflation, against those who would curb the civil rights of minorities and the civil liberties of every one of us.

Labor has supported the President in these good fights, as it will support every official dedicated to such a forward-looking program. But we will have a success only if our votes are cast on Election Day not only for a President but a Congress dedicated to the liberal aspirations of the New Deal and the Fair Deal.

Good Bye, Charlie

Fortunately enough, the government of the democratic United States does not run on corporation lines. Charles E. Wilson, from the moment he came to Washington from General Electric more than 18 months ago, never seemed to recognize the difference between government and big business.

Organized labor had no personal quarrel with Charlie Wilson; unions have "gotten along" with other businessmen who took government posts in times of crisis. Organized labor could, and did, quarrel with Charlie Wilson's philosophy—a philosophy that big business was automatically right 99% of the time and organized labor automatically wrong 99% of the time.

The Wilson attitude reached its biggest contradiction in the current steel wage dispute. Wilson assailed the Wage Stabilization Board's recommendations, although they were clearly well within the framework of its own stabilization formulas. On the other hand, Wilson fought like a tiger for a high price increase for the steel industry—while asserting he was fighting inflation.

The President did well to overrule this misguided frenzy; and Wilson should be happier back home in a corporation environment.

'OK, Lady, But I'll Need My Truck'

The Real Issue In '52

The following are extracts from a speech by Darrell Smith, assistant director of the CIO Political Action Committee, before an Indiana State PAC meeting.

THE ISSUE that is supposed to be uppermost in America's mind in 1952 is that of corruption in government.

It is as phony as any issue that has ever been raised in any political campaign. It is as phony as the high and low tariff issue of the early part of the century. It is as phony as the wet and dry issue and the religious issue, as the gold standard and the 16 to 1 ratio. They are all phonies.

The only real issue in 1952 is the same issue that has prevailed ever since 1932, when for the first time in the history of America we succeeded in accomplishing the election of a government to provide services to the people.

Regardless of what is said in the public press, regardless of what the propaganda is, you can see in their subtle propaganda, in their propagandizing among themselves, that there is only one issue in the minds of our opposition, only one issue in the minds of big industrialists and financiers:

Cut out government services to the people.

I am firmly convinced, and I think it could be very well proved, that they have only one motive in cutting out these services. That is, they want an insecure people in America in order that they may have a people they can exploit.

For the same reasons, they want to cut out the government services on welfare projects, on unemployment compensation, on old age and survivors insurance, on all these issues, for the same reason they want to cut out every conceivable kind of project which will benefit the American people.

They want this because it pays them to have a class of people, a class—I use the term deliberately—of people who are ignorant, meek and submissive, who must depend on them for their livelihood and for the very food they put into their mouths and the clothing on their backs.

If they can maintain a class of people like that in America, they can secure their special power and privileges. If not, then they are not secure and they are scared. They are scared to death.

We are going to face something a little unusual, I believe, in 1952. We had some of it in 1948, but this is something that is growing. Our opposition has succeeded in making fanatics out of its followers.

Ordinarily, during the days of the depression, we had the benefit of fanaticism on our side. We had zeal and we had emotion. We had the drive that only emotion can give, because we were afraid of something. We were afraid of insecurity.

Now our people, and we ourselves, are not too much afraid. We are not scared; we are not fanatic, but our opposistion is, and they are because they have been inflamed with a fanaticism about this "creeping socialism."

This creeping socialism is exactly what I am talking about. Service to the people, to them, is what they mean by "socialism."

THEY are not sincere when they do it, for they have been living under "socialism" for years. There is not a day when they do not use the socialized mail service, or ride socialized roads or bridges. There is not a day when they do not send their children to socialized schools.

They have been living in a society that is partly "socialism." They are worried about a kind of government that does not benefit them, but benefits people they want to exploit.

This is the kind of government they are worried about, and that is what they mean by this "socialism" cry they are raising to the skies. I am afraid they might get away with it because of the fanaticism they have succeeded in arousing.

Part of those government services that our opposition wants to cut out takes less than 5% of the tax that is coming out of the pay envelopes. Less than 5% is going to those welfare services.

In order to make people willing to give up that 5%, they call attention to the whole tax deduction. But it is a fallacy, and it is strictly propaganda.

Our people must be told that it is only 5%. If they are going to sacrifice everything they get from the government, every bit of security that they have learned to take for granted in the last 20 years, in order to save that 5%, they should have their heads examined.

10% Of Families Have 65% Of Savings

WHO HAS the personal savings? Certainly not the workers.

The personal savings are in the hands of top-bracket families, according to the new issue of the CIO Economic Outlook.

The Outlook reported that early in 1951 "10% of the consumer units owned 65% of the value of total personal liquid asset holdings in the United States."

The Federal Reserve Board defines liquid assets as bank deposits, postal savings, all types of U. S. government bonds, and shares in savings and loan associations and credit unions as liquid assets.

"The average liquid asset holdings of all American spending units, taken as whole, were $300," the Outlook continued.

Challenging the Commerce Dept.'s claim that there were $17 billion in personal savings in 1951, the Outlook charged that "the great saving bulge" is "phantom savings." The government agency also claimed such savings increased by $6.5 billion in 1951 over 1950.

The Outlook, which is issued by the CIO Dept. of Education and Research, said that "$3.5 billion of this so-called $6.5 billion savings spree total results simply from the fact that consumers paid off $.5 billion of their debts in 1951 while in 1950 they had increased them by $3 billion.

"This shift in the consumer debt status of American families is phantom saving.

"The trend toward squaring of accounts with the installment collector, the department stores, and the small loan sharks leaves the families of America with not one penny more stored up for future spending. Yet this item alone accounts for nearly one-half of the great savings spree of 1951.

'False' Savings

"The rest of the rise in personal savings achieved in 1951, above the levels of 1950, is identified as a growth in the rate of personal liquid asset saving. Let us take a look at this $4 billion figure and discover if it really represents an increased rate of personal liquid savings and, to the degrees that it does, who owns them."

The Outlook said that the increase was explained by three factors:

1. The rise in the volume of cash outside of banks and of banks deposits in 1951 "did not in any way reflect a similar growth in personal savings.

"The enlarged checking accounts and currency holdings of 3½ million unincorporated businesses are included in the total. In a period of advancing prices and an increasing volume of business transactions, both the amount of cash on hand and on deposit in checking accounts required for normal business operations naturally goes up.

"Likewise the cash holdings and the checking account deposits of individuals required for day-by-day personal use are built up. Since both the dollar incomes and the living costs of most American families ran higher in 1951, more money is carried in the individual pockets and in demand deposits.

"But the rapid bulge in the checking accounts and cash holdings of both unincorporated business and individuals in no sense can be identified as increased personal savings!

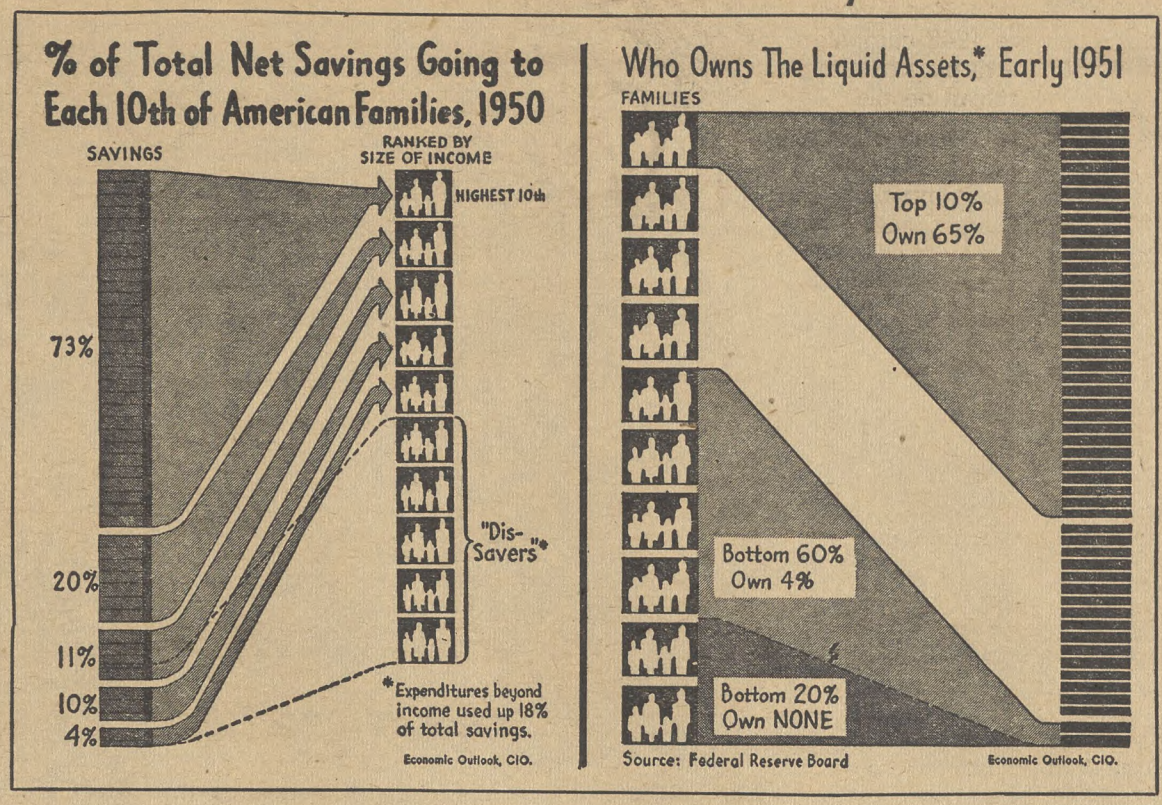
2. "The rapid growth in the volume of holdings of corporate stock during 1951 largely represent the savings of the well-off. It also reflects a substantial transfer of their assets into the stock market as an inflation 'hedge.' "

To back up this statement, the Outlook said that the 1950 Survey of Consumer Finances of the Federal Reserve Board showed that only 7% of the country's spending units owned stock in corporations which offered these securities to the public.

3. "The one form of liquid asset saving which declined in 1951 is the one in which wage and salary earners have engaged extensively in the past," the Outlook said.

"Purchases of U. S. Savings E Bonds went down. From a sales peak of over $12 billion in 1944, E Bond purchases dropped to less than $3.2 billion in 1951, the lowest point since the beginning of World War II . . .

" . . . While the total sales of E Bonds fell off in 1951, this was due solely to the switch of the wealthy to other forms of savings. Low and middle income families were also cashing in their bonds faster than they were buying in new bonds, but in their case, rising taxes and the increased cost of living were the major factors."



The Facts On U. S. Living Standards

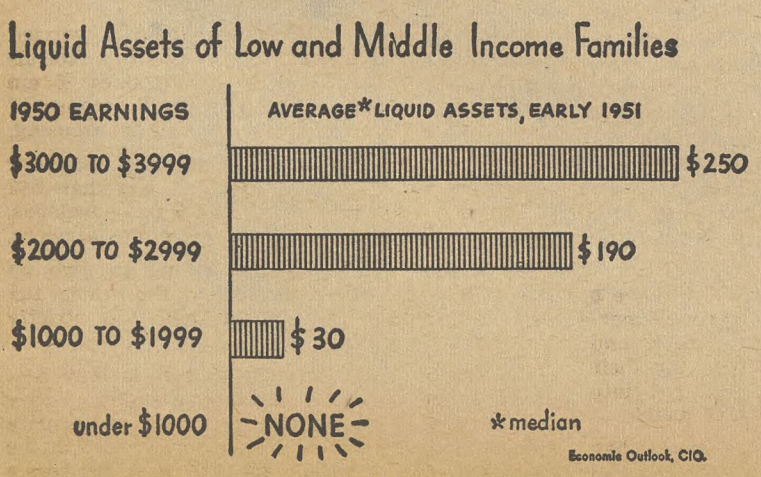
The income of the average family that year was $3300, according to the Census Bureau. This was $200 more than in 1949, but it was still below what the Bureau of Labor Statistics considers enough for a "modest but adequate" standard of living.

A "modest but adequate" 1950 budget for a city worker with a wife, not working, and two children was $3750 in Detroit, $3779 in Pittsburgh, $3926 in Washington, $3808 in San Francisco, and $3833 in Atlanta.

The Census Bureau reported that of the nation's 40 million families, 10 million had an income of less than $1000 in 1950, 30 million had less than $5000, and only 1.3 million had incomes above $10,000.



Phony 'Savings Spree' Reports Used Against Steel Union

DISTORTED interpretation of governmental statistical reports of a mammoth "savings spree" of U. S. workers' families are hampering collective bargaining in steel and other industries.

"Already the steel companies have seized on the personal savings figures released by government agencies to 'prove' that workers are earning more than they are able to spend, and therefore, savings are piling up," the Economic Outlook said.

" 'There is no shortage of consumer purchasing power,' they cried at the recent Wage Stabilization Board hearings, so certainly, workers do not need a raise.

"In fact, workers' savings are mounting so high, the steel companies insist, that another 'inflammable' buying rush may be precipitated at any time.

"Since this distorted viewpoint will be repeated by industry spokesmen at collective bargaining conferences across the nation and wherever high levels of unemployment compensation, social security benefits, and the minimum wages are discussed, the exaggerated government statistics on savings are vitally important—and dangerous."

UNLIKE World War II, when the price line was held, the typical American family has been unable to save any money since the Korean war began.

The CIO Economic Outlook, in its current issue, gave these reasons for the falling off of savings by workers and low-income families:

1. "While the total personal income of the American people, measured in dollars, went up over $26 million between 1950 and 1951, real incomes have been stagnant. After allowance is made for rising prices and taxes, the real buying power of total current incomes, taken as a whole, has hardly kept up with the growth of the country's population.

"This is clearly revealed by a comparison of disposable (after tax) income figures for 1950 with 1951, after adjustments are made for the rising cost of living. Real disposable income per person was $1445 in 1950 compared with $1442 in 1951, an actual decline of $3 when measured in dollars of 1951 purchasing power.

2. "The real buying power of the weekly take-home pay of workers employed in manufacturing industries has gone down.

Earnings Fall

"After taking taxes and other payroll deductions from the weekly earnings of these millions of wage earners—and then adjusting what is left to reflect the increased cost of living—the real net spendable earnings of an average worker with three dependents were found by the Dept. of Labor to have dropped from $63.06 in December 1950 to $61.97 in December 1951, measured in constant dollars of 1951 value.

"For workers with no dependents the decline was proportionately the same."

CIO Organizers Get 'The Works' Fr

One Agency Seen Behind Opposition

(Second article of a series)

By WILLIAM WEISS

OPPOSITION is a 10-letter word with which the men who work on the CIO Southern Drive have become very familiar.

It may appear in a variety of forms during organizing campaigns ranging from token resistance by a few stooges to wholehearted antagonism by an entire community.

When the drive got under way in 1946, the anti-union forces in the South sprang to the "defense" of southern workers and began laying down the same sort of barrage which had proved so effective during previous attempts to organize the South in 1929 and 1934.

Newspaper editorials warned of the approach of the "northern carpetbaggers" whose only intent, they said, was to "cause trouble and collect dues" from southern workers. Preachers took to the pulpit with scathing denunciations of "these outsiders who have come among us" and proceeded to label the CIO with "the mark of the beast."

While these preliminary skirmishes were going on, the southern mill owners were drawing up their big guns for the main attack.

Citizens committees were formed in practically every community where an organizer put in an appearance. Spearheaded by leading citizens and merchants of the town, these committees rushed to the aid of the mill owner whose plant was "under siege by the CIO."

In order to understand the average southern worker's reaction to this type of propaganda, it must be taken into consideration that for generations he has been subjected to the most potent type of paternalistic pressures by the employers.

Until recently the average textile mill employe, knew little of the outside world as it existed beyond the mill village in which he lived. And it was to the advantage of the employer that he be kept in this state of ignorance.

Operating on the thesis that "what they don't know won't hurt them," mill owners deliberately fostered a situation in which the worker and his family became unceasingly dependent on the owner for what he thought, talked about or read.

Outside sources of information were carefully screened for "dangerous items" which might encourage workers to question the right of the owner to dictate the course of their lives.

With the majority of local press and radio stations in "friendly hands," the beginning of the Southern Drive in 1946 was the signal for all out campaign to "condition" southern workers' minds against the CIO.

But the yellow journalism which had worked so well to discredit unions and arouse worker opposition in the past somehow failed to have the desired effect.

To the consternation of mill owners, workers began signing CIO application cards and to "talk union," inside the plant —a dangerous sign from the viewpoint of the employer.

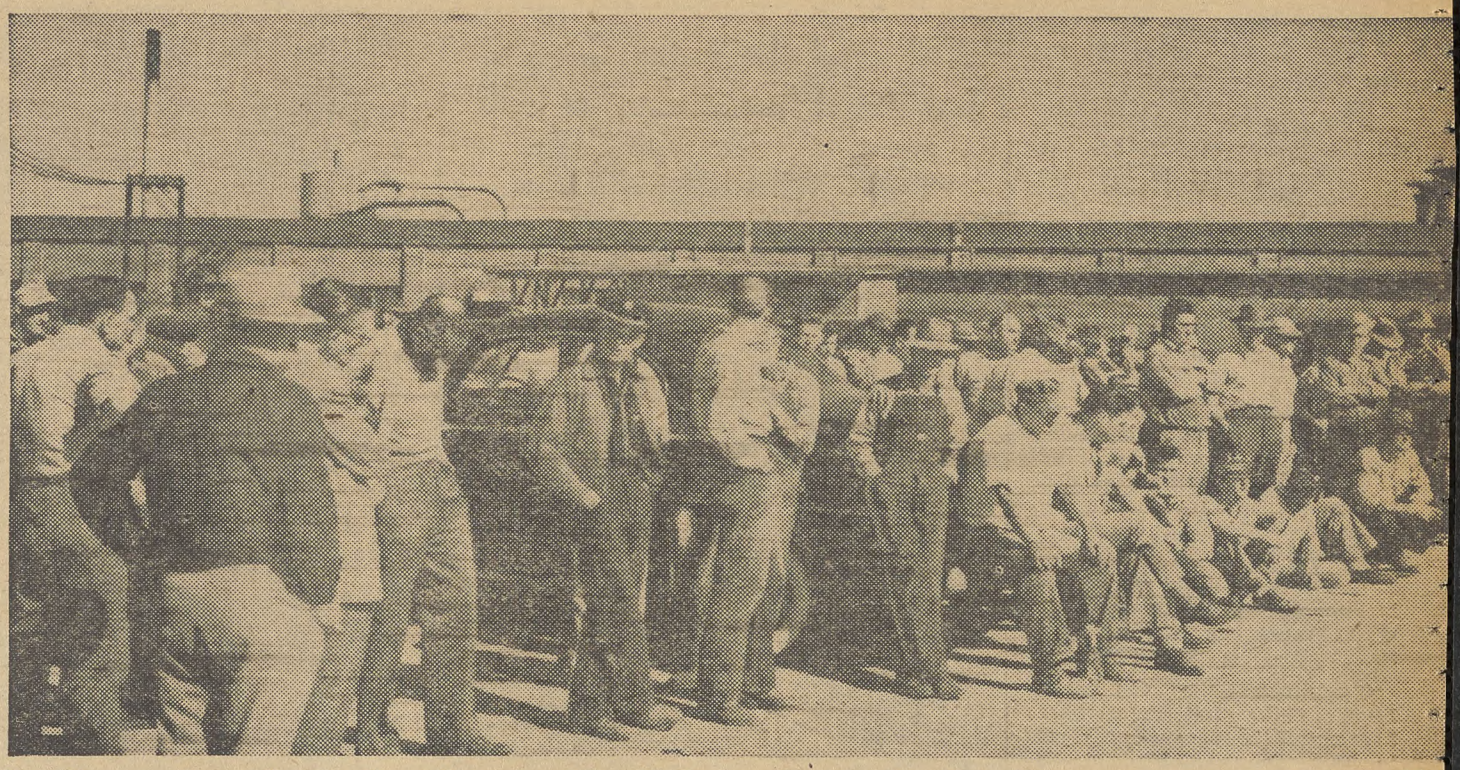
The arrival of an organizer in town usually was the cause for a wave of excitement among the workers and a secret meeting of "leading citizens."

Opposition, when it developed, followed a strongly similar pattern leading to the belief that anti-union activities were formulated and promoted by a central agency, unidentified to date.

Instances of physical violence were commonplace during the early days of the drive and are still encountered by southern CIO representatives. The latest was the fatal shooting of Lowell Simmons, manager of the CIO Textile Workers Joint Board in Memphis, Tenn., last Christmas Eve.

Simmons was killed by a non-union worker at the Bemis Bag Co., Bemis, Tenn., who shot him as he stood on the latter's front porch discussing a strike at the plant. The slayer was acquitted at a 30 minute jury trial in January. (But TWUA won the Bemis strike.)

The fact that the CIO organizer involved happened to be a woman made no difference when the Textile Workers were trying to organize the Tallapoosa, Ga., mill of the American Thread Co. plant early in 1947.



Furniture workers: The Southern Drive has brought thousands into the CIO. These men work in Hickory, N.

Mrs. Edna Martin, a TWUA representative was kidnapped and threatened with death if she didn't leave town by a group of armed men who broke into her room one night.

Gagged and tied, she was ordered into a truck at gunpoint and later dumped out on a lonely backwoods road. "Don't ever come back to Tallapoosa or you will be shot on sight," she was warned.

A "Citizens Committee" at Norwood, N. C., already had a rope around the neck of organizer Joe Kirk and were looking for a likely limb to string him to when he was saved by the half-hearted intervention of a local policeman.

"Don't hang him inside the town's limits," the law officer pleaded. Kirk escaped enroute to a more suitable locale.

Anderson Story

Organizing committee files in Atlanta contain many similar instances of attempted violence against CIO representatives in the South. Fortunately these cases are occurring with less frequency but the threat remains.

Organizing workers, especially in the South, is a tough enough job in itself, even where no concerted opposition exists. When the leading businessmen of the community head up the resistance movement and are aided and abetted by law officers, the press, radio and the clergy, the task takes on really formidable aspects.

Such an area is Anderson County, S. C.

With a population of some 90,000, Anderson County lies in the western part of the state, near the Tennessee line. Twenty-five thousand workers are employed in the 32 textile mills within its borders. For the most part, these mills are owned and controlled by northern interests.

The labor history of Anderson County goes back to 1916. That year workers at the Gluck and Equinox mills (later purchased by Boston interests) went out on strike for higher wages.

After four months, the company started eviction proceedings to throw the workers out of their homes. The sheriff delayed action but the Governor sent troops to uphold the court orders authorizing the evictions. The mills reopened protected by artillerymen.

The United Textile Workers called a strike at the Piedmont Manufacturing Co., in Anderson in 1934 over increased workloads which was followed by a general strike call which idled thousands of workers in the county.

Two days after the strike began unarmed pickets at the Chiquola Mill in Honea Path were fired upon from the mill and six strikers fell dead. The Governor promptly dispatched members of the National Guard to the scene and the m reopened under their protection.

The following year a picket at the P zer Manufacturing Co. was shot and kil by shots fired from within the mill. T strike had been called because of the stitution of a stretchout. No one was e tried for the slaying.

In May, 1937, three organizers for CIO Textile Workers Organizing Comm tee were threatened and run out of And son County. When one of them complain to the sheriff, he declared that if any f ther disturbance occurred he would arr the organizers regardless of who v responsible. He claimed they were "o siders" and "CIO agitators stirring trouble," and warned they could expect protection from his office.

A group of Pendleton Manufacturing workers joined TWUA in Aug. 1942 a shortly afterwards struck the mill. I mediately mob violence ensued agai strikers and organizers. A deputy she Again in 1949, TWUA attempted to art an organizing campaign at the Piedont mill. Organizers were followed either y local police or company representatives verywhere they went. In practically every ase where an organizer stopped at the ome of a worker, the next day the worker ould be called into the company's office nd threatened with dismissal.

—And Stay Out'

The following year TWUA began signing embers up at the Orr mill. Shortly after he first members joined, the company egan an intensified anti-union campaign. distributed a letter from a local doctor all employes telling TWUA to "get out nd stay out" and preaching white su-remacy.

When CIO Southern Drive organizers egan the current organizing campaign at he Orr mill, a columnist in the local paper, ironically named "The Independent," warned his public it was about to "learn first hand of the biggest racket since the Tripoli pirates were exacting tribute off the Barbary Coast." He referred to the CIO as "that black engulfing wing which leads workers down the tortuous trail of blood, sweat and tears leaving ghost towns and ghost jobs in its wake."

The Anderson Citizens Committee rallied quickly to meet the "foreign" menace. A series of signed advertisements were run in the Independent. They hammered home the claim that unions mean "friction between free labor and organized labor, discontentment, strife, misunderstandings and loss of time."

The owner of one of Anderson's two radio stations, Wilton Hall, is also publisher of the Anderson Independent. He is said to be a leading figure in the Anderson Citizens Committee.

When CIO representatives attempted to purchase radio time on station WAIM in 1949, they were turned down by the station manager because, he said, "we cannot afford to antagonize the businessmen of Anderson by carrying CIO material." It took a complaint to the Federal Communications Commission by CIO attorneys to finally get time on the station.

The Independent, however, refused for some time, to print the time of the CIO program in its daily radio log, and still refuses to accept paid advertisement from the CIO.

When Lucy Randolph Macon, community relations representative of the southern drive called on Robert Meeks, secretary of the Anderson Chamber of Commerce, he was openly hostile and warned:

"The CIO should have been stopped at Greenville. They will be stopped at Anderson, whatever it takes. The business men of Anderson will see to that . . . you are not wanted here—you should leave our city."

Capehart Costs $2 Million Daily

THE CAPEHART amendment is costing you and the rest of the American people more than $2 million every day.

The Office of Price Stabilization last week reported that price increases resulting from the amendment jumped $56.2 million in the two-week period ending Mar. 14.

The total annual cost of the Capehart increases is estimated by OPS at $806.2 million a year, as of Mar. 14.

The amendment guarantees manufacturers their highest pre-Korean price plus all cost increases up to July 26, 1951.

Price Stabilizer Ellis Arnall, who submitted these figures to the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, reported that higher auto prices accounted for $279 million of the increases.

The greatest increases, aside from autos, was in industrial materials and manufactured goods, which aggregated $263,232,500 before adjustment to the current sales levels.

Other increases reported by OPS included: Consumer durable goods, $69,575,700; processed food products, $21,106,200; grocery products, $17,704,200; rubber, chemical and drug products, $16,919,900; consumer soft goods, including textiles, hides, leather and shoes. $2,147,300; forest products, $736,400.

Textile Operators Revive Blacklist

THE "BLACKLIST," an old union-busting technique is again making an appearance in certain sections of the South.

It has become so prevalent that the CIO Textile Workers have asked a Senate investigation of what is termed "an efficiently organized system of terrorizing union members in southern textile mills."

John Edelman, TWUA Washington representative, detailed this situation in a memorandum to Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) chairman of the subcommittee on Labor-Management Relations.

He pointed out that "new evidence has come to hand demonstrating that the blacklist is not an historical relic of an evil past but is, as of now, being used consistently as a weapon against workers in the South."

"In prior hearings concerning labor relations in southern textiles, conducted by your subcommittee, some evidence was developed on the use of the blacklist in Georgia and Alabama. We now wish to call attention to a glaring case in North Carolina," Edelman declared.

He revealed that formal charges have been filed with the regional National Labor Relations Board office in Winston Salem, N. C. against 19 cotton mills located in Gaston County, scene of much bloodshed during the South-wide textile strikes of 1929 and 1934.

17 Workers Fired

The TWUA complaint charges that the Perfection Spinning Co. and National Yarn Mills, Belmont, N. C., "have concerted to deny employment to certain employes because these workers selected TWUA as their collective bargaining agent. Edelman said 17 workers have been blacklisted to date.

TWUA won NLRB elections at the Perfection and National plants last year. Both are yarn mills. Since then fruitless efforts have been made to arrive at an agreement with the owners.

Edelman said that not long after the elections were won at the two mills, the third shifts were laid off. When the laid-off workers sought employment at nearby mills or neighboring plants they were promptly turned down. He said the union will be able to prove there was outright discrimination against union members in these cases.

"Gaston County employers are living up to their anti-union reputation. Although blacklisting is one of the oldest union-busting operations on record, the cotton textile manufacturers have shined it up and made it more efficient from their standpoint," he declared.

Immigration Bills —

McCarran Drives To Put Iron Curtain Around U.S.

By MILTON PLUMB

AN IMMIGRATION bill now before Congress will ride roughshod over the lives and future happiness of millions of citizens and future citizens if Sen. McCarran (D. Nev.) succeeds in railroading its enactment.

• The measure already has been approved by both the Senate and House Judiciary Committees. Floor action may come at any time.

The CIO has asked that the bill be sent back to committees for further study and much-needed improvement.

Not unexpectedly, the author of the McCarran Subversive Activities Act has produced an immigration and nationality bill which contains many provisions running counter to democratic fair play.

McCARRAN has proposed the first major overhaul of U. S. immigration laws since 1911. His bill incorporates into one statute of 302 pages the scores of existing immigration laws, as well as the Nationality Act of 1940 and some 31 amendments to it, and then makes basic policy changes.

Once adopted, the new immigration law will probably be on the books for many years to come, and correction of injustices will be difficult. The importance of the measure demands most careful deliberation by Congress before it acts.

Instead, it is being railroaded through.

It was not studied adequately. Hearings were drastically curtailed. CIO and other groups were denied a hearing.

Committee approval was not based on all the evidence. The committee reported the bill out without waiting for final reports from the State and Justice Depts.

Committee action was hasty and premature, and even Congress won't be allowed full discussion. The House Rules Committee has cut debate to three hours.

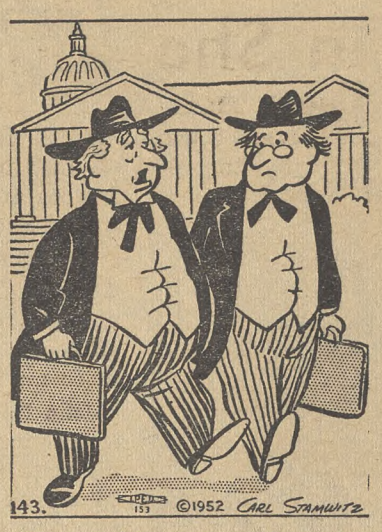
Many civic organizations have



"I've pulled the wool over the workers' eyes so often, they now greet all my speeches with 'Bah!' " been asking this question. Most observers agree with the American Jewish Congress that the present rush for the bill's enactment is "unaccountable."

AJC Pres. Israel Goldstein pointed out that "the sponsors and managers of the McCarran-Walter bills are attempting to jam this legislation through Congress" and added:

"It is deplorable that bills of such far-reaching implication are being pushed through on the basis of half-information and mis-information."

The danger of hasty action is that, since few Congressmen will read through the cumbersome and highly technical bill, most will not even begin to comprehend all its implications. The quicker it is acted upon, the more likely McCarran's anti-democratic provisions will sneak through.

This has already been demonstrated in the House Judiciary Committee which reported its measure two weeks after the Senate Committee but tacked on some 42 amendments. Since it is based on McCarran's draft, however, the Walter bill is still essentially totalitarian.

Both bills threaten to draw an Iron Curtain around the U. S. Had similar provisions been in effect prior to World War II, this country would have been deprived of the help of many European scholars whose contributions were essential to atomic development.

Both measures would prevent foes of communism and other forms of totalitarianism—including even Cardinal Mindzenty—from entering the U. S. They would do so by barring persons convicted of crime in totalitarian countries, even though the convictions were the result of racial or religious persecution.

They also extend racial barriers and seriously curtail civil liberties. Native-born Americans would suffer directly in the process.

For example, under the bills it would be possible for the Attorney General to deport the son —born abroad—of an American woman with a European husband for so minor an offense as a traffic violation.

It is true that the bills do remove sex discrimination and establish a quota for Asiatics for the first time, but they add a new provision discriminating against natives of the British West Indies because of their color.

"Some lawmakers would like to abolish Labor's last rights, and enact Labor's last rites!"

ANOTHER provision is that a person whose ancestry is attributable by as much as one-half to natives of the "Asia-Pacific triangle" would be charged to the quota of the triangle.

This would result in a two-way discrimination, against all peoples of Asian ancestry and against native-born citizens of countries like Brazil. If they had Asiatic ancestors, they could not come to the U. S. as non-quota immigrants like other Brazilians but only under the triangle quota.

Standards for exclusion and deportation set up by the bills are vague and arbitrary. For the first time, seamen who overstay their leave, stowaways and persons previously deported would be denied pre-deportation hearings, and the Immigration Service would be given absolute discretion over them.

A spokesman for the Association of Immigration and Nationality Lawyers has branded such provisions unconstitutional, since they depart completely from the constitutional requirements for hearings and due process. Also, for the first time, the bills would permit deportation proceedings to take place without the actual presence of the alien involved.

Not only do the bills do away with the statute of limitations in connection with immigration laws, but they broaden the grounds for loss of citizenship. These are carried so far that American-born citizens of foreign parents would lose their citizenship merely because of an over-long stay in the land of his parents' birth.

Provisions of existing law—hard won in earlier drives by organized labor — excluding contract laborers are omitted from both bills. Instead, the bill establishes a rigid quota pattern which piles preference on preference for special classes and leaves virtually no room for individual workers.

At the same time, the bill sets up a new class of non-immigrants to permit temporary workers—such as the Mexican farmhands now being imported in direct competition with American agricultural workers—to be brought in.

Another new provision would allow denaturalization proceedings against American citizens to be instituted through notice by publication and mail, and they could be carried through even though notice were not actually received by the citizens involved.

Similar boobytraps are buried in many other of the 406 sections of McCarran's bill. Said Columnist Drew Pearson when he learned what was going on:

"If the bill passes in anything approximating its present form, we might as well send the Statue of Liberty back to France."

Oil Land Grab Voted By Senate

THE SENATE last week turned thumbs down on "oil for the lamps of learning," and then voted 50 to 35 to turn over an estimated $40 billion in tidelands oil resources to the states.

In effect, the measure gives almost all of this wealth to three states—California, Louisiana and Texas—and denies the 45 other states their fair share of the income. The big oil companies have backed the move to give the tidelands to the state governments, which they find much more easy than federal administrators to influence in their own interests.

A similar "states rights" bill was passed earlier this year by the House, and minor differences between the two measures are expected to be quickly settled.

President Truman, however, is expected to veto the measure. The margin on the final vote and on all previous votes has been far less than the two-thirds needed to override such action.

The Supreme Court ruled in 1947, and twice since then, that the federal government has "paramount rights" to these offshore lands. Some lawyers question the right of Congress to pass "states rights" legislation in view of the court's decision.

Before voting to give away federal title to the tidelands, the Senate voted 47 to 36 to table an amendment by Sen. Hill (D. Ala.), which would have earmarked the federal government's share of oil revenues as a perpetual endowment for the nation's schools and colleges in all 48 states.

Reserve Board Assailed As 'Fourth Branch Of Government'

THE FEDERAL Reserve Board, by exercising "a special type of independence it claims for itself," considers itself not a part of the government, but a government apart."

That summation of FRB actions was given by Donald Montgomery, director of the Washington office of the CIO Auto Workers, at a round table on monetary policy and debt management before a subcommittee of the Joint Committee on the Economic Report headed by Rep. Patman (D. Tex.). Montgomery spoke for the CIO.

"We find no provision in the Constitution for a fourth branch of government," he pointed out.

He told the subcommittee that the FRB, through its voluntary credit restraint committee, has coerced banks not to make loans to states for the purchase of public utilities.

In addition, he maintained, it "is now undertaking to kill the public housing program, even while allowing utility companies to increase their bank borrowings by more than a half-billion dollars and supporting the private construction of homes."

"Originally the committee said it would not restrict loans guaranteed, insured or authorized as to purpose by a government agency," Montgomery explained.

"BEFORE LONG, however, Board Member Oliver S. Powell, chairman of the voluntary committee, told a press conference of their objection to public housing loans.

"On Feb. 6, FRB Chairman William McChesney Martin, Jr., told the Senate Banking and Currency Committee how disturbed the board is by the issuance of public housing bonds which he said, 'absorb some of the funds which would otherwise supply a market for . . . mortgages guaranteed for new private construction.'

"He could not have revealed more clearly that he was disturbed not about inflation but about public housing.

"Last week, Board Member Powell told your committee of the board's objections to the public housing program and to veterans' home loans. He voiced no objection to mortagage loans on private construction.

"Is it a proper function of this government agency to lend itself to the real estate industry's campaign against public housing? Is this a mark of its independence?"

Martin's recent statement that he considered public housing inflationary but private housing non-inflationary — although the latter bulks many times the size of the former—had been protested earlier by UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

REUTHER said that FRB policy as expressed by Martin "is an outright discrimination against low-income families who stand most in need of additional housing." This is in "marked contrast," he added, to the board's policy and performance on bank loans to private business.

Montgomery also told the Patman subcommittee that while the FRB has driven up interest rates and the cost of running the government, and has imposed tight curbs on consumer credit, it has permitted a rapid increase in bank inflation. Having given the banks higher interest rates and greater profits, he went on, the board "now appears to have put itself at the service of a tax lobby to relieve the banks of bearing their fair share of the (tax) burden."

"Is this an appropriate role for a government agency?" he queried.

"It is our hope that this committee will recommend measures by which the FRB shall be made to function as part of the government, with the same responsibilities to the executive and, through him, to the electorate, as any other administrative arm of the government."

Murray D. Lincoln, president of the Farm Bureau Insurance Co., called for a complete revision of the country's banking and monetary laws — which hasn't been undertaken since 1864—and asked that at least two members of the FRB represent the public, not the banks.

URW Meets Goodrich In Showdown Battle

MORE THAN 12,000 members of CIO Rubber Workers Local 5 were idle last week as the result of a six-year fight by the B. F. Goodrich Co., in Akron O., against unionization of its office employes.

"The cause is exactly the same as that which brought serious industrial warfare to this community several years ago—the refusal of industrial management to accept and abide by laws which required them to recognize and bargain in good faith with unions chosen in a legal manner by their employes," declared L. S. Buckmaster, URW international president.

The office workers, Buckmaster explained, picked Local 5—which also represents the company's production workers — as their collective bargaining agent in a National Labor Relations Board election six years ago.

When the local attempted to negotiate a contract for its new members, "it ran head-on into the same stubborn, unreasonable company attitudes and positions which the Rubber Workers had encountered in the late 1930's," he said.

The company refused the union the salary rates paid office employes; discriminatorily penalized union members and rewarded those who refused to join, and indulged in "many other evasive and discriminatory tactics," the URW president explained.

The union filed unfair labor practice charges and was upheld by the NLRB. The company, however, compelled the NLRB to go into court for an enforcement order. That case was thrown out because it had been decided—three years late—that top CIO officers, as well as international union officers, should have signed Taft-Hartley Act non-Communist affidavits.

Goodrich continued to flout that part of the law which requires it to bargain with the union and a few weeks ago, flatly withdrew recognition of Local 5 as bargaining agent of the office workers.

"Interpreting this action as a challenge and as a threat against the right of the office workers to continue with Local 5," said Buckmaster, "the office workers' unit put strike action into effect.

"The fact that factory workers and office workers use the same entrances created unusual complications. Factory workers were reluctant to cross the office workers' picket lines, and felt the urge to render every assistance not only because they were members of the same local, but also because they held the option that if the office workers' unit were destroyed, production and maintenance workers would be the next victims.

"This is not the first time that Goodrich has carried the ball in a campaign to destroy the Rubber Workers. Goodrich failed miserably before, and it will fail this time."

AS A result of the strike, Pres. George Bass and eight other top officers of Local 5 were convicted of contempt of court growing out of alleged violation of an injunction restraining picketing. They were given 10 days in jail and fined $250 each, but have appealed.

Local 5 responded by walking off the job en masse.

Many members of URW Local 2, at Goodyear's Akron plant, were out in a dispute over piecework rates after a demonstration over the conviction of the Local 5 officers. Several thousand members of Local 7, at Firestone, refused to work in an allowance dispute.

And 300 city bus drivers, members of the CIO Transport Workers, were on strike against the Akron Transportation Co. for the fourth time in eight years.

Kroll Urges 'Quarantine On Bigotry'

A CALL for "people of good will to join forces to quarantine hate and bigotry" was sounded by Jack Kroll, national director of the CIO Political Action Committee, at a joint Labor-Community Civil Rights Conference in Cleveland.

"The preservation of human rights is one of the paramount issues of our generation," he told more than 300 delegates to the conference. "It is more than a domestic issue. In a real sense, it is the core of our struggle with totalitarianism."

He condemned "McCarthyism," which he described as the "political smearing" of persons, as the gravest political disease of our time.

The conference was spearheaded by the Ohio and Cleveland CIO Councils. Delegates represented nearly 100 Cleveland community organizations. They were welcomed by Louis Eiben, president of the Cleveland CIO Council, for labor, and Robert S. Rawson, member of the Community Relations Board and an industrialist, on behalf of the community organizations.

Thurgood Marshall, special counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, urged a grass-roots campaign of block and street, door-to-door political action to obtain the support needed "for those courageous lawmakers and administrators who have the guts to risk their political futures in the fight for human rights in America."

HE ALSO advised delegates that Northerners "should not feel pity for the Negroes of Florida, where Thomas Moore and his wife were bombed to death, and where bombs were placed in Catholic churches and Jewish synagogues, and other atrocities committed against minorities."

The Negroes in the South are doing something about it, he explained, "while northern Negroes and other minorities, who have similar problems, are sitting idly by chanting 'ain't it a shame'."

Jersey CIO Reports Gains In Combatting Discrimination

THE NEW JERSEY Joint Council for Civil Rights—to which CIO and AFL belong—is setting a high standard in the fight against discrimination, reports Arthur Chapin, civil rights director of the State CIO Council.

The council was formed temporarily two years ago for a successful fight for the Freeman Act, which bars segregation and discrimination in public accommodations, such as swimming pools, restaurants, public transportation and hotels.

Since then only one case has gone to a public hearing before the state's Division Against Discrimination. In that case a Negro complained against the operator of a swimming pool near Asbury Park who required Negroes to have a doctor's certificate—and then made it very difficult to obtain the necessary paper.

After the pool operator was ordered to "cease and desist" his discriminatory practice, he first announced that he would appeal to court, but then changed his mind, decided to obey the order—and no more complaints have been filed against him.

Another feature of the Freeman Act is the provision authorizing a mayor or burgess to name a civil rights commission which acts as an educational group freeing the community air of bias. There now are 25 such commissions.

The council is so encouraged by its efforts that it has set up as a permanent organization with chapters in several communities. Chapin is president of the Essex County Chapter of the council.

In a further step in its fight against prejudice the New Jersey CIO Council is backing a series of amendments to housing laws to give the Division Against Discrimination jurisdiction over discrimination in public and quasi-public housing.

At present the state attorney general handles such cases.

Since 1945 there has been a FEPC law in the state's statute books. It also is administered by the Division Against Discrimination.

"FEPC has not eliminated discrimination in New Jersey, but it is working well," Chapin said.

SPENDING six months in the U. S. is Gertrud Stierle, a 24-year-old union worker from Frankfurt, Germany, who is visiting many CIO locals. Her tour is under sponsorship of the U. S. Women's Bureau.

Congress 'Economizers' Go Hog-Wild On Inquiries

FOR ALL its hatcheting of appropriations to carry on essential government services, the 82nd Congress is spending more money for "investigations" than any other in history.

The only other Congress that came anywhere near the present one in squandering money this way was the Republican-controlled 80th. And the 82nd is well out in front, expenditures of the House alone having already exceeded those of the 80th by a third of a million dollars.

These facts came to light when Chairman Stanley (D. Va.) of the House Administration Committee lost a battle to kill a proposal to spend $65,000 to continue the investigation of the Katyn Forest massacre in World War II.

Calling the investigation nothing but a "junket and a meddling one at that," Stanley said "I don't want my tax money spent to send this investigating group to Europe to meddle into something that happened years ago and which is none of our business."

(The U.S. was not directly involved in the Katyn Forest massacre in which Polish officers were killed. The question being investigated is whether Nazi or Communist troops did the killing.)

Stanley said that the House has already approved nearly $2.2 million for its investigations in 1951 and so far in 1952. The previous all-time record was $1,887,000 spent by the 80th Congress.

In the last session, Congress conducted about the same number of special investigations having nothing to do with pending legislation as it passed laws.

This year, as last, the 82nd Congress is running up a mediocre record in regard to legislation. The Constitution makes no reference to any investigative power of Congress, but it does place clearly upon it the responsibility to legislate.

Tear Gas, Machine Guns—

1500 UFW Strikers Defy Police Attacks

POLICE ARMED with machine guns and tear gas bombs last week failed to daunt striking CIO Furniture Workers at Thomasville, N. C. The weapons are a symbol of the attempt of the Thomasville police to intimidate the 1500 strikers of the Thomasville Chair Co. plant. They have been out since Mar. 13.

Thirty strikers have been arrested—UFWA Local 286 Pres. F. C. Wilson twice. The police are armed with machine guns and tear gas bombs as they escort scabs into the plant.

Company attorneys got Superior Court Judge Jl Will Pleas, Jr., to issue an injunction limiting pickets to 20 at each gate and keeping them 50 feet from the entrances.

THE COMPANY precipitated the strike by its refusal—after months of negotiations—to grant a 4.7% wage increase under a wage re-opening clause. The two-year contract with the firm expires next September. UFWA says that WSB regulations would permit a 5% increase.

UFWA Pres. Morris Pizer and Sec.-Treas. Fred Fulford both went to the scene.

"The spirit of the workers is remarkably good considering the atmosphere of official hostility," Pizer said.

"There is no doubt, despite the tremendous obstacles being placed in their way, that the strikers will come through and win their fight."

FULFORD CHARGED Thomasville police with "outright brutality and intimidation of workers."

The union has obtained a warrant for the arrest of Thomasville Police Chief Paul M. Shore, and has asked that the U. S. Attorney General's Office investigate "the denial of civil rights" to the strikers.

UFWA claims that the stand of the Thomasville Chair Co. is an effort to block further unionization of the southern furniture industry. The union says that North Carolina now holds first place among furniture-producing states.

UFWA's executive board has set up the Thomasville Strike Fund, care of United Furniture Workers, 101 Fifth Ave., New York 3, N. Y. Pizer urged unions to send contributions to aid the strike.

Timken Went Just Too Far

Apparently there are limits to the employer "free speech" provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act.

The National Labor Relations Board has indicated they don't cover deception.

Because the Timken-Detroit Axle Co. sent out an anti-union letter by an anti-union employe, the NLRB tossed out an election lost by the CIO Auto Workers Office Workers Dept. and ordered a new vote for 500 office employes.

The board said "the employer created the misleading impression that what was actually company anti-union campaign activity was merely unaided and spontaneuos employe sentiment. This impaired the free and informed atmosphere requisite to an untrammeled expression of choice by its employes."

Pat Conroy Takes Over 'Attache Post

PAT CONROY, former secretary - treasurer of the Canadian Congress of Labor, has taken up his duties as labor attache at the Canadian Embassy in Washington.

Conroy is widely known among CIO members both in Canada, where CIO locals are also affiliated with the CCL, and in the United States.

Basically, his job is to establish and maintain friendly relations with all sections of the labor movement in the United States, he said.

"Part of my responsibility," he explained, "is to encourage the development of an informed and accurate knowledge of Canadian labor conditions and legislation among the people of the States.

"This will involve answering any questions anyone may have about labor organizations in Canada, or legislation, or statistics."

Conroy also will keep the Canadian people, through the government, informed on what is going on in this country so far as the unions are concerned. This will include keeping his government advised on labor disputes, either existing or pending, that may have a possible effect on the Canadian economy.

In addition, he will keep in touch with the various branches of the U. S. government dealing with labor.

Conroy expects to spend part of his time traveling and plans to take in as many international union conventions as possible.

Herrington Heads CIO Press Group

Al Herrington of the Communications Workers was elected chairman of the CIO Press and Public Relations Conference at a meeting at New York City.

Henry C. Fleisher, editor of the CIO News, was re-elected secretary, and Harry Kranz, New Jersey CIO, was chosen as vice chairman. Others elected to the board are Ray Davidson, Oil Workers, Harry La Belle, Transport Workers and Arthur Riordan, Electrical Workers, and C. Edmund Fisher, Clothing Workers, ex-officio board members.

Job Injuries Climb

Injuries in manufacturing employment climbed by 8% in the first three quarters of 1951, according to the latest figures of the U. S. Labor Dept.

CIO Backs D.C. Hospital Fund Drive

THE CIO is considering a memorial gift to Providence Hospital, Washington, in behalf of the late Van A. Bittner, former CIO Steelworkers' vice president.

Announcement of the contemplated gift was made by CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey at a meeting at which 70 national and local labor leaders were guests of Most Rev. Patrick A. O'Boyle, Archbishop of the Washington Diocese.

The hospital is conducting a campaign for funds for a new 350-bed hospital.

CIO Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood declared "we of the CIO shall do our fullest" and urged all CIO members in the Washington area "to oversubscribe, if possible" to the hospital drive.

Members of the drive's labor committee include CIO Pres. Philip Murray and Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO general counsel. Sec. Thomas Moran of the District of Columbia CIO Council also endorsed the campaign.

Shipyard Strike Date Delayed

CIO Shipbuilding Workers last week granted another strike deadline postponement in a "final effort" to reach agreement with Bethlehem Steel Co. on a contract covering 32,000 workers in eight East Coast yards.

Pres. John J. Grogan of the IUMSWA announced a contract extension from Mar. 30 to April 29.

Mann To Quit As Council Secretary

Michael Mann announced last week that he will not seek reelection as executive secretary of the 250,000-member Chicago CIO Council.

Mann, council secretary for the last 10 years, also is Illinois CIO regional director. He said he could not handle the two full-time jobs. (LPA.)

Bias Curb Signed

Two bills tightening curbs on discrimination in New York State, by banning bias in hotels, restaurants, stores, theaters and other public places, have been signed by Gov. Dewey.

CIO Stresses Urgency Of Economic Aid

U. S. EFFORTS to gain security for this country and the rest of the free world are doomed unless we do more to help our allies raise the living standards of their people while they are rearming, according to CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey.

Carey reiterated CIO support of the Mutual Security Program at hearings before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee last week.

"The ability of free countries to defend themselves," he said, "rests fully as much on healthy economics as on military strength. The rearmament aspects of security in the foreign aid proposal before Congress must be balanced by an adequate economic program.

"There is urgent need that Congress restore the good sense and vision of the Marshall Plan in the foreign aid program and help complete the unfinished job of economic recovery."

HE POINTED OUT that the threat to American security will be just as great if Communist agents from within, taking advantage of lack of internal stability, accomplish Soviet objectives "as it will if Soviet troops advance from without."

"A narrow definition of security, mainly in military terms, is tempting during an election year," he said.

"In fact, pressures seem to be mounting to cut the presently inadequate portion of the Mutual Security Program that is not purely military.

"Unless we take positive steps to give hope for a better life to workers in such key European countries as France and Italy and to the poverty-stricken masses of the under-developed countries, military might will not save these areas from chaos and communism."

BECAUSE so much Marshall Plan aid necessarily had to go to capital investment, the basic goals of the plan had not been reached when the stress shifted to rearmament, he said.

Sharp increases in production were not reflected in better living standards for workers, he went on, notably in France and Italy, while in Austria and the Netherlands real earnings actually declined. He went on:

"The high level of economic activity assured by the defense effort offers an opportunity for Europe to strengthen its productive ability and build a better life for its people. We propose that defense support and economic funds in the Mutual Security Program be clearly dedicated to this purpose.

"The economic aid is more important than the military and should not be made subordinate to it. A major portion of this aid should be granted only on condition that the countries carry out clearly defined objectives designed to raise output and standards of living.

"It is only in this manner that economic and morals elements of defense against Communist aggression will be met. We must recapture the good will lost by us by our overriding emphasis on defense in the Mutual Security Program."

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

THE STEEL situation still remains the big issue. The Kaiser Steel Corp. came to terms with the CIO Steelworkers last Wednesday. If this industrial organization feels that the terms are agreeable so can the giants of the industry, with plenty of room to spare. By the time CIO News readers receive this week's issue, the steel issue will reach its climax.

The CIO Communication Workers postponed a strike scheduled for Thursday of last week until Apr. 7. If agreement is not reached by then, the workers of Ohio Bell, Michigan Bell and in the Northern California area of the Pacific Tel. and Tel. will go out. The installation and service workers of Western Electric are also scheduled to strike in their respective work locations nation-wide on Apr. 7.

All CIO regional offices have been alerted to give every cooperation to the CWA if it is compelled to go out on strike.

THE WRITER attended the Jefferson-Jackson Day Dinner at which President Truman made his stunning announcement of refusal to seek office in the coming presidential election. I can say the announcement came as a complete surpise to all of us in attendance. Following it, the newspaper reporters and photographers rushed Gov. Stevenson of Illinois to determine his position. Regardless of the candidate, labor must unite to protect and carry forward the gains we have made through our political action.

The Goodrich Tire & Rubber Co. succeeded in carrying through a Taft-Hartley injunction violation against George Bass and other CIO Rubber Workers which resulted in them being sentenced to jail. The CIO is standing behind Brother Bass and his buddies in this fight.

Last week the Labor Advisory Committee to the Farm Placement Service, which is composed of CIO and AFL members, met with the Secretary of Labor on the importation and exploitation of foreign labor and the resulting effect on the living standards and wages of American farm workers. The committee is making every effort to establish minimum wage requirements that will prevent the big farm fruit and vegetable growers from exploiting migrant labor.

Steel Union Backed By Delegates At Pennsylvania CIO Convention

MORE THAN 1200 delegates to the annual convention of the Pennsylvania CIO Council marked the opening of their yearly session by adopting a strong resolution supporting the CIO Steelworkers in their dispute with the industry.

The delegates met in the William Penn Hotel in Pittsburgh at the same time that steel industry negotiators were gathering in another room before meeting with union spokesmen.

The delegates, representing more than 650,000 CIO members, acted after hearing a detailed report on the crisis that grew out of the industry's refusal to bargain from Philip Murray, president of the CIO and of the Steelworkers.

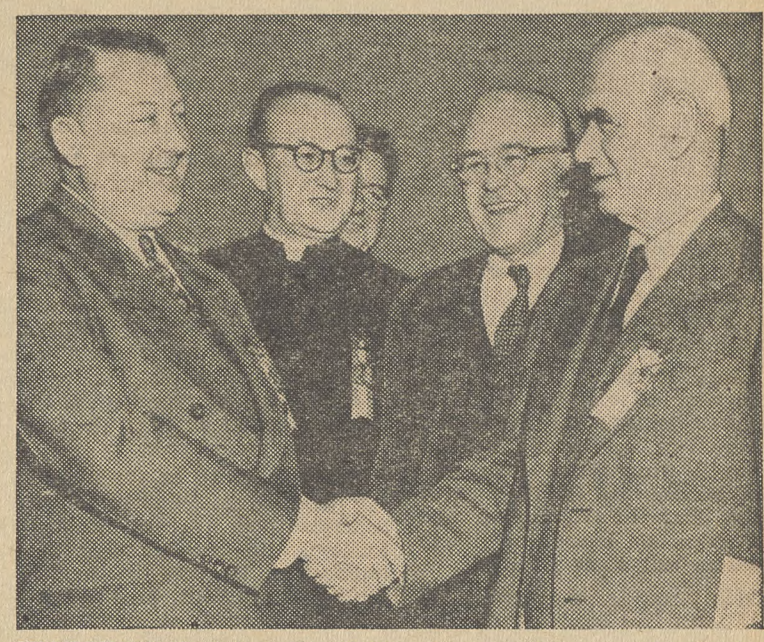
Murray blasted Charles E. Wilson—at that time still defense mobilizer—for attempting to save the industry's face when it rejected the recommendations the Wage Stabilization Board offered to settle the dispute.

HE DENOUNCED the industry's claim to a $12 price boost and insisted that a $2 a ton hike would meet the recommendations of the board. Murray cited the industry's own figures on production to support his claim.

Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood stressed the CIO's success in the fight against discrimination; warned against affiliates permitting fly-by-night solicitors to use the union's name to bleed advertisers, and pleaded for "a return to the spirit of CIO in 1936 when big unions helped the smaller ones in organizing the unorganized."

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, also head of IUE-CIO, warned of widespread campaigns to decontrol rents, prices and everything the consumer vitally needs. He denounced the proposal of Rep. Allen (R. Ill.) to investigate the WSB for its steel case action.

Sec.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers urged more widespread support of the Political Action Committee.



WARNING that "responsibility for a strike is up to the industry now" was voiced by Philip Murray, CIO Steelworkers president, at Pennsylvania CIO convention. Murray exchanges greetings with Harry Boyer, state CIO president. In background, Father Owen Rice and Councilman Patrick Fagan.

Praise was given by delegates to State Pres. Harry Boyer and Sec. Harry Block for continued growth in membership and widening activities of CIO in Pennsylvania. Both were unanimously reelected with salary increases.

Other speakers included Leo Perlis, director of the CIO Community Services Committee; Sec. Francis Shain, of the Steelworkers' Human Rights Committee; John Perry Horlacher, chairman of the Philadelphia regional WSB; Charles Sludden, legislative representative of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen; Councilman Patrick T. Fagan, of Pittsburgh, representing the ailing Mayor David Lawrence; Allegheny County Commissioner John J. Kane; and Joseph J. Knable, Savings Bond director for Pennsylvania. Rev. Charles Owen Rice of Pittsburgh opened the convention with prayer.

Thomas; Textile, Joseph Hueter; Electrical and Radio, Louis Ginsburg; Auto, Anthony Nicholi; Glass, Francis McCabe; Transport, Charles Robinson; Government & Civic, John Evans; Brewery and Distillery, George Tantlinger; miscellaneous east, George Craig; miscellaneous west, A. J. Federoff. Auditors named were David Neish, IUE: Paul A. Bennett, Steel, and Louis Feldberg, Clothing Workers.

UAW Shifts From FM Radio, Seeks Television Permit

THE CIO Auto Workers may soon be in the market for a UAW television station in Detroit.

UAW Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey said the union planned to continue operating its FM radio in Detroit until May 1, pending outcome of an offer to turn operation for the station over to Wayne Univ.

Mazey said UAW "plans to use our finances for the processing of a television application in Detroit."

Mazey said WDET's programs "established a standard of quality programming unique in Detroit radio" and that it was the "only station in Detroit that had the courage to air consistently controversial issues and present differing viewpoints on such questions as labor disputes, civil rights, housing, race relations and other matters."

UAW will continue sponsorship of its daily news commentator, Guy Nunn, and a Sunday television show, on commercial stations in Detroit.

25 Lucky CIOers Get Chance To Join In Danish Workshop

THE CIO Dept. of Education and Research is accepting applications for the CIO-Danish Labor Education Workshop to be held in the Scandinavian countries July 1-21.

The workshop is a joint project of the Workers Education Association of Denmark and the CIO Depts. of International Affairs and Education and Research.

It will be confined to 25 CIO members working in the shops, who may be nominated by international unions and city and state CIO councils. Efforts are being made to get as complete a cross-section of CIO membership as possible.

"Serious consideration should be given," said the sponsors, "to selecting a person who will help trade unionists in the Scandinavian countries understand American life and American trade unionists and a person who, on his return, will be able to use this experience to increase the concern and understanding of international affairs of American trade union members."

The program is tentatively scheduled to start at a folk high school in Denmark on July 1, with departure by air from New York a day or two earlier. A week will be spent in classes which Danish union members will also attend. Lecturers will be leaders in Danish cultural, trade union and political life.

A one-week tour through Denmark will follow, with the U. S. visitors guests in the homes of Danish workers in Copenhagen and other cities. The third week will be divided between Norway and Sweden, including trips to Oslo and Stockholm.

TOTAL charge for each delegate from New York to New York, including travel, meals and rooms abroad, will be $300, thanks to the Danish Workers Educational Association. An international union or council also will have to pay the delegate's expenses both ways between New York and his home, for lost time for about four weeks, and for incidentals such as passports, etc.

Full information may be obtained from George T. Guernsey, associate director in charge of education, CIO Dept. of Education and Research, 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

Big Lobbyists War Against Jobless Pay Gains

WHO IS BEHIND the current drive to kill long-overdue improvements in unemployment insurance, such as the Moody-Dingell and Forand bills?

Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey of the CIO Auto Workers gave the answer to the House Unemployment Insurance subcommittee last Wednesday.

He not only named the lobbies, but also the huge corporations which collectively are contributing more than $100,000 a year to underwrite their work.

Some business interests, he charged, support "a depraved double standard that considers government assistance wise and desirable when given to corporations but unsound and destructive when designed to relieve the hardships and hunger of jobless workers and their families."

Mazey recalled that Rep. Mills (D. Ark.) had disclosed that he had been in constant touch with the Interstate Conference of State Employment Security Agencies in preparing his bill, H.R. 4133, which the CIO opposes. At that time, Mills described Stanley Rector as the secretary of the conference with which he worked in drafting the bill.

"Stanley Rector is not secretary of the Interstate Conference," Mazey pointed out, "but he is Legislative Director of the Unemployment Benefit Advisers, Inc., a non-governmental private corporation."

The UBA, he added, is "a front for many of the largest corporations in the U. S., including those who have fought unemployment insurance and all forms of social security step by step since it was first proposed by the late Sen. Robert F. Wagner, 24 years ago."

Submitting a list of hundreds of contributions to the UBA from big corporations in 1949 and 1950, Mazey declared:

"SUPPORTERS of the Forand and Dingell bills and the American people . . . are indebted to Rep. Mills for exposing the brains and the mouthpiece for the Interstate Conference of Employment Security Agencies and for showing how Mr. Rector's activities tie across to a National Association of Manufacturers affiliate."

Rector registered under the Lobbyist Registration Act on Jan. 15, 1948, and reported a yearly salary from UBA of $19,-999.92. The latest available report on receipts and expenditures of his organization shows that it received contributions amounting to $107,159 and spent $73,834 in 1950.

The list of contributors to UBA read like a blue book of American industry. General Motors Corp. made the largest contribution, $3500, but Ford donated $3000 and Chrysler $2000 in the two years for which reports are available.

Standard Oil of New Jersey also underwrote the fight against adequate unemployment insurance to the tune of $3000, and it was joined in this drive by most of the other large oil companies, including Standard Oil of California and Shell, which gave $2000 apiece, and Socony-Vacuum, Sun Oil, Standard of Ohio, Gulf and Tide Water Associated.

The steel industry also was a heavy underwriter. Armco Steel Corp. gave $2000 and Weirton and Wheeling each $1000. Aluminum Co. of America isn't on the 1949 list, but it came across with $1000 in 1950.

Goodyear and Firestone Tire and Rubber each were good for a grand.

Other big contributors included the Norberg Manufacturing Co., Allis-Chalmers, American Cyanamid, American Can, Timken Roller Bearing, E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., International Harvester, Libby-Owens - Ford, Johns-Manville Corp., Sheaffer Pen Co., General Mills, F. W. Woolworth, Maytag Co., S. S. Kresge Co., and Gillette Safety Razor Co.

FULL CIO SUPPORT for the Moody-Dingell Bill to increase unemployment compensation benefits in areas of defense layoffs is voiced by Emil Mazey (left), secretary-treasurer of the CIO Auto Workers. Beside him is Leonard Lesser, UAW social security department attorney.

CIO LAST week carried its fight for passage of the Moody-Dingell Bill to the House of Representatives in testimony before the Unemployment Insurance subcommittee.

In doing so, it struck out at business interests which consider government aid to corporations "wise and desirable" but bitterly oppose relief for workers thrown out of their jobs by defense cutbacks as "unsound and destructive."

Chief spokesman for the CIO was Emil Mazey, secretary-treasurer of the CIO Auto Workers, who represented Emil Rieve, chairman of the CIO Social Security Committee. Mrs. Katherine Pollak Ellickson, executive secretary of the committee and CIO associate director of research, testified on other unemployment compensation bills now pending before the House.

Strong support of the Moody-Dingell bill (H.R. 6174) also came in statements submitted to the committee by the CIO Textile Workers, Clothing Workers Furniture Workers, Paperworkers, Electrical Workers and Playthings, Jewelry, and Novelty Workers.

In addition, supporting statements were submitted by CIO State Councils in Massachusetts, New Jersey, New York and Rhode Island.

Mazey centered his chief attack on the argument advanced by business spokesmen in opposition to the Moody-Dingell bill before the Senate Finance Committee that existing unemployment is "normal" and therefore there is no need for the measure.

HE CHARGED that the total of about 95,000 jobless in the Detroit area—where the unemployment percentage is twice that prevailing nationally—could be called "normal" only in terms of "a depraved double standard."

This is evident, he said, from the "transformation" in the attitude of Willis Hall, secretary of the Detroit Board of Commerce, about the gravity of Detroit's unemployment when workers', rather than business, interests were involved.

"Hall was cynically and hypocritically willing to make use of the hunger of the unemployed workers' children to obtain materials to maintain the profits of his corporate constituents," he continued. "But when it was proposed that the government meet its responsibilities by taking direct steps to feed these same hungry children, Hall's contribution was irresponsible and heartless statistical jugglery purporting to prove that the situation was 'normal,' that nothing need be done."

Senate Group Kills Moody Bill

After stalling on the measure since Washington's Birthday, the Senate Finance Committee last week disapproved the Moody Unemployment Compensation Bill by a voice vote.

The effect is to postpone indefinitely action on the measure, which would provide supplementary state unemployment payments in areas of defense unemployment.

Auto Workers Oust 6 More In Local 600

THE CLEANUP of Ford Local 600 by the international executive board of the CIO Auto Workers continued last week with six more discharges.

The international took affairs of the local out of the hands of its officers and staff because of violations of the international constitution and failure to carry out local policies voted by the members.

The administrative board earlier had ousted six officers on the ground that they were "members of or subservient to the Communist Party," a violation of the UAW constituion.

In the latest batch to go were William Johnson, administrative assistant to Local Pres. Carl Stellato, and Percy Llewellyn, director of human relations and political action and a former member of the international executive board; and John Sarri, Mike Kasper, Ken Roache and James Wilson, committeemen in the motor and Dearborn engine plants. None was charged with Communist affiliations.

Johnson was removed, according to the administrative board, to reorganize the staff on a more efficient basis and to make possible more direct representation for Local 600 members. Llewellyn went as an efficiency move and to "faciliate the carrying out of policies and programs of the UAW and the CIO in the field of political action."

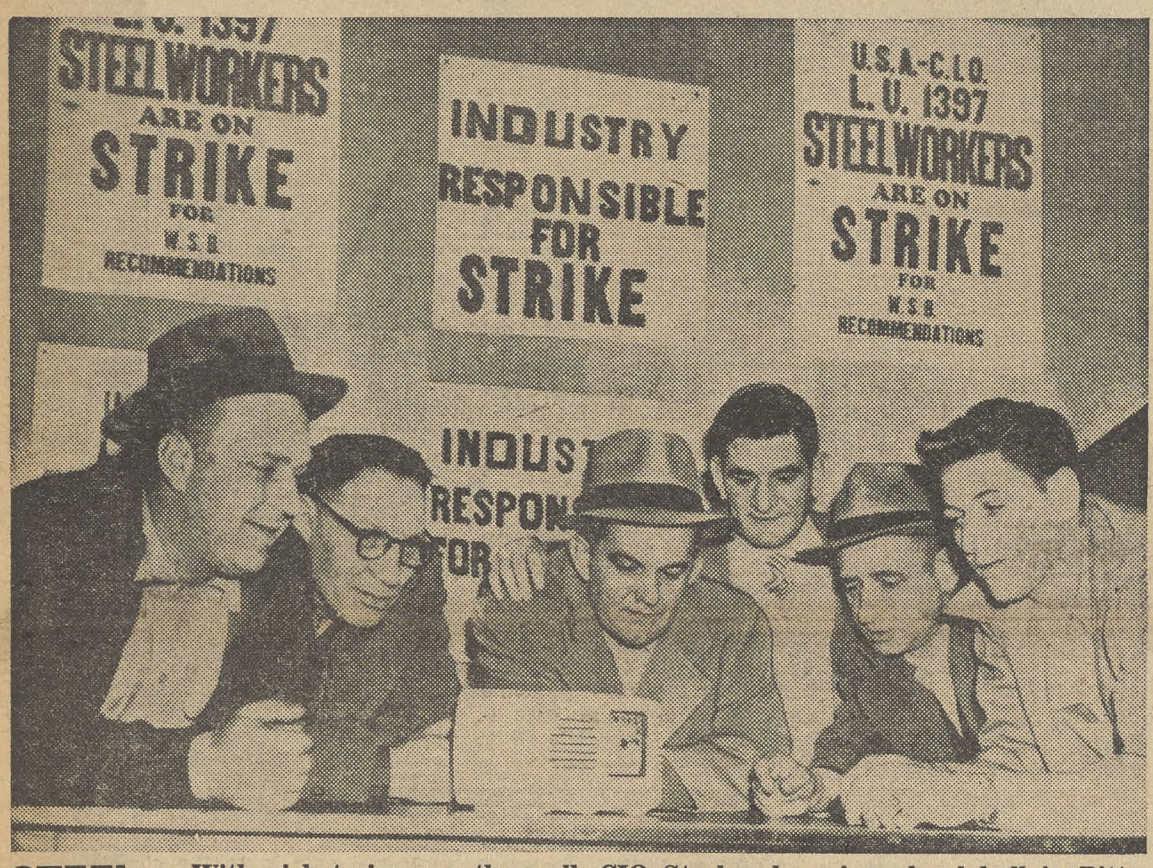
Truman Scorches 'Greedy' Steel Price Gouge Pleas, Seizes Mills

— SEE PAGES 2, 3, 4, 5



STEEL — With picket signs on the wall, CIO Steelworkers in a local hall in Pittsburgh hear President Truman order seizure of industry in broadcast 90 minutes before the steel strike deadline. The union promptly agreed to continue work, but the industry balked and complied reluctantly. It lost federal court fight in Washington to have the seizure declared illegal, promptly started another.

TELEPHONE Workers' rallies in more than 180 cities throughout the U. S.—like this one in Washington—assured respect for Western Electric strikers' picket lines. Nearly 300,000 CIO Communications Workers were taking part in a showdown picketing campaign to gain better wages and working conditions in the Bell System—the world's largest monopoly. (See Page 7)

Truman Broadcast—

'Greedy' Price Gouge Demands Of Steel Industry Assailed

Following is the text in large part of President Truman's broadcast in which he announced U. S. seizure of the steel industry and assailed the position of steel management:

TONIGHT, our country faces a grave danger. We are faced by the possibility that at midnight tonight our steel industry will be shut down. This must not happen.

Steel is our key industry. It is vital to our defense effort. It is vital to peace.

We do not have a stockpile of the kinds of steel we need for defense. Steel is flowing directly from the plants that make it into defense production.

If steel production stops, we will have to cut down and delay our atomic energy program. If steel production stops, it won't be long before we have to stop making engines for our Air Force planes.

Our national security and our chances for peace depend on our defense production. Our defense production depends on steel.

With American troops facing the enemy on the field of battle, I would not be living up to my oath of office if I failed to do whatever is required to provide them with the weapons and ammunition they need for their survival.

Therefore, I am taking two actions tonight.

First, I am directing the Secretary of Commerce to take possession of the steel mills, and to keep them operating.

Second, I am directing the Acting Director of Defense Mobilization to get the representatives of the steel companies and the steel workers down here to Washington at the earliest possible date in a renewed effort to get them to settle their dispute.

In normal times—if we were not in a national emergency—this dispute might not have arisen.

But today, there are limitations on what prices employers can charge.

For more than a year, we have prevented runaway inflation. We have done it by having rules that are fair to everyone—that require everyone to sacrifice some of his own interests to the national interest.

Those rules have been applied to this steel case. They have been applied to the union, and they have been applied to the companies. The union has accepted these rules. The companies have not.

The companies insist that they must have price increases that are out of line with our stabilization rules. The companies have said that unless they can get these increases they will not settle with the union.

The companies have said, in short, that unless they can have what they want, the steel industry will shut down. That is the plain, unvarnished fact of the matter.

AT THE HOMESTEAD Works of U. S. Steel Corp., these steel workers tried picket signs on for size, put them away when mills were seized. From left are Rudolph Kronket, Stephen Vadas and James Hagan.

Let me tell you how this situation came about.

The steel companies and the steelworkers union had a contract that ran until Dec. 31, 1951.

On Nov. 1, 1951, the union gave notice that in view of the higher cost of living, and the wage increases already received by workers in other industries, the steel workers wanted higher wages and better working conditions in their new contract for 1952.

The steel companies met with the union but the companies never really bargained.

No progress was made, and a strike was threatened last Dec. 31.

Before that happened, I sent the case to the Wage Stabilization Board.

The Wage Board went into the facts very thoroughly. About three weeks ago, on Mar. 20, the Wage Board recommended certain wage increases and certain changes in working conditions.

The Wage Board's recommendations were less than the union thought it ought to have. Nevertheless, the union accepted them as a basis for settlement.

There has been a lot of propaganda to the effect that the recommendations of the Wage Board were too high, that they would touch off a new round of wage increases, and that a new wage-price spiral would set in.

The facts are to the contrary. When you look into the matter, you find that the Wage Board's recommendations were fair and reasonable. They were entirely consistent with what has been allowed in other industries over the past 18 months. They are in accord with sound stabilization policies.

Under these recommendations, the steel workers would simply be catching up with what workers in other major industries are already receiving.

The steel workers have had no adjustment in their wages since Dec. 1, 1950. Since that time, the cost of living has risen, and workers in such industries as automobiles, rubber, electrical equipment, and meat packing have received increases ranging from 13 to 17c an hour.

In the steel case, the Wage Board recommended a general wage increase averaging 13 3/4c an hour in 1952. Obviously, this sets no new pattern and breaks no ceiling. It simply permits the steel workers to catch up to what workers in other industries have already received.

The fact of the matter is that the settlement proposed by the Board is fair to both parties and to the public interest. And what's more, I think the steel companies know it. They can read figures just as well as anybody else. I think they realized that the Board's recommendations on wages are reasonable, and they are raising all this hullabaloo in an attempt to force the Government to give them a big boost in prices.

Now what about the price side? Is it true that the steel companies need a big increase in prices in order to be able to raise wages?

Here are the facts.

Steel industry profits are now running at the rate of about two and one-half billion dollars a year. The steel companies are now making a profit of about $19.50 on every ton of steel they produce. On top of that, they can get a price increase of close to $3 a ton under the Capehart Amendment to the price control law. They don't need this, but we are going to have to give it to them, because the law requires it.

Now add this to the $19.50 a ton they are already making and you have profits of better than $22 a ton.

Now, what would the Wage Board's recommendations do to steel profits? To hear the steel companies talk, you would think the wage increase recommended by the Board would wipe out their profits altogether. Well, the fact of the matter is that if all the recommendations of the Wage Board were put into effect, they would cost the industry about $4 or $5 a ton.

In other words, if the steel companies absorbed every penny of the wage increase, they would still be making profits of $17 or $18 a ton.

Now, a profit of $17 or $18 a ton for steel is extremely high. During 1947, 1948, and 1949, the three years before the Korean outbreak, steel profits averaged a little better than $11 a ton. The companies could absorb this wage increase entirely out of profits, and still be making much higher profits than they made in the three prosperous years before Korea.

The plain fact is—though most people don't realize it—the steel industry has never been so profitable as it is today—at least not since the "profiteering" days of World War I.

And yet, in the face of these facts, the steel companies are now saying they ought to have a price increase of $12 a ton, giving them a profit of $26 or $27 a ton. That's about the most outrageous thing I ever heard of. They not only want to raise their prices to cover any wage increase; they want to double their money on the deal.

Suppose we were to yield to these demands. Suppose we broke our price control rules, and gave the steel companies a big price increase. That would be a terrible blow to the stability of our economy.

If we gave in to the steel companies on this issue, you would say goodby to stabilization. If we knuckled under to the steel industry, the lid would be off. Prices would start jumping up all around us—not just prices of things using steel, but prices of many other things we buy, including milk and groceries and meat.

You may think this steel dispute doesn't affect you—you may think it's just a matter between the government and a few greedy companies. But it isn't. If we granted the outrageous prices the steel industry wants, we would scuttle our whole price control program. And that comes pretty close to home.

Truman Challenges Congress As Dixiegops Raise The Roof

PRESIDENT TRUMAN last week sent a special message to Congress on why he seized the steel mills—and challenged it to handle the problem any better.

The President said that he did not believe that Congress would feel that the government should "give in to the demands of the steel industry for an exorbitant price increase and take the consequences so far as the resulting inflation is concerned."

Mr. Truman said that Congress might feel that the government should have tried to force the steel workers to work for the companies for a longer period without a contract.

He said Congress might feel that the steel industry should be permitted to shut down "although that would immediately endanger the safety of our fighting forces abroad and weaken the whole structure of our national security.

"I do not believe that Congress would favor any of these courses of action, but that is a matter for Congress to determine.

"It may be, on the other hand, that the Congress will wish to pass legislation establishing specific terms and conditions in reference to the operation of the steel mills by the government.

"Sound legislation of this character might be very desirable."

The message did not calm the debate which was raging in the Senate over the seizure. Vice Pres. Barkley and Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) spearheaded defense of the President.

Republicans and Dixiecrats like Sen. Bricker (R. O.) and Rep. Gwinn (R. N. Y.) were loud in their condemnation of the seizure, with the words "socialization," "nationalization" and "dictatorship" almost as numerous but not as aromatic as the blossoms now on Washington's cherry trees.

Meanwhile, Sen. Murray (D. Mo.), and Rep. Javits (R.-Lib. N. Y.) were seeking legislation which would provide that the government could impound the profits of seized properties while they were operated by the government.

Murray, who is chairman of the Senate Labor Committee, told reporters that he would ask his Labor-Management subcommittee to "speed up" current studies on seizure legislation. Humphrey, who heads the subcommittee, said the group would comply at once with Murray's request for quick action.

Javits introduced a bill which would require the government to operate seized property for its own account instead of for the employer's account. He told the House that the measure would require the government to pay "only just compensation" for the use of the property during the seizure period.

Humphrey released a summary by the Labor-Management subcommittee's staff of the testimony of Nathan P. Feinsinger, Wage Stabilization Board chairman. The summary said the WSB recommendations for wage and fringe increases in the steel dispute were less than those provided in settlements in other comparable industries and that the union shop recommended in steel is not new in the industry.

The Senate Banking and Currency Committee last week recessed until Apr. 17, when it will decide whether to reopen hearings on the Defense Production Act.

U.S. Seizes Steel Plants Minutes Before Strike

By GERVASE N. LOVE

PRESIDENT TRUMAN seized the nation's steel industry shortly before midnight on Apr. 8 after the men who own it refused to grant wage increases without a tremendous rise in prices.

The move halted the strike of 650,000 members of the CIO Steelworkers who were prepared to man picket lines in a matter of minutes.

"The patience of the steel workers is not inexhaustible," and a settlement in steel is overdue, the 170-man Wage-Policy Committee of the USA-CIO warned at the weekend.

Meeting in Washington on Apr. 11, while government-sponsored sessions between the union and the steel companies moved into their third day, the policy committee heard a detailed report from Pres. Philip Murray of developments in the fast-moving steel situation.

As The CIO News went to press, there was no indication of an immediate break in the deadlock, caused by the steel companies' refusal to use the Wage Stabilization Board's recommendations as a basis for a collective bargaining agreement. Those WSB recommendations were highlighted by a total wage increase of 17½c hourly over a one-year period, six paid holidays and the union shop.

The union said it was ready to proceed with "the utmost speed" to work out new agreements. Meetings called by John R. Steelman, acting head of the Office of Defense Mobilization, were scheduled to continue through most of the holiday weekend.

The USA-CIO statement noted that "it is not our job . . . to bargain with the steel industry over prices." But in past negotiations, the union said, "we found that the companies would not bargain with us until they had extorted their pound of flesh from the government."

The President announced the seizure over a nationwide radio and television hookup. He flatly blamed the crisis on the steel industry and its inordinate greed for profits.

Yielding to its "greedy" demands, he said, would wreck the economic stabilization program.

"The plain fact of the matter is," he told the country, "that the steel companies are recklessly forcing a shutdown of the steel mills.

"They are trying to get special, preferred treatment, not available to any other industry. And they are apparently willing to stop steel production to get it.

"As President of the United States it is my plain duty to keep this from happening. And that is the reason for the measures taken tonight . . . Both management and labor will then be working for the government. And they will have the clear duty to heat up their furnaces again and go on making steel."

The union quickly and flatly accepted the seizure and—for the fifth time—postponed the strike.

"The President of the United States tonight announced that the government had seized the steel plants involved in our dispute," Murray said in a message to all USA-CIO locals.

"In so doing, the President requested that the members of our organization continue at work without interruption. The government having seized the steel plants, you are hereby directed to comply with the request of the President of the United States and to continue at work."

However, the industry balked, and at first thousands of steel workers were locked out when they showed up for work.

Less than a half-hour after Truman had finished speaking, John C. Gall, attorney for Republic Steel and Youngstown Sheet & Tube, obtained an order for an immediate hearing on a petition for a temporary restraining order which would have prevented the government from seizing the plants.

The hearing was held Apr. 9 before Judge Alexander Holtzoff in Federal Court in Washington. After listening to arguments of counsel for the two petitioners and Bethlehem Steel, which had joined in the action, and counter-arguments by the government, the judge rejected the petition.

The companies failed to make out a case for their claim that seizure would cause them "irreparable damages," he said.

"It is very doubtful, to say the least," he added, "whether a federal court would have the authority to issue an injunction against the President of the United States. . . ."

The companies then moved for an injunction, which requires that both sides be given extended hearings, but ordered their closed mills reopened.

Meantime, the President's instructions to his officials were being placed in effect.

Sec. of Commerce Sawyer took nominal possession of the mills. He sent messages to the presidents of the 86 basic steel plants naming them "operating managers" and directing them to fly the U. S. flag.

Steelman summoned union and management leaders—who had been meeting in New York to Washington for further negotiations. Sessions were held Apr. 9, 10, and 11.

At his press conference Apr. 10, the President said he would not attempt to force a wage agreement on the industry while it is bargaining with the union.

The seizure and the chain of events that grew out of it followed long hours of hard bargaining at meetings in New York at which the industry flatly refused to accept the recommendations made by the Wage Stabilization Board to settle the crisis. The union had accepted them previously.

Chairman Nathan Feinsinger of the WSB joined in the meetings at Steelman's request. He brought the parties closer together—but not close enough.

Before actually getting down to bargaining, the company had stalled off the union while some of its top spokesmen were in Washington vainly attempting to pry a price increase out of economic stabilization officials.

Price Stabilizer Ellis Arnall and Economic Stabilizer Roger Putnam maintained stubbornly they were entitled to $2 to $3 a ton at the outside under the Capehart Amendment, and the President backed them up.

The industry demanded a $12 per ton increase as its price for accepting the WSB recommendations and continuing to supply the steel necessary needed by the country's fighting men in Korea.

Steel profits have been so great that the industry could pay the cost of WSB wage recommendations and still have a high level of profits.

On April 4, ninety-six hours before the strike deadline, in compliance with a WSB request, Murray notified the steel union locals that the walkout would go on.

In accordance with normal practice, the industry began to cool down furnaces before the strike deadline, throwing thousands of Steelworkers into premature idleness.

PRESIDENT TRUMAN hammers home condemnation of "greedy" price gouging demand of steel management, in national radio-TV address in which he ordered seizure of industry shortly before deadline for CIO Steelworkers' walkout.

'Prevaricator' of Lowest Type

Philip Murray, president of the CIO and of the Steelworkers, bitterly denied the hysterical charge of Clarence B. Randall, president of Inland Steel, that the government's seizure of steel mills "discharges a political debt" of President Truman to the CIO.

"Clarence Randall's diatribe charging that a 'deal' exists between President Truman and me is a lie—a malicious and deliberate lie," Murray said. "It is an insult to President Truman and to me and to hundreds of thousands of Steelworkers. The complete answer to Mr. Randall's entire statement is that he is a prevaricator of the lowest type."

Randall made the charge in a nationwide radio broadcast.

CIO Airs New TV Show In Capital

CIO's new series of films for television —"Issues of the Day"—will make their bow in Washington, starting Apr. 18.

The CIO series of 13 TV films will be shown over WMAL-TV on Friday nights at 10:30. The first film to be shown to televiewers in the Nation's Capital will be on the subject of "Wages."

The films, which run for about 15 minutes, use both dramatic and interview techniques to tell the story.

The series is available at low rental rates to CIO groups throughout the nation for use on local television stations. Details can be had from the CIO Publicity Dept. or the CIO Political Action Committee's Dept. of Public Relations.

CIO MEMBERS throughout the country were called upon last week to buttonhole their congressmen during the Easter holidays and persuade them to vote down the Allen resolution to investigate the Wage Stabilization Board.

The plea went out in a letter to CIO regional directors, councils, local industrial unions and the presidents of international unions from Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president, and Dir. Nathan E. Cowan of the Legislative Dept.

It pointed out that approval of the resolution would have the actual effect of placing Congress behind the steel companies in their current dispute with the CIO Steelworkers, and that it has been scheduled for consideration by the House on Apr. 24—two days after the end of the Easter recess. The resolution was sponsored by Rep. Allen (R. Ill.).

"It is extremely urgent that delegations be organized to contact the Congressmen at home to urge them to vote against the resolution," the letter said.

"Impress upon the Congressmen that the overwhelming defeat by the House last year of the Lucas Amendment to the Defense Production Act should have settled this matter definitely."

The Michigan CIO Council last week asked that State's congressional delegation to oppose the resolution. Pres. August Scholle and Sec.-Treas. Barney Hopkins told the members that a WSB probe now "would only be interpreted as an attempt to undermine the authority and functioning of the board."

"The people of the United States, as well as Congress," they added, "have accepted the principle of having a wage stabilization board resolve differences between labor and management. This board must have a fair opportunity to carry out its responsibilities."

The California CIO Council urged officers of affiliated locals to let members of the House and Senate know they oppose the resolution. Sec.-Treas. John A. Despol characterized it as "a move to use congressional coercion against the Steelworkers."

CIO members were engaged in a spontaneous campaign of letter-writing to congratulate President Truman for his radio address on the steel crisis and his order seizing the steel industry. Among the letters he received was one signed by Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, Executive Vice Pres. Hyman Blumberg and Gen. Sec.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum of the CIO Clothing Workers.

"On behalf of the nearly 40,000 men's apparel workers we have the honor to represent," they wrote, "we wish to express our heartfelt congratulations and deep pride as Americans in your historic address . . ."

Reflections On Steel

It is still difficult, in the midst of a most eventful week, to take a long, detached view of the steel dispute —but certain random observations come quickly to mind:

★ The steel industry can dish it out but can't take it. For months, the executives of steel have been arrogant, contemptuous, disdainful men. They refused to bargain in good faith with the Steelworkers union; and they went on the assumption that a whopping, profiteering price increase was their just due.

Yet when they lost a decision in the Wage Stabilization Board, they whimpered and whined. When they weren't able to get away with an unwarranted price increase and special privilege under the law, they whined even more.

The Steelworkers union lost many of its wage proposals before the Board—but it didn't whine.

★ Do industry spokesmen know what they're talking about? Clarence Randall of Inland Steel, during the course of his diatribe on the radio and TV networks, twice referred to the Wage Board's recommendations for a "closed shop."

Of course, the Wage Board recommended the "union shop"—not the "closed shop"—and the union had never asked for the closed shop, which is illegal under Taft-Hartley.

Is it too much to expect that Mr. Randall, before going on four networks to lie about the President and the steel union, might have acquainted himself with so fundamental a fact in the case?

★ The steel industry practices double-talk.

The steel industry seems to take the position that "it's an emergency when it's against the union; it ain't an emergency when it's against the industry."

That propaganda line was tried out in federal court when the industry tried in vain to get an injunction against the President. One steel industry lawyer argued the strike threat had created a grave emergency, which the President should have handled by a Taft-Hartley "national emergency" injunction.

Half an hour later, another company lawyer—Patton of Republic Steel—was asked by Judge Holtzoff whether the President's action wasn't justified by the gravity of the emergency situation.

Nope, said Patton, there's really no emergency, since —he claimed—there is 30 days' supply of steel on hand.

★ Harry S. Truman doesn't look like a very lame duck. In the days after his decision to retire in January, Washington commentators were arguing that his Administration was falling apart, that he had lost all power to act. Steel can tell a couple of things to the commentators.

★ The editorial pages—and a lot of news columns—are prejudiced, for a change. During World War II, when President Roosevelt had direct legislative authority to seize properties, the papers squawked to the high heavens about his seizure of Sewell Avery's Montgomery-Ward.

Now the papers would have you believe that they'd support Harry Truman's seizure of steel if he had cited a law, rather than the inherent powers of the Presidency, for his action.

Frankly, we don't think the editorial pages will change many minds.

Caught Steeling!

Steel Bosses Exposed

This discussion of the steel situation was given by James B. Carey, CIO secretary-treasurer and IUE-CIO president, on the Viewpoint USA program of the National Broadcasting Co.:

NO GROUP in America is more concerned than the CIO about the danger of inflation. We believe this threat is a real one and is potentially as great a menace to our national security as any danger in view.

The records show conclusively that from the beginning we have been one of the groups in the forefront of the fight for a stronger Defense Production Act, one that would provide adequate protection against the inflationary pressures that result from our mobilization effort.

In contrast, spokesmen for industry have united in fighting all economic controls that are essential at this time of unbalanced economic forces. Even today, in this time of record profits, the big business special interests lobbies are meeting in secret and plotting to kill price and rent control.

At the same time they want to keep wages under firm controls and thus place most of the burden of paying for defense upon the workers and low-income families.

In view of the record, therefore, I am sure that the American people will not be fooled by the phony cries about the inflationary dangers which the steel industry's press agents are trying to make them believe lie in the Wage Stabilization Board's recommendation for settlement of the steel dispute.

The facts of the situation are quite different. The proposed settlement is not inflationary in any way but is actually well under the full amount which the Board could have recommended and still stayed well within present wage control regulations.

In other words, the proposed settlement would still leave the Steelworkers lacking gains which have been won by workers in other industries, and well within the framework of present stabilization policies.

The new concern about inflation which the steel industry is expressing would come in better light if the industry had not bitterly fought all our efforts to persuade Congress to write adequate anti-inflation legislation.

Had the proposals made by the CIO right after Korea been enacted into law, the inflation which makes the present WSB recommendations necessary would not have taken place and the present situation in steel would not exist.

What must be kept in mind in considering the Board's recommendations is that this is the first time in the last five years that the steel union has had any opportunity to renegotiate its entire contract.

The straight wage increase recommended is based on the cost of living and is entirely in line with existing wage regulations. Nearly all other workers in American industries have already had similar cost of living increases in effect for several months, but the Steelworkers have been denied similar adjustments in the year when most price increases took place because their contract did not expire until Dec. 31, 1951.

IN ITS OTHER recommendations having to do with paid holidays, improved allowances for vacations, and an increase in the differential for night work, the Board merely acted to permit steel workers partially to catch up with existing practices in other major industries.

The proposed settlement, therefore, is not inflationary in any way. It simply would remove some of the grave inequities existing in the steel industry and, despite all the industry propaganda to the contrary, could be made without any price increase.

Profits in the industry are considerably higher than in the peace years of 1946 to 1949.

Some government economists have estimated that the industry might give its employes a real increase of 55c, more than double that recommended by the Board, and still have excess profits over its best postwar years, without boosting the price of steel a single, solitary penny.

In accepting the recommendations of the Board, the Steelworkers gave up many of their just demands in an effort to avert a strike.

They are willing to make all necessary sacrifices for the defense of America, but they will not permit an even more unfair share of the burden to be placed upon them.

Murray's Broadcast—

'They Want To Blame Us, While Profiting At Your Expense'

Twenty-four hours before President Truman ordered U. S. seizure of the steel industry, Pres. Philip Murray of the CIO Steelworkers spoke on "The Union's Side in the Steel Crisis" over the NBC network. After the seizure order, the USA-CIO postponed the strike.

Here is Murray's address in large part:

GOOD EVENING, ladies and gentlemen. I want to speak to you tonight about the impending shutdown of the steel industry. Already, across the nation, steel furnaces are being cooled.

As President of the United Steelworkers of America, I am fully aware of the serious consequences of any stoppage of steel production. The Steelworkers union is always proud of its sense of responsibility, its patriotism, and its willingness to make sacrifices in the national interest.

Yet, on Wednesday, a strike in steel will begin.

Why?

Simply and plainly because steel management wants a strike. The companies in the steel industry have created this crisis. They have openly refused to comply with the government's recommendations for a settlement of our dispute. They have refused to move one inch from their determination to maintain and even increase their excess profits.

They have sought to use the present crisis as a bludgeon to wreck our stabilization program and to extort inflationary price increases from the government. They have deliberately incited a steel strike.

Their purpose is plain. They want you to blame our union—while they roll up higher and higher profits at your expense. They want you to believe they oppose inflation—while they seek to break price control regulations.

They have embarked on a cynical campaign to twist the facts, to rewrite the history of the last six months, and to blame the workers of steel for the price-gouging of the steel management.

I want to talk facts—facts that are in the official records of this steel dispute—facts that the steel industry would prefer you forget.

Fact Number One is this: The Union has voluntarily postponed this strike four times since our contracts terminated on Jan. 1st. We have waited patiently for 99 days. We did so at the request of the President of the United States, to help the search for a reasonable settlement.

Fact Number Two is this: The Wage Stabilization Board studied the facts of our dispute for almost three months, before it offered recommendations for settlement. We honestly believe that those recommendations were too low.

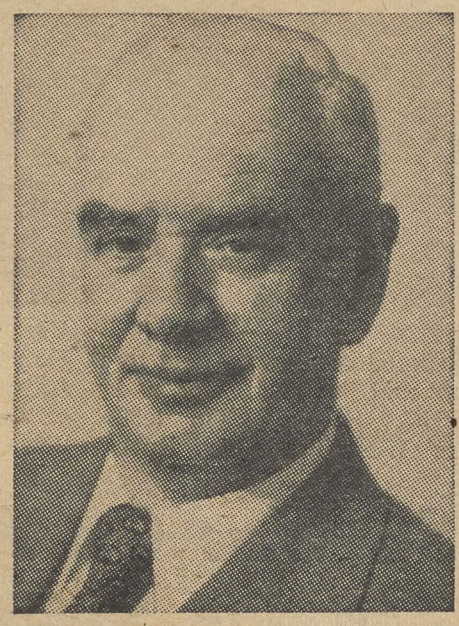
We believe that the Steelworkers should have been given a higher wage increase, and better "fringe benefits." But the Wage Board recommended a wage increase smaller than necessary to meet the rise in the cost of living. Its "fringe" recommendations are less than now prevail in many other industries; and some of them will not go into effect for months to come.

Nevertheless, the union accepted, in a spirit of compromise and concern for the national welfare, the recommendations of the Wage Board.

Fact Number Three—the most important fact for you, the general public—is this: The Wage increases recommended by the Wage Board, and agreed to by the Union, are not inflationary. I repeat, the Wage Board's recommendations are not inflationary. They break no formulas. They breach no ceilings. They are fully in accord with America's program for economic stabilization.

Remember that the Steelworkers received absolutely no wage increase during 1951, when consumer prices were skyrocketing.

Thus, through the Wage Board's recommendations, the Steelworkers have a chance to partially "catch up" on the diminished buying power of their wages.



PHILIP MURRAY
"The industry wants a special license to gouge the public."

The Steelworkers certainly know the facts—because they must try to feed and clothe their families with corroded 1950 dollars. The government knows the facts; the Wage Board has publicly announced that its recommendations are within the framework of our American stabilization program. The industry knows—and has admitted—that Steelworkers are entitled to a wage increase to catch up with the rise in the cost of living.

These are the facts that Mr. Ben Fairless of U.S. Steel glossed over, with indecent haste, in his talk on this radio network last night. Mr. Fairless emphasized the industry's last minute offer to the Union. He didn't tell you that this was the industry's very first offer, after 120 days of negotiations and hearings. Fairless fiddled for 120 days, little concerned about the human needs of his 300,000 employes.

Mr. Fairless didn't tell you that the industry's wage offer would make up only half the buying power lost by the steel workers in the past 18 months.

Mr. Fairless has glossed over many aspects of the steel labor-management dispute. He would have you, the public, believe that the steel industry's resistance to the union shop is a matter of principle. But Mr. Fairless did not mention that a great majority of America's principal industries have operated for many years under union shop agreements.

And Mr. Fairless glossed over the fact that the United States Steel Corp., like every other major steel producer, has voluntarily signed scores of union shop agreements with other unions. The U.S. Steel Corp. has union shop contracts covering scores of thousands of coal miners; it has, for example, union shop contracts on its company-owned railroads and company-owned steamship lines.

Let's get the facts straight. Settlement is not being delayed by any matters of principle; settlement is being delayed by an unprincipled effort of the steel industry to hi-jack you, the general public, through unnecessary, unprincipled price increases.

The proposed wage increase is not the cause of the impending steel stoppage. There would be no impending stoppage in steel if the companies were satisfied with normal, decent, fair profits.

The steel industry could absorb the proposed wage increases in steel without raising prices a single solitary penny a ton—and still make a fair and equitable profit return to the stockholders.

Why is there a dispute today? Because the steel industry has taken the position that its tremendous profits are untouchable profits through unnecessary price increases.

The President has stated that if the proposed wage increases bring steel profits "below normal," the companies, will receive equitable price treatment.

But this is not enough for the self-proclaimed statesmen of the steel industry. They want more, more, more! And until they get more, they just say no, no, no—to each and every fair proposal for settlement of this dispute.

What the steel industry wants is a price bonus that will send steel profits to the highest level in history.

What the steel industry wants, in effect, is a special government license to gouge the consuming public. Unless the steel industry gets this special-privilege license, it will not make a reasonable settlement with the Union. The industry hopes to shift to the Union the blame for its price hold-up.

This is the most malicious economic deviltry I have seen in a life-time of experience in American industrial relations. It is a scheme compounded of greed and lust for profits on the one hand; and, on the other, of deriding contempt for the thinking powers of the American public.

Think of it. The Union accepted, as a basis for settlement, the compromise on wage increases which a government board has found to be non-inflationary. The Union agreed to accept the limitations required by our country's program for fighting inflation.

But the steel industry has refused to abide by those limitations. The industry wants to smash price controls, and the national price stabilization program. It is ready to start a new inflationary price spiral.

The executives of the steel industry have no objection in principle to increasing wages so long as it is for themselves and not for their workers. We know that because they themselves have taken increases in their salaries in the past year.

In 1951 the Steelworkers received no increases. But in that year Mr. Benjamin Fairless, President of U. S. Steel, received a pay increase of $47,000. He now receives $261,000 a year with which to fight the wolf from the door of his estate.

Mr. Enders Voorhees, Chairman of the Finance Committee of U. S. Steel, received a pay increase of $44,000 in 1951. He now receives $211,400 a year with which to feed his family.

Mr. Irving S. Olds, Chairman of the Board of U. S. Steel, likewise received a pay increase of $44,000, for a total yearly salary of $211,000.

Last night Mr. Fairless asked me a question over the radio. I have answered it in this speech. Now I would like to ask him a question.

Mr. Fairless, how do you justify the double standard practices by your company—a standard under which you and your fellow executives take substantial wage increases for yourselves but deny simple cost of living wage adjustments for your employes?

Yes, we stand on the verge of a stoppage in steel. It is a stoppage that could have been averted months ago if the companies had engaged in real collective bargaining with the Union. It is a stoppage that could have been averted weeks ago if the companies had joined with the Union in promptly accepting the moderate proposals of the Wage Stabilization Board.

It is a stoppage that can be averted even now, if the steel industry now accepts the Wage Board's recommendations. These represent a compromise of the issues in dispute. They provide the basis for a fair and equitable settlement.

The Union has accepted this compromise recommended by the Board and endorsed by the President of the United States. But the industry refuses to accept.

A strike thus seems inevitable. But the strike should be recognized for what it is—a strike by the steel industry against the government, against our Union and against the American people.

Steel Firms Holler, And Tap Tax Bonanza

THE STEEL companies screamed "confiscation," "socialism" and "labor dictatorship" when the government seized the industry to avoid a strike. BUT there was nary a peep out of them when they were handed certificates to write off in five years a large part of the cost of new plants.

The taxpayer foots the bill for this "tax bonanza."

Testifying before a House committee, James F. King, chief of resources expansion of the Defense Production Administration, recently said four-fifth of the $15 billion of certificates of necessity then approved went to seven heavy industries.

Steel companies headed the list then, and are included in the newest DPA release on certificates of necessity which brings the total of certificates up to almost $17 billion, of which more than about $16 billion are eligible for the rapid tax write-off.

In the newest figures, as of March 20, rapid tax write-offs of about 65% went to steel firms.

U. S. Steel was granted three certificates of necessity covering plants valued at $14,120,000. Others included Inland Steel, $4,967,285; Jones & Laughlin, $509,400; Bethlehem, $2,890,000; A. M. Byers, $5,869,000, and Ohio Seamless Tube, $3,140,073.

U. S. Steel has appeared on many earlier DPA lists. It topped all other firms with the write-off allowed at its gigantic plant being built at Morrisville, Pa.

Bethlehem appeared on many earlier lists, Bethlehem admitted that until the end of 1951, it had obtained permission to write off the $221 million.

In its year-end report Bethlehem had already written off $9 million. In the list of DPA-approved certificates for the period from Jan. 28 to Feb. 2, Bethlehem was allowed 85% quick tax write-off on production facilities valued at $32.5 million.

On the same list Jones & Laughlin got an 85% write-off on $22,755,200.

2 Oil Firms Boycott WSB 'Pilot' Hearing

TWO MAJOR OIL companies defied government efforts to settle disputes involving 56,000 oil workers.

The Sinclair Refining Co., and Standard Oil Co. of Indiana boycotted a Wage Stabilization Board "pilot case" hearing in St. Louis.

The first dispute involved the CIO Oil Workers which holds a nation-wide contract with Sinclair. The second dispute involves an independent union.

OWIU Pres. O. A. Knight urged the WSB "to find some means of settling this dispute or take the handcuffs off our group and let us settle ourselves."

The panel also planned a hearing at San Francisco to consider disputes of OWIU with Shell Oil, Inc., and Utah Oil and Refining.

The four separate reports which the panel will make to WSB may affect 200 contracts in the industry. WSB has not decided whether to ask the panel to make recommendations.

President Truman referred the the oil dispute to the WSB after the oil workers—represented by the CIO union, independent unions and AFL unions — twice postponed a strike.

KNIGHT is leading a united front of the unions in seeking a 25c-an-hour-wage rise, increased shift differentials and other benefits.

Company offers have amounted to about 10c hourly on basic wages, and some firms agreed to increase night shift differentials.

Union members of the tripartite WSB panel are OWIU Oklahoma Dist. Dir. D. R. (Scotty) Stewart and John McCarten of the AFL Steamfitters.

In a case prepared for hearings, the unions contended that their wage request is justified by increased cost of living and by increased productivity of the oil workers and that the wage increases sought would not be inflationary, Knight said.

"Wage increases for several years have been generally tied to increases in the cost of living, as measured by the Consumers' Price Index," said Knight.

"We are going to attack the CPI very sharply and prove that it by no means measures the actual increase in living costs. We are going to prove that living costs have risen much more than the CPI shows them to have risen."

Knight said that the unions' testimony would prove that increased living costs alone justify the wage increase the oil workers ask, without considering other factors, such as increased productivity.

"And in the field of productivity, we are going to show that the output of the oil workers has increased so vastly as to justify the raises we ask even if cost of living were not considered," he added.

"As a matter of fact, the oil industry is so prosperous, profits are so high, and productivity is increasing so fast that our major problem is not to prove the justification of the wage increase within the economics of our industry.

"The major question before the wage board will be whether or not the wage increases we ask would be inflationary when viewed from the standpoint of the economy as a whole. We intend to prove to the satisfaction of any fair-minded person that this wage increase would not be inflationary, but rather that it would be beneficial to the general welfare of people other than oil workers, as well as to oil workers."

The unions contend that the wage increase sought will cost the typical company only 1.6c out of each dollar of income, leaving 18.3c of each dollar taken in by the company as profit.

CIO-CSC Was On Job Quickly When Tornado Struck Arkansas

THE STORY of how the National CIO Community Services Committee was able to help CIO members—and others—in the tornado-battered area of Arkansas is beginning to reach the rest of the country.

When the stories of death and destruction left by the wind in Searcy, Judsonia, Bald Knob and the Dierks area were verified, the CIO-CSC went quickly into action.

Charles Ferguson and William Donovan, staff men for the committee, were rushed to the stricken area. Their job was to implement the National CIO-CSC program of bringing aid to CIO members who are victims of a disaster, and to help as much as possible all citizens of a stricken community.

Several hundred CIO members live in the area—400 members of Local 369 of the Woodworkers in Dierks, 250 members of Shoeworkers Local 179 in Searcy, and 150 members of Local 178 of the same union in Bald Knob.

Many of their homes were destroyed. Some had deaths in their families, others had injured wives or children. The list was long—nearly 100 CIO families touched by disaster, or worse.

For three days and nights the CIO-CSC staff men toured the devastated area. They set up working relationships between the local unions and the Red Cross, which had established disaster stations. They called on the CSC's experience during the Kansas City floods, and were able to show local union officials how to get benefits for their members.

CIO MEN were placed in Red Cross disaster headquarters to help handle union cases, and to see that full and correct information reached CIO families.

To see that rehabilitation benefits were distributed fairly, CIO men asked for and obtained representation on local Citizens Award Committees, which had the final say.

"It was just routine work," said Ferguson. "All we did was to point out to local officials how the CIO-CSC disaster program could be applied in their area to help union members."

The reaction of the CIO members who shared in the help given was summed up by one of the local union leaders.

"First of all, the interest that the National CIO showed in our local problem was a great morale booster," he said, "and that alone will help us in the job ahead. The real benefits that will be brought to our members by applying the CIO-CSC program locally will long be remembered.

"We're rebuilding now—our homes and, some of us, our lives. And we're going to do some rebuilding in our union, too. We're going to build into it a working Community Services Commitee to bring year-round help and benefits to our members."

CIO Brewers Get 11c Hike

CIO BREWERY Workers have won an 11c hourly wage increase in a new national contract with Standard Brands.

The contract covers 1300 workers in eight of the companies yeast and vinegar plants throughout the country.

Of the 11c increase, 6.5c was payable immediately, while the remainder required approval of the Wage Stabilization Board.

The new contract also provided for a new group insurance program, in which the union will have a trusteeship along with management, and granting higher benefits for hospital, surgical and disability coverage.

Ohio CIO Council Orders Tax Study

It's "high time that the people had the facts" on taxation, declared Pres. Jack Kroll of Ohio CIO Council, when that body's executive board ordered that experts conduct a complete and unbiased analysis of Ohio's tax structure.

"We want to know whether a modern tax structure, without loopholes and designed in accordance with ability to pay, can be devised for Ohio," said Kroll, who is also National PAC director. "At the same time we are seeking to answer the frantic search of local governments for adequate revenue to pay decent wages to public employes, including teachers, and also provide services the people want and need."

"Fasten it with my Union pin — It will never let me down!"

Murray To Get Awards Of Liberal, Labor Groups

PHILIP MURRAY, president of the CIO and of the Steelworkers, will be honored twice within the next few weeks for his contribution to the American labor movement.

On Apr. 26, in New York, he will receive a citation from the League of Industrial Democracy "for his half-century of magnificent service in the cause of labor and of democracy here and abroad."

"The LID is privileged in thus being able to honor Pres. Murray," said Dr. Harry W. Laidler, LID executive director.

"For 50 years, since coming to this country in 1902, Philip Murray has devoted himself selflessly, and with great industry, intelligence and effectiveness, to the wiping out of feudalistic labor conditions from our basic industries; to the universal acceptance of the right of collective bargaining; to the continuous advance of living standards for the mass of our people; to the elimination of racial and religious discrimination; to the eradication of corrupt practices in our economic and political life, and to all efforts toward the advancement of democracy and social progress here and abroad."

The citation will be presented for the league by Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers, who will speak on "Needed: A Moral Awakening in America." James B. Carey, CIO secretary-treasurer and president of the CIO Electrical Workers; Vice Pres. Charles S. Zimmerman of the AFL Ladies Garment Workers, and former Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas (D. Cal.) also will participate in the program.

On May 11, Murray will be given the annual Quadragesimo Anno medal of the Association of Catholic Trade Unionists at the 15th annual ACTU communion breakfast in New York.

The medal is awarded each year to the person in the field of labor-management relations who has contributed most to the furtherance of the principles contained in the social encyclicals of the Popes.

CIO Seeking Defense Work In Minnesota

THE MINNESOTA CIO Council is waging a statewide campaign to drum up support for a bill pending in Congress which could give defense contracts to Minnesota businessmen and jobs to its workers.

The measure, defeated in the House but still alive in the Senate, would appropriate $10 million for a revolving fund through which the Small Defense Plant Administration would obtain prime defense contracts and sublet them to small plants. It has CIO support nationally.

Rodney C. Jacobson, secretary-treasurer of the State CIO Council, urged small businessmen to follow the example of workers and organize.

"The small businessman needs to have his own organization now more than ever before," he said.

"Unless he does organize and present a united front so that his voice must be heard, he is in grave danger of being pushed to the wall.

"Big business is using increased taxes as a smokescreen to frighten the little fellow away. It isn't the taxes they're afraid of, but the fear that they might lose some prime contracts and the cream of profit they are skimming off the top."

Defense employment in Minnesota is so scarce that members of many CIO unions are forced to go to other states to get jobs.

300,000 Phone Workers Join National Pay Fight

BEFORE NATIONAL headquarters of giant American Telephone & Telegraph Co., members of CIO Communications Workers picket at 195 Broadway, New York. More than 68,000 CWA members were on strike in 43 states last week.

STRIKE STRATEGY: Pres. Joseph A. Beirne (left) and Sec.-Treas. Carlton W. Werkau of the CIO Communications Workers confer on nation-wide strike plans at Washington.

NEARLY 300,000 CIO telephone workers last week were engaged in a showdown picket-line campaign to gain better wages and working conditions from the multi-billion dollar Bell System —the world's largest monopoly.

Some 77,000 members of the CIO Communications Workers were directly on strike.

Out nationally were 15,500 workers in a key telephone classification—installers and warehousemen employed by Western Electric, a Bell subsidiary, in 43 states.

And in four states—Michigan, Ohio, New Jersey and Northern California — 61,500 other CWA members were on strike against various operating subsidiaries of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co.

The walkout—after weeks of futile bargaining—began on Apr. 7. As in past CWA walkouts, it was marked in the beginning by "hit and run" picketing of telephone company installations.

TWO days later, the regional walkouts and the national strike of Western Electric workers grew into a full-scale strike.

At rallies in 180 cities, non-striking CWA members enthusiastically endorsed the walkout, pledging to respect picket lines.

On subsequent days, the mass observance of picket lines by 200,000 non-strikers began to cut into telephone service, CWA reported.

Full CIO support has been offered to CWA. At several strike rallies, telephone workers cheered a message from CIO Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood.

"The CIO will back them (the strikers) to the utmost and back them to victory," Haywood said.

The strike issues were outlined by CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, he said:

"Our demands range from 19 to 23c an hour. They are well within amounts allowable under wage stabilization regulations.

"The companies say their average 10c-an-hour offers are the maximum allowable under stabilization. Since there was dispute on this point, we suggested a joint submission of the issues to the disputes section of the WSB with an offer by the union to be bound by the decision.

"This the companies refused."

Beirne said that the companies are even trying to renege on fringe benefits already in contracts.

"For example, they won't even agree to the arbitration of grievances," he said. "They are trying to eliminate the check-off of union dues and even demand that CWA take down its union-owned bulletin boards from the company property."

The CWA president said that when it became apparent that efforts to avoid a strike were doomed to fail, the union offered to supply enough workers to handle emergency needs of government, the military and general public.

"Even this the companies refused," Beirne said.

HOPES for settlement of the dispute with the Bell System in the four states were pinned on negotiations in Detroit where a federal mediator was meeting with the union and Michigan Bell.

CWA and Western Electric representatives also met jointly with federal mediators.

CWA Sec.-Treas. Carlton W. Werkau, who is national strike director, said that Bell System is using ruthless, good squad tactics "in an attempt to terrorize the telephone workers and break the strike." Incidents he listed included:

At Fairmont, W. Va., he said that one company supervisor sideswiped a woman picket and another supervisor ran over another woman picket.

At Morgantown, W. Va., warrants were issued for supervisors who manhandled two girls.

Potofsky Meets With Truman On Aid For Jobless

Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers found President Truman "sympathetic" to problems facing the nation's jobless clothing workers last week.

At an audience with the President, Potofsky pointed out that the clothing and cotton garment industry have been hard hit and termed it "paradoxical" that there is full employment in most basic industries and only intermittent employment in the clothing industry.

CIO Fights Phone Hike

THE PENNSYLVANIA CIO Council has filed two petitions with the Public Utility Commission in its fight to block a $32 million rate increase sought by the Bell Telephone Co.

The petitions ask that the rate hearings be conducted by a member of the PUC rather than an examiner, and that the PUC either compel Bell to produce evidence backing its rate proposal, or that the PUC staff itself gather the evidence.

The petitions were filed by Atty. M. H. Goldstein in behalf of Harry Boyer, state CIO president.

Bell's "extraordinary" request, largest ever made in the state, "strikes at the pocketbook of almost every Pennsylvania citizen," said Boyer. He explained the CIO had entered the case because of its policy of "promoting and defending the community's best interests."

"Since the value of Bell's investment is the most crucial issue in this case," said Boyer, "the Commission should have its own staff look into this matter or else compel Bell to give evidence justifying its claim." (LPA)

N. Y. Subway Crash Blamed On Speed-Up

THE CIO TRANSPORT Workers has accused the New York City Board of Transportation of "foolhardy penny-pinching and speed-up practices" which imperil the safety of the riding public.

In condemning the board's economy measures, TWU Pres. Michael J. Quill and Local 100 Pres. Matthew Guinan charged that the "alarming frequency" of accidents and breakdowns on the city's subway system was partially due to the fact that only two men are assigned to handle a 10-car train carrying as many as 2000 passengers.

Warning that "the board is gambling with the lives of the riding public," the union called for a conductor to be assigned to every subway car.

"Only a miracle prevented the loss of hundreds of lives in the Manhattan Bridge breakdown of Apr. 2," Quill declared. "TWU is putting the city on notice that we will take no responsibility for any loss of life which may result from insufficient manpower on the trains."

Relax Credit Curbs, CIO Urges

THE CIO last week supported proposals to liberalize Regulation W of the Federal Reserve Board, which restricts credit for consumer durable goods.

In a letter to members of the Senate Banking & Currency Committee, CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey said the regulation as it now stands "is more restrictive than is required."

"As a result of the general increase in the cost of living and the fact that taxes have also risen greatly, the lower income groups are being effectively priced out of the market for consumer durable goods including automobiles, radios, refrigerators, washing machines, etc." Carey said.

"Tremendous inventories of these goods have piled up. This is creating a deflationary effect that hits low income families hard in layoffs and loss of income. Meantime Regulation W has no effect whatever upon spending by high income individuals and corporations who can pay cash or borrow on other security."

He accused the Reserve Board of "being unwilling to face the realities of the situation" by refusing to provide equity in the use of credit as between consumers and business organizations.

"We believe that the discrimination in the use of credit between consumers and producers and the discrimination in restricting the ability to buy consumer goods as between the lower and higher income groups should cease."

Carey said that in credit, as in other phases of defense mobilization, the CIO protests attempts to substitute discriminating sacrifice for equality of sacrifice.

He proposed that the present 33⅓% down payment for autos be reduced to 25% and the 18 month period for payment be extended to 25 months. For major appliances, Carey urged that the present 15% down payment be reduced to 12½% and the 18 month period for repayment be increased to 21 months.

Mrs. Wilson Seeks Husband's Seat

Mrs. Olga Wilson is running for Democratic nomination for the Oregon State Senate seat left vacant by her husband, Manley J. Wilson, who died last December. Wilson was editor of the CIO Woodworker. She is unopposed in the Democratic primary.

Labor Man Wins

Ernest Nicoson, legislative chairman of CIO Communications Workers Local 5702, has started his tenth year as member of the Terre Haute, Ind., City Council after easily winning re-election.

Paperworkers Repulse AFL Scab Attack In Long Jersey Strike

CIO PAPERWORKERS on strike nine months against the Whippany (N. J.) Paper Board Co. are standing firm after repulsing an attack by AFL strikebreakers.

Lead pipes, stones and baseball bats were used by the AFL strikebreakers as they sought to reopen the Eden plant of firm at Whippany, which is near Newark.

When the dust of the day-long battle cleared away at least four persons were injured, including two of the strikebreakers and two older UPA members; two brand new strikebreaker-owned cars were wrecked, and warrants were issued for two AFL members.

The injured included Edward Cohen, alias Edward Cortin, who Paperworkers say threatened to kill George Pastore, a UPA international representative.

Warrants have been issued for two other AFL strikebreakers, Anthony Vernier and Anthony Ferrante. The latter is charged with assaulting one of the injured UPA members, and the former is accused of speeding away after hitting the other UPA member with an auto.

More than 1000 UPA members are on strike as a result of breakdown of negotiations with the company.

The union claims that it has a 15-16c hourly increase due under Wage Stabilization Board regulations, but the firm's latest offer was much lower.

After the AFL paperworkers tried unsuccessfully to break the strike about a month ago, the AFL appeared again on the scene in the person of Steve Wilson, who claimed that he had an AFL federal charter. UPA says that Wilson was ousted by the AFL Longshoremen after a slaying.

When Wilson's efforts failed, AFL strikebreakers acted. Nine carloads of scabs entered the plant early Apr. 7 while strike leaders were in Washington, where federal mediators were attempting to bring the union and the company together.

At a Newark meeting called by CIO Reg. Dir. Ewald Sander, CIO leaders launched a counter-offense against "the latest and most reprehensible evidence of the AFL's crude raiding, strikebreaking and un-American tactics.

"Only the gangster tactics of AFL leaders in New Jersey doing the bidding of the company turned an otherwise peaceful strike into a bloodletting riot," Sander said.

THEY BROKE THE BANK—While waiting out the recesses in steel negotiations, two CIO Steelworker local officials in Bethlehem plants showed up for "Break the Bank" radio quiz show and broke the bank to the tune of $550. Waving their checks are Clavin Van Why, Local 2619 president in Allentown, and Joseph Lipsky, Local 2598 president in Bethlehem, Pa.

Childs, Sigal Appointed As CIO Members Of WSB

TWO NEW CIO members were appointed to the Wage Stabilization Board by President Truman late last week.

They are Joseph Childs, vice president of the CIO Rubber Workers, and Benjamin C. Sigal, general counsel of the CIO Electrical Workers and the Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers.

The two new WSB members succeed Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the CIO Communications Workers, whose resignation was announced earlier in the week, and Vice Pres. John W. Livingston of the CIO Auto Workers. Beirne and Livingston quit because of the pressure of union duties.

Sigal is well qualified for his new post, since he was executive assistant to the labor members of the War Labor Board from 1942 to 1946.

Sigal is a graduate of the Univ. of Pittsburgh and Harvard Law School. After being admitted to the bar, he engaged in private law practice, primarily labor law, in Pittsburgh for 10 years.

After leaving his post with the WLB, Sigal returned to private law practice in Washington and represented a number of unions.

He has wide civic interests and for three years was chairman of the Washington Chapter of Americans for Democratic Action.

'We Can't Patch Up Old World, Must Build A New One'—Reuther

THE FIFTH international education conference sponsored by the CIO Auto Workers in Cleveland Apr. 3 to 6 is over—but its real work is only beginning.

Twenty-five hundred delegates from UAW locals throughout the country, joined by hundreds of members of the public, daily filled the Cleveland Auditorium Music Hall for an outstanding program of educational lectures by national leaders on matters of interest to labor.

After each session, they split up into scores of discussion groups to weigh the talks and formulate questions which were put to the speakers at a second general meeting the same day.

Planned under the direction of Brenden Sexton, UAW education director, the conference was designed to help prepare union members for the problems they will face in the next decade. Its theme was, "Freedom and Abundance, Pathway to Peace."

In his keynote speech, UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther emphasized that the union's objectives are "not to patch up the old world, but to build a new world in which people needn't go hungry, in which war can be abolished forever on the face of God's earth."

Declaring that this is "not just a matter of noble purpose" but one of "democratic survival," Reuther added:

"We have to find the way to mobilize our great productive power, the tremendous material resources that we possess in America and gear these things to the needs of people, to translate our technical progress and human progress into human happiness, into human dignity. That is the unfinished work that lies ahead."

In a later address, Reuther paid tribute to the work that had been done by the delegates and called upon them to "go home and do the job that has been done at this conference."

"IF ALL of America had been sitting here like you people, we could get the kind of Congress we ought to have next November," he said. "Our job is to carry the lessons we have learned here back to every member of our union."

One of the highlights was Reuther's announcement that the CIO Auto Workers, which began with a membership of only 7000 in 1936, now has 1,271,000 dues-paying members. Despite the currently high number of defense lay-offs in the industry, that is the largest membership in UAW history.

Joint Label Week

With a theme of "check for the union label," CIO and AFL joined in sponsoring a union label week in South Bend, and neighboring Mishawaka, Ind. Merchants and city governments' co-operated.

Most popular of the forum meetings was the discussion of "Congress — Its Morality, Responsibility and Opportunity" by Sens. Benton (D. Conn.), Morse (R. Ore.) and Humphrey (D. Minn.).

Both of the latter paid tribute to Benton for his courage in raising the issue of McCarthyism in Congress. Morse said America has no place for "trial by accusation" and Humphrey said that the issue Benton has posed is simply "whether Congress is to be a representative body or one that gives in to intimidation."

Other speakers included Leon Keyserling, chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers; Thomas H. Davies, head of the Institute of Radiobiology and Biophysics; Walter White, executive secretary of the National Association for Advancement of Colored People; Zechariah Chafee, Harvard law professor; Willard Goslin, Peabody College education professor; Arthur Schlesinger, Jr., Harvard history professor; UAW Vice Pres. Emil Mazey, and Victor Reuther, CIO representative in Europe.

Connally's Roadblock Pried Away In St. Lawrence Seaway Fight

AN "IMMOVABLE" roadblock of Chairman Connally (D. Tex.) to prevent action by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project last week gave way before an "irresistable force."

Despite Connally's efforts to pocket the measure, consideration has finally been scheduled for Apr. 22. The action came at a stormy session when Sen. Wiley (R. Wis.) and other seaway supporters on the committee irately insisted the chairman respect their rights.

Wiley's move followed urging by the chief Senate supporters of the seaway, Sens. Moody (D. Mich.) and Aiken (R. Vt.). Both have been working tirelessly to get Connally to abide by the promise for "prompt" action given in the first session when they withdrew their amendment to enact the seaway bill as a rider to last year's Mutual Security Act.

Connally had ignored the promise and since hearings last February, denied the committee a chance to take up the measure.

(He faces a stiff battle for re-election and is under pressure to kill the seaway from the Texas port and railroad lobbies. Sen. Lodge (R. Mass.), who is looking out for the interests of the Port of Boston, has supported Connally's opposition.)

Unless Congress approves U. S. participation at this session, Canada will build the project alone. On Apr. 8 a $13-million contract for the deepening, widening and straightening of the St. Lawrence below Montreal was awarded by the Canadian government, which decided last year that it could no longer afford to wait for the U. S. Congress to act.

Tactics similar to Connally's have prevented the House of Representatives from ever voting on the seaway proposal, although bills have been pending—and Canada kept waiting—for some 20 years.

Wiley predicted that the Senate committee will approve the seaway and power project and report legislation to the floor when it finally gets its chance. "We have the necessary votes in committee," he said.

Despite his optimism, a close committee vote is in prospect. The outcome at this writing will depend upon the votes of four Senators presently regarded as doubtful supporters. These include Sens. McMahon (D. Conn.), Fulbright (D. Ark.), Brewster (R. Me.) and Smith (R. N.J.)

All of these will be under stiff pressure to vote against the measure from the anti-seaway lobby, one of the most effective on Capitol Hill. McMahon, for example, must make his decision under the threat by the Connecticut Manufacturers Association that he will lose support for re-election if he votes for the seaway.

No cost to U. S. taxpayers is involved in U. S. participation, since the seaway, providing a direct deep-water route to the Great Lakes, will pay for itself in tolls.

On the other hand, if Congress prevents U. S. participation with Canada, the tolls paid by U. S. ship owners to Canada — and passed on to consumers—will amount to many times the $374 million which the U. S. is asked to advance as its share of the $818 million construction. This loan would be repaid in full from seaway revenues.

Carolina Cops Arrest 67 Furniture Strikers

THE NUMBER of strikers arrested mounted last week to 67 at the Thomasville (N. C.) Chair Co.

Police continued their campaign of intimidation against the members of Local 286, CIO Furniture Workers. They have been on strike since Mar. 13 for a 4.7% cost-of-living wage increase.

The union charged that two strikers were beaten while under arrest.

One local union officer, Coy Stewart, was assaulted while in the office of Thomasville Police Chief Paul M. Shore after bail had been furnished, UFWA said.

Arrested for alleged possession of a "deadly weapon," another striker, Lawyer Ricker, also was beaten while in police custody, the union said. Ricker eventually was released on $2000 bail.

Local 286 Pres. Furman C. Wilson had been arrested twice. The union has sworn out a warrant charging Chief Shore with false arrest of strikers.

Police armed with machine guns have continued to escort non-strikers into the plant. In an effort to halt police intimidation, union officials have scheduled a meeting with Gov. W. Kerr Scott to protest state police action.

The Thomasville City Council at a special meeting adopted an ordinance restricting parking near the plant, directed at the union sound truck. A court injunction earlier restricted picketing.

"In 1946, when this plant was first organized by our union," UFWA Pres. Morris Pizer said, "we had to strike for 17 weeks in order to get the company to accept the principles of collective bargaining.

"The officials of the Thomasville Chair Co. have not learned their lesson, and are using every possible means to try to destroy us, but they never can succeed."

Pizer again appealed to unions for contributions to the Thomasville Strike Fund, care of the United Furniture Workers, 101 Fifth Ave., New York 3, N. Y.

'Mass Suffering,' Rising Menace Of Imperialism Decried By Truman

A WARNING that unless rising imperialism is crushed now it may become a greater menace than Soviet Russia was sounded last week by President Truman.

The warning came in a speech he had prepared for delivery before the National Conference on Intl. Economic and Social Development in Washington. He was unable to attend because of the steel crisis, and his address was read by Sec. of State Acheson.

More than 1300 persons—twice the number expected and including many union representatives—attended the conference and heard the President's warning.

"Mass suffering," he said, "has been used by every dictatorship of our times as a stepping stone to power. It was used by the Japanese war lords. It was used by Hitler. Today it is the weapon of Soviet imperialism.

"Unless it is wiped out, it may be used in the future by some new dictatorship more terrible even than the Soviet Union."

He described as "real," "good" and holding "tremendous promise" the determination of the peoples of Africa and Asia to establish their own free political and economic institutions. The United States, he assured them, has no imperialistic designs on either their territory or their resources, but warned them that their determination poses dangers because "such a movement can be easily misled."

Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers spoke at a symposium on this country's stake in international development. He urged the U. S. to have the "courage and imagination" to commit itself to spending 2 or 3% of its gross annual product ($7 to $10 billion) "to assure that America's belief in freedom and dignity of man survive throughout the world."

THIS would give mankind the hope necessary to assure victory for democracy in the current struggle, he asserted. Maintenance of hope, he claimed, is more important than an increase in our stock of H-bombs. He warned against "patching up the status quo" when it merely means more hunger.

"Aid to underdeveloped countries must mean," he added, "that the people of those countries share in the benefits that accrue from such aid."

Curb Unlabeled Imports From Japan, Says IUE

THE CIO Electrical Workers Union urged the Federal Trade Commission last week to bar the importation of all misrepresented or unlabeled machines and appliances.

The union's stand was made known by Sec.-Treas. Al Hartnett, who said the IUE-CIO will campaign in Congress and in government agencies to halt such imports. The FTC hearing was held on the importation of Japanese sewing machine heads on which the country of origin had been concealed or disguised.

Hartnett made it clear that neither the IUE nor any other CIO union opposes the importation of foreign-made products, but rather their misrepresentation and the fraudulent concealment of their source.

IUE members who make sewing machines, Hartnett explained, "are not only proud of their craftsmanship but they let the public know it." Because they know the materials and the skills that go into their products, he said, they push among friends the sales of the machines they make.

"Widespread purchases of an inferior and misrepresented machine of foreign make," he said, "can reduce demand for American machines and appliances and thereby cause unemployment in our industry."

Misrepresented machines imported to this country, he continued, threaten the living standards of all American sewing machine workers.

The fact that they can undersell U. S. machines, he said, forces American manufacturers to cut production costs in order to compete. Thus they are driven into low-wage areas like the South, he maintained, leaving workers in the North without jobs and lowering the already inadequate wage standards in the South.

Louis Hollander Wins A Bet — And Truman's Hat

LOUIS HOLLANDER, president of the New York State CIO Council, has a head that has served him well during more years of fruitful union activity than he cares to recall.

It will soon be embellished by a hat from the personal White House wardrobe of President Truman.

This condition will be brought about by the fact that Mr. Hollander had the foresight to bet Paul E. Fitzpatrick, New York State Democratic chairman, one (1) hat that the President would not serve another term. Fitzpatrick cited his dilemma to the President to buttress a plea that he get back into the race. The President advised him to pay off at once. He even offered to supply the hat if Hollander wears his size. He does.

"I shall be pleased to wear his hat regardless of size," Hollander said when informed of his great good fortune. "It might not fit at the moment, but it will when my head gets back to normal size."

Senate After Stormy Session Continues McCarthy Inquiry

THE SENATE last week gave its Elections Subcommittee a complete vote of confidence in its investigation of Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.).

It rejected 60 to 0 a motion to discharge the subcommittee because of McCarthy's attacks on the "honesty" of its members. The Wisconsin Senator had accused them of "picking the pockets of the taxpayers" in pursuing their investigation.

This means that the committee now may proceed full speed ahead on a resolution of Sen. Benton (D. Conn.) calling for McCarthy's expulsion from the Senate. Although the committee's staff has recommended further investigation on the basis of its preliminary studies, action has been delayed pending the vote of confidence.

The Senate's action came after one of the stormiest debates this session.

McCarthy opened it by a typical McCarthyism. He introduced a resolution calling for an investigation of Benton, and used this as a springboard for firing innuendoes and unsubstantiated charges against not only his chief Senate critic but also a Senate Rules Committee employe.

"I have absolutely no confidence in the majority of the subcommittee," McCarthy declared.

Democratic Leader McFarland (Ariz.) roared in reply that "I've never heard so serious a charge made against the membership of any committee in my time here. We can't lightly pass this question over."

McCarthy accused Darrell St. Claire, a Rules Committee employe, of helping the subcommittee draft its reports on him and of leaking a preliminary report to the press. Subcommittee members immediately protested, pointing out that St. Claire never had anything to do with their work.

SEN. Monroney (D. Okla.) said McCarthy hadn't "one scintilla of evidence" that St. Claire leaked the McCarthy report. His face red with anger, he shouted:

"He made that charge on the floor of the Senate. I now challenge him to prove his charge on the floor of the Senate."

Monroney said McCarthy's charges of "dishonesty" were "a deliberate smear."

Sen. Smith (R. Me.), a former member of the subcommittee, called McCarthy's arguments against the resolution "face-saving" on his part. She noted that she had been a member when McCarthy had accused it of stealing, and silenced one critic by asking:

"Have you ever been called a thief?"

Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.), deeply moved, rose to defend St. Claire and accused McCarthy of "dragging another body on the floor." He said "it is high time we in the Senate above all stood up and said we won't stand for it."

In answering McCarthy's charges against him, Benton revealed that he has been "subjected to personal threats, intimidation and blackmail" since he began attacking McCarthy. He labelled the new smears "completely false."

Hospital Care Bill Presented

A bill to provide 60 days hospitalization for all persons over 65 covered by social security was introduced last week in the Senate and House by Sen. Murray (D. Mont.) and Rep. Dingell (D. Mich.).

The measure, known as the Old Age and Survivors Hospitalization Act, would provide for semi-private accommodations. Its cost would be met out of the social security fund surplus and there would be no increase in present social security payments.

Labor Gets Voice On Farm Migrant Policy

THE CIO and the AFL at last have been given a voice in determining the nation's policies on Mexican and other foreign agricultural labor.

An 18-man committee, recently appointed by Labor Sec. Maurice J. Tobin, already has made a series of recommendations.

Highlighting the CIO-AFL committee report was the recommendation that in the new treaty with Mexico on farm labor, "the minimum hourly rate be set at 75c with the understanding that higher rates shall be paid, where higher prevailing wages exist."

Protesting that too many Mexicans have been imported, the committee asked that union representatives serve as advisers in the agricultural employment negotiations with Mexico and other foreign countries.

It also strongly urged that all domestic farm workers, including Puerto Ricans, be employed before any foreign workers are imported.

Another recommendation was that Tobin conduct public hearings in every major agricultural area to determine if enough domestic workers are available and the prevailing wages to be paid Mexicans if any are needed.

The committee found that 194,000 Mexicans and other foreign workers were imported in 1951 with the result that the wages and working conditions of American citizens were depressed.

The Labor Dept.'s own figures listed more than 40,000 foreign workers under contract as of Feb. 29, but this does not include Mexican "wetbacks" who are in this country illegally.

Many Florida citrus packing workers belonging to the CIO Brewery Workers are now unemployed in Florida because more than 10,000 British West Indians and Puerto Ricans have been imported for farm work.

The committee also recommended that wage boards be established with employers, workers and the public represented, and that labor and employers be represented on state farm placement advisory committees.

In the past, growers' associations dominated by big farmers simply told state employment agencies what they were "offering" for agricultural workers."

The state agencies sent these rates to the Secretary of Labor who, unless he had compelling reasons to do otherwise, certified these rates. Now the department is revising these procedures.

Furthermore, a special farm labor committee composed of big agricultural employers has been advising the Labor Dept. on agricultural workers for several years.

THE FRUIT of these policies is that hundreds of thousands of unnecessary foreign workers have been legally—and illegally—imported into the U. S. for farm work.

CIO members of the labor advisory committee on agricultural workers are:

Sec.-Treas. Lewis J. Clark of the Packinghouse Workers; Sec.-Treas. Richard Leonard of the Insurance and Allied Workers Organizing Committee, who formerly organized West Coast agricultural workers; Katherine Pollak Ellickson, CIO associate research director; CIO Reg. Dirs. Nicholas Dragon, Arizona; Irwin De Shetler, Southern California; Charles Cowl, Florida; John J. Maurillo, Syracuse, N. Y., area, and Herbert McCreedy, assistant regional director in Michigan.

Consequences

The result of the influx of foreign workers is that wages are depressed in many agricultural areas. Wage rates for foreign workers as certified by Labor Sec. Maurice J. Tobin, are 50c an hour for sugar cane weeding in Florida and as low as 40c an hour for planting in Texas.

The CIO Auto Workers International Skilled Trades Conference has suggested that other CIO affiliates establish skilled trades departments.

The suggestion was voiced by Charles L. Fryar, secretary of the UAW Skilled Trades Council, in a letter to CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey. Fryar says such recognition would "give the skilled workers in the CIO the proper protection they deserve."

Potofsky Hits N.Y.'Cultural' Bid To Spain

JACOB S. POTOFSKY, chairman of the CIO International Committee, has resigned as a director of the New York City Center of Music and Drama in protest against the appearance of the City Ballet in Spain.

He quit the post, which he had held since the City Center was started, after sending a formal protest to Ben Ketcham, business manager of the center. The City Ballet will be touring Europe this summer, with one appearance scheduled for the municipal Teatro Liceo in Barcelona.

Potofsky, who also is president of the CIO Clothing Workers, said his opposition was based on "moral, spiritual and cultural considerations."

"The Franco regime in Spain has killed outstanding Spanish artists and driven others into exile," he wrote Ketcham. "It is a dictatorial, fascist regime that imprisons and executes trade union leaders, has suppressed the free trade union movement and denied all civil rights to the Spanish people."

HE RESIGNED as a director in a letter to Newbold Morris, chairman of the board.

"I have been dismayed that the moral and spiritual factors carried little or no consideration with the directors of the City Center in granting permission for the ballet's appearance in Spain," he wrote.

"On the contrary, the representations of the European manager of the tour as to the financial advantages outweighed all considerations of a humane, moral and democratic nature.

"The City Center, when it leaves itself open to such practices, fails to support our cultural heritage, which is also a heritage of freedom."

French Arrests In Tunisia Protested Again By ICFTU

THE FRENCH government's repression of human and civil rights in its fight against the nationalist movement in Tunisia was protested again last week by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

The Tunisian Workers Union, which represents most organized workers in the North African nation and is affiliated to the ICFTU, strongly supports the move for independence. It called a 24-hour general strike when the French Resident-General jailed four members of the cabinet, instituted censorship and imposed other harsh measures.

The ICFTU, in a statement by Gen. Sec. J. H. Oldenbroek, demanded that the necessary measures be taken to restore democratic freedom in Tunisia and that "satisfaction be given to the fair and reasonable demands of the Tunisian workers." It protested the "warlike repressive measures" of the French, condemned "the many infringements upon freedom and expression and assembly," and expressed solidarity with Tunisian workers.

An effort is being made to put the case of the nationalists before the United Nations.

THE TEXTILES crisis which has cost thousands of members of the CIO Textile Workers their jobs or put them on short hours is being felt in other countries, too.

In England, where the bottom apparently dropped out of the market shortly after Christmas, the industry has been struck a blow from which many believe it will never recover. Thousands of workers in the Lancashire area, once the world's largest textile production center, have been laid off and others are working short time. Many closed mills will never be reopened, it was predicted, in view of increasing competition from Germany and Japan and the virtual loss of the Australian market.

In Germany there also is trouble. Most of the industry in North Bavaria, especially spinning and weaving mills, cut production by 50% last month and went on a 24-hour week because of lack of business. In South Bavaria about two-thirds of the 45,000 workers in the industry were on short time, and several thousand were laid off.

In France, soft spots have developed in many textile centers. Communists are using the situation to dangle the lure of Iron Curtain orders before workers and employers.

In Peru, members of the Textile Workers Federation—one of the oldest and most democratic unions in that country—are averaging but three or four days work a week and earning less than half their normal wages. Wages were so small to start with that they actually are unable to give their families the necessities, according to Arturo Sabroso Montoya, president of the union and also of the ORIT. Employers are taking advantage of the crisis to try and reduce the workers' rights and benefits.

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

THE CAPTAINS of steel have refused to comply with the decision of the Wage Stabilization Board recommending a fair and equitable arrangement for adjusting the wages and living conditions of members of the United Steelworkers of America. Steel denounced the Board and plainly indicated that the industry was willing to jeopardize our country's welfare unless it was granted unreasonable price adjustments which would pile excessive profit on top of profit.

Because of its unwarranted and greedy stand, the steel industry forced President Truman to take it over to prevent a crippling shut-down.

★

THE PRESIDENT presented the steel case over the airways and television last week to the people of the nation. He laid the facts four-square on the line and denounced the industry's position. The President again demonstrated that he stands with the people against the ruthless power of big industry. He is the little man's "big man" and has endeared himself to liberty-loving people everywhere who are commending his forthright and courageous speech with a flood of letters.

The steel industry tried to obtain a federal injunction against the President's order and failed. Clarence Randall of the Inland Steel Corp., as spokesman for the industry, mouthed a vicious and brutal attack against President Truman and Phil Murray, which every true American will reject with contempt.

Industry seems to invest its principles and ideals with a great deal of flexibility, to bend them whichever way they want at a particular moment. They seem to be talking a great deal about principle and ideals—construed, of course, to meet the present situation. Letters from all over the country indicate support of the President and the Steelworkers in this crisis.

ANOTHER OF our great unions, the Communications Workers, has been forced to strike in an effort to achieve the wages and living conditions that telephone workers everywhere are entitled to. Pres. Joe Beirne and his associate officers are waging this battle for the telephone workers to achieve their justified demands.

The CWA has the full support of the CIO and we will give these workers every assistance possible, consistent with the policies of the CWA.

The stand taken by the industrial giants points up the fact that organized labor must remain alert. We must continue to do a job of organizing the unorganized. We must remain strong to prevent industrial dictatorship in America, and the way to do this is by uniting our strength and continuing to build our great movement.

CCL Demands Price Curbs, Jobless Aid

THE CANADIAN Congress of Labor reiterated demands for price and rent controls and expressed concern at growing unemployment in a brief filed last week with the Canadian government.

The document presented the views of the CCL to the federal cabinet on a number of subjects in which labor has a stake.

On domestic issues, the CCL gave top rating to price and rent controls.

"We have no hesitation in expressing our opinion that the action of the government in removing price and rent controls has cost the people of Canada billions of dollars," the brief said.

It pointed out that the joint effort of Canadian labor organizations a year ago to have the controls reinstituted was unsuccessful.

"INSTEAD of price control, restrictions on credit were imposed," it said. "These had for their chief effect a serious increase in unemployment among industries manufacturing automobiles, and durable goods generally.

"The restrictions on the use of credit in the purchase of homes has created severe hardships on many thousands of workers. The fact that the cost of living index has risen almost 19 points during the last year indicates the futility of the measures adopted by the government, with the ostensible purpose of preventing price increases . . .

"The fact is that there is not the slightest evidence that the legislation has had any effect whatsoever.

"The workers whom the Congress represents have seen the wage gains of the past few years, some of them won only at the cost of great effort and sacrifice, wiped out as a result of continuing inflation, and their living standards depressed. They have been wholly unable to improve their economic position, or even to keep up with the increased price levels of every commodity they use.

"THE CONGRESS has therefore no hesitation in calling upon the government to reimpose price controls immediately with subsidies on essential goods, a roll back of prices to the lowest possible level, and an excess profits tax to discourage profiteering and black marketing."

To deal with unemployment, the CCL proposed a five-point program. It proposed:

Sharply increased unemployment compensation benefits; public assistance for those not covered by unemployment insurance and those whose benefits have expired; allocation of defense production orders in areas of widespread unemployment; development of new industries or public works in such areas, or alternatively, the transfer of workers to other sections; and coordination of government agencies concerned with immigration, to see that only those newcomers who can find work are admitted.

It also commended the government for its decision to build the St. Lawrence Seaway, and protested the 1951 increase in the sale tax from 8% to 10%.

Wage Gains Of Radiomen Cited At ARA Convention

THE CIO American Radio Association at its annual convention in New Orleans paused long enough to look on the gains made since the members threw off Communist domination in 1948.

The delegates heard Pres. W. R. Steinberg list the improvements—

Instead of $3200 a year, radio officers now earn $7200 to $9000, thanks to increases in base wages and overtime rates; the overtime rate has jumped from $1.70 to $2.95 an hour; the 48-hour week at sea has given way to the 40 hour week; ARA members now get paid vacations of two or three weeks; non-contributory health, welfare and insurance plans have been instituted, and the union hiring hall has been defended and strengthened.

Steinberg also told the delegates that the union now has contracts covering 196 companies which operate 76% of U. S. passenger ships, freighters, tankers and colliers on the Atlantic, Gulf and Pacific coasts.

The delegates refused to stand still while their places are taken by "iron finks," or electronic equipment such as radiotelephone and radioteletype which may be developed further and become automatic in operation.

W. R. STEINBERG
ARA president.

Instead, they adopted a dynamic program to take control of radiotelephone, radar and loran as they are installed on ships.

"A purely defensive fight for code communication against voice equipment will not suffice," Steinberg pointed out.

"This is the technical fight we must set for ourselves: an energetic campaign, involving our entire membership and all the forces of our union, to maintain the level of our technical know-how in line with the progress of electronics on shipboard, and to assume the added duties and responsibilities that arise in the process.

"THAT IS only one side of the program. The other side must be the constant effort of the union to obtain economic rewards for the increased duties, responsibilities and importance of radio officers aboard ship."

The delegates worked harmoniously and constructively to develop a program that will keep the radio officer on the ships and improve his professional standing and economic position.

They also voted to warn shipping companies to halt violations of sea safety rules and union contracts by giving radiotelephone duties to deck officers who already carry full work loads. A drive to have all ARA radio officers obtain radar endorsements on their Federal Communications Commission licenses before the next contract wage review of June 15 was approved.

Pres. Joseph N. Curran of the CIO Maritime Union was the principal speaker. He and CIO Pres. Philip Murray and CIO Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood were voted honorary memberships.

'Economy Bloc' Swings Ax— And Costs Taxpayers Dough

By MILTON PLUMB

THE CONGRESSIONAL "economy" bloc, which is just another name for the Dixiegop coalition when it does a hatchet job on essential government services, is swinging blindly again this year.

Already the House has hacked off more than $6 billion from President Truman's budget—and there are still two big money bills to go. Last year, when the same Dixiegops called themselves a "wrecking crew" and also slashed appropriations blindly, the total cuts in all regular bills amounted to $2 billion.

These cuts in proposed spending do not mean real savings. Actually, the blind sniping of the 82nd Congress at money bills is not only crippling many important governmental functions, but in many cases it's costing the government much more than the amount not appropriated.

This is due to the Dixiegop method of slashing money bills straight across the board on a percentage basis instead of doing the necessary study and investigation to make cuts item by item on the basis of need.

Apart from its disrupting effect on governmental operations —and responsible men in Congress have said that national security has been endangered—the so-called "economy" of the "economy" bloc is actually little more than a political spree. Like all binges, it's expensive—to American taxpayers.

The General Services Administration, which was the first major agency set up under Hoover Commission recommendations, last year saved taxpayers $81 million. It would have saved more if it had been given sufficient funds.

GSA's utility management, for example, saved taxpayers $21 for every $1 spent, and additional funds were asked to make these savings elsewhere next year. Its traffic management section this year cost $345,000 and saved $3 million in shipping costs, so GSA wanted $430,000 to save $5 million in 1953.

The House refused to vote funds to let these real savings—and others proposed by GSA amounting to over $100 million—be made. It also cut present operations drastically so that the economies made by GSA next year will be much less.

Similar examples of the high cost of Dixiegop "economy" can be found in most of the other appropriations measures so far considered by the House.

In the defense appropriations considered last week, more than 100,000 civilian jobs were knocked out. Military people who will have to be assigned to work in their place will cost about 25% more than civilian employes, and if the work is contracted out to private firms it may run even higher.

What hasn't been told so far is that a liberal congressman, rather than any member of the so-called "economy" block, is responsible for the biggest appropriations savings this session. He is Rep. Rabaut (D. Mich.)—who originated the name "Horsemeat" Congress during the price control fight last year.

AS ACTING chairman of the Appropriations subcommittee handling the "pork barrel" measure called Army Civil Functions and providing for flood control and river and harbor projects, he pushed through the House a bill 29% below budget estimates. That is the biggest cut, percentagewise, so far made.

Oddly enough, it was the so-called "economizers" who screamed loudest. Dixiegops who found that pet "dam" projects in their districts had been cut out because they weren't needed, fought to get them put back in.

Not one succeeded.

In managing the bill on the floor, Rabaut beat back 18 amendments calling for increases of more than $36 million. He was able to do so because his committee had really evaluated the President's budget on the basis of need, rather than politics, and considered each item individually.

CIO Joins In New Fight For Fair Practices Law

CIO'S FIGHT for fair employment practices legislation will be carried to the Senate again on Apr. 17 when Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, chairman of the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination, is scheduled to testify before the Senate Labor subcommittee.

Hearings on discriminatory labor practices and FEPC legislation were opened by the subcommittee last week under the chairmanship of Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.).

Two FEPC bills, one written by Humphrey, are pending before the group. Nearly all members of the subcommittee are among the co-sponsors of at least one of the measures, and the chairman predicted that his committee will favorably report an FEPC bill this session.

Humphrey charged that opponents of FEPC legislation have misrepresented it deliberately. They use their opposition he said, "as a cloak to hide the dagger they want to stab in the back of every type of social legislation."

Opponents of FEPC, Humphrey pointed out, have also worked against every kind of bill for social security, minimum wages and other measures to raise the standard of living.

"If there has ever been a proposal that has been dressed up in the horns of the devil, it has been these proposals," Humphrey declared. "Legislation of the type we are now considering is an effective means of achieving healthy employment practices and the realization of a basic democratic tenet—equal opportunity."

SEN. IVES (R. N.Y.), author of the other bill, told the committee that "voluntary" FEPC legislation, such as a bill passed by the House last session, "would be utterly worthless and might even be worse." It might "invite" discriminatory practices, he said.

The subcommittee also heard leading government manpower officials testify that fair employment practices legislation would help solve current defense manpower problems.

They included Robert C. Goodwin, executive director of the Office of Defense Manpower; Arthur S. Flemming, assistant to the defense mobilizer on manpower problems, and Fred Croxton, a member of the Civil Service Commission's Fair Employment Board.

Wood Bosses Seek Strike, IWA Warns

THE CIO Woodworkers are taking a strike vote among several thousand members who work for major employer groups in the Pacific Northwest and have been denied wage increases in negotiations that opened a month ago.

The employers appear to be trying to provoke strike action, IWA Pres. A. F. Hartung declared last week.

"And if that's what they want, they'll get it," he said. "Early returns on the strike vote show a 98% sentiment in favor of a strike if no reasonable offers are made.

"Let the public beware of these employer tricks and remember we of the IWA are not seeking a strike. But if the employers are deliberately trying to use this time of emergency to extort contracts on their own terms, they may regret it.

"Woodworkers won't be pushed around."

The union requested the services of the U. S. Mediation & Conciliation Service when the employers refused to boost wages, Hartung said. Contracts expired Apr. 1, and the strike vote will be tabulated Apr. 17.

One major employer, the Weyerhaeuser Timber Co., is continuing across-the-board negotiations, the IWA president said.

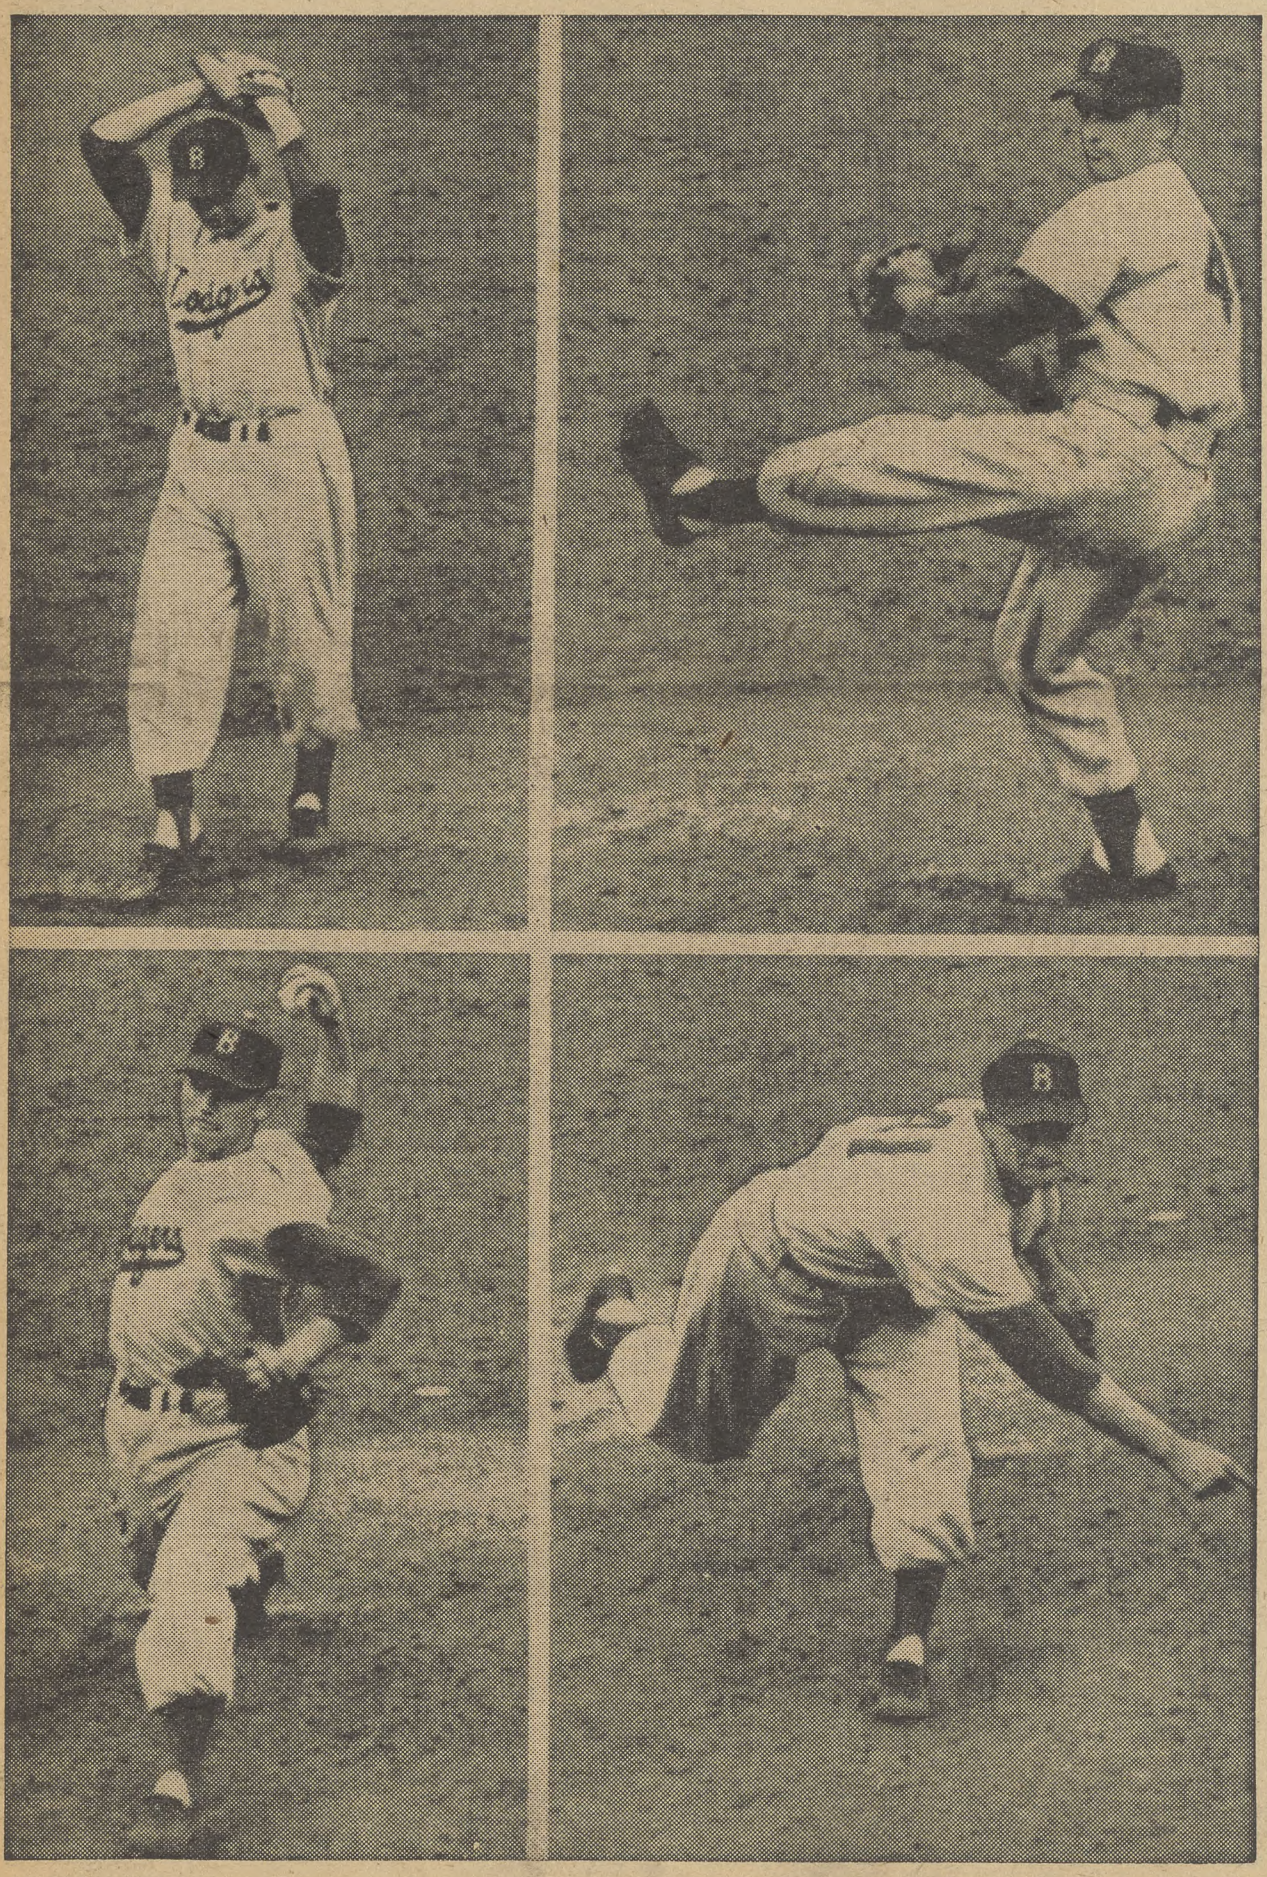
Murray Renews Demand For Full WSB Pay Package For Steelworkers



PLAY BALL! Big League baseball got under way last week as fans, young and old, packed the nation's ball parks on opening day. The Brooklyn Dodgers will be helped by star young hurler Clem Labine (above). He is a former member of the CIO Clothing Workers and his father is a CIO Textile Worker in Woonsocket, R. I. Brooklyn is favored to cop the National League flag.

As government control of the nation's basic steel industry went into its second week, there were these developments:

1 Direct negotiations for a settlement of the dispute between the CIO Steelworkers and the industry, conducted with government aid, collapsed.

2 Sec. of Commerce Sawyer, titular head of the industry, conferred with Pres. Philip Murray of the Steelworkers and the presidents of major steel companies.

3 Murray announced the union "expects and hopes" the government will put into effect all WSB wage recommendations and the union shop.

4 Price stabilizers held firm in the determination not to give the steel industry a $12 a ton price increase, which Price Stabilization Director Ellis Arnall said would shoot up the cost of living by 5%.

5 Four Senate committees instituted investigations of the situation. (Details on Page 3.)

'U.S. Pays The Freight For Jim Crow In South'

THE HIGH COST of discrimination in the South to taxpayers in other states, who are being made to pay an unfair and excessive share of the federal tax burden as a direct result, was emphasized last week in CIO testimony before the Senate Labor subcommittee.

CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, chairman of the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination, submitted a table underscoring this situation as part of his statement supporting pending fair employment practices legislation.

He urged enactment of an FEPC bill "because of the moral considerations involved, because of the plain economics of the situation, because of the general welfare of the people of the United States and because of the grave situation that confronts the world today, which has for its main cause discrimination against certain classes of human beings."

Carey's statement was presented on his behalf by Harry Read, committee director.

Pointing to a detailed comparison of per capita tax payments to the federal government with the per capita amounts of federal grants paid back and state taxes collected in six Southern and six Northern states, he said:

"Out of every dollar paid in federal taxes, the state of Alabama received back from the federal government in grants or subsidies 59c, Florida 30c, Georgia 40c, Louisiana 54c, Mississippi $1.35, and South Carolina 52c.

"Out of every dollar in federal revenue collected in the second group of states, Illinois got back 7c, Michigan 6c, Minnesota 16c, New Jersey 10c, New York 6c and Ohio 9c."

IN MISSISSIPPI, per capita federal tax payments amounted to $40, but the state received back $54 per capita in U. S. grants. State taxes collected amounted to only $42 per capita.

New York, on the other hand, paid $487 per capita federal taxes, and on the same basis received back only $27 in U. S. grants and collected $74 in state taxes.

Carey said that he had had "dinned into my ears over the years the sectional pride of certain people, usually those who are in the forefront of the fight against establishing a national policy against prejudicial discrimination in employment. Those people are given to speeches about their traditions of freedom and their pride."

Then he continued:

"I can't understand the so-called pride of hitchhikers and piggy-back riders.

"I think it is high time for the people of this country to become aware that they are paying the bills for continued degradation of certain classes of our free American citizens. I think it is high time for the businessmen of this country to realize that their taxes are being diverted to pay the freight for certain gentlemen who, among other things, voice purely political screams for economy in federal governmental operation."

Youngstown Council Backs Steel Seizure

THE CITY Council of Youngstown, O., passed a resolution on Apr. 15 commending President Truman for seizing the steel mills in the industry's dispute with the CIO Steelworkers and censuring the companies for rejecting WSB recommendations.

The resolution was passed after a conference between spokesman for USA Dist. 26, CIO field representatives and a majority of members of the City Council. The home plant of the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co., one of the larger independent producers, is located in the city.

The council members described the seizure as "the only fair course available to avert a nationwide strike which would endanger the health, safety and welfare of the people." They praised the President for his "courage and wisdom in living up to his constitutional responsibilities."

Stevenson Refuses To Enter 1952 Presidency Campaign

ADLAI STEVENSON last week refused to enter the Democratic presidential contest, with a warning that there is "no indispensable man."

The Illinois Governor, renominated for State office only a fortnight ago, said:

"I have repeatedly said that I was a candidate for governor of Illinois and had no other ambition. To this I must now add that . . . I could not accept the nomination for any other office this summer."

Beyond emphasizing his interest in Illinois State affairs, Stevenson added that "great political parties, like great nations, have no indispensable man."

Speculation that President Truman had favored Stevenson for the Democratic nomination began weeks before Truman himself withdrew, but the Illinois Governor dodged any definite statement until last week.

Stevenson's refusal to seek the Democratic nomination came the day after Gen. Dwight Eisenhower won his second primary victory over Sen. Taft (R. O.) in New Jersey's Republican primary. Eisenhower was sure of at least 32 of Jersey's 38 convention delegates. Harold E. Stassen was a weak third.

Eisenhower, who will quit the NATO military command in Paris on June 1 to return to the U. S., said he was made "proud but thoughtful" by his primary victory.

Supporters of Taft, who had tried unsuccessfully to withdraw from the Jersey primary, claimed a "moral victory." And the Ohioan spoke of "a possibility of a first ballot convention victory."

Sen. Kefauver (D. Tenn.) picked up the New Jersey Democratic delegates without opposition.

In New York, Democrats began a "favorite son" drive for W. Averell Harriman, chief of the U. S. foreign aid program, who said he's available.

Oil Unions Set Apr. 30 As Strike Deadline

BECAUSE oil management boycotted government efforts for a settlement, the nation's oil unions set Apr. 30 as a strike deadline.

The oil unions, who represent 275,000 workers belonging to the CIO Oil Workers, independent and AFL unions, last week "reluctantly" postponed strike action for the third time after the Wage Stabilization Board referred the case back to the disputants.

WSB stepped aside "temporarily" after the industry refused to participate in the first "pilot case" hearings which were scheduled to be held by a WSB panel in St. Louis and San Francisco 10 days ago.

The case was referred by President Truman to the WSB Mar. 6 after the unions twice postponed strikes at the government's request.

The unions' coordinating committee, consisting of Pres. O. A. Knight of the CIO Oil Workers; J. J. McKenna, representing independent unions, and O. V. Clover representing AFL unions, said:

"Our unions are, of course, always willing to bargain and at no time have we declined to appear in any bargaining session.

"At no time have we refused to cooperate with the government.

WE HAVE delayed a national oil strike three times since Mar. 3 at the request of the government. The original Mar. 3 deadline was set after five months of fruitless collective bargaining.

"We are now asked to postpone our strike again. We are reluctantly agreeing to one final postponement. We will negotiate immediately with any company that is willing to negotiate. We will continue to negotiate for two weeks.

"If, by Apr. 30, we have been unable to negotiate satisfactory settlements, we will strike.

"Involved in the strike will be a substantial portion of the oil industry and many key natural gas pipe lines.

"We feel that two weeks of further negotiations are sufficient. By the end of this time we will have negotiated for seven months."

Ship Workers Win 5c on West Coast

A 5c an hour increase retroactive to last July will go more than 2000 members of the CIO Shipbuilding Workers at San Pedro, Calif., as a result of a Wage Stabilization Board decision last week.

The IUMSWA members are employed by Todd and Bethlehem Pacific. Labor members dissented in the wage award in which public and industry members joined. Labor and public members voted to make the increase retroactive. The union had asked a 22c an hour increase.

Murray Demands Full WSB Steel Package

THE CIO Steelworkers confidently anticipate that the government will order into effect the full package of Wage Stabilization Board recommendations in the steel dispute, USA Pres. Philip Murray told the National Press Club in Washington last week.

This includes the union shop, he said.

"We expect and hope," said the USA-CIO leader, "that the government of the United States, in the absence of collective bargaining, will impose on the industry the recommendations of the Wage Stabilization Board."

The full package the WSB proposed included the union shop, 12½c an hour retroactive to contract expiration dates, 2½c six months later, and 2½c at the end of another six months, averaging 13 3/4c for 1952; increases in shift differentials, halving of the present North-South differential of 10c an hour, six paid holidays with double time if worked, and time and a quarter for Sunday work beginning next Jan. 1.

With other fringe payments, these made the total cost by the end of an 18-month contract around 23c an hour.

Murray spoke after the government abandoned its efforts to mediate the Steelworkers' differences with the industry following President Truman's seizure of the mills. Collapse of the peace moves was announced by Acting Defense Mobilizer John R. Steelman and Chairman Nathan P. Feinsinger of the WSB, who had been conducting them.

That brought into the picture Sec. of Commerce Sawyer, charged with running the mills while the industry is in government hands.

"I shall proceed promptly, but not precipitately," he said, "to consider the terms and conditions of employment as I was instructed to do in Paragraph 3 of the President's executive order."

Sawyer's first move was to confer with Murray and with Benjamin F. Fairless of U. S. Steel. Additional conferences followed with the presidents of other steel companies. But no results were reached by the weekend.

Meantime, price stabilizers were holding firm in their flat refusal to give the industry the $12 a ton increase it has demanded as its price for putting the wage recommendations into effect.

Price Stabilizer Ellis Arnall told the Senate Labor Committee that if the increase were granted the country might just as well abandon all controls. The industry's demand, he said, would boost the cost of living by 5% and would add $300 to the annual living expenses of every family in the nation.

"I'm not going to any Munich," he declared. "As long as I am director, if the price of peace is surrender and a steel price increase, we're not going to have any peace."

Feinsinger also testified before the committee. Murray will testify this week.

The Labor Committee was only one of the bodies investigating some phase of the steel situation—the President's seizure of the mills, the price angle, the WSB and its recommendations or all three.

Sen. McCarran (D. Nev.) chairman of the Judiciary Committee, named a subcommittee to investigate the constitutionality of the seizure order, on the basis of a resolution sponsored by Republicans headed by Sen. Bridges (R. N. H.). Sen. Smith (D. N. C.). a Dixiegop cotton mill owner, was named chairman.

Sen. Maybank (D. S. C.) said the Banking Committee, of which he is chairman, would question top controls leaders "to see what they are going to do about the steel situation," and that the Joint Senate-House "Watchdog" Committee on the Defense Production Act also will investigate the dispute.

Speaking at the Press Club Murray commended labor reporters for their generally excellent coverage of both sides of the steel dispute, but added that it was "regrettable" that editorial writers had not shown the same respect for the facts of the case.

This was due, he said, to their failure to examine the complete record.

Tracing the long history of the steel companies' refusal to bargain, Murray pointed out that it was the industry and not the union which had wanted the dispute placed before the Wage Board.

"Yet after 2½ months of tortured hearings and two million words of thoroughly documented language, when the board made its recommendations, it was the industry which rejected them," he pointed out.

The union was not satisfied with the recommended settlement, but had accepted it in the public interest, he declared.

Murray contrasted the present attack on the WSB steel recommendations with the quiet way in which the press had accepted the board's recent approval of a 15c hourly hike for the construction industry. This boost had been approved by the board's industry members.

"There was no howl in the press about that," he added.

Yet the board's steel recommendations, Murray pointed out, call for a wage hike of only 13-3/4c hourly in 1952 and of 15c for the full 18 months of the proposed contract.

Murray assailed as "blasphemous" the propaganda campaign of the steel companies, particularly the advertising which has appeared in leading newspapers throughout the country during the last few weeks.

He called the latter "the greatest advertising onslaught against a union and against the government in the history of the United States." The taxpayers will have to foot the bill, eventually, for the steel industry propaganda, Murray said.

BRAINS GALORE: This is the battery of legal talent Republic, Youngstown and Bethlehem steel companies used in vain in their move to have President Truman's seizure of their mills declared illegal. They are shown on steps of Federal District Court building in Washington. Inland Steel also said it is going to sue.

President's Action On Steel Backed

The City Council of Pittsburgh, one of the country's largest steel centers, and Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey of the CIO Auto Workers praised President Truman for his seizure of the steel industry and his forthright radio broadcast explaining his action.

The Pittsburgh resolution, copies of which were sent to the President, the CIO Steelworkers and the major producers, thanked Truman for his "brave and determined" action and urged a prompt settlement of the dispute on the basis of the Wage Stabilization Board recommendations.

Mazey wrote the President that his action "has won the applause of millions of American citizens" and "smoked out the people in public office who are more concerned with property rights than human rights." He, too, expressed hope the Steelworkers would be given a pay boost without a rise in the price of steel.

Precedents For Steel Seizure Go Back To Revolution

THE GOVERNMENT filed a 69-page memorandum in U.S. District Court in Washington last week answering suits of five major steel companies for preliminary injunctions against President Truman's seizure of the industry.

The brief cited plenty of precedent for the President's action—dating back as far as the Revolutionary War, when properties were seized by the military for use of the armed forces.

"President Lincoln, Wilson and Franklin D. Roosevelt made use of the inherent constitutional power of the chief executive to seize property and facilities in times of crisis, it said.

The memorandum emphasized that the President acted "to insure the uninterrupted production of steel during this period of national emergency."

THE RIGHT of the Wage Stabilization Board to make the recommendations it handed down on steel was staunchly defended by Chairman Nathan P. Feinsinger last week before the Senate Labor Committee.

"When the board made its recommendations in the steel case," he said flatly, "it was clearly acting within its jurisdiction and authority, and any person taking the trouble to find out would know this to be a fact."

He also defended the President's move in seizing the steel mills, instead of seeking a no-strike injunction under the Taft-Hartley Act, when the industry rejected the WSB recommendations and, in effect, invited a strike by some 650,000 members of the CIO Steelworkers.

Feinsinger's testimony disclosed that apparently Charles E. Wilson—former General Electric Co. president who resigned as defense mobilization director because the steel companies were denied fat increases—had little understanding of the stabilization program—either wages or prices.

FOR ONE thing. Wilson "always had the misunderstanding" that fringe increases should be charged off against cost of living increase, he said. Wilson also took the position, he said, that even when cost of living increases entitled the union to 9c, "no increase should be given or at the outside 5c an hour."

"Mr. Wilson's position from the very first." Feinsinger added, "was that the way to settle this dispute was no wage increase and no price increase."

The WSB chairman also pointed out that since steel workers received their last wage increase in December, 1950, auto workers have received 17c, packinghouse employes 17.3c, shipbuilding 17c, rubber workers 13c, non-ferrous metals 15 to 16c, and Wilson's former General Electric employes, 15.5c.

"Those are wage rates alone," he explained. "The board's recommendations in the steel case average 13¾c for the entire year 1952."

PRICE Stabilizer Ellis Arnall gave the committee a 7000-word statement. He said price controls "had better" be junked if the government bows to the steel industry's demands for price boosts. The industry's claim to a $12 a ton increase, he said, is based on false premises and would make a "mockery" of price controls.

The industry is so profitable, he said, that its earnings before taxes are high enough to absorb $1.2 billion in additional costs before it would be entitled to higher prices beyond the Capehart formula. The WSB recommendations, he added, would cost about $225 million. The $12 a ton the steelmakers demand would add $1 billion a year to the base cost of living and on top of that would mean higher prices on all things made of steel, Arnall held.

Arnall estimated that "if this breakthrough comes" the cost to the average American family will be an extra $300 a year.

"If the people of this country are big enought saps to pay this to bring peace to the steel industry . . . well, I just can't believe it," he said.

Why No Howls?

The contrast of big business and daily press howls over U. S. seizure of the steel industry as compared with silence over the longstanding seizure of the railroads is pointed out by Labor, weekly paper of 15 railroad brotherhoods.

In an editorial in its current issue, Labor said:

President Truman's seizure of the steel industry to avert an employer-fomented strike stirred a great wave of hysteria in the nation's press this week.

Editors had "catfits." They cried "labor dictatorship . . . Hitlerism . . . socialism" and other such scare phrases. The St. Louis Globe-Democrat likened Truman to "Adolf Hitler in his wildest days," while the Chicago Tribune howled: "Impeach him!"

That barrage of editorials proved to be good business also to the newspapers, for the steel trust spent a fortune on full-page "ads" in papers throughout the land, quoting some of the most violent of those editorials. Also, the "Committee for Constitutional Government," top anti-labor lobby and propaganda outfit, got into the act with full page scare ads, probably paid for by the steel trust.

This frenzied outburst contrasted sharply with the silence most of these same daily papers have maintained toward the government's seizure of the railroads nearly two years ago.

Senator Humphrey (D. Minn.) called attention to that contrast at a Senate Labor Committee hearing on the seizure issue. Citing the hysteria over the steel case, Humphrey said no one has shown such "seizures of emotion" over the taking over of the railroads to avert a strike.

There has been "no great hue and cry" from the railroads nor any full-page ads in the papers like those of the steel trust, he pointed out.

The explanation, he said, is that the railroad seizure benefited management in a labor dispute, while the steel industry fears that the steel seizure might benefit the union.

"Just to show what can happen under government seizure," he went on, "I felt I should bring up this fact: While the railroads have been under government operation, at least two major 'wage boosts' have been given to the companies, in the form of freight rate increases, but there have been no increases for the men against whom the seizure was aimed."

How Long Do We Wait?

The CIO takes no great pleasure in pointing out to Congress that the disaster racking the much-battered Missouri Valley would have been lessened had a Missouri Valley Authority been established when the CIO first proposed it.

The current floods, with their incredible property toll and the perhaps irreparable damage they are doing to some of the nation's most fertile acres, point up the CIO's position in needlessly tragic fashion.

Even more tragic is the probability that when the present crisis is ended, Congress will sink back into its normal slough of inaction unless the people prod it a lot harder than they have, and that next year, or the year after, another great disaster will strike people who already have suffered more than they should.

How long must we wait?

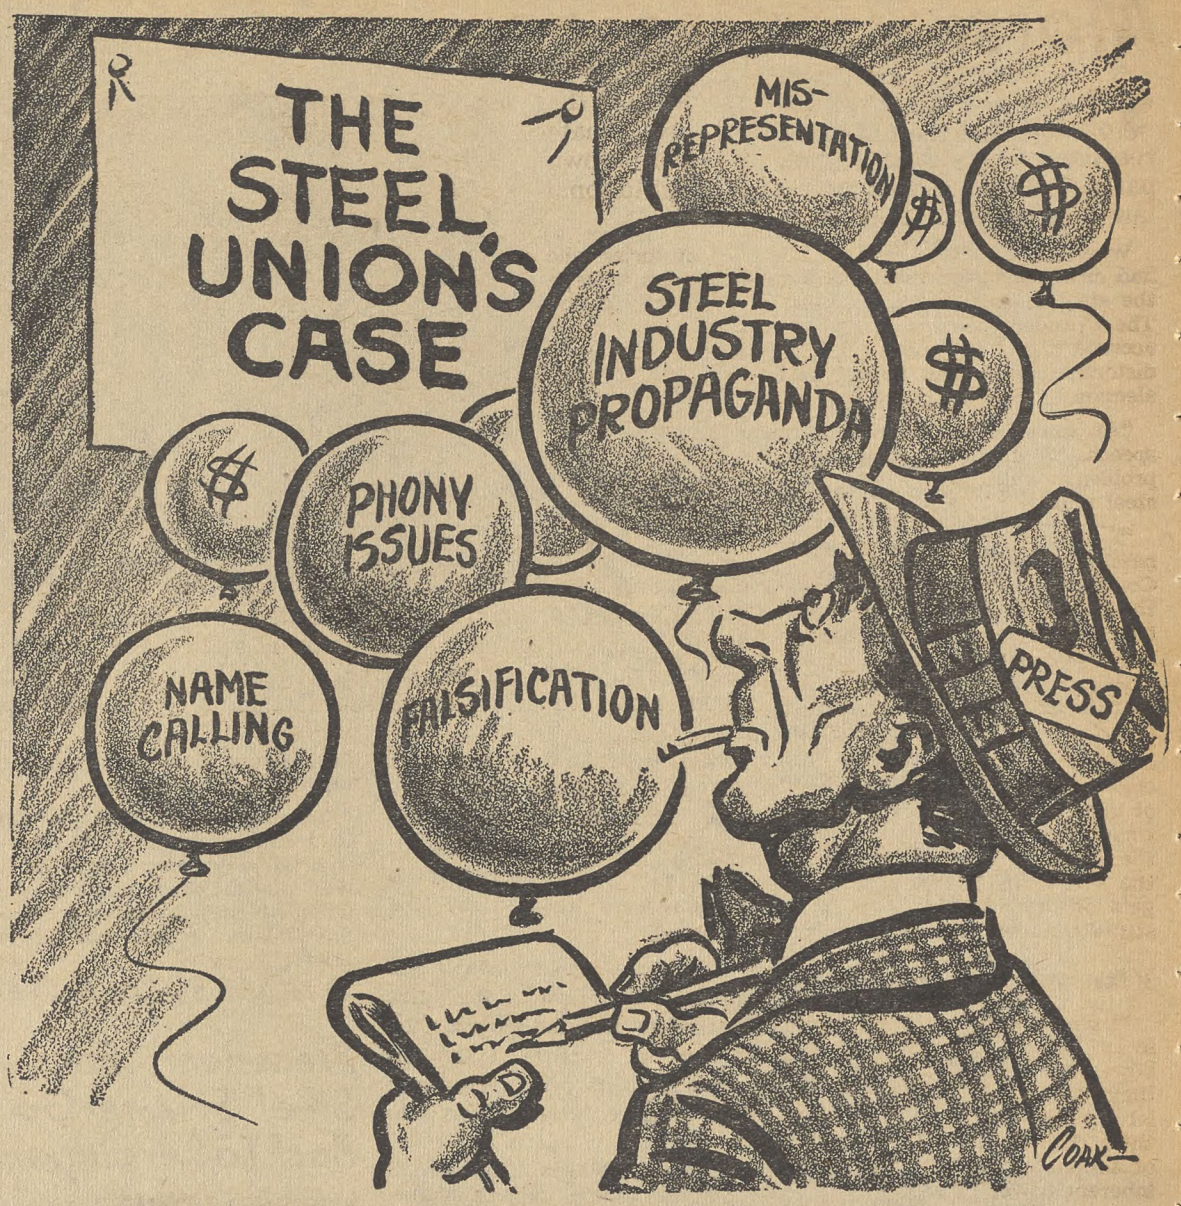
Spots Before His Eyes



Red Channels—And Blacklists

JEAN MUIR, a popular and talented entertainer, was the first victim. She got the ax in August, 1950.

Miss Muir had been slated for a starring role in the television program, The Aldrich Family, but she never appeared on the program. General Foods, the sponsor, bought up her contract and placed a substitute on the show. Her radio and TV career was about over.

Jean Muir was fired because of a few protests that she had been listed—along with 150 other radio and TV figures—in a slim volume called Red Channels. Red Channels is a booklet published by three former FBI agents. It has caused turmoil in radio entertainment circles; and every one of the 151 names it listed has either been forced out of radio and television—or suffered tremendous cuts in earning power.

Now, under the auspices of the American Civil Liberties Union, Merle Miller has examined Red Channels and the after-effects. (The Judges and the Judged; Doubleday & Co.; $2.50) They are serious, not only for the people involved but for the principle of free speech and free thought.

Mr. Miller, an anti-Communist from way back, handles his subject carefully, thoughtfully and factually.

His conclusion: Radio, television and the advertising agencies that produce many of our programs have been short on "moral responsibility" in the face of pressure from the small groups which have used Red Channels for their own purposes.

"Freedom is expensive," Mr. Miller comments. "In wartime it is bought at the cost of lives; in peacetime, the price must be paid in terms of cool-headed courage. It is a price that Americans have a right to expect the leaders of one of its basic industries to pay."

Red Channels, Mr. Miller finds after a year of research, was not very accurate; it was largely irresponsible; and it has become a blacklist in the executive and production offices of the radio and television industry.

Red Channels was published by a firm known as American Business Consultants, Inc. Its three officers were John G. Keenan, Theodore C. Kirkpatrick, and Kenneth M. Bierly, all wartime FBI men. In addition to Red Channels, ABC also publishes an anti-Communist newsletter called Counter-Attack.

Bierly—no longer connected with the outfit—told Miller that Red Channels has "had a very bad effect . . . It has been used in many frightening ways that I'm against . . . It's being used to keep innocent people out of jobs, and it shouldn't be. I'm against that."

Red Channels contains a listing of the associations, appearances and affiliations of each of 151 persons with organizations listed as subversive by the Attorney General, the House UnAmerican Activities Committee, the California UnAmerican Activities Committee, and other sources.

Miller makes four major points: (1) some of the listings aren't valid — the California committee headed by Sen. Jack Tenney was particularly casual in citing what it called "red" groups; (2) some of the affiliations of individuals are incorrect or can't be proved; (3) past changes of attitudes aren't taken into consideration; and (4) wholly "innocent" affiliations aren't listed, to give a balance to the picture of the entertainer's activities.

SO VIRULENT a conservative as Fulton Lewis, Jr., the Mutual Commentator, told Mr. Miller: "The whole listing in that book was done without any of the proper kind of investigation. Why, we do more research for a single broadcast than those boys seem to have done for the whole book."

Theodore Kirkpatrick, the chief figure in American Business Consultants, shrugs off the attacks on Red Channels. His position—as expressed in a recent TV appearance with the author and with radio columnist John Crosby—is that people who criticize the book are Communists, pro-Communist or "being used" by the Communists.

Kirkpatrick admits there may be a few errors; he admits that people listed in Red Channels may be non-Communists or active Communists; and he denies that the book was intended as a blacklist. But the facts show that Kirkpatrick's friends and associates have put on the heat—often successfully—when an entertainer listed in Red Channels is booked for a radio or TV appearance.

All he wants to do, Kirkpatrick says, is to present the facts. The trouble is that some of the "facts" aren't true, they're not necessarily in full perspective, and they've often been misused. Is that Kirkpatrick's fault? Readers of "The Judges and the Judged" will have to judge for themselves.

The Law And Steel Seizure—

Morse Leaves Tory Hides Dangling Over Capitol

SEN. MORSE (R. Ore.), former dean of the of Univ. of Oregon Law School, gave Senate reactionaries—most of them members of his own party—an elementary lesson in constitutional law last week.

When he finished, the hides of a lot of tories who had challenged the right of President Truman to seize the steel industry were dangling all over the Capitol. The President has that right, he said bluntly, and he accused the louder wing of the GOP of using "tactics of distortion" which may cost the party the November election.

"At some length yesterday," he said in a Senate speech, "I discussed some of the constitutional law problems which are involved in the seizure of the steel mills.

"I pointed out—and I am just mentioning it in passing today—that in all our history the Supreme Court has yet to render its first decision denying that the President of the United States, whoever he may be, has the inherent power to protect the interests of the American people in times of emergency and crisis.

"I should like to suggest to those who I have heard express themselves on constitutional law, whose views in my opinion would be laughed out of any freshman course in constitutional law in any of our law schools, that they will never live so long as to read a decision of the U. S. Supreme Court holding that in this land in time of great national peril the President does not have the inherent power under the Constitution to protect the safety and security of the nation until Congress gets off its haunches and proceeds to meet its constitutional obligations and perform its duty.

The Story Is An Old One

"I am becoming a little weary of hearing politicians, in an election year, proceed to attack the constitutional powers of the President of the United States because they dislike his partisanship, when they themselves have yet to take action under the Constitution, as it is their clear duty to take if they do not like the kind of action the President is taking in the exercise of his inherent power . . .

"What we have witnessed here this afternoon is a repetition of an old scene which has been occurring in this historic chamber for decades and decades.

"Without meaning any disrespect, let me say that I wonder what Abraham Lincoln would say if he walked into Washington today and heard the arguments to which we have listened. I suspect he would say, 'This is where I came in,' because when he issued the Emancipation Proclamation, he, too, was attacked across the land as a dictator, as a destroyer of private property rights, as a totalitarian. However, he took that action under his executive power, and the Supreme Court never set it aside.

"Thomas Jefferson was referred to this afternoon, and quite laudably, as he should be. But those who referred to him failed to point out that Thomas Jefferson took the same position which Harry Truman took the other evening, namely, that as Chief Executive he had the inherent power and the duty to take action which would protect the security of the nation.

"Woodrow Wilson, Theodore Roosevelt, Andrew Jackson and Franklin Roosevelt took similar action; indeed, if we went down the list of Presidents we would be

"Whenever Presidents have had the sacred obligation of acting promptly to protect the security of the nation, they have taken action.

"Some persons in speaking of constitutional law have demonstrated that apparently they have never read Corwin's theory—which has been accepted by the courts, so far as I know, and never has been repudiated by them—that the President has the power to protect the security of the people of the United States, with the power reserved to the Congress to modify the program and the procedure the President adopts, in keeping with its inherent power as a Congress to revise the steps taken by a President in the exercise of his inherent power.

"Instead of castigating the President's powers, why are not gentlemen on the floors of the two houses of Congress these days coming forward with the legislative proposals they think Congress should adopt under the modified Corwin theory that the President adopted in the steel case?

'Law In The Negative'

"This afternoon we had a novel statement of law in the negative . . . This afternoon we were told that the President of the United States violated a law when he issued his order the other night, because in the course of a debate on proposed legislation in the Senate last year, an amendment was offered in an effort to give the President seizure power, but was defeated; and therefore it is said that the President is now violating the law.

"Imagine that! That is a new doctrine. In other words, it is claimed that by rejecting an amendment, we pass a law; and thus it is claimed that because we rejected that amendment last year, the President is violating a law—a law not even on the statute books.

"Mr. President, what are we going to do when such sophomorisms creep into Senate debate?

"This afternoon some snide remarks were made about constitutional liberals. Those remarks were amusing, of course; but I wish those who made them would take an elementary course in constitutional law. If they did, they would not make some of the interpretations of the Constitution which they have made.

"Of course it is easy to wave both the flag and the Constitution into tatters in demagogic discussions before the American people. But if these gentlemen should go into court and present their argument in regard to the meaning of the Constitution, they would soon discover that the kind of rubbish and curbstone opinions about the inherent power of the President of the United States that are being expressed these days would not stand up under court decisions.

"Mr. President, I am talking not about the way the President exercised his inherent power in this instance—because I do not happen to approve of the way he exercised it—but about the basic principle of constitutional law which is involved.

"Let us hold fast to the basic question of constitutional law which is involved in this case, namely, the question of whether the President has the inherent power to act as he has.

"Until the Supreme Court hands down a decision—and such an opinion would be the first of its kind in all our history—that all the dicta that have appeared in the decisions to date are not applicable, I shall continue to say that it is the duty and responsibility of a President of the United States in an hour of great crisis to proceed by executive order to protect the security of the nation.

HST Avoided 'Dereliction'

"I wish to say that had the President let the steel mills close the other night, I think he would have been guilty of a great dereliction of duty.

"Let me refer to another suggestion made this afternoon . . . That suggestion was that perhaps the President should be impeached.

"Why do not the Republicans in the House of Representatives inaugurate impeachment proceedings?

"If they propose to tell the American people that in the action of the President they think there is a basis for impeachment, then in keeping with their oath of office, if they believe there is such a basis, let them come forward with impeachment proceedings. Let us not be playing politics with the question of impeachment.

"If they think the President is guilty of a course of action which is subject to impeachment, then they are violating their very oaths of office to uphold the Constitution if, as members of the House of Representatives, they do not take steps to initiate impeachment proceedings.

"Of course, we know why they do not do so: their partianship would be shown up in no uncertain terms.

"Mr. President, my party had better watch its step in pursuing tactics which a certain wing of my party are using in American politics. Because once the American people see through those tactics, once the American people see that they are tactics of distortion, that they are tactics which seek to defile government by law, there will be a revulsion on the part of the independent voters, and my party will lose the best chance it has had in 20 years for a victory in November.

"Thus in the interests of the good section of my party, which represents the overwhelming bulk of my party, I shall continue to speak out against such reactionary forces which apparently are willing to adopt any tactics in an effort to win in November.

"If they are allowed to get away with it, that will be the surest way for my party to lose."

Steel Industry Screams Don't Hide Weakness Of Its Case

By IRVING FAGAN
For Labor Press Associated

WHERE were all these brave defenders of "free enterprise" when President Truman seized the railroads two years ago?

Where were the press, radio, television, the columnists, the National Association of Manufacturers, and the U.S. Chamber of Commerce?

The same president who seized the railroads then has seized the steel industry now. He seized the railroads in the national interest to prevent a breakdown in transportation. He seized the steel industry in the national interest to keep steel production going.

There was no screaming when the railroads were seized. Now there is screaming, because this time the most sensitive industry nerve has been touched—the pocketbook nerve. A President has said right out loud that steel can pay the increase out of profits.

That's why they are screaming that the Republic is in danger, and that we are just a step from dictatorship, anarchy, socialization, and nationalization. In fact, the Wall Street Journal berates Congress for doing nothing, and compares it to the Reichstag in the days of Hitler.

Can it be that the screaming by industry hides the weakness of its case?

Clarence Randall, president of Inland Steel, in the worst demagogue vein, asked his nationwide radio and television audience. "Is your boy in Korea earning $1.70 an hour?"

His audience had every right to reply, "No, and neither is my boy in Korea earning $105,000 a year," which is what Randall gets. Ben Fairless, president of US Steel, got $261,000 last year, a raise of $47,000 over 1950, and will get $70,000 a year on retirement. Enders Voorhees, chairman of the finance committee of U.S. Steel, got $211,400 and so did Irving Olds, chairman of the board—an increase of 26.5 per cent in a year.

And that uproar over profits. With great glee all the pro-industry boys accused Truman of distortion, because he put steel profits at $19.50 a ton but did not mention that was before taxes. Did Randall mention that the $1.70 an hour also is before taxes?

They've got to have $12 a ton increase, they say. Their argument: Direct costs will go up $6, and indirect costs $6 more. Yet, all we have for that $12 figure is the industry's own, unsupported word.

Industry wept over inflation and leap-frogging of wages and prices, and Randall said there's too much money chasing too few goods. Yet Randall must know that the warehouses are bulging with unsold goods, the auto makers can't sell the cars they have on hand, retailers are moaning. The fact is that people are not buying for a very simple reason—they haven't got the money.

The Journal of Commerce on Apr. 1 said "wage increases are a powerful inflationary stimulus under existing conditions," and the very next day said "steel prices have not always been a harbinger of inflation." In other words, upping wages means inflation; upping steel prices does not.

The Republican New York Herald Tribune called Randall "an effective, immensely convincing spokesman" for steel, and that "in blunt language he set the record straight." It quoted Randall's argument that the government was giving the union a wage boost twice as large as the union ever got through collective bargaining.

Yet the facts are that in December, 1950, (the last time they got a raise) the CIO Steelworkers got 12½c across the board and 2½c more for adjustments. The WSB recommendations are 12½c for the first six months of 1952, and 2½c more for the second six months, or 15c for the year. On the basis of an 18-month contract, the raise would be 12½c for the first six months, 15c for the second six months, 17½c for the last six months.

Twice as much, Mr. Randall? Twice as much, Herald Tribune?

CIO's Southern Drive—

Taft-Hartley Is Gift From Gods To Mill Owners

(Last of three articles.)

By WILLIAM WEISS

WHEN a CIO union wins a National Labor Relations Board election in the South, the workers in the plant assume, quite naturally, that the battle has been won and they will soon get a contract.

Seasoned union organizers and negotiators know from past experience, however, that winning the election is the easiest phase of the contest and that the real fight is yet to come.

With few exceptions, the pattern that follows is always the same—endless meetings with company representatives who go through the motions of bargaining in order to comply with the provisions of the Taft-Hartley Law.

There are instances where companies have stalled negotiations for as long as 10 years while their henchmen did a systematic job of destroying the union within the mill or plant.

FRANK CONSTANGY

Anti-union attorney has made a career out of fighting the CIO in the South.

The Taft-Hartley Law has been a gift from the gods to the average southern mill owner and he has been quick to take advantage of several of its more convenient provisions.

Some of the law's most vicious aspects have not been utilized on a widespread scale yet, but reactionary forces in the South are well aware of their existence and they won't hesitate to use them when the time is opportune.

Stalling: Fine Art

Stalling over contract negotiations in the South has reached the stage where union negotiators are amazed if the attorney representing the company fails to pull every trick in the book to avoid signing a contract.

One of the most sought-after anti-union attorneys in the South is Frank Constangy of Atlanta. Constangy has quite a history as a union-buster, since he quit as an attorney for the Textile Workers Organizing Committee, forerunner of the CIO Textile Workers.

Now he represents some of the important textile companies in the South and can always be counted upon to throw every possible roadblock in the path of the union.

Anchor Rome Mills and Celanese Corp. of America, both located in Rome, Ga., were two outfits which became "Constangy conscious" and hired the portly attorney to represent them after their employes had voted for the TWUA.

TWUA won a Labor Board election at the Celanese plant in November 1944 and succeeded in signing a contract five months later. In August 1948 the workers struck the plant in protest over the company's refusal to put into effect a 15c an hour increase given its Cumberland, Md., employes. After the strike was 30 days old, the union offered to return to work and arbitrate the dispute. The company refused.

In October the company—without public hearings—obtained a secret injunction, limiting the number of pickets at each gate and simultaneously announced that the plant would be reopened Oct. 26.

The day the mill attempted to reopen, workers formed a continuous picket line before the main gate. The local judge promptly responded with 192 contempt orders, including one against George Baldanzi, TWUA executive vice president.

The union brought unfair labor practices charges against the company. Sen. Murray (D. Mont.) labelled the company's tactics "a reversion to labor-management relations of the past century" and urged a congressional investigation.

Despite the issuance of a permanent injunction stringently limiting picketing, and a total of 392 contempt citations, TWUA won the strike and prevented the establishment of the "southern differential" in the synthetic yarn industry.

'Wholesale' Contempt

After more than a year in various courts, eight strikers, including J. D. Pedigo, manager of the Northwest Georgia TWUA Joint Board, were sentenced to 10 days in jail.

TWUA won an election at this mill and the first contract was signed in March 1946 and renewed the following year. Alabama Mills, a notorious anti-union company purchased the mill in November 1947 and trouble for the union began almost at once.

In contract negotiations, the company demanded that TWUA drop 12 important clauses. During the week preceding expiration of the agreement, permits were issued for 41 management representatives to carry guns. Included was the general manager, the son of the owner and a professional prize fighter.

A strike was called at the mill on Mar. 18, 1948. Two days later an interlocutory injunction was granted restraining mass picketing.

Three days later, the personnel director of the mill led a mob of 75 men armed with clubs and other weapons in an assault on four pickets, three of them women. A grand jury, summoned to hear the facts of the assault on the pickets, squashed the charges.

Top leaders of the CIO Southern Drive surround Dir. John Riffe (seated, center) at Atlanta policy meeting. Drive operates in eight states.

(Note: The secretary of the grand jury was none other than the secretary-treasurer of the Anchor Rome mill.)

The following month, episodes of violence, usually company-inspired, occurred almost daily. A striker was shot and critically wounded by a scab. The superintendent of the mill, arrested a few days later, pleaded guilty to charges of assault and battery, pointing a firearm and public drunkenness. At a private hearing, he was fined $100.

When the union called off the strike in January, 1949, the company refused to reinstate 300 workers. When an NLRB trial examiner ordered the workers put back to work with back pay, management refused to comply with the order.

At a hearing of the Senate subcommittee on Labor-Management Relations held later in Washington, TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve charged that while the "anti-union artillery fired by Anchor Rome" left him untouched, "it did plenty of damage to the workers."

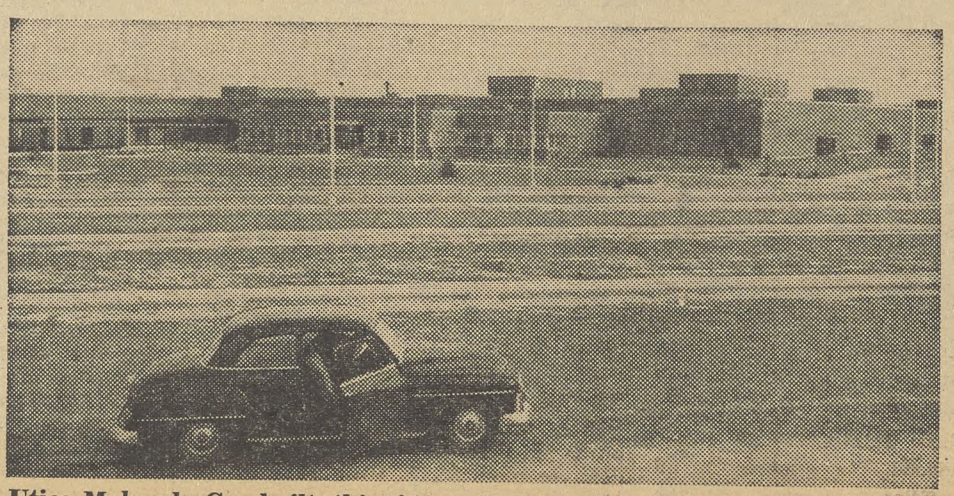
Rieve Hits T-H

"By and large," he said, "the same thing is true of the Taft-Hartley Act itself. The men who wrote the law say it is aimed at union leaders; but in practice it has hit every American who works for wages.

"I charge that there exists in the textile industry, primarily in the South, a widespread conspiracy to prevent union organization and to destroy those unions which now exist.

"I charge that the connecting links in this conspiracy are the management lawyers, who have developed most of the weapons used against workers and who themselves conduct and direct most of the union-busting work.

"I charge that the aim of this conspiracy is not merely to prevent the development of unions as such, but to keep the South in the political and economic grip of the backward, bigoted reactionary interests which now control it."



Utica-Mohawk Co. built this $17 million plant in Oconee County, S.C. Cheap, unorganized labor is major attraction for northern companies.

'Free Enterprise' Gets A Hand

IT'S NO LONGER "Sleepy Time Down South." The huge industrial expansion program now under way, financed for the most part by northern capital, has transformed drowsy Dixie towns into unprecedented activity.

Immense industrial plants are springing up like magic as the owners make haste to take advantage of the South's widely advertised "unexcelled business opportunities." These include such "assists" for free enterprise as tax-free land, low electric rates and last but not least, cheap, unorganized labor.

A report issued recently by an imposing sounding organization, the Southern Association of Science and Industry, calls attention to the first edition of its new Southern Industrial Directory "designed to assist southern business and industrial groups in maintaining the region's swift pace of economic progress."

The report reveals some eye-opening statistics, including announcement that the South now imports from other sections of the country $2 billion worth of industrial equipment and supplies each year and that in 1951 the area added an average of one new multi-million dollar plant for each working day.

Booming Dixie

The directory, described by the association's officers as "the first comprehensive survey ever made by southern industry," also contains maps, charts and photographs illustrating the bustling industrial activity in Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, North and South Carolina, Oklahoma, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia.

Highlighted in the report was the news that Texas, Louisiana, Alabama and Kentucky rank among the top states in the country in the construction of new defense plants, with certificates of necessity amounting to $1 billion being issued for construction in Texas alone. The report adds:

"Chemical plants valued at $1 billion have been built in the South in the last three years. Along the Texas and Louisiana Gulf Coast 60 companies now produce more than 200 organic and inorganic chemicals in 80 new plants.

"DuPont de Nemours & Co. has built most of its post-war plants in the South and now has 20 installations in operation in nine southern states.

"Sixty large paper and pulp mills with a daily capacity of 25,000 tons, are now operating in the southern states, and nine new mills involving a $200 million investment are under construction."

Facts On '52—

T-H Can't Be Rejiggered; It Must Be Repealed

"TAFT - HARTLEY is unfair, based on delusions rather than facts," declares the newest PAC pamphlet in the " '52 Facts" series.

"Taft-Hartley is a threat to unions and a comfort only to low-wage, reactionary employers. It cannot be amended, reformed piecemeal, or rejiggered into the semblance of a sensible statute.

"It must be repealed."

"The most lethal direct blow struck at unions by Taft-Hartley is the spelled-out right of employers to fire any workers who strike for higher wages or better conditions and replace them with scabs," the pamphlet declares.

"So-called 'economic' strikers could be fired, of course, even under the Wagner Act.

"Nothing in the Wagner Act compelled a company to stay in business or employ a particular group of workers who insisted upon certain wage scales or working hours. Nothing in the Wagner Act prevented an employer from replacing strikers with other employes.

"But the Wagner Act gave one element of security to workers who went on strike for economic reasons. When, as and if another NLRB election was held, to determine whether employes at a plant wanted union representation, both the original employes—the strikers—and the scabs were allowed to vote.

"Taft-Hartley canceled out the voting right of the strikers.

"Under Taft-Hartley, loyal workers who have built up an interest and right in their jobs over a period of years are treated like scabs. And scabs are treated like loyal workers.

"Under the Wagner Act, if workers went on strike their rights in their jobs were recognized. If a labor board election was held they were entitled to vote as well as the scabs.

"With Taft-Hartley only the scabs vote. A strike can be provoked, scabs brought in, a quick election held, and the union is denied the right even to ask for an election for a year. Then the scabs can be moved on and there's nothing the union can do.

"That's 'justice' under Taft-Hartley.

"The deadly attack of Taft-Hartley on economic strikers was one of the principal points cited by Business Week, the businessmen's magazine, in editorially denouncing the law as capable of destroying the labor movement.

"The effect of this Taft-Hartley clause is relatively small when industry is crying for workers so that it can make profits in a boom market.

"But give the country another depression and anti-union employers could use Taft-Hartley's sanctions against economic strikers with devastating effect.

"Anti-union employers, knowing they could hire plenty of new workers from the 'pool of unemployment,' could drive wages down ruthlessly, smash unions they had hitherto accepted reluctantly. The very existence of Taft-Hartley penalties against economic strikers intimidates unions and deprives them of strength in bargaining."

The impact of Taft-Hartley has been particularly hard on organizing in the South.

"Taft-Hartley was a godsend to Southern firms anxious to avoid fair wages and standard contracts," the PAC booklet says.

"The Union Manufacturing Co. at Union Point, Ga., refused to sign a contract with the Textile Workers Union (CIO) unless the union would post a cash bond guaranteeing its members would not strike.

"Was this 'bad faith' on the part of the employer? It would have been under the Wagner Act, but not under Taft-Hartley.

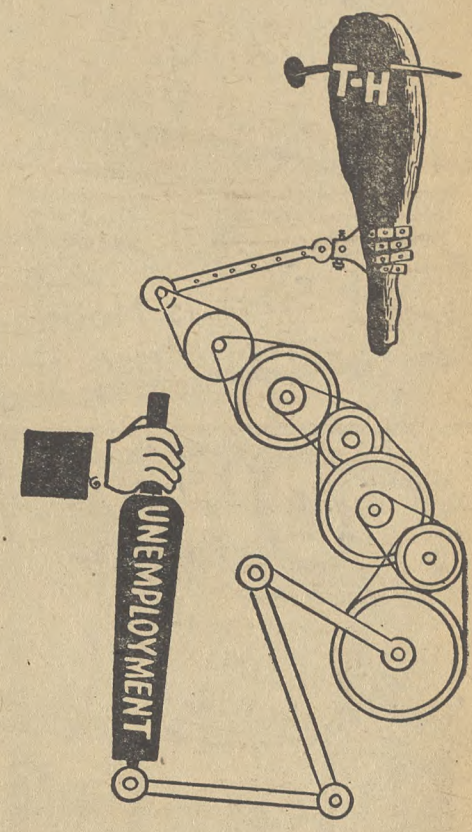
"The Textile Workers won a National Labor Relations Board election at the Sherman (Tex.) Manufacturing Co. May 3, 1949. The mill supervisor refused to meet for contract bargaining more than once every two weeks—and that was not 'bad faith.'

"Taft-Hartley helps carpetbag-controlled firms insist on a wage 'differential'—lower wages than the same firms pay in the North. The workers pay all the bills in the lower standard of living.

"The impact of Taft-Hartley upon Southern industry and Southern society has been nothing short of tragedy.

"When a textile plant 'runs' from New England to the South to avoid decent union wage scales, both sections of the country are hurt.

"New England loses the plant and the jobs it provides. The South loses heavily in a different way.



"The South gets an employer whose major object is to underpay his workers, to cheat them of an honest day's pay for an honest day's work.

"The South gets the kind of employer who likes to keep his empolyes in dismal company towns, lacking the income to pay for adequate schools, good housing, proper public health facilities, good diet and recreation.

"The South has long been over-provided with 'runaway' employers who want to keep the Southern states as the nation's poorhouse. More 'runaway' plants are a loss, not an asset, to Dixie."

Freedom Forum Slapped On Claim Of UAW Support

THE CIO Auto Workers aren't having anything to do with Freedom Forum, thank you.

The union has sharply reprimanded Harding College, Searcy, Ark., sponsor of Freedom Forum, for its unauthorized listing of "UAW-CIO" as a participating organization in the call for the 12th Freedom Forum seminar.

The seminars instruct businessmen how to conduct anti-union, anti-Fair Deal propaganda among workers of their plants.

"We never authorized the use of our name by Harding College and certainly have not endorsed any of the activities of this organization," said Brendan Sexton, UAW educational director.

"It does not surprise me, however, that they have used our name in an unauthorized way since this is the kind of conduct one expects from Communists, fascists and other unscrupulous elements in the community."

Sexton said that "as a result of careful investigation, we have become convinced that Harding College is a not-so-innocent front for the most diehard, reactionary groups in the United States."

The same sources that finance notorious anti-labor groups as the Committee for Constitutional Government and Fighters for Freedom contribute largely to the Freedom Forum.

Harding College was reported to be on the verge of bankruptcy before it entered the propaganda field. Now it is doing quite well.

Sayre Appointed

Harry Sayre, president of the CIO Paper Workers, has been named to the national labor committee of the American Heart Association and the national labor council of the National Conference of Christians and Jews.

'Sweat Shops Worse Than No Industry,' Says Student Daily Backing IUE Strike

STRONG support for the strike of 400 CIO Electrical Workers against the Sylvania Corp. plant in Shawnee, Okla., has come from the Oklahoma Daily, student newspaper at the Univ. of Oklahoma in Norman.

The IUE-CIO members struck Sylvania last month in a campaign for conditions equal those in the company's other plants.

In the Oklahoma Daily, Columnist George Rucker, a graduate student, wrote:

"About 35 miles from Norman, in Shawnee, an important event in taking place. The workers at Sylvania in Shawnee, are out on strike. There are several things which give it importance.

"First, it is perhaps indicative of Oklahoma's future. If the state brings in the 'industry' that its leaders are begging for, the situation in Shawnee will be oft repeated in the future.

"It is hoped that Oklahoma will learn rapidly that with large scale industry comes large scale industrial labor with its rights and needs.

"Second, the strike is indicative of one of the false 'come-ons' given to industry by non-industrialized areas: 'cheap labor.'

"It is interesting that Sylvania, in its eastern plants, has a master agreement with the IUE-CIO that provides better pay and working conditions. Thus it would appear that sub-standard conditions are all right for 'Okies.'

"Third, it is indicative of the too-frequent short-sighted attitude taken by many local merchants, who fear that organized labor and strikes for better working conditions will 'drive industry away from Oklahoma,' forgetting that it is the workers that buy their goods and if the workers don't get decent pay, they can't do much consuming. (Remember 1929?)

"Fourth, this strike is interesting as an example of co-operation among different unions.

"Fifth, this is not an impetuous or thoughtless strike. The union, which won recognition as bargaining agent at an NLRB election last August, has been negotiating to get a contract since October, and only walked out after five months of no progress.

"The spirit of the strikers is good. They are getting the facts to the people.

"As industry does come to Oklahoma, it should come on a basis of equality with other areas, not as a force to depress wages and living standards with them.

" 'Sweat shop' industry is far worse than no industry at all."

Haywood Asks Strike Aid For N.C. Furniture Workers

FULL CIO "moral and financial support" to 1500 striking CIO Furniture Workers at the Thomasville Chair Co. was urged last week by Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president.

Sixty-seven workers have been arrested in the five-week walkout at the Thomasville, N. C., plant in attempts by police to break the strike.

Haywood, in a letter to all CIO affiliates, pointed out the strike "is in the heart of the South and the outcome of this means much to our entire southern campaign."

Similar support for the UFWA strikers at Thomasville and at Elkin Furniture Co., Elkin, N. C., was voiced by John V. Riffe, director of the CIO Organizing Committee.

The Thomasville strike is the result of the refusal of the company to grant any wage increase under a wage reopening clause.

Mediators finally prevailed upon Doak Finch, company president, to meet with UFWA Pres. Morris Pizer and other union officials, but no progress has been reported.

2 CIO Men Elected To Milwaukee Posts

For the first time, two CIO members have been elected to local governmental offices in Milwaukee.

Peter H. Hoffman, a member of CIO Lithographers Local 7, was elected city alderman, while Pres. Cornelius Jankowski of CIO Auto Workers Local 1610 was elected a county supervisor.

HST to Visit Flood Area; Toll Higher

OMAHA, Neb., April 15 (AP).—Missouri River sav- agery, which President Truman aims to see first-hand to-

IT WAS the same old story last week for the long-suffering people of the Missouri Valley—because pork barrel politics and false "economy" are more important to Congress than realistic, comprehensive flood prevention.

Less than a year since disaster struck the Kansas City area, another mighty flood was rolling down the Missouri.

Record flood crests ruined cities, towns and farms through 12 states, hitting hard at Sioux City and in the Omaha area.

Two other surging rivers, the Mississippi and the Red River of the North, added to the destruction and hardship with more than a million acres under water.

According to a mid-week Red Cross report, more than 26,000 families—more than 100,000 people—were homeless and the number of towns and farms battered by the millions of tons of rolling water was increasing daily.

The "Mighty Muddy Mo" spread its trail of ruin through South Dakota, Iowa and Nebraska and into Kansas and Missouri with heaviest damage in the first two states.

The flood crest was expected to reach 31.5 feet at Omaha, five feet more than the city's dikes and flood walls were designed to withstand. Previous record high there was 24.6 feet in 1881.

More than 25,000 people were evacuated at Council Bluffs and two-thirds of that city was deserted.

"The Missouri is coming with a rip and a roar," warned Brig. Gen. Don G. Shingler, Missouri River division engineer. "We're in for a hell of a lot of trouble."

Last summer, the people who live in the Missouri Valley "had a hell of a lot of trouble" and for the same reason.

That reason was failure of Congress to enact a comprehensive flood control-water, power and resources development program under a Missouri Valley Authority instead of piecemeal measures under the Army engineers.

FOLLOWING the damage caused by the floods which swept the midwest, CIO Pres. Philip Murray, in a letter to President Truman last July, warned that "America must do better in its flood control work in the Missouri Valley and elsewhere." He suggested a four-point program for the Missouri Valley Basin to replace "the discredited Pick-Sloan proposals."

In describing the Pick-Sloan plan as "wrong in purpose and wrong in method," Murray declared that if a Missouri Valley Authority had been established when the CIO first advocated it years ago, "the program would be well along by this time and the damage could have been sharply reduced."

(The Pick-Sloan proposal is a plan for flood control, irrigation, navigation and hydroelectric power for the Missouri under which the Army engineers have spent more than $1.5 billion since World War II.)

President Truman, in a reply to Murray, praised the CIO for the aid it had given to flood victims but pointed out that this relief was of an emergency nature and "was no substitute for the job that needs to be done—to prevent such floods from happening in the first place."

"You have worked steadily, year in and year out, for sensible, effective control and use of our great rivers to prevent floods, to produce power, to irrigate lands, and to yield the other benefits that can come from wise river basin development.

"But you know the right kind of river-basin development cannot be accomplished unless the people elect public officials who will support it," he added.

Truman noted at the time that his budget requests for flood control had been cut by Congress for the previous four years, and that the House cut the 1951 budget requests by nearly 20% shortly before the floods occurred.

Less than two weeks ago, the economy-minded House Appropriations Committee once more trimmed the Missouri Valley project budget. It reduced a Budget Bureau proposal of $3.5 billion for the Oahe dam to $700,000 and eliminated a $13 million appropriation for the Gavins Point dam.

FUNDS for the Fort Randall dam were sliced from $37.5 million to $30 million and for the Garrison dam from $34 million to $30 million.

Last year CIO unions contributed a total of $112,000 for the relief of flood victim members and now the CIO Community Services Committee was preparing to move into the stricken area.

CSC Rep. Jack Pierce established headquarters in the St. Paul-Minneapolis, Minn., area, scene of severe damage by the rampaging upper Mississippi. Flood damage there was termed of "major disaster proportions" by Gov. C. Elmer Anderson.

"River, Stay 'Way From My Door"

Truman Assails Economy Bloc For Flood Ruin

PRESIDENT Truman last week flew to Omaha and invited the governors of seven states to help him get Congress to approve an area-wide flood control program.

"We've got an economy wave on in Congress, wiping out some of the most important projects I have presented (involving flood control) and it should not be done," Truman told the governors.

"I want the states in this (Missouri) basin to cooperate with the federal government from now on," Truman said. "One of the governors said to me awhile ago that I was trying to make lobbyists of the governors here.

"Well, I'm not running for any office and I want the governors to join me as lobbyists for all of the people of the United States."

Woolen Contract Extended Again

The American Woolen Co. and the CIO Textile Workers have agreed to a second one-month extension of their contract. The new extension continues the contract to May 15.

Negotiations have been going on since January. The company earlier announced that it would not renew its contract which covers 21 plants. The new extension was granted to permit union officials to devote full time to preparations for TWUA's seventh biennial convention which will open at Cleveland, Apr. 28.

With Spirit Like This, You Can't Stop The Phone Workers

NEW YORK "Hello" girls greet enthusiastically the announcement that Western Union offices would be picketed.

MATCHING their action to their approval, the operators respect the picket line by sitting hapily on the curb.

IT WAS THREE down, two to go, in negotiations of striking CIO Communications Workers with Bell System affiliates last week.

Settlements in three states—Michigan, Ohio and New Jersey—brought wage increases totaling more than $11 million a year to 45,000 workers. They were shaping up to what CWA Pres. Joseph Beirne called "a significant victory."

CWA said that the new wage hikes, when added to those previously won, bring the total average increase to 20.6c an hour since January, 1950.

Still unsettled were the strikes of 15,500 Western Electric installers and warehousemen—who were continuing their nationwide "hit-run" picketing—and of 5000 other CWA members at Pacific Tel. & Tel. in Northern California. Negotiations were continuing with both these companies.

Many Injunctions

The settlements provided:

Ohio—Wage increases ranging from $4 to $7 a week, with increases as high as $12 a week for some members because of job and town reclassifications. Increases average 12.7c an hour including fringe items. Other benefits include job upgrading, better grievance procedure and improved arbitration.

Michigan—Settlement follows the same general wage pattern as in Ohio. Of the 4647 plant workers, 2382 get $7 a week increase. The company and CWA will join in asking WSB to approve $1.52 of the average $4.60 weekly increase. Extension of a job description requirement to a large number of plant craftsmen will mean additional pay increases.

New Jersey — Contract provides $4-4.50 weekly increase for operators and supervisors. Other benefits won are double time for third and subsequent Sundays, increased night differentials and maintenance - of - membership clause.

Earlier in the week, bitterness increased and the strike spread to New Orleans. Bell System affiliates obtained injunctions in Alabama, Florida, Mississippi and Tennessee and in a number of communities in other Southern states.

The Alabama injunction forbids not only picketing but also union meetings in 40 cities.

CWA has begun court action against the injunctions, and the union's legal counterattack may be carried to the Supreme Court.

Beirne called the Alabama injunction "a vicious strike-breaking conspiracy between state officials and the Bell System."

"Workers are entitled to civil rights," Beirne said.

Union To Fight

"We're going to fight these injunctions clear up to the Supreme Court, if necessary. The right to freedom of speech and assembly is an American heritage, guaranteed by the Federal Constitution and upheld through thousands of decisions over the years."

Service was stopped to nearly 30,000 manually-operated telephone subscribers in New Orleans, where 3000 CWA members—operators and other personnel—threw up picket lines at 20 Southern Bell buildings.

The dispute arose from the lockout of four union members.

"Until agreement is reached on those cases, the picketing will continue and the employes will not return to their jobs," said Pres. David Finn of CWA Local 3410.

Western Electric workers in New Orleans continued picketing the main office and the warehouse of Southern Bell despite an injunction.

Court orders also failed to halt picketing in five West Virginia communities, Fairmont, Clarksburg, Grafton, Morgantown and Philippi.

That dispute arose over the firing of an operator at the Morgantown exchange and poor working conditions there.

With the aid of the CIO Steelworkers and miners' union members, CWA pickets completely closed down the Fairmont exchange.

The Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. filed a $700,000 damage suit against the union in West Virginia, charging CWA with "unlawfully violent and unreasonable activity." It also threatened to file a unfair labor practices charge with the National Labor Relations Board.

Getting Bigger

The American Telephone & Telegraph Co., the world's largest corporate enterprise, did better in net profits in 1951 than in 1950.

Net of AT&T for the 12 months ended Mar. 31 was $333 million against $303 million the year before. Net for the quarter ended Mar. 31 was $87 million against $80 million the same period in 1951. (LPA)

Job Guarantee For U.S. Seamen Urged By CIO Group

THE CIO Maritime Committee wants a law to require American ships to carry a percentage of U. S. citizens as crewmen at all times.

Hoyt S. Haddock, executive secretary, has proposed such an amendment to a bill being studied by the Senate merchant marine subcommittee.

Under present law, a shipping company can hire any number of foreign nationals after a ship's articles expire in a foreign port. One firm paid off 43 Americans at an Italian port and replaced them with Italians at wages one-third those paid the previous crewmen. (LPA)

THE THREE MEN (seated) were fired for honoring a picket line, but got their jobs back when all Atlanta CWA locals at Southern Bell struck.

U. S. Plan Rejected—

NAM Stymies Joint Civil Defense Effort

THE ANTI-LABOR policies of the National Association of Manufacturers and the U. S. Chamber of Commerce have been injected into the Federal Civil Defense picture.

The two organizations recently turned down a bid from Millard Caldwell, Civil Defense Administrator, for participation in a joint labor-management committee on plant protection. The CIO, AFL and railroad brotherhoods had wholeheartedly endorsed the plan at a Washington D. C., meeting.

In outlining the functions of the proposed committee, Caldwell pointed out that a labor-management committee operating at the top national level would have the effect of encouraging labor-management cooperation in civil defense activities in the plants themselves.

Since the big problem is to motivate people to take an active part in civil defense, he said if a national labor-management committee were set up, it would serve as an excellent example to be followed at the industrial level.

The NAM and C. of C. representatives, however, wanted no part of such an arrangement. Their argument was that management has its own organizations and its own channels of communication and needs no help from labor to carry out the nation's civil defense program.

James M. Brewbaker, an NAM staff member, and Harry Haas, assistant industrial relations manager of the Union Carbide & Carbon Co., New York, led the attack on Caldwell's proposal.

BREWBAKER said that in his opinion, "some industries would be much less responsive to civil defense suggestions coming from a Labor-Management Committee than if they were to come from a management source."

Don Mewhinney, another NAM representative, backed Brewbaker's views and added that "this would be especially true in unorganized plants."

Haas declared flatly that after a "careful canvass" of the situation, he had decided that a joint Labor-Management group "would not work."

Beyond this, Haas said, he did not think the way to achieve civil defense preparedness was to "spark plug" any one "stratum" in a community. He said that the community approach might be "functionalized"—that management might be asked to use its existing vehicles and the same for labor. "However, I do not think this should, or could, be done on a joint basis," he added.

Another industry representative, Rear Admiral Fred Bell, vice president of McCormick & Co., Baltimore, Md., agreed with Haas that the "funtional" approach to the problem was the only one.

"BUT," he said, "I don't see any more point in bringing labor and management together in a joint effort than in bringing religion and medicine together in the same way."

A. P. Alfino, of the C. of C. Labor Relations Dept., declared that adequate civil defense "cannot be achieved through labor, it cannot be achieved through management, and it cannot be achieved through joint efforts of labor and management."

Speaking for the CIO in support of Caldwell's proposals, Charles Ferguson, assistant director of the Community Services Committee, warned that while labor was doing a job in civil defense, "industry is not doing its part."

"We in labor are anxious that the job should be done for our own protection," he said.

"We are not concerned about usurping management's prerogatives in order to get civil defense. But there are many questions that can be answered only on a joint basis. Thus if a plant is hit, there will be a great need for first aid. But what is management doing about this at the present time?"

It's An Election Year—So Free Mail Barrage Of House Climbs 400%

WHILE congressmen are screaming "economy," they are flooding the country with the greatest propaganda barrage in history—at the taxpayers' expense.

The House Folding Room, which handles members' mail, is sending out mail at a rate of 170,000 pieces a day, according to a special House Administration subcommittee.

Compared to last year, the rate has almost quadrupled. But then this is an election year.

This propaganda is costing the taxpayers $20,000 a month just for folding such mail and putting it into the envelopes. And most of it is sent postage free under the congressional "franking" privilege.

The folding room is three weeks behind in its job. That causes the congressmen to bicker over who gets served first and to accuse one another of "monopolizing" the free service.

Among the biggest users of the tax-paid service last year were Reps. Gwinn (R. N. Y.), Bender (R. O.) and Wood (R. Ida.) Gwinn is prominent in the Committee for Constitutional Government, which cries loudly for economy.

That's not the only way the congressmen are wasting the taxpayers' money. There also is the cost of investigations, some of them overlapping.

"We have been too indiscriminate in authorizing practically any kind of investigation a congressman dreams up," said Chairman Stanley (D. Va.), of the House Administration Committee, which has jurisdiction over alloting money to other committees.

The 82nd Congress already has smashed all records for investigations. During the last 15 months, Senate and House committees have been authorized to spend an estimated $5 million for investigations. Requests are pending for an additional million dollars for investigations.

CIO Unveils TV Film Series In New Venture For Labor

THE CIO took the first pioneering steps last week in a field new to national labor organizations—the showing of television films produced for programming on a countrywide basis.

The step was taken in Washington when the first of a series of 13 such films on "Issues of the Day" was broadcast by WMAL-TV. The remainder of the series will be broadcast on successive Friday nights at 10:30 p. m., under the sponsorship of the National CIO.

The films were prepared especially for television use as a joint venture of the CIO and the CIO Political Action Committee.

The series is being made available to local CIO groups throughout the country for sponsorship on stations in the industrial communities where CIO members work and live.

The films are designed to explain to the general public the attitudes of organized labor on a variety of current issues, including wages, prices, unemployment, health, social security, housing and civil rights.

The premier Washington showing dealt with unemployment caused by defense mobilization policies. The quarter-hour film depicts the effects of unemployment on a typical industrial community, examines the causes of "unemployment in the midst of prosperity," and contains an interview with Sen. Moody (D. Mich.), author of the Moody-Dingell bill to provide additional compensation to workers hit by "defense unemployment."

Commenting on the CIO's television program, CIO Pres. Philip Murray declared:

"We all know that television is becoming an increasingly important factor on the American scene. The new CIO-TV series has been carefully prepared to achieve a constructive, educational program . . . In my opinion, it is very important that these 'issues of the day' be presented to the American public."

Union Shop In Aircraft Recommend

THE WAGE Stabilization Board last week recommended that two major aircraft companies negotiate union shop agreements with two unions representing 26,000 workers.

Passed over the usual dissent of industry members, the board's ruling effects 10,000 CIO Auto Workers at the Long Beach, Cal., plant of the Douglas Aircraft Corp. and 16,000 members of the AFL Machinists at the Boeing Aircraft Co., Wichita, Kan.

Public and union WSB members joined in the recommendations but left the final form of the clause to bargaining between the individaul companies and unions. All other issues in the two disputes had been settled previously on the basis of the board's suggestions.

'The Real Threat Is Steel Firms' Strike On Prices'

NOT ALL the editorial writers are blasting President Truman and the CIO Steelworkers.

Strong support for Truman's seizure of the steel industry and for the right of the Wage Stabilization Board to make the recommendations it did has come from the News-Digest, a chain of daily newspapers published by the AFL Typographical Union.

"The crisis," said Chief Editorial Writer Willard Shelton, "was a threatened 'strike' by the steel companies for higher prices than the government's stabilization agencies were willing to pay. It was a threatened 'strike' by the companies against the procedures and structures of the WSB.

"There is an ironic flavor to the outcries that beat against the President for 'seizing' the steel industry.

"A Congress with an appropriate and informed concern for the general welfare would long ago have enacted a law specifically authorizing seizures of industry in time of emergency, plus sequestration of profits, so that companies would be under the same economic pressure to settle disputes that unions are subject to when they are bound . . . not to strike. In the failure of Congress to enact such a law, Mr. Truman did the best he could."

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

THE STEEL DISPUTE continues. The steel barons continue to mouth vicious, factless propaganda, and are using every means at their command to distort the issue. True to form, GOP Presidental Candidate Robert Taft supports the steel industry, evidently without care to review the facts—industry calls the tune and Taft dances.

Industry is demanding price increases amounting to $12 a ton. According to Price Stabilizer Ellis Arnall, these would boost the cost of living by 5% and add $300 a year to the average family's expenses. Mr. Arnall stated further that after granting the industry the $3 per ton due it under the Capehart amendment, the added cost to the industry from the higher wages recommended by the WSB would be only $3.

This would mean a reduction in earnings of $225 million at 1951 production rates, not allowing for the savings from higher productivity. Subtracting this reduction, the industry would still earn a return of 30% on the stockholders' investment. This is far higher than the average return of 18.5% during the years 1947-49.

Of course, there are no statements forthcoming from Taft and associates and the enemies of Labor on these basic facts. Chairman Feinsinger of the Wage Stabilization Board has time and again pointed out the inconsistencies of the position of the former mobilization chief, Charles E. Wilson. No amount of high-pressured propaganda can refute the right and wrong in this dispute.

MONDAY of last week, the writer met in Chicago with Vice-Pres. Jack Livingston of the Auto Workers and Pres. James Carey of the CIO Electrical Workers, at which time we set up a mid-west organizing committee. CIO Reg. Dir. Frank Cronin was placed in charge of the committee with Larry Carlstrom and Robert Clinkersmith as his assistants.

We all must remember that the primary purpose of the CIO is to continue organizing and bring the workers under the banner of the CIO. We must all pitch in and work hard for a strong CIO.

Dir. of Orgn. Robert Edwards of the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers, reports the following representation election victories: Flexible Barrier, New York City, UGC&CW-CIO 30, no union 8; Meadowlands Products, Inc., Chicago, Ill., UGC&CW-CIO 19, no union 8.

In Camden, N. J., cafeteria workers at the Radio Corp. of America plant voted 51 for IUE-CIO and 1 for no union. They had disaffiliated from the UE.

'Brutal' French Rule In Tunisia Condemned By CIO, AFL Leaders

FRENCH COLONIAL policies in Tunisia — described as "totalitarian" and "brutal" — came under attack last week from leaders of both the CIO and AFL.

A joint statement—one of the first in recent months from the two U.S. labor groups — voiced support of the Tunisian trade union movement and the people of Tunisia "in their struggle against the totalitarian colonialism now rampant in this French protectorate." It added:

"The justice of their cause is indisputable among men who believe in freedom, and who adhere to the principle that every people has a right to determine its own future."

Violence has been common in the French North African colony for more than three months. Several hundred have been killed or wounded and more than 12,000 Tunisians placed in concentration camps.

The CIO-AFL statement was issued at a Washington luncheon in honor of Farhat Hached, secretary general of the Tunisian Federation of Workers. That group, the largest independent union organization in North Africa, is affiliated with the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

The luncheon was attended by CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey; Pres. Joseph Beirne of the Communications Workers; AFL Pres. William Green; Sec.-Treas. George Meany and other officials of the two organizations.

The joint statement severely criticized the U.S. State Dept.

and the U.S. Delegation to the United Nations for ducking the Tunisian issue when Asian nations presented it to the UN Security Council. The U.S. delegation abstained from voting, and thus helped keep the matter off the Security Council agenda.

"In so doing," the CIO-AFL statement declared, "the U.S. broke with its traditional position, which has always favored including all items submitted for the Security Council agenda—even when those proposed items were attacks on America."

The statement charged that the U.S. position had not been neutrality "but, in reality, an implied endorsement of the undemocratic practices of the French colonial government in Tunisia."

It urged the American government to "reverse its position and use its influence to have the French government grant the Tunisian people genuine home rule, so that they can be mobilized for the struggle against Communist aggression and despotism."

Carey, in a talk to the luncheon guests, pointed out that "as long as there are Tunisians in the world, as long as there are men and women who are denied freedom and self-government, as long as free trade unions are limited and oppressed—as long as these things exist, our task is unfinished."

Nothing symbolizes the police state so much as the institution of concentration camps, Carey noted—"yet today we find the creation of concentration camps in Tunisia. We find union leaders arrested — the leaders of democratic, non-Communist unions."

HACHED, the Tunisian union leader who is making a brief trip to this country, said that more than 10,000 workers in his home territory have been suspended from their jobs, and hundreds jailed, since Apr. 1.

"This is how the French authorities claim 'to re-establish the peace' in Tunisia and to establish 'reforms'," Hached said bitterly.

"Our movement is neither Communist, anti-foreign, anti-western, fanatic or feudal. It is a movement of progress and emancipation. Our people have reached a high level of civilization, and they will not live under domination and in servitude."

Ohio Students Learn About Taft 'Fix'

SEN. TAFT'S supporters have forced the Univ. of Cincinnati to call off a mock political convention planned by the students' YMCA and YWCA because they wouldn't "fix" it so the Ohio Senator would win the presidential nomination.

The story was told by William Smart, retiring president of the campus YM.

He said that an unidentified politician, whom the students approached for advice "asked in all seriousness if our convention could be 'fixed' so that Sen. Taft would win our presidential nomination."

"The politician gave us this reasoning," Smart continued. "If Sen. Taft could not win the students of his own home town at a crucial time before the real convention, it might be dynamite to the well-oiled political machinery set up for him to win the Republican presidential nomination.

"He said he wanted to talk to Benjamin Tate, campaign manager for Sen. Taft and a member of the Univ. of Cincinnati board of directors, to see what could be done. This person who had wanted to fix our convention really fixed it."

TWUA Reveals High Cost Of Maintaining Union

THE CIO Textile Workers in a financial report last week revealed the high cost of union operation in the face of strikes, employer resistance and mass unemployment.

The report, covering expenses and income for the past two years, will be presented to the TWUA executive council in Cleveland, O. this week. It will also be available to the 2000 delegates attending the union's seventh biennial convention beginning Apr. 28.

Covering financial operations since the 1950 convention, the report shows that for the first time in the union's 13-year history, expenditures exceeded income.

TWUA Sec.-Treas. William Pollock said the $426,422 deficit was due to "numerous and expensive strikes, reduced dues resulting from mass unemployment, heightened employer resistance to new organizations and increased costs for all TWUA operations."

Rail Rate Hike Gets ICC Okeh

All aboard the Inflation Express!

The Interstate Commerce Commission has authorized new railroad freight rate increases of 7 to 8% which cost the nation an estimated $678 million a year.

The ICC actually approved a 15% increase over rates prevailing last August, but that includes 9% already granted eastern carriers and 6% elsewhere.

The commission took note of the fact that this was the 12th general rate increase granted since World War II.

CIO Blocks Rent-Gouging In Atomic Center

By MILTON PLUMB

PLANS FOR exorbitant rent-gouging of workers in America's fastest growing industry — atomic energy—have been given a set-back as the result of action by the CIO Housing Committee.

Nipped is a plan to charge $82.50 a month for trailer homes at the huge Savannah River (S. C.) bomb plant. The fantastic rent had been agreed to by the Atomic Energy Commission in a contract with the E. I. du Pont de Nemours Corp.

Protests by Pres. Martin Wagner of the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers and Sec. Leo Goodman of the CIO Housing Committee to Rent Stabilizer Tighe E. Woods quickly brought an order to roll back the rent on several thousand trailers at the new plant to $60 monthly.

The AEC is now fighting the rollback order, contending that it has already committed the government to accept the higher rent through its contract with the du Pont corporation.

But, Woods is standing firm.

CIO has given him good reason to do so. It pointed out that, in other areas, the rent for trailers ranges from $34 to $42 monthly.

Behind the curent fight is a smouldering housing scandal. It revolves around growing use of trailers for critical defense housing—a move encouraged by the real estate lobby as a means of short-circuiting home building under the Defense Housing Act.

Congress appropriated $25 million for defense housing in November of last year. Most of it is being used for trailers.

CIO opposed the current act, on the grounds that it would not provide housing at rents workers can afford at the time and places needed. It also has pointed out that speculators in land around defense establishments have made hundreds of thousands of dollars.

THERE were 41,000 trailers sold in the first nine months of last year, according to the Trailer Coach Manufacturers Association. Defense workers bought 68% of this total and armed forces personnel bought 25%.

One American in 100 now lives in a trailer, say the editors of the building industry's own "Magazine of Building."

Many communities have called for a ban on such camps. According to leading sociologists and housing experts, they breed slums, are unsanitary, and don't pay their fair share of taxes.

Despite this, the Public Housing Administration to date has awarded contracts to nine trailer manufacturers for a total of 3444 family trailers.

The AEC, likewise, has set aside space at its facilities for trailer towns.

There are 5000 trailer units in the AEC camp in Hanford Wash., where some workers have lived for seven months because no other housing was available. Similar space has been assigned by ACE at Savannah River, Paducah, Ky.; Dena. Ida.

Army camps also have encouraged the growth of trailer towns.

Had AEC succeeded in boosting trailer rents to $82.50 at Savannah River, the lid would have been off on camps of this sort throughout the country.

In its contract with du Pont the AEC guaranteed 90% occupancy of 4000 trailers at the $82.50 rate.

Under the rent rollback, AEC will have to pay the corporation $81,000 a week to make up its guarantee throughout the life of the four-year contract.

What this means is that AEC's readiness to give du Pont a phony occupancy guarantee at the scandalously excessive rental rate will cost taxpayers more than $5 million, even if full occupancy is obtained at the high $60 monthly rate.

On other housing fronts, rent ceilings were established last week in the 100th critical defense area. The Office of Rent Stabilization gave its 100th cercification to Laredo, Tex., including the area within a 10-mile radius of the Laredo Air Force Base.

THE drive of Local 601 of the CIO Electrical Workers to have the Pittsburgh metropolitan area declared a critical housing area gained momentum last week with the filing of petition with the rent stabilizer.

The Lycoming County CIO Industrial Union Council scored a complete victory against the real estate lobby in Williamsport, Pa. The city council agreed to continue rent controls indefinitely, after the lobby testified that it was abandoning its effort to decontrol rents.

The realtors told the Williamsport Council that they realized that decontrol would immediately bring the "critical area" designation which had been requested by the CIO.

Truman Asks Civil Service In 22,000 Jobs

CIVIL SERVICE coverage will be extended to 22,000 jobs long regarded as prize political plums if Congress approves a new reorganization proposal by President Truman.

First, second and third class postmaster positions, U. S. marshals and customs collectors would be affected. These are perhaps the most important posts still subject to the "spoils"

In announcing the plan, Truman criticized the present system of appointment by the President subject to Senate confirmation.

"This procedure injects a hybrid mixture of political and merit considerations into appointments to offices which should be in the career service," he said.

Under the proposal, postmaster positions would be put under civil service as they become vacant during the next several years.

In the recent book, "Mr. President," Truman is quoted as saying that this reorganization proposal would bring "a howl from the patronage boys all the way down the street."

It has. GOP Congressmen whose tongues have been hanging out in hopes for a crack at the jobs next year call it "untimely."

Pension Hike Urged In New Humphrey Bill

OLD-AGE and survivors insurance benefits would be increased 12½% under a bill filed last week by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.).

Calling also for a basic re-examination of the entire program, including its coverage as well as benefits, Humphrey said that his present bill was intended only to meet an immediate need without waiting for the review of the entire system.

Humphrey stressed the urgency for immediate action by citing a recent survey showing that 52% of aged retired couples have either no other income or less than $75 a year, and that for aged widows and for single men the proportion is 70%.

The increases are needed "to take account of recent rises in general price and wage levels," he said.

"If insurance benefit payments remain unchanged in a period of rising prices, it means that old people, widows and orphans will be forced to bear more than a fair share of the costs of defense and inflation," Humphrey pointed out.

"The result will be that additional numbers will have to apply to Federal-State programs of public assistance to make up deficiencies in their income."

No increase in contributions would be necessary to finance the higher benefits, Humphrey said, because when the level of employment income rises, payments to the old-age and survivors insurance system also increase.

The 12½% increase would apply for present and future beneficiaries whose benefits are computed on the basis of wages beginning in 1937.

The limit on total family benefits will be raised from $150 to $168.75, subject to the proviso that they cannot exceed 80% of the average monthly wage.

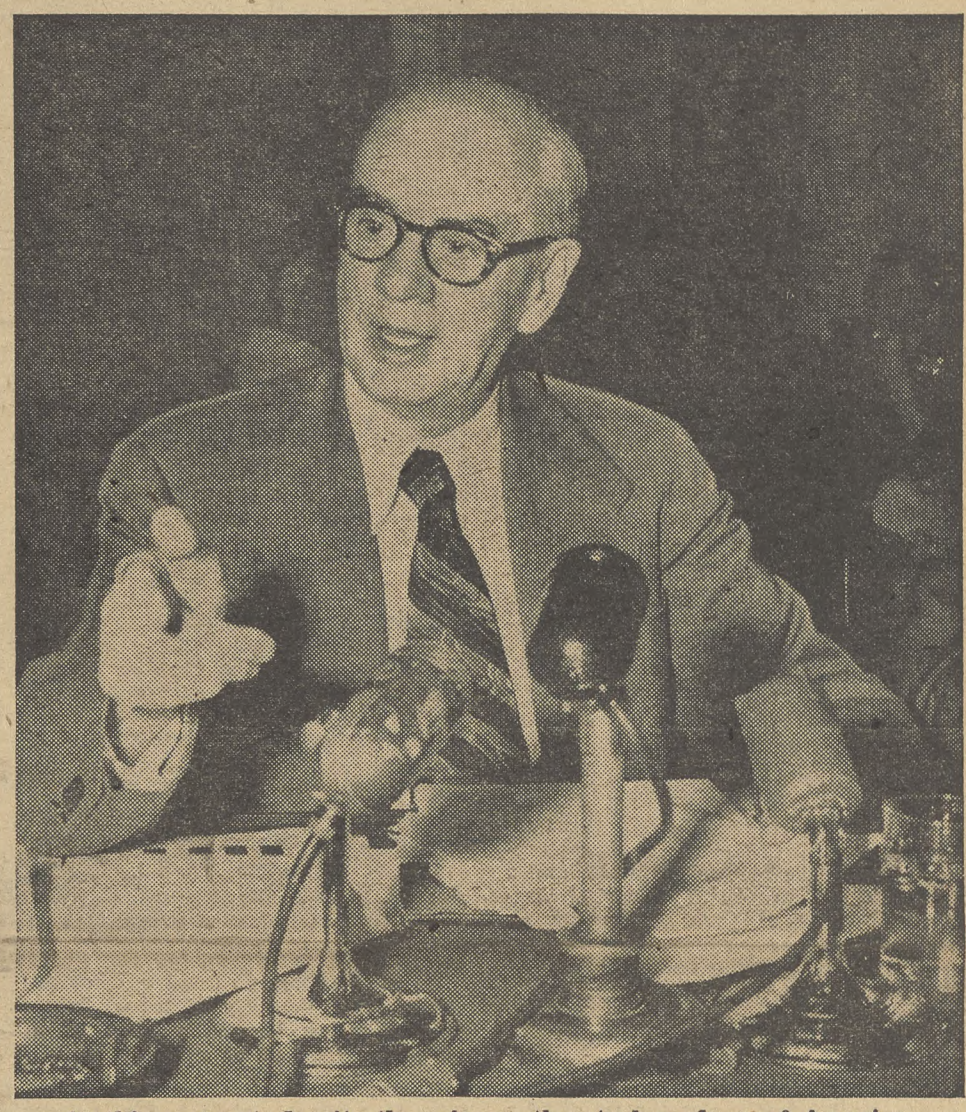
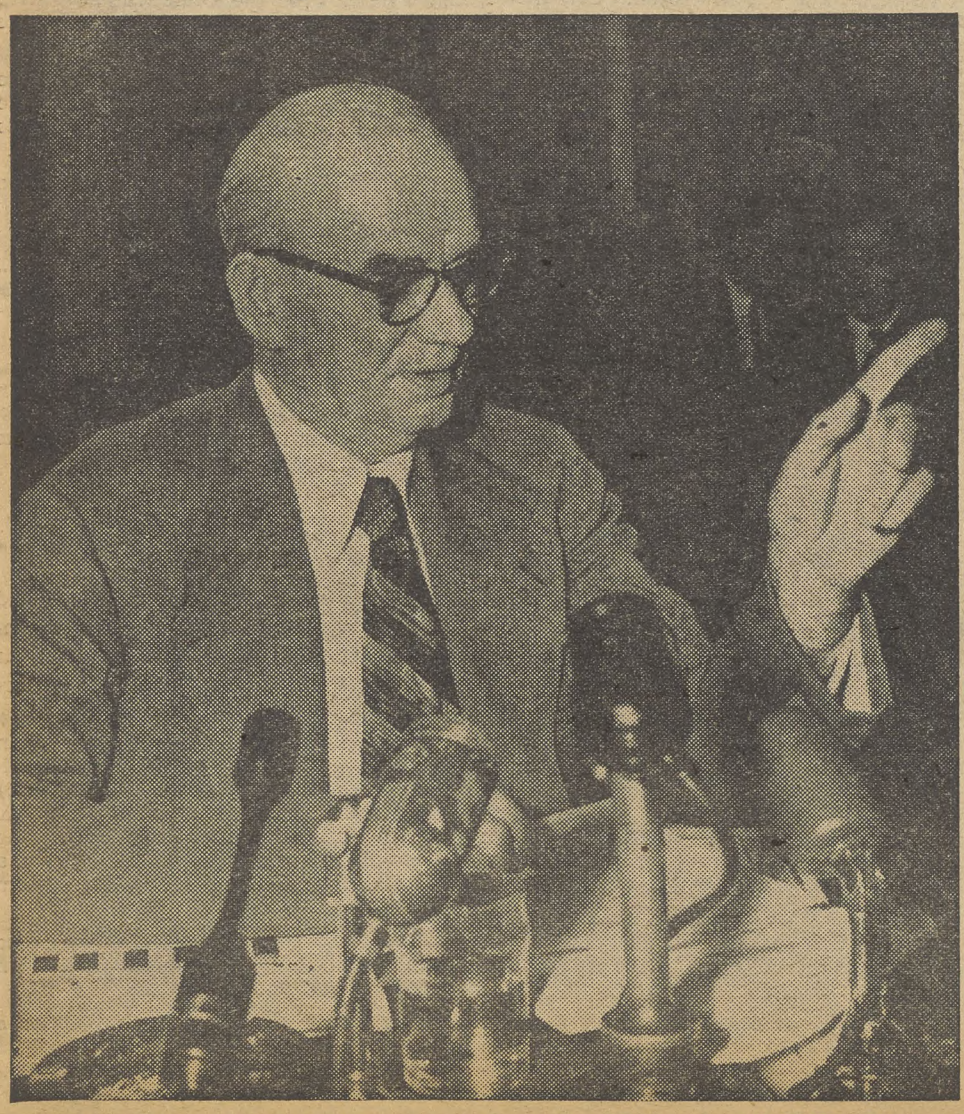
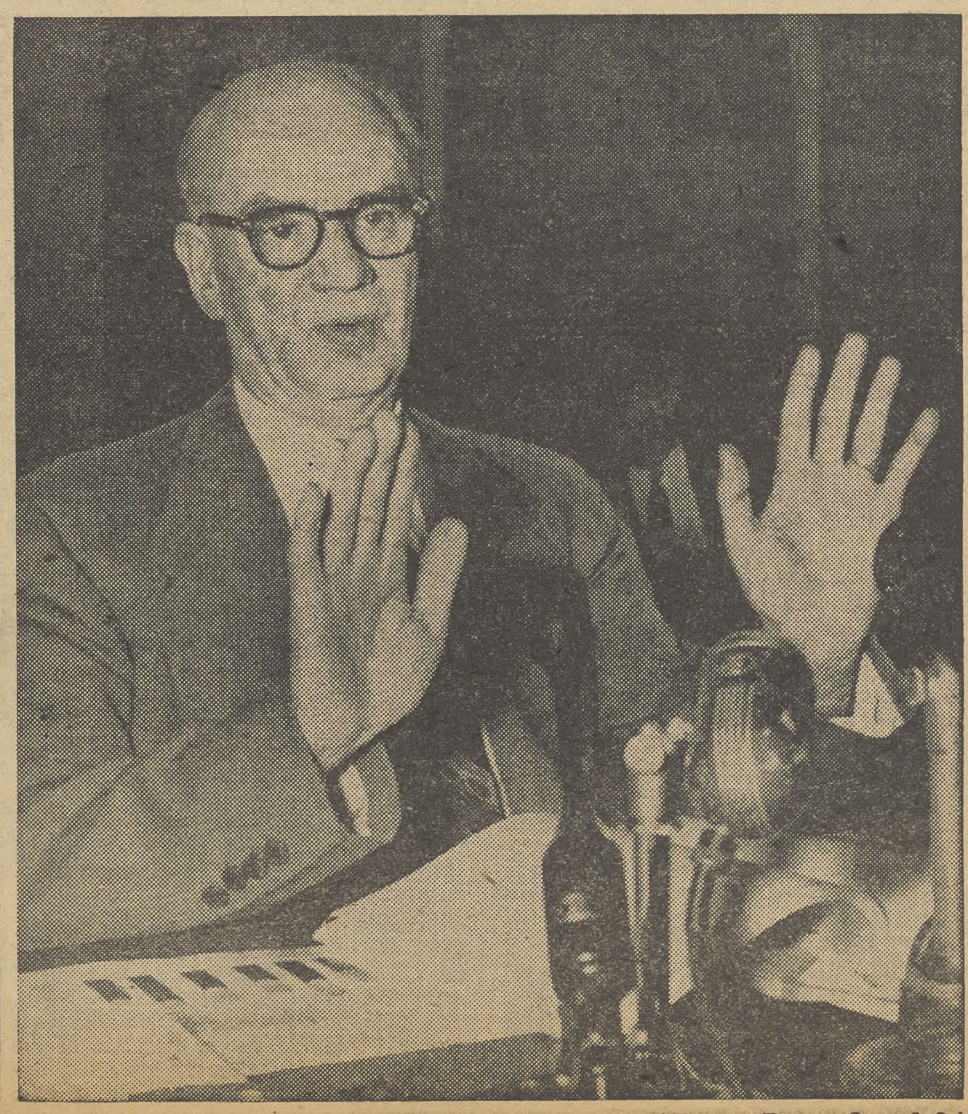
"Do not let the industry's cries of anguish distract you from one fact . . .



. . . At this moment, despite the seizure, the steel workers of America . . .



. . . Are still receiving 1950 wages and paying 1952 prices," Philip Murray tells Senate Labor Committee. (Steel stories and pictures, Pages 2 and 3.)



Steel Moguls Forced Crisis To Get Price Hike—Murray

By GERVASE N. LOVE

THE STORY behind the steel crisis was spelled out in full detail to the Senate Labor Committee last week by Pres. Philip Murray of the CIO Steelworkers.

For four hours, in the old Supreme Court chamber in the Capitol, the USA-CIO chieftain alternately read from 40-odd pages of testimony and answered a steady flow of questions that came from members of the committee, headed by Sen. Murray (D. Mont.).

He showed that from the beginning, the steel operators were concerned only with pushing the country into a crisis "which they could then use to force the government to knuckle under to their price demands," and charged it with refusal to bargain.

He reminded the committee that four times in 10 years the industry has forced contract disputes with the union before government agencies, and that twice, in 1946 and 1949, the union had to strike to make the industry put the agencies' recommendations into effect.

He staunchly defended the Wage Stabilization Board's authority to act in the current dispute, at the same time emphasizing the union's acceptance of its recommendations in the national interest despite its disappointment in some of them.

He bitterly denounced John A. Stephens, vice president of U. S. Steel, for telling a "diabolical, reprehensible, dirty lie." Stephens, who had appeared before the committee the previous day, testified straight time earnings in the industry average $1.90 an hour.

Murray produced a copy of a letter signed by Stephens and dated Nov. 2, 1951, advising the USA-CIO that the average for all U. S. Steel employes represented by the union was $1.781, and a later letter showing it to be $1.804. Similar letters from other firms showed average straight-time earnings rates ranging from $1.72 to $1.78 an hour.

Lies Denounced

He denounced as lies politically inspired charges that President Truman's seizure of the steel industry was the result of a deal with him personally.

"I, the union and any of its agents," he declared, "have never been involved in any dirty, underhanded deal with ANY representative of government, with any representative of business, or with anyone else.

"I never discussed this dispute with the President. During the hearings, I did not importune any public member of the Wage Stabilization Board to throw his weight our way. These are the raw, damned, unadulterated facts. . . . I challenge the steel industry, or anyone else who may read this testimony, to show that they ever had a 'deal' with the president of the United Steelworkers of America."

Murray used strong language in discussing the industry's refusal to bargain and its plot to club a price increase out of stabilization authorities.

"The conduct of the steel industry in the current dispute is an attack on the system of free and constructive collective bargaining," he said. "There has been no genuine collective bargaining in this dispute because of the cynically deliberate and premeditated effort of the management of the steel companies to prevent such bargaining . . .

"In spite of our belief (in collective bargaining) and against our desires, the United Steelworkers of America again finds itself enmeshed in board proceedings, government intervention and the general confusion arising out of the failure of the industry to engage in free collective bargaining.

"Why? For one simple reason. Because the leaders of the steel industry sought to create a crisis, which they could utilize as a smokescreen for an all-out effort to dictate to the government of the United States the terms and conditions upon which they would supply the steel which the nation so sorely needs for its defense.

"Let me be quite plain. I charge that the steel industry deliberately refused to bargain with our union. I charge that the steel industry refused even to offer the minimum benefits which were certainly due the steel workers on any possible interpretation of our stabilization regulations because they did not want a solution to be reached in free collective bargaining.

"They wanted a Wage Stabilization Board case . . .

"They sought, in short, to use the legitimate needs of the steel workers, their wives and their children, as a cat's paw to perpetuate a scandalous extortion on the American people."

Murray described how union negotiators were left cooling their heels in New York while Benjamin Fairless, U. S. Steel president, as spokesman for the industry was vainly trying to pry a price increase out of Economic Stabilizer Roger L. Putnam and Price Stabilizer Ellis Arnall.

"In other words," asked Sen. Pastore (D. R.I.), "there was no bargaining between the industry and the union, but between the industry and the Office of Price Stabilization for a price increase?"

"That is correct, Senator," Murray replied. "Mr. Stephens told me that 'we can't hope to meet with your committee until we get the price situation straightened out.'"

"That's like trying to get the cart before the horse," Pastore observed. "Normally collective bargaining agreements are reached and then submitted."

Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) quoted Stephens, in his testimony of the previous day, as saying that only twice "was there any talk about prices," and neither time during negotiations.

Murray discussed the industry's fantastic profits in some detail. Committee members, who frequently interjected their own comments or statements, seemed particularly interested in the fact that in 1951, after a 16c an hour wage increase had been put into effect and taxes were boosted, net profit was $850 million, or $126 million more than the average for the three previous years.

Murray reminded the committee that had the President invoked the Taft-Hartley Act—for which the industry is clamoring—a strike merely would have been postponed for 80 days. The union voluntarily had postponed it for 99 days at the time the President seized the industry on Apr. 8, he recalled.

"No reasonable or fair-minded person acquainted with the facts," the USA-CIO president said, "can urge that on top of our own imposed 99-day injunction an additional Taft-Hartley 80-day injunction should have been asked for. Surely, if this were done, no union hereafter would ever voluntarily comply with a presidential request to delay its strike."

Sen. Morse (R. Ore.), in a long series of questions, showed that if everything possible had been done under T-H, there still would have been a steel strike.

"That is absolutely certain," he concluded, "and we'd have to find some other measures to keep the mills going and continue the production of steel."

Murray ridiculed the steel industry's claim of "principle" in its opposition to the union shop.

"I want to brand this as a plain and unadulterated fraud," he said. "It is designed to provide a smoke screen for the industry's maneuverings in the wage and price field. I assure you, gentlemen, that if the industry had been successful in blackmailing the government into producing a price increase satisfactory to the steel companies, we would have no difficulty in reaching agreement on the union shop issue."

The companies themselves, he maintained, have supplied the proof.

"Mr. Feinsinger (Nathan P. Feinsinger, WSB chairman) has already told you that the basic steel companies have negotiated union shop contracts with other unions," Murray continued.

Cites Union Shops

"These very companies have agreed to give the union shop to the railroad unions, to the maritime unions, and to a host of AFL unions, in construction, primarily. One might conclude that the companies in the steel industry objected in principle only to signing a union shop agreement with the United Steelworkers of America.

"But even that conclusion is invalid. At least 27 basic iron and steel companies . . . have signed union shop agreements with this union prior to this dispute. These 27 companies do not include the largest steel producers.

"Perhaps, then, it would appear that it is these so-called leaders of the industry who are wedded to the principle of signing union shop agreements only with unions other than the United Steelworkers of America. But even this would not be a valid conclusion."

Murray then showed the committee what he was talking about: photostatic copies of straight union shop contracts signed by:

Bethlehem Steel on Nov. 1, 1951, two contracts for the Conemaugh & Black Lick Railroad, "part of Bethlehem's gigantic steel operation at Johnstown, Pa. . . . You might call it a captive railroad."

Jones & Laughlin on Oct. 10, 1951, covering the company's railroad subsidiary.

U. S. Steel on July 5, 1951, three contracts covering employes of the Union Railroad Co., which is owned by U. S. Steel and serves the corporation's plants in the Pittsburgh area.

"BLACKMAIL" of steel industry was assailed by CIO Steelworkers Pres. Philip Murray. He told Senate Labor Committee that management tried to force a steel crisis so they could make the government "knuckle under to their price demands." Murray was flanked at hearing by Frank Hoffman, USA-CIO legislative representative (left), and Arthur J. Goldberg, union general counsel.

Perpetual Motion Injunctions Asked

John A. Stephens, vice president and chief negotiator for U. S. Steel, last week asked the Senate Labor Committee to turn back time in its flight.

He urged Congress to pass a law providing for practically perpetual injunctions against strikes which would "harm" the national health or safety.

He made no mention of any legislation that would protect the national health or safety from strikes by management, such as led to the steel industry crisis and President Truman's seizure of the mills.

CIO Counsel Protests 'Biased' Attack On WSB

THE AMERICAN Arbitration Association was accused last week of "biased and unfair" criticism of the public members of the Wage Stabilization Board.

The AAA is a private and supposedly non-partisan organization, to which many unions and companies have turned for the selection of impartial arbitrators and referees in the field of labor-management relations.

Cause of a sharp letter from Arthur J. Goldberg, general counsel for CIO and the United Steelworkers, was a lead article in the AAA's Arbitration News. The publication claimed—without basis of fact—that the public members of the WSB were "forced to grant a larger wage increase and other benefits (to the steel workers) than they felt were 'just and equitable . . .'"

In his letter to Pres. Arthur Croft of the Arbitration Association, Goldberg said:

"I am sure that you and the officers of the AAA certainly are in agreement with me that it is not a function of the association to take sides in the steel dispute, and that its usefulness as an impartial arbitration agency would be considerably impaired if it were to do so.

"Yet this is precisely what the Association is placed in the position of doing by the editorial in the Arbitration News . . .

"I would be less than frank if I did not indicate to you and through you to the other officers and staff of the Association that this biased and unfair editorial has caused us great concern, and has raised in our minds a very substantial question as to the future relations between the CIO and the American Arbitration Association."

The AAA's comments were carried in an article challenging the idea of tri-partite (labor, management and public) arbitration. The WSB, of course, has no arbitration powers. Nevertheless, the AAA article suggested that "perhaps a re-examination of the tri-partite system would be in order."

The same type of suggestion has also come from many corporations and from congressional conservatives.

The entire article was phrased as a thinly-disguised attack on the structure of the WSB and on the WSB public members' vote in the steel case.

U.S. Decision Due On Steel Wages, Prices

By WILLIAM MILLIS

THE U. S. FLAG is still flying outside the nation's steel mills.

Inside, steel executives are conducting business-as-usual.

And the 650,000 CIO Steelworkers in the basic steel industry, as USA-CIO Pres. Philip Murray told the Senate Labor Committee last week, "are still receiving 1950 wages and paying 1952 prices."

That was the situation nearly three weeks after President Truman ordered government seizure of the steel industry. There were a multitude of developments—on wages, prices, in the courts, and in Congress—indicating that the coming week may bring a "break" in the steel deadlock.

These developments, in summary, were:

On wages, Sec. of Commerce Sawyer—the man in charge of the steel industry—may act by the middle of this week on placing steel wage increase recommendations of the Wage Stabilization Board into effect. Last week Sawyer asked Roger Putnam, economic stabilizer, to draft formal recommendations both on wages and steel price boosts.

On prices, the steel companies are going to get $3-a-ton under the Capehart amendment to the defense production act. That's entirely apart from the up-to-$12 boost the industry has demanded in the wage case—a demand bluntly labeled "blackmail" by the union.

In Congress, Dixiegop foes of labor were riding in a half-dozen directions. The House voted approval of the Allen resolution to "investigate" and hamstring the WSB. Some Republicans were trying to promote moves to impeach Truman. The Senate, by a narrow four-vote margin, defeated a Republican move to strip the administration of any funds for steel seizure operations. And three Senate committees—Labor, Banking, and Judiciary—were investigating.

Profits As Usual

Despite loudly-trumpeted steel industry claims of approaching bankruptcy, directors of Bethlehem Steel Corp. (the No. 2 producer) last week voted their usual quarterly dividend of a $1-per-share on common stock.

Injunction Sought

In the courts, Judge David A. Pine in Washington federal court heard the case of 10 big steel companies for a preliminary injunction wiping out the seizure rule. This is a continuance of the court action begun by steel management after Truman's seizure order on Apr. 8.

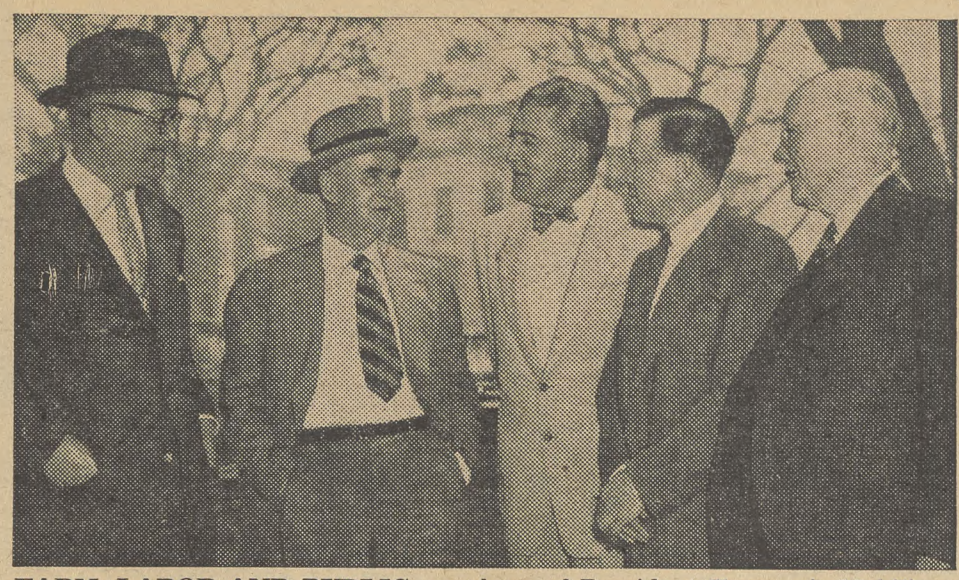
And at the White House, the President's National Advisory Board on Mobilization Policy met for two days to examine the steel dispute and, by a 12 to 1 vote, supported the WSB's recommendations and the seizure action.

The Advisory Board's report was a calm, factual statement sharply in contrast to the millions of heated words from steel company officials, congressmen and the press.

The board found that the WSB steel and contract recommendations "are within the established policies and regulations of the agency and do not provide any basis for the suggestion that a new pattern has been established or different policies adopted."

As to the steel industry's demands for over-the-ceiling price increases (which in fact would allow them to earn a profit out of wage increases), the President's board said "it seems only fair that any industry whose price structure would substantially affect the nation's economy should be required to justify publicly any request for a change in pricing standards."

Essentially, the steel wage situation has been deadlocked ever since last November, when bargaining began, over the amount of steel price increase the industry is going to hijack from the government.



FARM, LABOR AND PUBLIC members of President Truman's Mobilization Advisory Board chat outside White House before meeting on steel situation. From left: Paul Porter, former price administrator; Pres. Philip Murray of the CIO Steelworkers; Pres. James G. Patton of the National Farmers Union; Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers; and AFL Pres. William Green.

The industry, as Murray reminded the Senate Labor Committee, has tried to promote a critical situation "which they could use to force the government to knuckle under to their price demands?"

The question is "How much?"

Truman has said, in effect, none at all. In seizing the industry, he said "the steel industry has never been so profitable as it is today," that "if the steel companies absorbed every penny of the wage increase, they would still be making profits of $17 to $18 a ton."

Price Boost Expected

The first government step on steel prices last week was Putnam's order for the $3-a-ton Capehart amendment increase. That's based on past increases in steel production costs; not the union's present wage demands. The $3 increase order is expected early this week from Price Stabilizer Ellis Arnall.

The second step was Sawyer's request to Putnam to recommend wage charges and further price boosts that the government could order into effect. Speculation in the press was that this price increase might amount to $5 a ton, but Putnam reiterated his strong opposition to any increase above the $3 Capehart hike.

Putnam said he expects to complete his recommendations sometime this week. He side-stepped all questions on what wage increase he would recommend.

The recommendations of the WSB are for an immediate 12.5c hourly increase, 5c more in two later installments, six paid holidays, fringe benefits, and the union shop.

The union has made plain, Murray has said, "its expectation that the government, in the absence of collective bargaining, will impose on the industry the recommendations of the WSB."

The anti-labor bloc in Congress was continuing to act like bulls-in-a-China-shop.

Overwhelming House approval was voted for the industry-promoted Allen resolution for an inquisition of the WSB. The roll call vote was 255 to 88.

Goal of the resolution's sponsors is to strip the WSB of its disputes-settling powers.

House Democratic Leader McCormick called the vote an "attack on labor" while Rep. O'Toole (D. N.Y.) charged Republicans with "trying to intimidate by investigation."

Two moves to hamstring federal funds for the seizure operation came up in the Senate.

Hamstringing Moves

One was adopted, the other narrowly defeated, despite a warning by Truman against "following a course of negation." Paralyzing of government operations of the industry, Truman warned, might bring a steel shutdown which "would reduce the ability of our troops in Korea to defend themselves against attack."

At a press conference, the President reiterated that the steel seizure was dictated by the severe emergency facing the country and the necessity of all-out steel production. He brushed off GOP impeachment moves as political propositions.

Nevertheless, the Senate went ahead to add a rider to a $2.6 million appropriations bill, barring use of any of the funds to carry out the seizure. This was largely a slap-on-the-wrist, since no Commerce Dept. funds were included in the bill.

Vote on the rider was 44 to 31, with 33 Republicans and 11 Democrats voting "wrong" for the measure and 29 Democrats and two Republicans voting "right" against it.

Next day, Republican Sens. Ferguson (Mich.) and Knowland (Cal.) brought up a stiffer proposal denying all funds from past, present and future appropriations to the President for the seizure operations.

The vote came not on the proposal itself, but a preliminary parliamentary move to suspend the rules. The close outcome was 47-to-29, four short of the required two-thirds majority.

Likens HST To Hitler

Debate was marked by bitter exchanges between Knowland, who likened the President to Hitler, and Sen. Lehman (D. N.Y.), who challenged the Republicans to initiate impeachment proceedings.

"I challenge them to do so," Lehman said. "I doubt whether the House of Representatives would dare to take that action."

Lehman's prediction was in line with developments in the House, which would have to vote any impeachment move.

Two proposals were presented by arch-Republicans. One, by Rep. Hale (Me.) called for the House to investigate the possibility of impeachment proceedings. The other, by Rep. Bender (O.), would create a special House committee for such a purpose. It was side-tracked to the Judiciary Committee.

Sen. Taft (R. O.) appeared to be supporting the moves. He said the steel seizure is a "valid case for impeachment."

Democratic leaders called these various Republican maneuvers "ridiculous," and press reports said "nothing is likely to come" of the impeachment talk.

More likely are efforts by industry to write new anti-labor restrictions into the Taft-Hartley Act, but it was doubtful they would get out of committee.

For example, U. S. Steel Vice Pres. John A. Stephens proposed "no limit" anti-strike injunctions, instead of the present 80-day decrees, be added to T-H.

The Senate Banking Committee, headed by Sen. Maybank (D. S.C.), will take over from the Labor Committee on hearings this week. Meantime, it is stalling on extending the Defense Production Act.

Also getting into the act is a Senate Judiciary subcommittee. Last week Arthur J. Goldberg, USA-CIO general counsel, told the committee "it would not be proper" for him to testify on legality of the steel seizure while the issue is pending in the courts.

How Senators Voted On Steel Seizure Funds

The first vote came April 21, on a rider to a $2.6 million supplemental appropriations bill, barring use of any of its funds for operating the steel mills. This was adopted by a 44 to 31 vote, with 33 Republicans and 11 Democrats voting yes and 29 Democrats and two Republicans voting no.

On Apr. 22, the Senate refused to suspend its rules to vote on a flat ban on U.S. funds for steel seizure. The vote was 47 to 29, four short of the necessary two-thirds majority.

In this roll call, the first vote is on the rider, the second column on the rules suspension. In both cases, W stands for a yes or wrong vote, R for a no or right vote, X for paired wrong, Z for paired right, and A for absent.

A Bankrupt Industry?

The steel industry, through a big-scale advertising campaign, would like the public to believe that it will go bankrupt unless it gets a $12 a ton price increase.

The picture of the country's most basic industry in a state of approaching financial bankruptcy is—to use a kind phrase—straight hokum.

Steel isn't going to be financially bankrupted through acceptance of the Wage Stabilization Board's recommendations.

Steel executives know it. The steel workers know it. Harry Truman knows it.

But in other, non-financial ways, the steel industry is bankrupt right now. It is bankrupt mentally, bankrupt morally, bankrupt spiritually.

★ Was steel management smart to get into a situation where the President of the United States had no alternative but to seize its properties? Is steel management—which claims it resents government interference—smart to keep demanding an anti-union injunction, which is government interference of a vicious sort? Was steel management, which voices hatred of the WSB, smart to have made not a single offer to the union before the case was turned over to the WSB in January and to have made no acceptable offer even now?

An agreement through collective bargaining could have been reached; they have been in other big industries. Steel executives got caught in the middle of a badly-planned strategem—and they look mentally bankrupt as a result.

★ Do the steel companies have a moral case, against the union or the government? Their ads claim the industry is against the principle of the union shop. But last July, last October, last November, three of the biggest steel firms signed union shop contracts with the Steelworkers, covering company-owned railroads organized by the steel union.

How explain it? Either the companies have no principles, which is a valid guess; or they don't live up to their principles, which is an equally valid guess. In either case, the companies would be hard put to prove that they are not morally bankrupt.

★ Do the companies have a philosophy other than profit-grabbing?

These companies, which decry federal interference, had no objection to federal interference in the form of tax amortization certificates amounting to about two billion dollars. What philosophy here?

Pres. Ben Fairless of U. S. Steel claims he loves collective bargaining, even more than the union. (His company made no offer before the case went to the Wage Board.) On the other hand, Vice-Pres. John Stephens of U. S. Steel loves collective bargaining so much he calls for permanent injunctions against the union, and suggests the company would do better for the workers if they gave up the protection of their union. Which U. S. Steel philosophy does U. S. Steel really believe in?

There's no rhyme nor reason to the steel industry's position, as you sort out the facts from fake statistics.

The claims are propaganda claims—the ravings of a set of high-paid executives who squall when everything doesn't go their way, the hysteria of a group that is bankrupt, mentally, spiritually, morally.

'His Master's Voice'

Steel Plays The Fiddle

OLD ABE LINCOLN once said: "God must have loved the common people, he made so many of them."

That can be revised and brought up to date for the steel situation:

"The steel companies must love the nation's press, its editors, publishers and commentators. There are so many of them—and they all think, and write, alike."

For the "strike" of steel management against the U. S. government, the industry's refusal to abide by the Wage Stabilization Board's proposals, and the resultant federal seizure of the industry, have brought a tremendous outpouring of steel industry propaganda.

It's slick-as-varnish, and it's costing hundreds of thousands of dollars.

The steel companies' campaign is taking three forms:

In the industry, there has been a heavy load of appeals to members of the CIO Steelworkers themselves, designed in an effort to turn the men of steel against their union and against the WSB proposals. These have been so blatant that, for example, they forced a short walkout in one department of the Republic Steel plant in Cleveland recently.

To the public, a series of full-page hit-them-over-the-head advertisements ("Some things are worse than strikes," says Business Week. "Stop, the light is flashing red for dictatorship," says Conover-Mast, another business publication. And more full pages sponsored by the Committee for Constitutional Government and "Steel Companies in the Wage Case.").

This advertising campaign, as USA-CIO Pres. Philip Murray has noted, is "the greatest advertising onslaught against a union and against the government in the history of the U. S." And the taxpayer will largely foot the bill, because the cost of all those full page ads—and the rest of the public relations campaign directed by high-priced press agents for the big steel outfits—will be deducted as "legitimate" business costs from their corporation income tax forms. (Note: One of the reasons the steel companies said they couldn't pay higher wages was that they would reduce their income tax payments. Apparently they've forgotten that one.)

In the daily press, unrestrained, vituperative editorial comment which is 99.44% in favor of the steel companies.

The "Steel Companies in the Wage Case" think so highly of the nation's editors and what they say that they've assembled a score of editorials and cartoons in a pamphlet. In pure peglerian prose, the editors denounce President Truman's seizure order with no recognition of (1) Truman's effort to keep the defense-vital steel industry operation going, (2) the steel union's six-month effort to get a settlement, and (3) the industry's equally long refusal to negotiate a settlement either through direct collective bargaining or on the basis of the WSB proposals.

THE SAME venon and gutter language with which the U. S. press for a decade tried to crucify FDR has been dragged out against HST. Raymond Moley, who used to be a New Dealer himself, likens the President to Batista of Cuba.

One editorial reproduced by the steel companies calls the President a bomb thrower, while the New York Daily News of the McCormick Axis says "Truman does a Hitler," "Nazi-Fascism," etc.

Generally, however, the editorial pundits turned in another political direction, tossing around the phrases "creeping socialism" and "leaping socialism" to a farethewell.

In the news columns, the Steelworkers got somewhat fairer play for their side of the situation (with the notable exception of Newsweek magazine, which devoted seven pages to steel with not a word, phrase, line or paragraph to the union side).

But in its editorial comment, the U. S. press is building up an anti-labor hysteria much like that just before Taft-Hartley was enacted—and for the same purpose. With more candor than most commentators, Henry Hazlitt wrote glowingly in Newsweek of making "it legally possible once more for a strike to be broken." That's what's behind those full page ads. W.M.

McCarthy Smiled, And Declined To Answer

A LOT OF PEOPLE have been wondering what Sen. McCarthy, the Republican character-assassin from Wisconsin, thinks about the statement of his colleague, Sen. Margaret Chase Smith (R. Me.).

It was Senator Smith who said:

"Some of the demagogues who shout loudest about communism, and who smear anyone who disagrees with them by calling him a 'Red' are the foremost disciples of the big lie.

"They can be just as great a danger to your country and mine, to your freedom and my freedom, as the Communists. They can be even more dangerous in that they are not as easily detected and exposed as are the Communists. They are no different from Stalin himself in their ultimate objective of grabbing power by any means."

Among them is Pres. Roy R. Evans, of the Dallas (Tex.) Area CIO Council. He's still wondering, even though McCarthy was in Dallas recently and he tried to find out. He tried during the question period that followed a speech. Most of the queries were pretty well loaded, pro-McCarthy. Then—

"When the questions began getting bolder," Evans wrote the CIO News, "I realized there were people present other than I who resented the Senator from Wisconsin. But they, too, were scared. They were scared that they would automatically be branded 'red' if they were to ask the Senator an embarrassing question . . . I became infuriated with the cowardliness in my own mind. I stood up to ask a question . . .

SEN. McCARTHY

"I could not get recognized . . .

"McCarthy was pleased with himself. You could see it on his face. He said this was the first time he had spoken in some time that Communists had not been at the door with leaflets. The people cheered and believed what he had said . . .

"Looking down at his watch, the Senator signalled that he was tired of the questioning. It looked very likely that I wouldn't get to ask my question. I rushed to the front of the auditorium. I had to know how he would answer.

" 'Senator, one more question!'

"The Senator appeared uneasy.

" 'Senator, I would like to know what truth you see in the statement made by one of your Republican colleagues, Margaret Chase Smith—I do not believe you can call her communistic or stupid—"Some of the demagogues who shout loudest about communism and who smear anyone who disagrees with them by calling him a 'Red' are the foremost disciples of the big lie. They can be just as great a danger . . ."

" 'Are you making a speech or asking a question'? asked the Senator. This was the clue for the crowd, which had been quite still, to stomp and roar for me to sit down.

" 'Are you afraid of free speech?' Another roar from the crowd.

" 'Next question'! said the Senator. McCarthy was not going to answer this question. The crowd bellowed at me and the Senator smiled greasily. Someone yelled, 'Look, he even has a red shirt on'! I was wearing a maroon sport shirt.

" 'If the young man wants to make a speech, let him come up here on the platform and we can all go home'. The Senator is clever.

"I walked back to my seat. In the faces of the people who could look me in the eye I could read, 'Well, at least you tried.'

"The silent pats on the back that people gave me in the lobby after the meeting was over gave me a great feeling.

"I knew then that even though the insidious sophistry of McCarthyism is today a great darkening cloud over America, that there is still in the minds and hearts of thinking Americans the love for justice and honesty that created in this country a government for the people and by the people; that made it possible for great men like Jefferson, Jackson, Lincoln, Wilson and Roosevelt to rise as leaders."

Catholic Weekly Hits Steel Firms For Blind Prejudice

AMERICA, the national Catholic weekly, takes sharp issue with the steel industry on the question of the union shop.

The magazine points out that union security has been largely ignored in newspaper comment on the steel dispute. But the industry, it adds, "was just as willing to risk a strike, and even the drastic, dangerous expedient of seizure, over the union shop as it was over wages and prices."

The issue, the magazine indicates, was responsible for failure to compromise in pre-seizure negotiations. It holds that the Apr. 9 radio speech of Clarence P. Randall, president of Inland Steel, shows that "when the chips were down, the steel industry adamantly refused, on principle, to negotiate a union shop, or any variation thereof."

"FAR FROM standing on principle, steel management, it seems to us, is fighting to defend a blind and selfish prejudice. It is not fighting for the freedom of its employes, as Mr. Randall so noble affirmed, but for what it imagines to be its own skin.

"Why do we question the motives of the steel industry?

"Three years ago it precipitated a costly strike over the 'principle' of non-contributing pensions. Among the firms responsible for that stoppage, and all the suffering involved, were two which, previous to the dispute, had on their own initiative adopted systems of non-contributory pensions. Once the glaring inconsistency of their course became public knowledge, one of these firms broke the solid management front and agreed to a settlement with the union. That ended the strike . . .

"Secondly, all the big firms involved in the present dispute have union shop contracts with labor organizations other than the United Steelworkers. True principles, we need scarcely point out, do not admit of such convenient exceptions.

"Finally, there is no system of philosophical or religious belief to which steel management can have recourse in defense of its 'principle,' and no legal or constitutional authority to which it can appeal."

Members of the big New York Local 3 of the AFL Electrical Workers unanimously gave a rising vote of thanks to President Truman for his support of the steel workers. In an editorial the local's paper, Electrical Union World, said:

"His name is Harry Truman and his address is The White House, Washington, D. C., and instead of reading a long editorial about what a wonderful President he is for standing up for the rights of the steelworkers against their profiteering employers, sit down and write him a letter telling your President you stand behind him in this wonderful action for working people. Write it NOW."

'Whimpering Campaign' On WSB Members Attacked

"BUCKSHOT" attacks by steel management and its cohorts against public members of the Wage Stabilization Board were exposed in a blistering statement issued last week by Chairman Nathan B. Feinsinger.

"What started out as a whispering campaign has developed into a whimpering campaign," he said.

He referred to "malicious" charges that the WSB's public members were biased in favor of and "beholden" to labor.

The charges were first voiced by Rep. Gwinn (R. N.Y.), congressional spokesman for the hyper-reactionary, anti-labor Committee for Constitutional Government.

They also were aired by Pres. Clarence Randall of Inland Steel, in his broadcast reply to President Truman.

What Randall and Gwinn failed to mention in claiming that WSB public members were "beholden" to labor is that they were equally "beholden" to management. As arbitrators, they were jointly-selected and jointly-paid by both parties in arbitration cases.

Feinsinger said "we are under no illusions that the public members (of the WSB) are the real game being hunted. What is involved is an attack on the whole stabilization program and on the whole concept of effective intervention, in the public interest, to . . . settle labor disputes which could impair the defense of our country."

'Double Standard' Of Press Comment On Steel Seizure Is Protested

THE U. S. PRESS is demonstrating a "double standard" regarding the steel dispute and government efforts to reach a settlement.

With loud applause, says Frank J. Bender, CIO regional director in Baltimore, it has backed the steel industry's refusal to accept the Wage Stabilization Board's proposals for a steel settlement. And it has been equally vehement in attacking U. S. seizure of the steel industry.

Yet the nation's press has taken a directly contrary position in the past in applauding government moves against labor, Bender recalled.

Bender voiced his protest in this recent letter to the Baltimore Sun:

"You in your editorials have time and time again taken the side of the steel management and against the working men and women employed in the steel-making industry and the action of the President of the United States in ordering the seizure of the Steel Plants to prevent a strike.

"It must be recalled that the representatives of the CIO Steelworkers for three long months tried to engage the industry representatives in collective bargaining to complete a working agreement without success.

"THE INDUSTRY representative said 'No' to each and every proposal submitted by the Union. The industry representatives also stated the dispute must be settled in Washington (meaning by the government).

"When all efforts by the Union to get an agreement failed, the members instructed the leaders to order a general strike in the steel industry. The President to avert the ordered strike referred the entire dispute to a tripartite tribunal to study the claims of the Union and the industry and recommend a basis for settlement of the dispute.

"The special committee did study all of the claims and submitted a compromise basis for settlement. The union was not satisfied with the findings, but accepted them. The industry representatives continued to say 'No.'

"I vividly recall an incident in 1919. The coal miners in the bituminus coal fields went on strike Nov. 1, 1919, because they were not satisfied with the award recommended by James A. Garfield who had been appointed by President Wilson to study the dispute between the Union and the mine owners and make an award. President Wilson made the following statement to the leaders of the United Mine Workers of America:

" 'The United States Government will never submit to any power, unless it is a superior power. The Government through Mr. Garfield has spoken, and the Miners Union is not superior to the United States Government and must accept the award. If you refuse, your funds in the banks will be tied up, you will be denied the use of the mail service, telephone and telegraph and the Government will place Federal troops in every coal mining town and force the mine workers to mine coal.'

"At that time, I failed to read editorials in the newspapers defending the mine workers or finding fault with the action of President Wilson.

"I wonder if you advocate one standard of procedure when working men and women refuse to abide by a decision of an agency of the United States Government and another when the employers refuse to comply.

"Management represents the material interest of industry and the Union represents the human equation in industry whose existence depends on the take home pay and should not be submerged or ladened with burdens that management would not bear.

"We cannot have a double standard—when orderly procedure ends, chaos begins."

Gift Protested From Race Hater

J. R. Van Cleave has resigned as dean of Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga., in protest against a $500 a month gift to the college from George W. Armstrong, anti-Negro, anti-Semitic Texas oil millionaire.

"I fear fascism as much as I do communism," said Van Cleave. He said the Armstrong gift places the Georgia college under an influence "foreign both to American democracy and the spirit of Christianity." (LPA)

Where Napoleon Danced, French Workers Study

IN AN HISTORIC mansion in the forest of Compiegne near Paris, not far from where the armistice that ended fighting in World War I was signed, free French trade unionists are going back to school.

From auto plants and foundries, from coal mines; ships and docks, 150 hardbitten members of the Force Ouvriere who have demonstrated that they have the courage to stand up to the Communists are getting down-to-earth, basic training in the fundamentals of a new and aggressive kind of trade unionism.

The Force Ouvriere—the FO—is the union central body that was organized less than five years ago to wrest control of the French labor movement from the Communist. It is young, its funds are small, and it could not support a school on such a scale.

So the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, the world-wide body of anti-Communist organizations of working men and women, took on the task. It is financed out of an education and organization fund to which the CIO contributed $100,000.

A contingent of 50 coal miners has already completed its training. Workers from the metal industries are receiving instruction at present, and when they have been "graduated," their places will be taken by 50 of the men who have fought the Reds to a standstill on France's ships and docks.

From the European viewpoint, the first students are a sort of strategic contingent. They are key union people in key industries, in every section of the country. They are aligned solidly on the free trade union side in an era of contest against Stalinists organizers who have tried to capture labor in Western Europe.

The courses, for the most part are the ones familiar to CIO members who have attended labor education schools—adapted, of course, to the need in France.

They include subjects like techniques of collective bargaining, the tasks and responsibilities of a union militant, the right to strike; prices, profits and standards of living; industrial economics, union organization and administration, and others.

Films, tape recorders, film strips, charts—virtually all the aids familiar in labor schools in this country—are used, and the students are taught to use them to instruct others.

THE graduates are expected to put their learning to work when they go back home to complete the rout of the Communists. They will teach the new theories of union organizing and what to do after you're organized to others back in their locals. Their learning will be put into practice—and a tougher and stronger union movement is expected to be the result, one that can cope with either Communists or employers to improve the lot of the French worker.

The school itself is a truly international affair.

The mansion in which it is held is the Chateau de la Breviere. It was quite a gay place back in Napoleon's day. Now it is owned by the Hjalmar Branting Institute of the Swedish Federation of Trade Unions and the Social Democratic Party of Sweden. Despite its name, it is not luxurious; France is full of old chateaus that have been practically abandoned to hibernating bats.

It is 48 miles northeast of Paris—too far for commuting—and is set in 55 square miles of oak and beech forest. It has living quarters for 75 people.

The miners who attended the first session spoke many languages besides French. From Lorraine came men who talked German among themselves, from the Pas-de-Calais others whose first language is Polish. One from Morocco could speak Arabic.

Other languages were heard during the first days. Victor Reuther, European representative of the CIO, and Sir William Lawther, president of the British National Union of Miners, spoke the two main varieties of English.

The principal speech at the opening was made by J. H. Oldenbrook, secretary general of the ICFTU, a Dutchman.

The director of the school is Albert Nebbot, of the ICFTU staff.

Many American labor educators are contributing to its success. Reuther, on leave as education director of the CIO Auto Workers, is particularly interested in his role as an alternate member of the ICFTU executive board. Among those consulted in setting it up were William Kemsley, education director of the Michigan CIO Council; Boris Scherbak and Pat Knight, both of the CIO Textile Workers, and Sam Ezzell, of the AFL Kentucky State Federation of Labor.

Some of the miner-students were accompanied by their wives, but the school was no vacation.

Lobbyists Turn On Heat To Kill Price Lids

By MILTON PLUMB

DESPITE another jump in the cost of living, the Office of Price Stabilization last week bounced to pressures from Congress and special interest lobbies and took its first action decontrolling prices.

It removed price controls from 16 important commodities, thus paving the way for a drive to the end of any control whatever over run-away inflation.

Consumers could only stand helplessly by and watch the forsaking of their interests. They had leveled no significant protest at Congress, despite warnings that "decontrol" would come unless the public began an immediate counter-offensive.

The behind-the-scenes drive of big business lobbies to wreck the government's price control program has been intensified. The OPS, which is struggling with Congress for its very survival after June 30, apparently could not withstand these pressures in the absence of strong consumer support.

The public's failure to protest to Congress while there was still time may cost it billions of dollars more in inflation in the months ahead.

Price Stabilizer Ellis Arnall said he intends to reimpose controls on any of the decontrolled items if their prices approach the suspended ceilings. But it is doubtful that prices generally can be held at even the present high ceilings now that the door to inflation has been thrown wide open.

Economic "me-too-ism" will now begin. Firms with commodities still under control will point to the decontrolled items and holler that they are being discriminated against. Each item decontrolled is made an excuse for decontrolling something else.

Back in 1945, when the wartime OPA was also fighting for its life against a propaganda drive led by the National Association of Manufacturers, a similar partial decontrol of prices was the beginning of its end.

PRICE controls in their entirety were soon after killed prematurely. Profiteering followed—with consumers footing the bill for billions in increased prices.

This time there was not even a momentary lull before the move for still further decontrol got underway. If OPS thought it could get out from under the pressure which special interest congressmen have been putting on it by partial decontrol action, it was badly mistaken.

On the day following announcement of the decontrol order, Sens. Holland and Smathers and Rep. Herlong, all Florida Democrats, blasted OPS for refusing to hike the ceiling on potatoes and said that they would fight to exempt fresh fruits and vegetables from price controls.

AND OPS itself revealed that it may be forced to give in to the strong cotton lobby. It is considering the additional decontrol of cotton, all textiles and clothing within the next few days.

Nothing could better illustrate the snowballing effect of decontrol pressures, once the dike has been cracked. Cotton is selling only 4c a pound below ceilings, and OPS officials themselves say that it "shows every indication of being a dangerous commodity" price-wise in the next few months.

The items just decontrolled, however, include hides, vegetable fats and oils, wool and burlap. On the "me too" basis, spokesmen for the industry are demanding that the present "discriminatory" controls on cotton, another raw material of textiles, be ended.

There are already two strikes against OPS in its fight to hold controls on cotton. Chairman Maybank (D. S. C.), whose Senate Banking Committee is sitting on legislation to extend price controls beyond June 30, loyally looked after the interests of the cotton growers for many years.

The odds are that last week's action by OPS is the beginning of the end of price controls—unless the public protests at once and loudly.

Even as he approved the OPS decontrol action, Economic Stabilizer Roger L. Putnam found it necesary to warn that "inflationary pressures inherent in the tremendous defense program are bound to increase."

Eighty percent of the items making up consumer living costs are selling at, or only slightly under, ceilings. Most items below ceilings are seasonal products like fruits and vegetables, which have already begun to rise in price.

PRICE pressures are forcing OPS to lift ceilings on some commodities upwards. Last week, for example, it authorized a hike of $7 a ton for soybean meal, used to feed livestock.

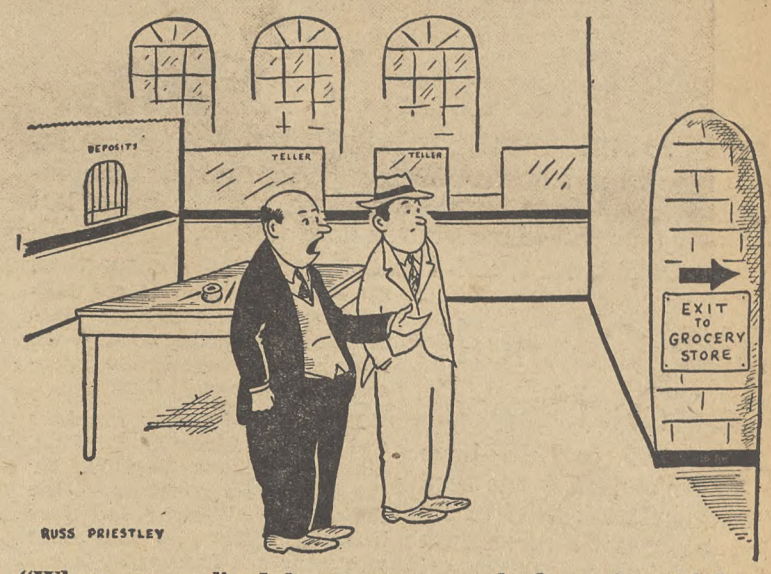
The hike will be passed on to consumers in still higher meat prices.

Moreover, the price of the items decontrolled is already exorbitant because of the high ceilings. Grease wool, for example, was recently selling at 63c a pound and the lowest price ceiling OPS could set under the Capehart and Herlong Amendments is 95c.

But its price at parity—long regarded as the "fair" return for agricultural products—is 57c. By lifting the ceiling on wool, OPS thus freed from control an item that already was selling for 6c more than the "fair" price.

In the case of cotton textiles, which have declined 22% from their post-Korean peak, prices are still 18% above their level at the time the Korean war began.

By taking decontrol action, OPS acted against the opinion of its own Consumer Advisory Committee, made up of representatives of consumer organizations.



"When we realized how many people have to withdraw money to meet the cost of groceries, we had this convenient exit made."

Some Faces Red As BLS Index Starts Up Again

THE COST OF LIVING went up again in the 30-day period ending Mar. 15, the Bureau of Labor Statistics announced last week.

The announcement caused a plague of red faces among big business press agents, daily press columnists, and some economists. When the bureau's Consumer Price Index registered a decline a month ago, they had happily predicted a storm of falling prices.

The increase was small—one-tenth of one point. It raised the index figure from 187.9 on Feb. 15 to 188 on Mar. 15. It was the first jump since the month ending Dec. 15, the figure being unchanged on Jan. 15. The index now stands 1.9% higher than a year ago and 10.5% above the pre-Korea level.

The BLS said that small increases in the costs of miscellaneous goods, services and rents were responsible for the increase.

Here are the cummulative figures for the "new" BLS Index:

Big Oil Firms Join 'Billion Dollar Club'

IF ALL THE crocodile tears the oil industry has shed in the last year were issued to dilute its product, the country would have to go back to walking. But reports of 1951 net profits, show they never, NEVER had it so good.

Six oil firms are among the 27 corporations which in 1951 joined the "Billion-Dollar Club"—companies doing a gross business of more than $1 billion a year.

Jersey Standard's gross income went up 21%, from $3,198,266,574 in 1950 to $3,863,317,093 in 1951. And its net income went up almost 30%, from $408,223,000 to $528,461,000 despite an increase in taxes of 45%.

Other oil companies in the Billion-Dollar Club are, in order of size, Standard Oil of Indiana, Socony Vacuum, Gulf, Texas Co., Shell and California Standard.

CIO Backs Special Senate Group To Aid Consumers

THE CIO, along with consumer, civic, farm and government groups has urged creation of a special Senate committee to represent the nation's consumers.

Don Montgomery, Washington representative of the CIO Auto Workers, called upon the Senate Rules Committee to approve a resolution setting up a Senate Select Committee on Consumer Interests.

He said such a group was necessary because various attempts to have existing government agencies look out for consumer interests have "met with failure."

While such a committee would not have authority to report legislation to the Senate, Montgomery said it could serve the purpose of providing a "much-needed voice for the consumer interest which legislation so often overlooks or overrides."

"Our consumer interests," he said, "are the most important of the economic facts of life. But we seldom give them our first attention, either in economic affairs or in politics. This does not make sense. Labor has learned that wages are worth no more than they will buy and that winning a wage increase only to lose it to higher prices is no real gain."

Action In Omaha—

CIO Raises $10,000 For Flood Victims

THE CIO EMERGENCY Flood Relief Committee, operating as an arm of the CIO Community Services Committee, had set up three functioning agencies at the end of last week for the relief of midwestern flood victims.

At Omaha, Neb., CIO members contributed more than $10,000 to be used if the Missouri rose over the city's dikes and flood walls. Fortunately, the river receded there before extensive damage resulted.

More than 400 CIO members and their families in St. Paul, Minn., and Sioux City, Ia., for the large part members of the Packinghouse Workers, lost their homes. Suffering in both areas was acute and Emergency Relief Committees were operating on a round-the-clock schedule.

In all three sectors, CIO officials were working closely with representatives of the American Red Cross and the Salvation Army.

As the Missouri's record flood crest rolled to Kansas City, an additional 12,000 persons were driven from their homes. More than 100,000 previously had fled areas to the north.

Col. L. J. Lincoln of the Army Engineers predicted the total Missouri flood damage would reach $46 million by the end of the month.

Leo Perlis, CIO-CSC chairman, urged relief contributions. He recalled that during the floods last year, grants of $126,000 were made by CIO, while members of various CIO unions in Kansas City received more than $748,000 worth of assistance from funds contributed by the American people through the Red Cross.

Sympathy for flood victims took on an international aspect with receipt by CIO of a telegram from Giulio Pastore, secretary general of CISL, the Italian free trade union organization.

CIO Council Action Urged

ALL CIO councils have been alerted to the need for immediate legislative action to prevent a recurrance of the disastrous Missouri River floods which have plagued mid-western residents for two successive years.

In a letter to all councils last week, Anthony W. Smith, executive secretary of the CIO Committee on Regional Development and Conservation, outlined a four-point program calling for all-out support of President Truman's Missouri Valley Commission.

CIO Councils were urged to take the following steps:

1. Write to all members of the Missouri Valley Commission and inform them of the CIO's program.
2. Warn Senators and Representatives against support of the discredited Pick-Sloan plan for flood control.
3. Ask Congressmen to support the Dept. of Agriculture's watershed management program.
4. Call attention to the fact that the CIO has long backed the establishment of a National Watershed Review Board with jurisdiction over the Army Engineers, Bureau of Reclamation and Federal Power Commission.

Decent Wages, Housing Demanded For Farm Workers By CIO Outlook

Guernsey-Montgomery for the Economic Outlook, CIO.

AN OUTLINE of basic CIO proposals to improve the sad lot of agricultural workers is given in the new issue of the Economic Outlook, published by the CIO Dept. of Education and Research.

An immediate and major requirement, it points out, is the establishment of a committee representing the public and government agencies that will integrate the work of all departments and bureaus and will have the responsibiity for continuous attention to the problems of migrant farm workers.

"If more workers are needed for certain jobs," the Outlook says, "it is common sense to make those jobs attractive so that people will seek them.

"To make farm labor attractive to Americans, at least three major requirements must be met:

1 "Workers must receive decent wages.

2 "Living conditions must meet decent standards of housing and sanitation.

3 "The community and the employer must treat the farm workers as people entitled respect, in accordance with basic democratic principles . . .

"Among the basic rights recognized must be that of bargaining collectively through unions to remove grievances and improve conditions."

The Outlook charges that "certain growers" have "directly opposite" ideas to those of labor.

"Too many of them," it explains, "would far rather not make jobs attractive to Americans in this manner, so long as they can turn to cheap labor from neighboring countries.

"In industry, many employers have learned that it is wise to provide good working conditions and accept unions. Some growers have learned these lessons, but too often the spokesmen for family farmers have opposed coverage of their workers under labor and social legislation . . .

"With high levels of employment in the country as a whole, the necessity of attracting and holding workers would have brought far greater improvement in farm labor conditions if growers had not been able to turn to cheap contract labor during the last decade.

"The importation program has interfered with the operation of normal competitive factors such as have resulted in improvements for many other types of workers.

"Many growers still refuse to offer anything but substandard conditions because they do not need to make a genuine effort to attract Americans—they can fall back on workers from abroad.

"This same alternative has too often helped them to resist organization efforts among domestic workers."

The Outlook warned that the flow of "wetbacks" from Mexico into this country not only opens them to vicious exploitation by big farm operators, but has resulted in thousands of them entering industry—and thereby undermining the wages and working conditions American workers have established.

Intensive Political Action Stressed At URW Washington Meet

By JOSEPH WALSH

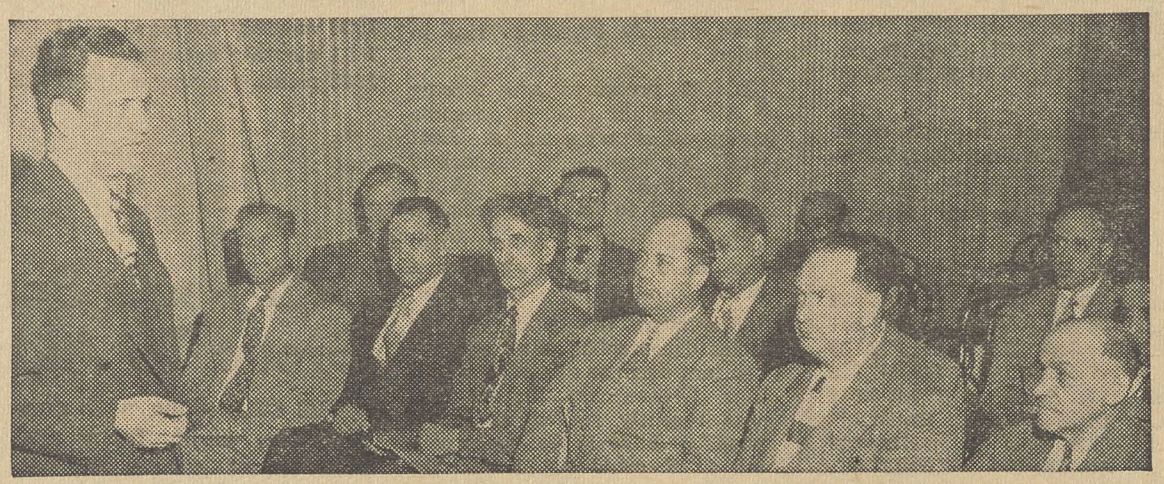
RANK AND FILE rubber workers from 10 states wound up a four-day refresher course in American government last week, a course conducted in the committee hearing rooms and on the floors of the Senate and House of Representatives.

The legislative training institute, first held in Washington by the CIO Rubber Workers, was highlighted by a foreign policy address by Sen. Sparkman (D. Ala.), and visits with Democratic Sens. Lehman (N.Y.) and Moody (Mich.).

On Capitol Hill, the group of 28 sat in on hearings before the Senate Labor Committee on the steel industry seizure and before a Senate Labor sub-committee on fair employment practices.

The look-see into Washington officialdom is the first part of the URW-CIO program for political action this year. Desmond Walker, secretary treasurer and head of PAC for the union, said a similar conference would be held in Washington late in May.

The meetings were opened by Rep. Hays (D. O.), who accused Administration critics of "living in 1952 and thinking in 1895."



LABOR HOLDS KEY TO "what kind of a government we will have in the critical years ahead," Sen. Moody (D., Mich.) tells Washington legislative conference sponsored by the CIO Rubber Workers. He also outlined major election issues.

He warned that Republicans in actual control of Congress "want to return to the age of Mark Hanna and William McKinley," and said that unless "this march into the past" is halted, the gains of workers and farmers made in the past 20 years will be wiped out.

Hays, who is leader of the Kefauver - for - President movement in Ohio, and Rep. Raines (D. Ala.) lashed out at the "arch conservative" blocs in the House and Senate that are, according to Raines, "blocking the road to greater progress and fuller lives for all of us."

Raines, a member of the House Banking and Currency Committee, urged the CIO and organized labor to "keep putting pressure on members of Congress to pass constructive legislation in the public interest."

The 28 unionists, who represented 14 URW local unions from New Jersey to Colorado, heard Sparkman, member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, laud President Truman's foreign policy "which will be recorded in history as a successful, positive policy."

Sparkman claimed since the beginning of the present program in 1947, the Communists have been halted in Europe and Asia, and the free nations have been strengthened by the U. S. foreign aid programs.

"Since President Truman gave notice to the Communists that aggression would not be tolerated by the free nations, the Russians and their friends have not moved one inch in Europe or Asia," he said.

Their attempt to expand in Korea has "failed miserably," he added.

Lehman, addressing the group on domestic issues, said he saw little hope for passage of any Fair Deal programs in this session of Congress. He said Republicans and conservative Democrats have been successful in blocking passage of practically all Administration proposals for social advancement.

Lehman urged elimination of Senate Rule 22, on cloture, which has prevented civil rights bills from being enacted. He supported the proposal that President Truman issue an executive order setting up a Fair Employment Practices Commission.

Both Lehman and Moody echoed Sparkman in urging an intensive political education program for members of organized labor this year.

Moody outlined the major issues for 1952 and said labor held the key to "what kind of government we will have in the critical years ahead of us."

Labor Overseas—

Russ Win A Propaganda Round In 'Trade' Parley

THE RECENT international trade conference the Communists staged in Moscow was a distinct propaganda triumph for the Societ Russia. The likelihood of any substantial resumption of East-West trade depends on whether or not the governments of the West will free strategic materials and machines which have been barred to the East.

The propaganda victory rested in the fact that Russia and her satellites were held up before the world as the champions of international trade, with all its possibilities of profits and jobs for western industry, and with the promotion of the peace and understanding such commerce is supposed to nurture.

In addition, the conference tended to push the United States and her friends in Europe farther apart. The U. S. has sparked the efforts of the West to keep strategic materials and equipment away from the Soviet bloc. Many European manufacturers would just as soon trade with the Communists as anybody else and take their chances on survival. The conference stirred up their resentment against the U. S.

ALSO ON THE propaganda-political front, Communist stooges from non-Communist countries used the conference to pillory the U. S. as an imperialist nation interested in helping others only for what we can get out of it.

The appeal of increased business is as attractive to the jobless workers of Western Europe as to their employers. For example thousands of textile workers in Free Europe are idle, as in this country. Consequently much of the Soviet bloc's talk about trade centered around textiles. BUT, before deals were closed, tie-in deliveries of heavy machinery, scarce raw materials and other things barred from Soviet bloc trade were injected into the discussions by the Communists.

Only one newspaperman from this country attended the conference. He is A. Wilfred May, executive editor of the Commercial and Financial Chronicle of New York.

In a copyrighted interview in the Apr. 25 issue of the magazine U. S. News & World Report he described the parley as "the opening gun in a large-scale and dangerous economic offensive" and the forerunner of more propaganda.

"This means exploitation of business difficulties in various politically strategic areas," he said.

"It was revealed to me forcefully during pre- and post-conference visits in West Germany, which is wide open to blandishment of restored satellite markets for her overflowing textiles and shoes and other consumer goods, and also in France, which has imminent surpluses in cotton and woolen goods . . .

"BY THE INJECTION of wedges between the United States and her allies, Moscow won a victory at the parley. The object of their grousing extended from our insistence on embargoing their useful trading with the Soviet bloc, to our alleged blacklisting of conference participants.

"The conference philosophy is based on the false major promise that international trade is the key to settling troubled political problems, while actually good will and a semblance of cooperation are prerequisites and must be sincerely pursued first.

"At best, the discussions in Moscow have occurred in an unrealistic vacuum with complete disregard of the political goings-on.

"From my observation, the attitude of the State Dept. and the abstention of such concerns as the Intl. Chamber of Commerce and other legitimate business interests was thoroughly substantiated."

THE STRUGGLING young Japanese free trade union movement boiled over in a one-day general strike in resentment against the conservative government's apparent intention of passing vicious anti-labor legislation.

An estimated one million workers, most of them members of the General Confederation of Trade Unions (SOHYO), took part in the demonstration. SOHYO itself is not affiliated with the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, but about 2.5 million of its three million members are through another organization, the Joint Council of Japanese Trade Unions.

The 24-hour walkout was aimed at a so-called anti-subversive activities bill which the conservative government has presented to the Diet, or parliament. The unions, in a formal statement, charged the government's aim is "suppressing the trade union movement and placing a ban on the right to strike."

The strike committee said the demonstration was at least 90% effective. Steel mills, iron and copper mines, factories and offices were affected.

Japan regains her sovereignty late this month when ratification of the peace treaty is completed. The labor movement, prior to World War II and especially after the war with China started in 1937, was oppressed by the government, which broke up free unions and imposed a Nazi-like labor front on the workers.

SOHYO, organized after the war, had not only long-standing government opposition to combat, but also the Communists and the Japanese employer's traditional paternalism. It fought the Reds so successfully that, where they controlled the union movement in 1948, they are now an insignificant part of organized labor with a claimed 100,000 members.

Free labor throughout the world has watched the efforts of Japanese unionists to establish themselves. The ICFTU recently warned the government of its promise not to interfere with the development of a free, democratic labor movement. The CIO, at the 1951 convention, called on signers of the peace treaty to require from Japan "a firm respect for democratic principles, and great care should be taken not to permit any infringement of trade union rights."

CIO Battles Public Housing Foes In Toledo, S.F. Area Disputes

CIO HAS stepped in to defend the public housing program in Toledo, O., and Richmond, Calif.

Following the receipt of over 600 letters and postcards from CIO members in Richmond, asking for help, the CIO Housing Committee under the chairmanship of Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther arranged for an on-the-scenes investigation by top government housing officials.

The survey is expected to begin early in May. It will involve examination of allegedly "discriminatory" policies in Richmond. This industrial city near San Francisco is the only city of more than 100,000 in which half of the population live in public housing projects.

The Contra Costa County CIO Council is seeking to have the public housing, now limited to veterans, opened to non-veterans in view of the critical housing crisis.

In Toledo, the real estate lobby is trying to kill public housing by having the Republican-controlled city council repudiate its agreements with the Public Housing Authority.

The CIO Toledo Industrial Union Council is preparing for a showdown May 26.

ON THAT day the city council will act on a proposal ordinance aimed at killing the Toledo low-rent public, housing program. Introduced by GOP Councilman Walter A. Churchill, it follows the pattern of similar assaults on public housing launched by realtors and the landlord lobby in other cities, including Indianapolis and Los Angeles.

The ordinance calls for repeal of a resolution approving the Toledo Metropolitan Housing Authority's application for a federal public housing loan adopted last November.

A CIO delegation, headed by UAW Regional Director Charles Ballard and TIUC Executive Secy. Howard Rediger, jammed the council chambers Mar. 14, when action on the ordinance had been previously scheduled. The council put off action.

The Toledo Blade named Paul Hoeflinger as an East Toledo real estate operator "who has set himself up as a one-man lobbying committee to undo the housing program here."

LABOR COOPERATION in support of union label drive of CIO Clothing Workers was demonstrated in front of St. Louis store of non-union Richman Bros. chain. Members of CIO Steelworkers, Auto Workers, Textile Workers and Railroad Workers joined ACWA on picket line.

Marian M'Govern, NPA Aide, Is Dead

Marian McGovern, for many years active in the CIO Newspaper Guild and later on the staff of the Economic Cooperation Administration Labor Div., died in Washington Apr. 24. She was 46.

At the time of her death, after a short illness, she was director of editorial services at the National Production Authority. During World War II she held labor posts with civil defense, the War Production Board and the Office of Price Administration; later she worked for the Labor Dept.

In her various government posts, she was well-known and highly regarded by large number of CIO people.

'Point Four' To Help Farm Workers Urged At Parley

A NEW "Point Four" program of help for America's millions of needy agricultural workers and their families was called for by 100 delegates to the second annual conference of the National Council on Agricultural Life and Labor in Washington last week.

The proposal was part of the recommendations of the commission on unions, drafted by Mrs. Katherine Ellickson of the CIO Education and Research Dept.

THE report unanimously approved, held that protection of the right of migrant farm laborers, including Mexican "wetbacks," to organize and engage in collective bargaining is a basic need in the face of stiff employer resistance.

In two days of sessions, delegates from most of the leading religious, labor, agricultural, social welfare and civic organizations considered the plight of the small family farmer, migrant agricultural labor, state and federal farm labor laws, and the broad question of U. S. land reform policies.

President Truman's opening message struck a keynote that was repeated over and over again at the conference.

"It is tragic that so many rural families still face severe handicaps in their working and living conditions, health services and educational opportunities. It is distressing particularly to think of the children who are starting life with inadequate diets, medical care and schooling."

And in his address on federal farm labor legislation, Paul Sifton, CIO Auto Workers legislative representative, placed the responsibility directly on Congress for its subservience to pressures from the big corporation farmers.

He pointed out that Congress has just cut $181,000 from the budget of the Office of Education to further educational opportunities for migrant children, but that it approved $6.5 million for the Interior Dept. to help migatory birds.

"The fact that over a million migrant families are living in poverty is a shame and a scandal that cannot be tolerated," Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) told the closing session.

Carey Praises Work Of Cripps

CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey last week paid tribute to the late Sir Stafford Cripps, former British Chancellor of the Exchequer who died in Zurich, Switzerland, Apr. 21.

Declaring that democracy had lost a "great humanitarian and a courageous leader," Carey said the world "is today and will be in the future, a happier place because of Sir Stafford's idealism and selfless devotion to the welfare of working men and women everywhere."

Los Angeles CIO Supports 4 In Congress

SUPPORT for four incumbent congressmen, 10 incumbent assemblymen and a $146 million school bond issue were announced last week by the Greater Los Angeles CIO Council.

Albert T. Lunceford, Council secretary-treasurer, said that the endorsements, representing some 100,000 CIO members in the county, were voted by delegates.

The incumbent congressmen receiving CIO support were Cecil R. King, 17th District; Chet Holifield, 19th; Clyde Doyle, 23rd; and Sam Yorty, 26th.

Incumbent assemblymen endorsed were Edward E. Elliott, 40th District; Julian Beck, 41st; Tom Doyle, 45th; William Munnell, 51st; Vernon Kilpatrick, 55th; Lester McMillan, 61st; Gus Hawkins, 62nd; Clayton Dills, 67th; Vincent Thomas, 68th; and Carley Porter, 69th.

CIO Will Carry FEPC Fight To People And Polls: Roy Reuther

THE CIO is going to take FEPC legislation out of Senate hearing rooms and carry the fight for its enactment to the people.

Roy Reuther, political action director for the CIO Auto Workers, made this pledge in testimony last week before the Senate Labor subcommittee. He urged passage of fair employment practices legislation this session.

Speaking for his brother, UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther, he said:

"Merely to hold hearings, merely to report a bill out only to have it filibustered to death is not enough. The American people know that there has been a majority in the U. S. Senate wanting FEPC legislation for many years and the time for waiting has passed."

The CIO intends, he said, to go to both the Republican and Democratic conventions in Chicago and ask the delegates where they stand on repeal of the Senate rule permitting filibusters.

"We're going to say to each of them: The American people are past 21. We know the real issues in this fight. What are you going to do about Rule 22? Are you going to write into the platform a pledge to establish majority rule in the Senate?"

In addition, he said, the CIO will "stump this country to talk about the fundamental things that Tom Paine and Tom Jefferson talked on when they spoke of human equality."

As an example of the seriousness with which the CIO views the fight, Reuther pointed out that each of the UAW's 1,275,000 members is contributing 1c per month earmarked for the FEPC campaign.

"FEPC legislation is not only morally right, but it is essential to a sound economy," he declared.

He praised the testimony presented to the committe the previous week by CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and Harry Read, chairman and director respectively of the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination. They pointed out the great economic cost of discrimination by showing that Northern taxpayers were being made to carry an unfair share of federal and state taxes as a result.

"Society in general pays the cost of job discrimination," Reuther said. "Crime, TB and other diseases, high relief rolls relate to low income as the result of the loss of job opportunities."

HE SUBMITTED a plan for changing the Senate's "unconstitutional" rule requiring a vote of two-thirds of its members to end filibusters.

He urged the election of Senators and a Vice President who will reject the present rules at the Senate's first meeting next year. Under his proposal the Vice President would simply rule on the first day that the new Senate has the right to adopt its own rules by a simple majority.

In this way, the Senate would no longer be subject to its present rules which require the vote of 64 Senators to change the rules themselves.

Chairman Humphrey (D. Minn.) called Reuther's proposal "most convincing" and "the first new approach we have had to this problem of the filibuster." He called Rule 22 "a type of iniquitous national poll tax on the Senate" which prevents the majority of Senators from legislating.

HE'S A PAC CHAMPION. — Last year Harry Baker (right), a CIO Maritime Union patrolman in New York, collected $3273 in the NMU'S PAC Dollar Drive. This year Baker's out to collect more than twice as much, and Julian Hardie, a first class waiter, is helping him towards his goal.

NAACP Hails Court Ruling Against Bias In Schools

A DELAWARE court decision was hailed by the the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People last week as "the first real victory in our campaign to destroy segregation . . . in elementary and high schools."

Chancellor Collins J. Seitz of the Delaware Court of Chancery opened the way to admission of Negro pupils to "white" elementary and high schools in a Wilmington suburb.

He based his opinion on the inequalities between the facilities afforded Negro and white pupils after visiting segregated schools of the two groups.

Seitz said "I believe the 'separate but equal' doctrine in education should be rejected, but I also believe that its rejection must come from" the U. S. Supreme Court.

Thurman Marshall, NAACP special counsel, hailed the decision. He said the Delaware case "will be a valuable precedent in cases attacking segregation in South Carolina, Virginia and Topeka which are being appealed to the Supreme Court.

Also in the field of education, American Civil Liberties Union has reported that 21 Negro pupils have been transferred successfully to a previously "white" school in Cairo, Ill., despite violence, arrests and racial tension.

Edward H. Meyerding, executive director of the Chicago Division of ACLU, reported that only the threat of withdrawing state funds from the Cairo school system finally forced local officials to abandon segregation. A 1941 state law denies state funds to segregated schools.

The Chicago ACLU commended Gov. Adlai Stevenson "for his concern and action in alerting enforcement officers of the state."

In Washington, D. C., a dozen Negro leaders protested to the District Commissioners against police brutality which they said resulted from "cancerous growth of corruption" in the police department.

PRES. John B. Duncan of the Federation of Civic Clubs presented the group's statement. He quoted the NAACP as reporting 120 cases of police brutality against Washington Negroes in 1951.

In the South, NAACP has begun a non-partisan drive to increase the number of Negro voters from one to two million before the November election.

"To become an effective political factor in the South," Walter White, NAACP executive secretary, said, "the Negro vote will have to be vastly expanded. If Negroes are to have an influence in government, if they expect Congress to pass civil rights measures, they must vote intelligently, consistently and in ever-increasing numbers."

CIO Barbers Open Parley

THE FOURTH constitutional convention of the CIO Barbers & Beauty Culturists Union will open Apr. 28 in Atlantic City, N. J.

Policy resolutions calling for extension of unemployment insurance to barbers (they are now denied benefits in New York and other states) and repeal of New York's Hughes-Brees law, and urging President Truman to establish a Fair Employment Practices Commission by executive action will come before the convention.

Officers' reports will be presented by Pres. Ernest Hebert and Sec.-Treas. Lilyan Moscowitz. Speakers during the three-day convention will include Tilford Dudley of the CIO Political Action Committee; Ewald Sander, New Jersey CIO director; George Craig, Eastern Pennsylvania CIO director; and Carl Holderman, New Jersey CIO Council president.

Gas, Coke Sets New Strike Plan, Adds Insurance Unit

THE CIO Chemical Workers have set up a number of streamlining plans, designed to increase the effectiveness of services to members.

Foremost is establishment of a program which will give the international union the opportunity to intercede in a local bargaining deadlock before a strike occurs, rather than after it is under way.

UGCCW Pres. Martin Wagner has been given authority to appoint a three-man "strike commission" which would make an on-the-scene survey when a strike is threatened. The group would then report to Wagner and indicate whether or not strike sanction should be granted.

The commission's report would be required before the international union approved or rejected a strike authorization.

FINAL decision on strike authorization, however, remains with the international president and local groups can appeal the commission's findings to him.

Commissions will be made up of executive board members who reside closest to the area where the controversy exists.

Wagner said the new plan is in keeping with UGCCW's policy that strikes are to be used only as a last resort in settling contract or other disputes.

Another pioneering step taken recently by the union is the establishment of the Employee Insurance Service Dept. which will provide expert service to the entire membership on group insurance, pensions and other matters coming under the general heading of health and welfare.

The new service will render the following advantages to the membership: Develop group insurance and pension specifications for union contracts; supply properly prepared health and welfare clauses; design benefits and arrange administration of health and welfare plans; redraft insurance policy provisions when necessary, and eliminate undesirable provisions from contracts.

In addition, benefit and cost analysis of group insurance will be conducted; checks on service and results after the plan is in operation will be provided and the results analyzed each year.

In a final action, delegates to the coming UGCCW convention have been urged to set up a strike fund which will enable the international to give financial as well as moral support to locals forced on strike.

CIO-Made Paper Again Available

CIO watermarked paper is again in production, according to the United Paperworkers of America, CIO.

Both mimeo and bond paper carrying the UPA union label in the watermark are available at competitive prices, UPA said.

Price lists and distributors can be obtained by writing to UPA Watermark, UPA-CIO, 1757 K St., N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

Murray Supports Genocide Pact

A continued fight by the CIO to secure adoption of the genocide convention of the United Nations was promised by Pres. Philip Murray in greeting the Jewish Labor Committee Apr. 18 on the ninth anniversary of the Warsaw ghetto uprising and slaughter.

"This terrible event," he wrote, "provides another strong argument for adoption of the genocide convention, which the CIO has strongly supported, and we believe the adoption of this convention will do much to prevent any repetition of such slaughter of innocent men, woman and children."

CONDUCT CAN PARLEYS. — This CIO Steelworkers negotiating committee represents workers in 30 Continental Can Co. plants in U. S. and Canada in bargaining sessions in New York. James Robb, USA district director in Indianapolis, heads the 48-member committee. The union is seeking the WSB basic steel proposal.

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

THIS PAST WEEK a number of CIO regional directors along with representatives of the CIO Steelworkers and Auto Workers were in Washington in an effort to defeat H.R. 532 for an investigation of the Wage Stabilization Board. Despite our efforts the House passed this resolution.

The situation in the steel controversy is still critical. The steel companies are continuing their vile, lying propaganda, with the aid of a number of congressmen who fail to recognize the facts in the case.

The companies are resorting to every means at their command to distort the real issues in the case and are using full-page, expensive ads to express their untruths. They are still attempting to secure from the courts an injunction against the government to prevent it from running the industry. The companies have gained the support of many congressmen and senators who are spreading the vicious propaganda without regard to the basic issues. President Murray of the Steelworkers and his associates have effectively presented along with members of the WSB the facts in the controversy as they exist.

The CIO and organized labor throughout our country must be on the alert. It is more apparent than ever that industry with support of many of their congressmen is out to gouge the American people and demand more and more profits and make every effort to destroy labor.

We must meet their attack at every turn. We must take our fight to the people with every means at our disposal. Activize yourself politically, it is essential that we preserve our gains and continue in our march forward on behalf of the people. We must maintain our democracy and continue our fight for our just demands.

Buckmaster Backs U.S. Safety Bill

A uniform U. S. industrial safety bill was backed by Pres. L. S. Buckmaster of the CIO Rubber Workers at a recent meeting of the All-Ohio Safety Conference.

Buckmaster said the adoption of S. 2325, introduced by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) would help eliminate conditions that each year "condemn thousands of workers to death, disablement and serious injury."

Senate Vote On Seaway Looks Dubious

THE LONG-overdue vote on the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project in the Senate Foreign Relations Committee last week ended in a 6-to-6 tie, but the group then voted 9-to-4 to report the bill to the Senate without recommendation.

The latter action puts the seaway bill on the Senate calendar, but in the absence of a favorable recommendation from the committee this may prove to be a futile gesture.

Following the committee votes, the Senate Democratic Policy Committee failed to assign the measure a priority for consideration, and Majority Leader McFarland (D. Ariz) expressed doubt that the Senate will act on it before adjourning for the July political conventions.

Sen. Lehman (D. N.Y.) said, however, that he would urge a vote soon, perhaps within the next two weeks. Unless Congress approves U. S. participation in the project this session, Canada says it will go ahead alone.

Voting to report the bill were Sens. Green (D. R.I.), McMahon (D. Conn.), Sparkman (D. Ala.), Gillette (D. Ia.), Wiley (R. Wis.), Smith (R. N.J.), Hickenlooper (R. Ia.), Tobey (R. N.H.) and Brewster (R. Me.).

The four voting to keep the bill in committee were Chairman Connally (D. Tex.) and Sens. George (D. Ga.), Fulbright (D. Ark.) and Lodge (R. Mass.). Gillette and Smith joined them in opposing a favorable report.

President Truman last week in letters to the chairmen of both the House and Senate committees on foreign affairs again urged Congress to take prompt action on the seaway. He said it would be "extremely unwise and unrealistic" for Congress to prevent joint operation of the project with Canada.

GOP Uses Layoff Crisis To Give Bosses A Hand

THE REPUBLICAN-dominated Michigan Legislature has passed an unemployment compensation bill —labelled by Gov. G. Mennen Williams "a cruel fraud upon the people."

Passage of the bill which trades a temporary six-week extension in the benefit period for a permanent reduction in employer contributions to the state unemployment compensation fund, was the last of a series of Republican-inspired roadblocks for progressive state measures.

Democrats had opposed the compensation bill on the grounds that savings to employers from the new contribution formula far outweigh the benefits gained by workers. They pointed out that the six-week extension will be in effect only for the balance of this year while the cut in employer contributions will be permanent.

Williams termed the bill a "halfway measure which does little for the workers but much for the employers." "It benefits all employers," he said, "but limits workers' benefits to companies with eight or more employes. It is entirely inadequate. Extension of the benefit period at least should be permanent."

The Republicans successfully stymied the following Democratic measures during the session which just ended:

Establishment of a state minimum wage law; permission for 18-year-olds to vote; establishment of temporary disability insurance; creation of a state housing commission; enactment of minimum salary scales for teachers, and an increase of pensions for state workers and teachers.

Williams' corporation profits tax plan, modeled after statutes in effect in 33 other states, also was killed by the Republilcans.

Steel Seizure Backed By Alabama CIO

COMMENDATION for President Truman's seizure of the steel industry was voted by the 13th convention of the Alabama CIO Council.

Representing more than 70,000 members, the Alabama Council is among the larger CIO state affiliates in the South.

Pres. Cecil Robertson, Steelworker from Gadsden, was returned to office, as was Sec.-Treas. Eugene Wells.

Progress in CIO's southern drive was reported by Dir. John Riffe of the CIO Organizing Committee. Other convention speakers included James Mullen, USA-CIO political action director; Ben Segal, CIO associate director of education; and Lt. Gov. James B. Allen of Alabama.

In a series of resolutions, the Alabama CIO renewed its demand for repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act, supported national health insurance, backed the Moody-Dingell bill for supplementary U. S. jobless benefits, and called for overall federal unemployment insurance and workmen's compensation laws.

The convention also endorsed the first annual Alabama CIO education institute, which will be held in Talledega May 18-24.

Phone Strikers Gain 15c Boosts

THE CIO Communications Workers' victory over AT&T subsidiaries grew last week, as strike settlements brought 14-15c hourly pay boosts and fringe benefits to 20,000 members.

The new settlements covered 10,000 Western Electric installers, 7000 plant employes and accountants of Pacific Tel. & Tel. in Northern California and Nevada, Bell Laboratory workers in the New York City area, and WE manufacturing employes at Haverhill and Lawrence, Mass.

Still on strike were almost 8000 CWA members. These included 5500 WE warehouse employes, workers at WE plants at Buffalo and Queensboro, N. Y., and Bell System employes in the Morgantown area of West Virginia.

WE strikers were picketing 29 warehouses in 23 states and continued their hit-run picketing of other Bell System installations.

The company reacted intensely to the strike. Not only was it reported to have flown 25 strikebreakers from Washington to Morgantown, but it also brought a $1.4 million damage suit against the union. But CWA held firm with the help of widespread support of members of the CIO Steelworkers and the miners' union.

In Texas, CWA attorneys succeeded in having a damage suit brought by Southwestern Bell transferred from state to federal courts.

Violence flared in a clash at a Western Electric warehouse in Chicago last week, when an attempt was made to break a picket line. Charles Berranto, CWA international representative, was bruised and shaken and his clothes were torn off his back, and another man was injured.

Police arrested nine men, and a hearing was scheduled for Apr. 28 on Illinois Bell's application for an anti-picketing injunction.

More than 9000 CWA members left their jobs in Cleveland, Detroit and other cities to attend four-hour meetings last Thursday, in support of the WE strikers.

CAMPUS RALLY of Columbia University students is addressed by Pres. Michael Quill of CIO Transport Workers, as students protest university's failure to reach settlement with striking cafeteria workers represented by TWU. Other maintenance workers walked out. University's appeal for student strikebreakers flopped.

Andrews Named Point Four Chief

He was named to succeed Dr. Harry Bennett, who was killed in a plane crash in the Middle East while on duty. Andrews was associate editor of the Arkansas Democrat at Little Rock when he joined the Dept. of Agriculture as director of foreign agricultural relations in 1949.

IWA Prepares To Walk Out In Northwest

SEVERAL thousand members of the CIO Woodworkers are prepared to strike logging camps and lumber mills in five Pacific Northwest states early this week.

A strike deadline of midnight, Apr. 28, was set by the IWA's Northwest Regional Negotiating Committee after more than two months of futile efforts to reach a contract settlement with more than 700 lumber operators.

Since bargaining began in mid-February, the wood union has reached agreement only with the big Weyerhaeuser Timber Co. for 8000 workers. Terms were a 7½c hourly wage increase, six paid holidays, a 2c increase in the night differential and an improved vacation clause.

IWA rejected as unsatisfactory proposals from the Willamette Valley (Ore.) operators and a Coos Bay firm.

"All the other associations and independent operations," said IWA Pres. A. F. Hartung, "have made no offer whatsoever, except to extend the presently existing agreement, despite the fact that they are well aware of the settlement with Weyerhaeuser covering some 8000 workers."

The strike deadline was set by the IWA in consultation with nine district councils in Oregon, Washington, Idaho, California and Montana.

Columbia Union-Busting Battled

COLUMBIA Univ. of New York City, one of the nation's largest, last week added a course in union-busting to its curricula.

Acting like any anti-union employer, Columbia officials refused to attend a conference with the CIO Transport Workers arranged by the State Mediation Board "in an effort to resolve the differences" between the university and its cafeteria employes, who are TWU members.

The union has represented maintenance workers at the university, including maids, elevator operators, and sanitation and power plant employes, since 1945. When the cafeteria workers asked for union recognition recently they were turned down.

University officials said the request was refused because its dining halls "were not a proper place for union organization." When an election proposal by the union was turned down, the workers walked out. The following day, 570 TWU maintenance workers refused to cross their picket lines.

TWU Pres. Michael J. Quill cabled Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, on leave as president of Columbia, in Paris "urgently" requesting him to intervene on behalf of the cafeteria workers.

Eisenhower replied that due to his "completely inactive status" so far as the university is concerned, he "could not possibly express an opinion about any feature of their current program and activities."

COMMENTING on Eisenhower's expressed confidence in Columbia officials, Quill declared "there is not even a glimmer of confidence in our minds that they are not at all concerned with the interests either of the students or the striking employes."

The student body turned a deaf ear to an appeal for volunteers for housekeeping chores with pay. The school was finally able to round up 34 individuals to man elevators at rush hours and to work in the power plant. The strike-breaking elevator operators were being paid 19c an hour more than the $1.25 regular rate, while those in the power plant were being paid $1.50 hourly, 8c above the union minimum scale.

Quill called upon the 600,000 members of the New York City CIO Council, of which he is president, "to help win this battle." AFL Teamsters, heeding an appeal from Quill to halt deliveries of food, milk, laundry, education supplies and other items, refused to cross the picket lines and were dumping deliveries on curbstones.

Brehm Appeal Turned Down

The U. S. Court of Appeals last week upheld the conviction of Rep. Brehm (R. O.) on a charge of accepting about $1000 in campaign contributions from Mrs. Emma Craven, formerly a clerk in his office.

A jury found him guilty in April 1951. He was given a suspended sentence of five to 15 months in jail and was fined $5000. He paid the fine, and has continued to serve in Congress. He is not a candidate for re-election.

Steel Strike Called Off

Seizure Ruling Challenged In Courts

Decisive Pay Talks On

—SEE PAGES 2, 3, 4, 5

Judge Pine's Seizure Decision Curtails Power Of President

PRESIDENT TRUMAN'S action in seizing the steel industry to maintain production in the present crisis was declared illegal last week by Judge David A. Pine in Federal District Court in Washington.

"There is no express grant of power in the Constitution authorizing the President to direct his seizure," he ruled.

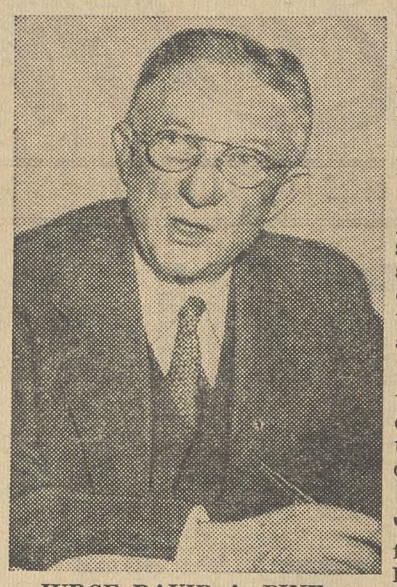
"There is no grant of power from which it can be implied.

"There is no enactment of Congress authorizing it."

Judge Pine's decision—for a few hours—restored the mills to private ownership.

But they were quickly returned to government control when the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals the next day granted a motion for a stay, thus putting the seizure order back in effect pending a Justice Dept. appeal of the Pine decision to the Supreme Court.

At the heart of Judge Pine's decision was the question of the powers of the President to act in a national emergency.



JUDGE DAVID A. PINE
"There is no grant of power..."

In arguing the case, Assistant Atty. Gen. Holmes Baldridge had told the court that although the Constitution limits Congress and the courts, it does not limit the power of the executive branch of the government to meet emergencies. Judge Pine commented that he had never heard such a concept before, and described it as "shocking."

In a letter made public over the weekend after the hearing, President Truman had specifically said he claimed no powers for the presidency outside the Constitution. His seizure of the steel mills, he wrote, was "within the powers of the president under the Constitution to act to preserve the safety of the nation."

In a supplemental memorandum filed a few hours before the decision, Baldridge said he may have been misunderstood during the oral arguments and denied claiming that the President possesses power outside the Constitution. He added:

"We have shown, by historic executive usage, legislative recognition and judicial precedent that the President possesses the constitutional power and duty to take action in a grave national emergency."

Judge Pine rejected this claim.

"I BELIEVE," he said in the decision, "that the contemplated strike, if it came, with all its awful results, would be less injurious to the public than the injury which would flow from a timorous judicial recognition that there is some basis for this claim to unlimited and unrestrained executive power, which would be implicit in a failure to grant the injunction.

"Such recognition would undermine public confidence in the very edifice of government as it is known under the Constitiuon."

The court also rejected Baldridge's argument that seizures of property, in peace and war, by former presidents had not been challenged despite the lack of a law.

"It is difficult to follow his argument," the decision said, "that several prior acts apparently unauthorized by law, but never questioned in the courts, by repetition clothe a later unauthorized act with the cloak of legality.

"Apparently, according to his theory, several repetitive, unchallenged, illegal acts sanctify those committed thereafter. I disagree."

JUDGE PINE also rejected the "stewardship argument set forth by President Theodore Roosevelt in his autobiography, which Balderidge had advanced.

"With all due deference and respect for that great President of the United States," Judge Pine observed, "I am obliged to say that his statements do not comport with our recognized theory of government, but with a theory with which our government of laws and not of men is constantly at war."

The court flatly denied Baldridge's claim that the presidential power, unlike that of Congress and the judiciary, is not limited.

"This contention requires a discussion of basic fundamental principles of constitutional government," said Judge Pine, "which I have always understood as immutable, absent a change in the framework of the Constition itself in the manner provided therein.

"The government of the United States was created by the ratification of the Constitution. It derives its authority wholly from the powers granted to it by the ratification of the Constitution, which is the only source of power authorizing action by any branch of the government.

"The office of President of the United States is a branch of the government, namely, that branch where the executive power is vested, and his powers are limited along with the powers of the two other great branches of government, namely, the legislative and the judicial."

Enough Said

Federal Judge David Pine's decision tossing out steel seizure was hailed thusly by John C. Gall, attorney for Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co.:

"The judge went all the way in our favor."

CIO Steelworkers were jubilant while picketing Armco Drainage & Metal Products Co., South Bend, Ind.

'Justice Is On Steel Union's Side,' IAM Says

"JUSTICE, if not the courts, is on the side of the steel workers in this struggle," Pres. A. J. Hayes of the AFL Machinists wrote CIO Steelworkers Pres. Philip Murray last week.

The letter advised Murray that the IAM Executive Council pledged "full moral and financial support" to the Steelworkers "in their strike against one of the most grasping and heartless groups of employers in the entire country."

"As it did to most thoughtful Americans, Judge Pine's decision . . . both shocked and amazed us," Hayes wrote. "This lower-court judge has forced the nation's steel workers on strike by his refusal to recognize the authority of the elected leader of the American people to act in an emergency.

"By granting a temporary injunction without a full hearing on its merits, the court has acted in unnecessary haste. Rather than preventing damage, it has caused irreparable harm to the entire nation.

"In our opinion, this decision jeopardizes almost a million Americans in uniform who are now outside the United States fighting and guarding American outposts and it jeopardizes the security of all Americans.

"The court has ruled, pending full hearings or an appeal, that the government of the United States has no authority to seize an industry even though the President judges that the failure of the steel industry to fulfill its obligation to abide by the recommendations of the Wage Stabilization Board will irreparably damage our ability to defend ourselves against Communism.

"Unless this decision is reversed by a higher court, big business, not the President of the United States, now appears to be holding the final power to make the decision as to what is or is not necessary in a defense emergency."

The text of the letter was printed by the Machinists in full-page advertisements in some New York and Washington newspapers.

Congress Works Up A Lather Of Oratory On Steel Decision

CONGRESS rode off in all directions at once last week in quest of an answer to the steel situation, but the only thing it worked up was a lather of oratory.

Most of the speeches and statements were inspired by politics rather than a desire to settle the issues raised by Federal Judge David A. Pine when he threw out the government's seizure of the industry. Some, however, made sense.

During the week seven assorted House and Senate committees were conducting hearings which, in many cases, served principally as sounding boards for their members. The House Judiciary Committee alone was considering nine separate pieces of legislation. These ranged all the way from resolutions approving President Truman's seizure action to a demand for his impeachment.

Sen. Morse (R. Ore.), who has upheld Truman's right to seize the industry was trying to get quick action on his bill giving the President seizure power. The bill sets up steps that would be required and establishes the right of Congress to reverse any seizure action.

Morse said it is "the clear duty of Congress to pass fair and workable legislation for settling disputes of a national emergency nature."

Sen. Lehman (D. N. Y.) recommended legislation giving the President "affirmative statutory power" to deal with such emergencies. He claimed Congress has an "unavoidable obligation" to act on such legislation immediately.

The legislation included a measure introduced by Rep. Smith (D. Va.), a notoriously anti-labor reactionary, which if applied to the present situation might keep members of the CIO Steelworkers in perpetual slavery.

HIS PLAN would be effective in any dispute of a national emergency nature only when the Taft-Hartley Act was invoked and there was no agreement at the end of the 80-day waiting period. Then, it provides, the attorney general would be required to petition a federal court to appoint receivers for both the union and the companies.

Operations would be continued by the receivers under supervision of the court, with both sides prohibited from interfering by strike, lockout or other means. Working conditions—including wages—could not be changed during the receivership. The government could mediate the dispute, but could not make any recommendations for settlement. The receiver would keep the plants operating either until the dispute was settled or the national emergency was ended—which might be for years or might be forever.

The House Armed Services Committee scheduled "immediate" hearings on the bill. Chairman Vinson (D. Ga.), said it appears "basically sound."

And so it went. Chairman Maybank (D. S.C.) of the Senate Banking Committee said he will introduce an anti-seizure amendment to the measure before his committee extends wage and price controls.

Sen. Kem (R. Mo.) said if things get bad enough, he'll offer a constitutional amendment outlawing seizures. Sen. Butler (R. Neb.) was willing to hold up action on his bill to return the mills to the owners until the courts have finished acting.

Sen. Taft (R. O.) thinks the President should use T-H "and exhaust all other legislative remedies" before asking Congress for new legislation and Rep. Bender (R. O.) had the same idea. This stand, as might be expected, disregarded the fact that a T-H anti-strike injunction extends for 80 days, whereas the USA-CIO had voluntarily postponed its walkout for 99 days up to the time the President seized the mills.

THE Republican who worked up nerve enough to introduce a resolution calling for President Truman's impeachment was Rep. Shafer (Mich.). He charged the President with a long list of "high crimes and misdemeanors" of which the steel seizure was but one. Chairman Celler (D. N. Y.) urged the House Judiciary Committee to sidetrack the motion, along with two others calling for "investigation" of the possibilities of impeachment, before they "split the nation wide open."

Steel Strike Ends; White House Seeks Pact

Pickets appeared at the Homestead, Pa., Works of U. S. Steel soon after strike orders went out the steel union's headquarters in Pittsburgh.

Night shift workers at the Chicago Works of U. S. Steel join CIO Steelworkers' pickets, who appeared shortly after Judge Pine issued ruling.

A NATION-WIDE strike by 650,000 CIO Steelworkers which had nailed the basic steel mills shut tight came to a sudden end late last week. It ended after three days of picketing, with the union seeking "a speedy settlement" of the long dispute in decisive White House conferences over the weekend.

USA-CIO Pres. Philip Murray issued a strike termination order last Friday, May 2, only after President Truman had set up White House meetings between the union and the six major steel producers.

The strike was touched off by a federal lower court decision ruling invalid the government's seizure of the steel industry.

It was ended only after effectiveness of that ruling was delayed by a higher court, with both the government and steel management taking appeals to the U. S. Supreme Court.

With seizure reinstated, Truman requested the steel union to end the strike, "in order that we may obtain the steel we must have for our national safety."

Murray agreed to the President's request after Truman set up the White House session for Saturday for renewed, direct bargaining in an effort to end the five-month long deadlock in steel.

The USA-CIO president, in messages to Truman and to the union membership, said he had abided by the request "in the national interest." And he urged the steelworkers "to return to work as soon as possible."

Shortly thereafter, picket lines were withdrawn and the first maintenance crews began returning to the mills.

In his message to USA-CIO members, Murray said "all developments will be reported" to the union's regular convention, opening in Philadelphia, May 13.

While the mills were getting back into operation, the Supreme Court was beginning definitive consideration of the legality of federal seizure of the steel industry.

The situation at the weekend was that the government was asking a reversal of the injunction issued by District Judge David A. Pine returning the mills to private management. He had issued the injunction after tossing out Truman's seizure order as unconstitutional.

Lawyers for the steel industry, at the same time, were trying to get the Supreme Court to hogtie the government. They asked the high court to ban any government action increasing steel wages (which the appeals court had refused to do) and also to force the government to turn over the mills.

CIO counsel were considering entering the latter case with a "friend of the court" brief opposing the moves of steel management.

Before the termination of the strike, there were these consecutive developments in the swift - moving steel situation earlier in the week:

- Truman's seizure order was ruled unconstitutional, illegal and invalid by Judge Pine late on Apr. 29.
- Murray then tersely alerted all locals that the decision "ousting the government from possession of the steel plants leaves the members of the union with no alternative but to cease work immediately in the absence of collective bargaining contracts."
- In Pittsburgh, Gary, South Chicago, Cleveland, Buffalo, Baltimore and all the nation's steel centers, USA-CIO members forthwith began quitting their jobs and setting up picket lines.
- The government then went in to the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals, to get a 5-to-4 decision staying Judge Pine's decision. That had the effect of reinstating the seizure until the government goes to the Supreme Court for a final ruling.
- The Appeals Court, also 5-to-4, turned down a plea by steel company lawyers for an injunction against any wage increase action by the U. S.
- Sec. of Commerce Charles E. Sawyer urged the union and management to resume bargaining, saying there is "enough leeway on all fronts"—both wages and prices—to get a settlement.

This paralleled Murray's statement, as the strike began, that "I think the companies should meet with us and negotiate further on the basis of the recommendations of the WSB."

Sawyer said "the important thing at the moment" is for the union and the industry to get together and "reach an agreement." He also said Congress should "consider promptly" a bill authorizing industry seizures.

Sawyer hinted the government might be willing to give the steel firms—who want a $12 a ton price increase—more than the $3 price boost already authorized by the Office of Price Stabilization under the Capehart amendment.

He cited the revelation of OPS Chief Ellis Arnall that some weeks ago he had offered the steel barons $4.50 a ton.

Sawyer's bid for a resumption of negotiations came after Justice Dept. spokesmen had declared they would seek an anti-strike injunction against the Steelworkers once the seizure order was put back in effect. But such action was not forthcoming immediately.

Judge Pine's decision that seizure was invalid in effect said that the steel workers were free to strike.

Heart of his ruling was "there is no express grant of power in the Constitution authorizing the President to direct his seizure. There is no grant of power from which it can be implied. There is no enactment of Congress authorizing it."

Next morning, Judge Pine issued an injunction setting aside the seizure. Late that day, on Apr. 30, the Appeals Court granted the stay which restored the seizure pending a government appeal to the Supreme Court. The Appeals Court with its refusal to bar the government from increasing steel wages and granting other improvements recommended by the Wage Stabilization Board six weeks ago.

The major WSB recommendations are a 12½c hourly increase retroactive to Jan. 1, 5c hourly in subsequent hikes, the union shop and six paid holidays.

They are the major issues in the long steel deadlock.

Judge Pine's decision which touched off the strike was announced at 4:45 p.m. on Apr. 29.

A half hour later, USA-CIO Pres. Murray issued the strike alert.

By 6 p.m., first reports of picketing were coming in from the steel cities.

Basic Issues In Steel

The CIO Steelworkers are demanding these recommendations of the Wage Stabilization Board:

A wage increase of 17.5c an hour in three installments, the first of 12.5c retroactive to last Jan. 1 and the other of 2.5c each on July 1 and on Jan. 1, 1953.

The union shop, the exact form to be negotiated.

An 18-month contract dated Jan. 1, 1952.

Reduction in the present southern differential to 5c an hour, and increase in the shift differentials to 6c for the second shift and 9c in the third shift.

Severance pay, reporting allowance and other issues to be subject to further bargaining.

Six paid holidays, with double time if worked.

Three weeks vacation after 15 years.

Time and a quarter for all Sunday work beginning Jan. 1, 1953.

They Want To Get In On The Gravy

Some radio station managers are getting peeved at the steel industry.

The complaint: Steel management is spending big sums for newspaper advertising—but begging for free time from the radio and television networks.

Variety, the show business trade paper, carried a letter of complaint from Robert Lemon, manager of Station WTTV in Bloomington, Ind., on the subject under the heading "Steel's Big Steal."

Lemon commented that the radio and TV industry "do not expect to be thanked" for carrying the recent speech by Clarence Randall of Inland Steel, who spoke on all networks in answer to President Truman.

"But that radio and television should be absolutely ignored when steel wanted and needed to further tell its story by way of paid advertising is hardly something that our industry is happy about," Lemon complained.

Murray Statement On Strike End

In calling off the national steel strike, USA-CIO Pres. Murray sent this letter to President Truman on May 2:

IN REPLY to your letter of May 1 which I have just received, and in accordance with your request and in the national interest, I have urged the members of the United Steelworkers of America to return to work as soon as possible in the plants involved in our dispute with the steel industry.

I likewise, pursuant to your request, will be at the White House, together with my associates, on Saturday morning, May 3 to meet with you and the presidents of the six major steel companies.

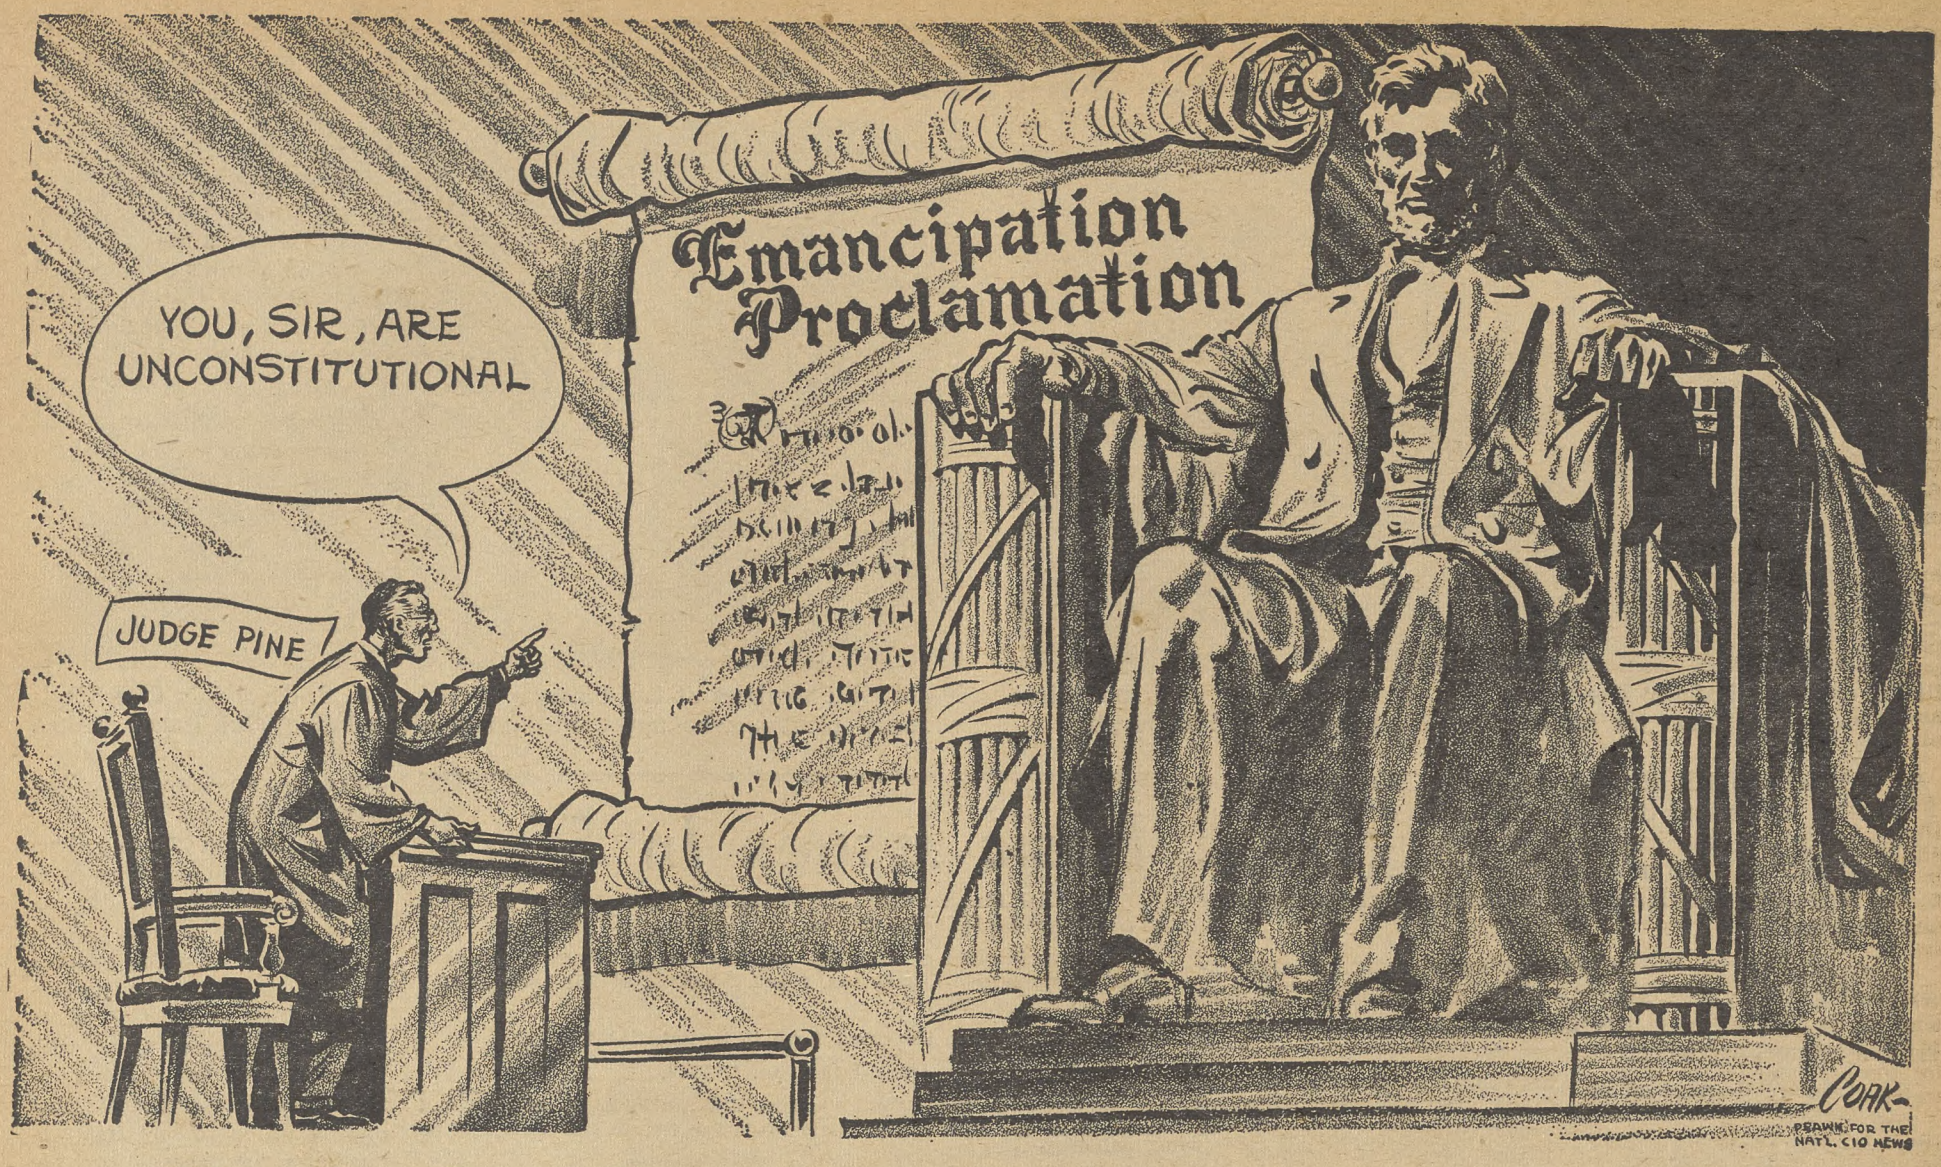
I enclose a copy of my statement advising the members of the Union of my aceptance of your request.

Following is the statement by Murray to officers and members of the union:

THE PRESIDENT of the United States has requested the members of the United Steelworkers of America to return to work as soon as possible and has simultaneously invited the President of your Union and the presidents of the six major steel companies to meet with him at the White House on Saturday morning at 10 a.m. for the purpose of arriving at a speedy settlement of the dispute in the steel indutsry.

On behalf of the Union and in the national interest, I have accepted the request of the President and hereby urge you to return to work as soon as possible.

All developments will be reported at the constitutional convention of our Union meeting at Philadelphia commencing May 13 and will be subject to convention consideration and ratification.



Injunction Granted

There was bitterness in the hearts of steel workers when the news of Judge Pine's decision was flashed to the nation. In steel towns like Duquesne and Youngstown, Gary and Indiana Harbor, it's possible to get a more realistic view of the steel situation than in the ivory tower of a judicial study.

The men on the picket line could see—as perhaps the judge could not—that the injunction slapped on the government was a reward handed to the corporations for arrogance, for dis-service to the public welfare, for refusal to deal squarely with a responsible union and its patriotic members.

Whatever the higher courts may decide, in this complex problem of constitutionality, the workers in steel will not forget that essential fact.

To the steel workers, the fine constitutional points of the seizure and the injunction must yield first importance to the blunt reality that after more than 120 days, they have not yet received their just wage increase recommended by an agency of the federal government.

As for Judge Pine: The same legal theory that provided return to the steel plants to their mis-managers would have returned the slaves freed by Abe Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation, to their "owners." Enemies of slavery can rejoice that Judge Pine was born some 30 years after that Proclamation was issued.

'Iron Curtain' Immigration Bill Passes House Without Roll Call

VOTING with no realization of the many undemocratic "booby-traps" buried in the highly technical and voluminous measure, the House on Apr. 25 approved the McCarran-Walter "iron curtain" immigration bill by a standing vote of 206 to 68.

Despite the overwhelming majority, supporters of the measure indicated clearly that they were worried about the consequences of their vote.

They twice defeated efforts by Rep. Javits (R.-Lib. N.Y.) to make them put their stand on record by means of a roll call. In this they were at least consistent—the good old democratic practice of standing up and being counted would certainly have been out of keeping with the many anti-democratic provisions of the measure.

The measure has been opposed by Protestant, Catholic and Jewish organizations, the American Bar Association, the Association of Immigration and Nationality Lawyers, as well as the CIO and many other groups especially concerned with immigration matters. It was railroaded through the House after less than three days of debate.

Opponents of the measure were allowed only three minutes each to express their disagreement, although the bill is a full-sized book.

Every attempt to make a major change was shouted down.

Misrepresentations and parliamentary subterfuges used by supporters had reached such a point by the last day of debate that many Congressmen even questioned CIO's often-publicized opposition.

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, advised of this situation, promptly telephoned Rep. Roosevelt (D. N.Y.) the following message:

"The statement issued by Nathan Cowan, CIO legislative director, in opposition to the McCarran-Walter Bill definitely represents the position of the National CIO and of all affiliated organizations that have had an opportunity to express themselves on this misguided proposal."

Without question, passage of the bill was in large part due to the esteem of House members for Rep. Walter (D. Pa.). He is a middle of the roader with a better-than-average voting record, despite its serious shortcomings last session on tidelands, "wetback" and public power measures.

Without doubt, the Walter Bill is an improvement on its 302-page Senate counterpart. It is, nevertheless, based upon McCarran's draft. Although Walter's committee made 42 amendments to take out some of the Senator's more glaring stabs at democratic fundamentals, many objectionable provisions sneaked through.

The Senate Judiciary Committee has already approved McCarran's bill, which is on the calendar for early action. Sens. Humphrey (D. Minn.) and Lehman (D. N.Y.), with the backing of a number of others, have introduced a substitute measure, but it is buried in McCarran's committee and lacks Senate status.

The Humphrey-Lehman bill, developed after many months of conferences, attempts to present what Humphrey calls "a reasonable and honorable alternative to the McCarran-Walter Bill." Public support has been spontaneously forthcoming for the substitute measure, but it has had no consideration whatever in McCarran's committee.

CIO is fighting to get the Senate to refer the McCarran-Walter Bill back to the committee for further consideration and hearings.

Chicago CIO Hits Sales Tax

THE CHICAGO CIO Council has urged the city to turn "thumbs down" on a proposed municipal sales tax.

Sec. Ellsworth M. Smith of the Chicago CIO told the City Council's finance committee that the proposed tax of a half of 1% would "fall more heavily upon those least able to pay taxes."

"Since working people spend a far larger proportion of their income on items covered by a sales tax than do the wealthy, the tax weighs disproportionately heavy upon them," Smith continued.

"It has been the universal experience that once a sales tax is imposed, it is never lifted. Its unfairness will thus be forever perpetuated."

Truman Elected By Steel Local

President Truman has a new honorary membership — in the CIO Steelworkers.

By a unanimous vote, he was elected a member of USA-CIO Local 1557, with 6000 members, in Pittsburgh, Pa., according to local Pres. Joseph A. Vitori.

Steel Prices And Profits -- Here Are The Facts

FACTS and figures used by the steel industry in its attempt to grab a $12 a ton price increase have been punctured by the Office of Price Stabilization.

The spike which OPS uses to take the air out of the fancy facts and figures of steel management is a pamphlet entitled "The People's Stake" and subtitled "Stabilization and Steel Prices."

The report says:

"A price increase such as the one demanded by the steel industry to offset the wage increase recommended by the Wage Stabilization Board cannot be justified—either on the basis of public policy or sound facts and figures."

Refusal of the steel companies to make any offer to the CIO Steelworkers without getting the $12 a ton price increase —much more than the cost of the WSB proposals—was a key factor in the dispute. The industry maintained that position for five months—during negotiations and hearings before the WSB and even after the government seized the mills.

The report says:

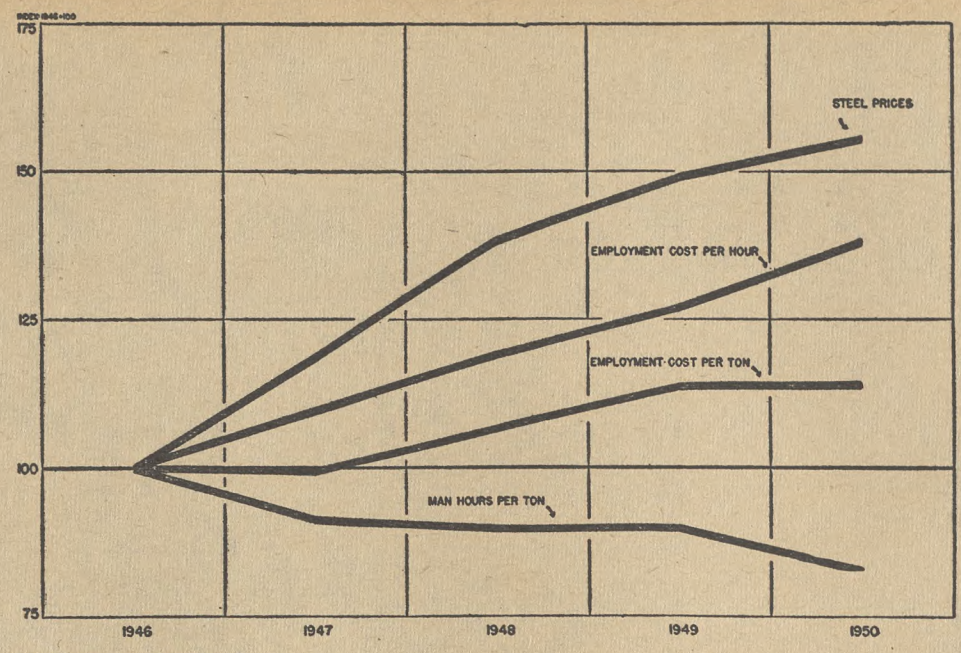
In "The People's Stake," OPS says that if the proposed WSB wage increases and fringe benefits are put into effect in the steel mills alone, the average cost for the year 1952 would be $3.43 per ton and $3.97 for the entire proposed contract of 18 months.

"In the case of a fully integrated operation, the cost would work out as follows: $3.49 for the first half of 1952; $4.58 for the second half of 1952; $5.94 for the first half of 1953," the pamphlet states.

"The average cost for the whole year 1952 would be $4.03. The average for the 18 months would be $4.67.

"The higher figure assumes that wage increases in coal and ore mines and in limestone quarries would be equal to those in the steel mills as to both terms and effective dates.

"Therefore, the higher figures are somewhat exaggerated because the coal miners have not yet asked for a wage increase, and, whenever they receive one and whatever it may be, it will not be retroactive to Jan. 1, 1952, as in the case of the steel mills.



STEEL PRICES have far outdistanced labor costs not only per hour but also per ton, while man hours required to produce a ton have sharply fallen from 1946 to 1950, according to this chart prepared by the Office of Price Stabilization.

"BUT EVEN in the face of these figures, the steel industry has insisted that it will require a $12 per ton ceiling price increase."

OPS also demolishes the steel industry's argument that when labor costs go up a dollar, the cost of products and services needed by a steel plant rises by another dollar.

"A general increase in steel wages in December, 1950, raised employment costs per ton by about $3.80 on the average," OPS recalls.

"At the same time, steel prices were raised in excess of $8 per ton. Yet, OPS figures indicate that since December, 1950, there has been virtually no net change in the cost of purchased services and materials for the steel industry.

"Actually, the cost of the most important single item—steel scrap—was reduced as the result of action taken by OPS and is now lower than it was in December, 1950."

Then the OPS report pointed out:

"It is true that in the past the steel industry has often followed the practice, when granting wage increases, of raising its prices by a substantially greater amount than the increase in the labor costs.

"The effect of this policy has been to steadily increase its profits per ton from a level of $9 in 1947 to an average of more than $20 in 1951."

The pamphlet explains that there are two ways that industry can get a price increase. One is under the Capehart amendment which permits a company to raise price ceilings so that they equal pre-Korean selling prices plus all increases and decreases in cost up to July, 1951.

Economic Stabilizer Roger Putman—on the recommendation of OPS—has already said that the steel industry is entitled to a $3 a ton Capehart price boost.

The industry also is entitled to a price increase if it can show that its return on the stockholders' investment before taxes falls below 85% of the level enjoyed in the years 1947-49.

Under this criterion, which is the same as Congress used in the excess profits tax law, the steel industry cannot receive a price increase.

"DURING the three years 1947-49, steel industry earnings averaged slightly more than $11 per ton compared to the $20 earned last year," OPS says.

"Even if we used the outside figure of $6 per ton as the cost of the wage increase throughout the entire 18 months' period, and assume other conditions unchanged, the average profit per ton for the 18 months (January 1952-June 1953) would fall to about $14.

"But under the Capehart Amendment, the steel industry could receive a price increase averaging almost $3 per ton. Thus, after the wage increase and the Capehart price increase, profits per ton, for all these 18 months would be about $17.

"For 1952, the profits per ton would be not less than $18. These compare favorably with the average profit of $11 per ton during the prosperous pre-Korean base period."

Stalin 'Peace' Prize Urged For Knowland's Steel Role

SEN. KNOWLAND (R.-Cal.) was nominated last week for a Stalin "Peace" Prize for his pro-management maneuvers in the steel situation.

He got the nomination from a fellow Californian, Sec.-Treas. John A. Despol of the State CIO Council.

Knowland had spearheaded congressional efforts to cut off all funds for federal seizure of the steel industry. His proposal was narrowly defeated in the Senate a few days before Federal District Judge David Pine invalidated the seizure action.

In a blistering letter to the senator, Despol nominated Knowland for "a special citation by Stalin for service rendered to the Kremlin with total disregard to your duty and allegiance to the U.S. in aiding the Soviets in their propaganda war against the Federal anti-inflation, wage and price stabilization program."

Despol charged Knowland had "aligned" himself both with the Communist Party and "the steel barons who are irresponsibly trying to force a shut down to obtain an extortionate price increase from the President."

"These steel barons," he pointed out, "are insisting that they be the sole exception to price and wage stabilization. Apparently you are acting under the delusion that the nation is in a cold war with President Truman, instead of the Kremlin."

In another congressional development, the New Jersey CIO Council urged Sens. Hendrickson and Smith (R. N.J.) to oppose the Dirksen proposal to kill the Wage Stabilization Board.

Council Pres. Carl Holderman denounced the Dirksen proposal as "another attempt to line up Congress behind the steel corporations" and as "identical with the Lucas amendment (which) was overwhelmingly rejected by the House."

A "Stalin peace prize."

Step-By-Step To Steel Tieup

Here is a step-by-step account of the steel dispute:

Nov. 27—Negotiations began.

Dec. 17—USA-CIO Executive Board and Wage Policy Committee set midnight, Dec. 31, as strike deadline.

Dec. 27—After President Truman appealed to the union to postpone a strike pending Wage Stabilization Board hearings, the USA-CIO Executive Board and Policy Committee delayed the strike until a special convention.

Jan. 4—The convention postponed strike action for 45 days.

Feb. 21—The union set a strike deadline for midnight, Mar. 23, to allow the WSB time to make recommendations—the third strike postponement.

Mar. 20 and 21—The Executive Board and Wage Policy Committee accepted the WSB recommendations, an action which again averted a strike.

Mar. 30 — Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson resigned after trying to undermine the WSB recommendations.

Apr. 8—President Truman seized the steel mills, thus averting a strike set for Apr. 9, after negotiations with the companies broke down.

Apr. 29—Judge Pine ruled the seizure illegal and the strike—postponed five times—began.

May 2—At President Truman's request, CIO Steelworkers Pres. Philip Murray called off the strike.

Feinsinger Takes On Foes At C. of C., Keeps His Skin

CHAIRMAN Nathan P. Feinsinger of the Wage Stabilization Board threw himself to the wolves at the 40th annual meeting of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States in Washington last week and retired with skin intact.

He spoke—a few hours before the government's seizure of the steel mills was declared illegal —at a luncheon session devoted to business under wage and price controls. He used the opportunity not only to defend the WSB role in the steel case, but to take the offensive away from those who were out for his scalp.

He made one prediction that came true before the day was out. A questioner wanted to know how the steel dispute was to be settled "when" the WSB recommendations and the seizure were "thrown out" by the courts.

"There is only one place where it can be settled," Feinsinger answered, "and that's around the bargaining table—and that won't be long.

"But if the courts act against the seizure—there'll be trouble."

"If your straight time average hourly earnings are as high as, or higher than, steel," he demanded of his audience (mostly employers), "I ask whether in that period you have not paid or did not expect to pay a cents-per-hour figure as high as, or more than, the 13¾c recommended for steel."

"The country isn't going to hell in a basket because of the steel case or any other case," he concluded. "Our democracy is too tough and too strong."

The CIO News was unable to determine if the sentiment expressed in a resonant bass in the rear as Feinsinger finished was that of the entire audience. It rumbled:

"Ought send 'im back to Russia!"

'My Gracious!'

The steel strike came at an untimely moment for Big Steel —just a few minutes after it had voted its usual 75c quarterly dividend.

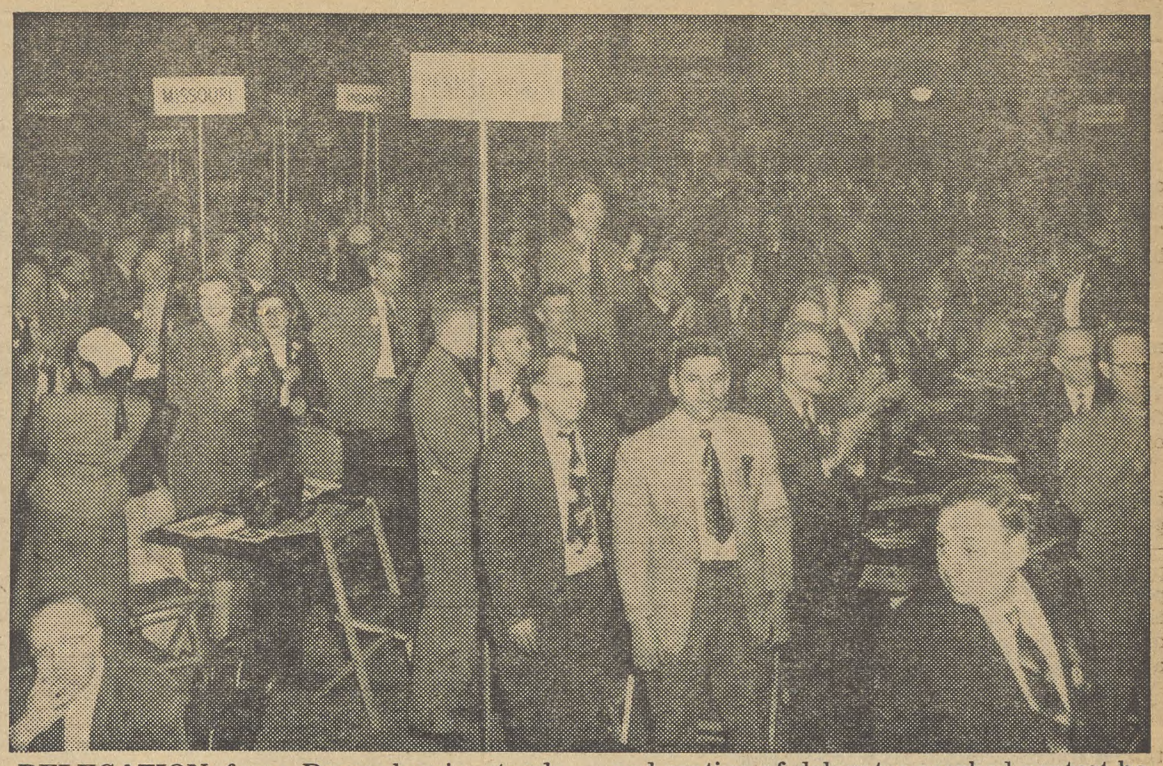
When Irving S. Olds, U. S. Steel Corp. board chairman, was told of the court decision ending government seizure, his comment was:

"What . . . my gracious."

Big Steel's 1952 first quarter showed record production, with total sales at $864 million, an increase of $45 million over the same quarter of 1951. Net profit for the latest quarter was $43 millions, a slight drop because of tax increases, but earnings averaged $1.43 a share.

Rieve, Supporters Win In Textile Union Showdown

"ORDER IN THE HALL."—Pres. Emil Rieve (left) of CIO Textile Workers calls convention to order so Sam Baron, former Canadian director, can speak.



DELEGATION from Pennsylvania stands to applaud a decision of the Textile Workers convention. Tense debate on proceedings and seating of delegates marked contest between Rieve and Baldanzi forces at the convention.

By WILLIAM W. WEISS

EMIL RIEVE was reelected to the presidency of the CIO Textile Workers Union of America and carried his 26-man slate to victory at the union's seventh biennial convention in Cleveland last week.

He defeated George Baldanzi for the top post in a show of strength which had been apparent to observers since the convention opened. The tally was 1223 to 720.

Baldanzi, executive vice president of the union, was not a candidate for that office. Mariano Bishop, Fall River, Mass., a vice president of the union and the administration candidate, defeated Joseph L. Hueter, manager of the Philadelphia Textile Workers Joint Board, for the executive vice president's position by a count of 1248 to 698.

William Pollock was returned to office as secretary-treasurer, defeating Lewis Conn, North Carolina State director, by 1253 votes to 682.

The ballots were counted by the Honest Ballot Association.

Outcome Foreseen

The election climaxed a tense week, during which charges and counter-charges were hurled by both sides. From the opening day's session on, however, the outcome was never in doubt. At that time, the convention approved by a three-to-one margin a partial report of the credentials committee after heated discussion during which Baldanzi demanded a "specific and detailed list of delegates."

Sam Baron, a vice president who last year was removed by Rieve as the union's Canadian director, charged that the committee's action in failing to provide the convention with a list of delegates "instead of a blind list by states" was undemocratic. He is a Baldanzi supporter.

Administration forces scored another victory on the opening day. The convention approved a rules committee report from which the Baldanzi group sought to have stricken a provision which made it mandatory for a delegate to vote for all 20 vice presidencies, or have his ballot invalidated.

Baldanzi charged that the provision was aimed at forcing him to lead a full slate against Rieve and his supporters.

Repeatedly during the session Rieve asked the delegates, from 33 states and five Canadian provinces, to refrain from booing speakers, and cautioned them to avoid what he termed "gutter language" while speaking from the floor. He branded as false charges that the convention was "packed and undemocratic." On one occasion he called the argument of a minority speaker "a lot of blah-blah."

In his keynote address, Rieve called on the delegates to settle "once and for all" his dispute with Baldanzi. He maintained that "another two years of internal conflict will be a serious blow to our union." Accusing Baldanzi of "attempting to disrupt the Textile Workers," he said the latter had not acted as an executive assistant, but as "an executive opponent" during the past two years.

At the union's Boston convention two years ago, Baldanzi defeated Bishop for the executive vice presidency. At that time both factions agreed to attempt to work together, but the effort was short-lived.

Reports that a secession movement resulting from Baldanzi's defeat would be led by Dyers Local 1733 of Paterson, N. J., were denied by Charles Lazzio, president of the local. Baldanzi has said he does not want to see a secession movement develop.

Rieve discounted the rumors and said "the union is now going to function for the good of the membership. He indicated there "probably" would be some staff changes.

Baldanzi said he had no plans for the future.

The Textile Workers served notice on the industry that there will be no compromise in the union's drive to organize the unorganized textile workers of the nation.

The delegates heard Rieve warn that they can expect little aid from the Congress to be elected this year.

"We must roll up our sleeves, pull in our belts and do the job ourselves," he said.

In his keynote address, Rieve delivered a slashing attack on federal and state legislation which has enabled employers to resist the union's organizing drives.

Holds Its Ground

He pointed out that TWUA, "despite great frustrations and serious defeats" during the past two years, "has been able to hold its ground and launch several counter-offensives."

"The record of the employers is one of cruel repression and calculated profiteering," he said. "But the record also shows that our enemies have not gotten away with the murder they contemplated."

Making an over-all analysis of the union's gains since the last convention in 1950, Rieve revealed that 286 new agreements covering 23,183 workers have been signed. In addition, bargaining rights have been secured for 7329 more workers in plants where contracts have not yet been negotiated.

"Despite the multiple handicaps imposed upon us by the economic, legal and political forces united to drive us out of existence, our strength is even greater than mere figures can show," he said.

"Serious as our losses have been because of lessened employment in the industry, we have managed to redress them through new organization. Thus we now represent over 400,000 workers, the same number as two years ago, while our present roster of 1575 contracts is actually higher than at that time."

Charging the industry with "social irresponsibility" and refusal to heed the lessons of the past, Rieve said it has pursued "policies of the narrowest self-interest, without regard to the welfare of its workers, its consumers or the general community."

He condemned the growth of centralized management in the industry whereby policy is set and control is exercised from offices far removed from the mills. He said such a policy widens the distance between management and workers.

While holding its own in this country, TWUA has made steady and impressive organizational gains in Canada, Rieve pointed out. During the past two years, the union has organized 26 Canadian textile mills employing nearly 2000 workers.

TWUA now represents more than 20% of all primary textile workers in the Dominion. Out of approximately 100.000 workers in the industry there, 20,000 are employed in plants under TWUA contract. They belong to 89 locals and six joint boards.

Rieve delivered a scathing denunciation of the Taft-Hartley Act, terming it a "fortress behind which employers who wish to operate open shops have been able to insulate themselves from unions."

Haywood Speaks

Calling for redoubled efforts to repeal the act, Rieve said with all its legal technicalities, it has become "a full employment bill for lawyers."

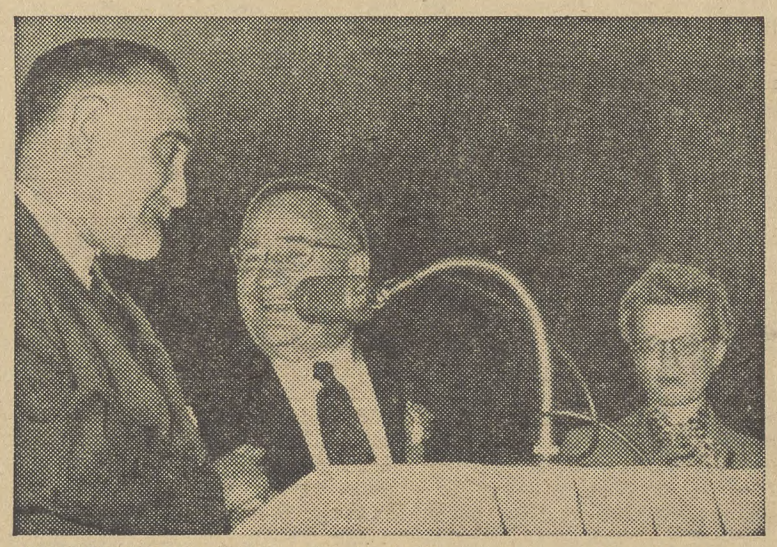
Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president, in a major address said the court order ending the government's seizure of the steel mills simply proved that "steel cannot be made by injunctions."

The procurement policies of the Army were sharply assailed by Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers. He was also sharply critical of the tax exemptions granted non-union plants and declared that such techniques "contribute toward the severe unemployment situation in both the textile and apparel industries."

He charged that "Pentagon officials are encouraging 'chiselers and fly-by-nights' to create ghost towns by their present methods of awarding contracts."

Urging greater non-military aid under auspices of the Mutual Security Agency, Potofsky warned against "dubious alliances" with Franco, Peron and the neo-Nazis of Western Germany.

He denounced the current "tug-of-war" with the Soviet Union for the loyalty of the "most degenerate elements" in the new Germany which, he said, "may well become the monster it once was."



"CHISELERS and fly-by-nights" are favored by Pentagon contract awards, causing layoffs in textile and clothing industries, Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers told TWUA parley. He's greeted on platform by TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve.

Tumult On Floor Marked Textile Union Convention

Murray Says Steel Tried To Alter Rules Of Game

CIO PRES. Philip Murray concluded his address to the Textile Workers' convention at the precise moment Federal Judge David A. Pine handed down his decision voiding President Truman's seizure of the steel industry.

Ironically, the theme of his speech was "The Rules of the Game."

In his address, Murray accused the steel industry of failure to abide by and respect the rules it helped formulate for the settlement of labor-management disputes through the Wage Stabilization Board. He charged management with being "directly responsible" for the continuing dispute.

"In the end I am confident in my own heart and soul that the steel workers will be able to protect themselves in this fight," he said. "They are going to do just that."

Most of his speech was devoted to a review of the steel case and the industry's refusal to bargain collectively with the union on its demands. He said the companies forced the dispute into the WSB and then rejected the board's recommendations for a wage settlement, plus the union shop.

"At the beginning of the case," he said, "the industry pridefully recorded its evidence and spoke boastingly in portions of the record about the esteem in which it held the public members of the board."

The industry knew the rules then and made no complaint, he said. Then he pointed out that after the board returned its recommendations, the industry attacked it and engaged in a "diabolic campaign" of national advertising condemning President Truman, the board and the steel union.

He charged that "at no time since the beginning of the so-called collective bargaining sessions has the industry attempted to bargain in good faith with us."

When he was informed of Judge Pine's ruling at the conclusion of his address, he declared that the Steelworkers "had no alternative but to cease work immediately."

Debate Delays Murray's Speech

The CIO Textile Workers have the greatest admiration for CIO Pres. Philip Murray. And they were glad to have him as the principal speaker at their convention.

Nevertheless, Murray had to wait 15 minutes in an anti-room of Cleveland's Public Auditorium while delegates heatedly debated a credentials committee ruling.

When he eventually was introduced, Murray said he had "been listening" to the discussion which reminded him of "many situations in which I have participated."

'Conspiracy' To Break Unions Charged To Textile Mill Owners In Senate Report

THE SOUTHERN textile industry has engaged in a "widespread conspiracy" to bust unions and it has been aided greatly by the Taft-Hartley Act, a report of the Senate Labor subcommittee said last week.

"Primitive policies, including use of the National Guard, ex parte injunctions, violence, espionage, and intemperate verbal attacks, are still being used on a large scale to combat union organization," Chairman Humphrey (D. Minn.) said in releasing the report.

"On the one hand, the Taft-Hartley Act has encouraged these excesses and on the other, it has failed to provide an effective remedy for such abuses."

Based on 1950 hearings, the report deals specifically with strikes and violence resulting from efforts of the CIO Textile Workers Union to organize or bargain for employes of American Enka Corp., Morristown, Tenn.; Anchor Rome Mills, Rome, Ga.; American Thread Co., Tallapoosa, Ga.; Celanese Corp., Rome, Ga., and several mills in Anderson, S. C.

The report, approved by 11 of the 13 members of the full Senate Labor Committee, declares that Taft-Hartley has encouraged antiunion employers and "has in fact served as cover for the ambush of pioneering unions with limited resources."

Sens. Taft (R. O.) and Nixon (R. Calif.) joined in a minority report charging that the majority had issued "an amazing an unjustified slur" on the South. In his introduction, however, Humphrey emphasized that the committee's findings were not limited to geography and that similar abuses under Taft-Hartley were found throughout the country.

The report quotes testimony by CIO Textile Worker Pres. Emil Rieve:

"I charge that there exists in the textile industry, primarily in the South, a widespread conspiracy to prevent union organization and to destroy those unions which now exist."

The report adds that "evidence before the subcommittee goes far to substantiate Mr. Rieve's charge."

Condon Gets Joint Backing

ROBERT CONDON, a veteran liberal and pro-labor member of the California Legislature, has received joint labor backing in his campaign for Congress.

Condon, a Democrat, is running in California's new 6th District covering Contra Costa and Solano counties in the San Francisco Bay Area.

Following endorsement by the CIO County Council PAC, Condon also got the backing of AFL and Railroad Brotherhood officials, and a joint labor program to support his candidacy is under way.

The Contra Costa CIO Council also has named George Kelty, of OWIU, as a full-time PAC director.

Life In Kannapolis

'Hear No Unionism, Speak No Unionism, See No Unions'

SOUTHERN TEXTILE mill owners can't stand to have their workers hear CIO radio programs.

Southern radio stations simply cannot afford to carry CIO programs, especially when the company controls the station and that is the case in Kannapolis, N. C., home of the giant Cannon cotton mill chain.

As a result of radio station WGTL's attempt to end weekly broadcasts by the CIO Textile Workers while a contract is still in effect, the Federal Communications Commission has been asked to intervene.

TWUA Rep. Joseph Pedigo said the Cannon Corp. controls the radio station, through ownership of theaters and buildings housing insurance and funeral establishments run by the same family that runs the radio station. Cannon also controls virtually every merchant who advertises on the station, he said.

"Kannapolis boasts that it is the largest unincorporated city in the nation," Pedigo pointed out. "Every foot of land, every building, including the post office, the railroad station, the churches and the schools are all owned by Cannon. The merchants pay a base rent, then must let Cannon audit their books every year, and pay an additional percentage of their profits to Cannon.

"Even Forbes Magazine, in its January 1952 issue, said that 'around Kannapolis, workers' private lives aren't their own. A man seen a little high in a local bar gets reported, may also get the axe.'" (LPA.)

'Dixiecrat Is A Northern GOP With You-All Accent'

SEN. HUMPHREY'S (D. Minn.) definition of a Dixiecrat sent the delegates to the CIO Textile Workers' convention into gales of laughter.

"A Dixiecrat is nothing more or less than a reactionary northern Republican with a Southern accent," Humphrey said.

He added the breed "is limited in number—a sort of prehistoric monstrosity, a hangover of a dying age."

But for the most part his speech was a serious attack on the Taft-Hartley Act.

Humphrey said that in the light of his experience as chairman of the Senate Labor-Management Relations subcommittee, which probed how the law hurt organization of the textile workers in the South, he was convinced that the law should be repealed.

He warned the delegates to prepare for a knock-down, carry-out fight with the country's "economic royalists." Humphrey said:

"We are going to have to make up our minds whether this country is going to move ahead in the line of social progress, in better standards of living for more and more people or whether or not we are going to . . . be forced to turn over this great national heritage of ours to the people that once before abused it . . ."

'Who Lost Europe?'

Dixiegops Vote Cut In Foreign Aid

THE ISOLATIONIST, Dixiegop coalition which has professed so much political "concern" over "Who lost China?" took the first steps last week toward posing a new —and much more tragic— question.

If coalition plans to butcher appropriations for the administration's Mutual Security Program are carried out in conjunction with the crippling of our own military build-up recently voted by the House, defense experts warn that the question may some day in the future become "Who lost Europe?"

The current fight on President Truman's foreign aid and defense program has been set up as a declared policy of Republican leaders, pushed forward with almost unanimous Dixiecrat support.

Last week, for example, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee voted a straight 12.66% slash across-the-board in the $7.9 billion budget for military and economic aid. That means a total committee cut of $1 billion.

MILITARY experts estimate that to get equivalent strength for defense by building up our own military might, anywhere from $6 billion to $12 billion must be spent in this country for each $1 billion spent abroad. This is due to higher U. S. production costs, higher pay for members of our armed forces, and similar factors.

Yet members of the committee voting for the cut were nearly all part of the so-called "economy" bloc in the Senate. They included Sens. Connally (Tex.) and George (Ga.), both Dixiecrats; Sparkman (D. Ala.), Gillette (D. Ia.), Wiley (R. Wis.), Smith (R. N.J.), Tobey (R., N. H.), Brewster (R. Me.) and Hickenlooper (R. Ia.).

Opposing the cut were Sens. Green (D. R.I.), McMahon (D. Conn.) and Fulbright (D. Ark.).

Despite the severe committee slash, Republican leaders indicate they will seek another cut almost as large on the Senate floor. Hickenlooper predicted the fight, and Sen. Taft (R. O.) threw his support to a GOP move to slice another $900 million.

This is too much even for Connally, no friend of foreign aid. He has promised to fight for the bill with the $1 billion cut as reported. It falls far short, however, of the fantastic demand of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce in testimony before the House Foreign Affairs Committee Apr. 22 that no money at all be voted for the program.

THERE was reason to speculate, however, if Hickenlooper was not also of the chamber's extreme isolationist view. After voting for the $1 billion cut, he alone of the committee merely voted "present" on the question of reporting the bill to the Senate which was done by an 8 to 0 vote.

The action is all the more serious in view of the House slash of $6 billion in military spending for U. S. armed forces next year.

Sec. of Defense Robert A. Lovett last week warned the Senate Appropriations Committee, now considering the measure, that it would require demobilization of "a substantial part" of our armed forces.

Sec. of the Air Force Thomas K. Finletter declared flatly that the cut would "increase the chances of war" and place the nation in greater danger of Russian atomic attack.

Rep. Rhodes Wins Over Labor Foes

Carrying every precinct in Pennsylvania's 14th Congressional District, Rep. Rhodes easily won renomination in the Democratic primary in the Reading area.

Rhodes won 78% of the vote in a campaign against former Mayor John F. Davis of Reading, who carried on a bitter anti-labor campaign.

Rhodes, a local and state AFL official, had united support of the CIO, AFL, railroad brotherhoods and independent voters.

U.S. Chamber Takes Lead In Drive To Kill Price Lids

THE DRIVE to kill all price controls predicted with the government's first "decontrol" action began to shape up clearly last week.

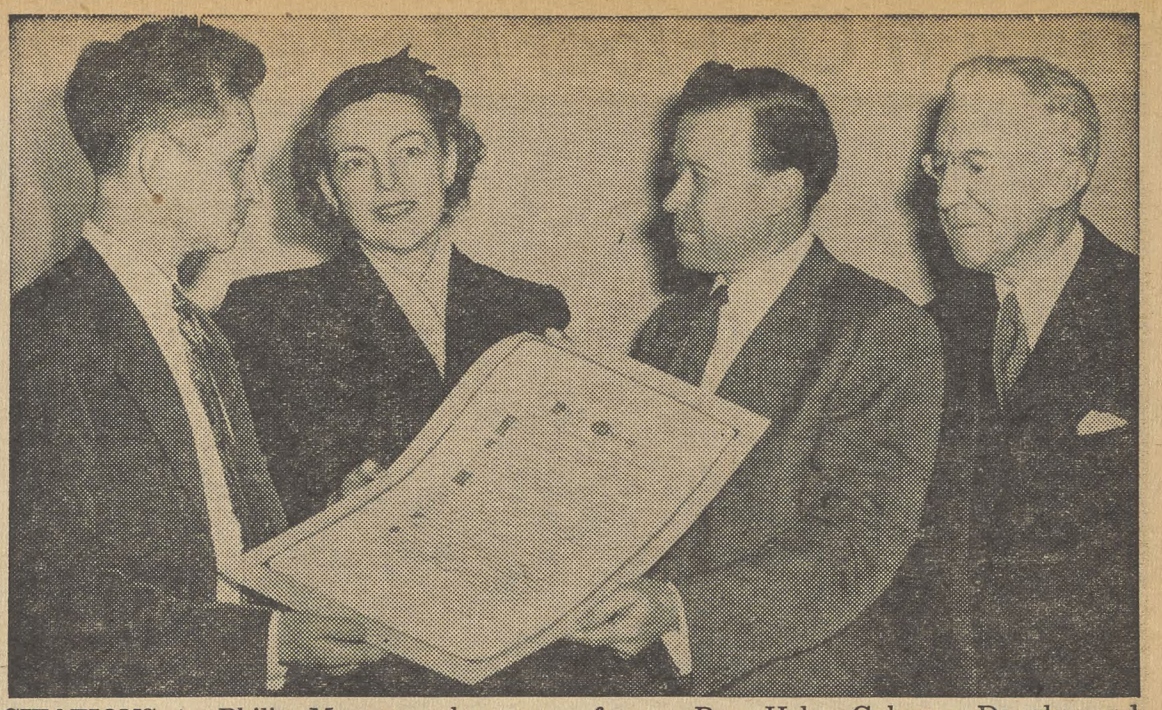
This time the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, rather than the National Association of Manufacturers, which led the fight in 1945, was the first to take up the ball. A policy declaration adopted by the Chamber at its 40th annual meeting demanded a "prompt" end to all price, rent, and wage controls.

The House and Senate Banking Committees, which have been stalling on legislation to extend the act another year, continued to use the threat to kill controls as a club against the Administration in the steel dispute.

At a hearing before the House committee, Rep. Kilburn (R. N.Y.) told Wage Stabilization Board Chairman Nathan Feinsinger that he thought Congress would let wage-price controls die unless the new law forbids WSB handling of labor disputes.

And Rep. Buffet (R. Neb.) declared he hopes Congress will get "so angry" about the government's handling of the steel case that it will let controls die "even if it is an election year."

These positions were not new, however, and reflected the same disregard of the public interest that the Dixiegop coalition exhibited last year in writing inflationary amendments into the controls law.



CITATIONS to Philip Murray, who was represented by CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, left, and John Haynes Holmes, right, were presented Apr. 26 on behalf of League for Industrial Democracy by actress and former Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas and CIO Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther, who was himself given one of the LID's first awards in 1950. In a presentation address Reuther lauded Murray's services.

'Philip Murray Day' Marked; Award Held Tribute To CIO Membership

PHILIP MURRAY was certainly present in the hearts of more than 600 persons who attended the 47th annual dinner of the League for Industrial Democracy on Apr. 26, although developments in the steel dispute prevented him from attending.

This year's affair, held in the grand ballroom of the Hotel Commodore in New York, scene of the CIO's convention last November, turned out, in fact, to be pretty much a "Philip Murray Day."

And John Haynes Holmes, Sidney Hook and Leland Olds, who were given league awards, were happy to help make it so.

Murray was presented the LID 1952 Award in honor of his 50 years of outstanding activity in the American labor movement. Holmes, pastor emeritus of the Community Church in New York, received a similar citation for 45 years of outstanding civic and ethical leadership.

OLDS, former head of the Federal Power Commission, and Hook, chairman of the philosophy department at New York Univ., were recipients of the John Dewey Awards to distinguished alumni of the LID for contributions to social progress.

The citation to Murray was presented by CIO Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther, who had himself received one of the league's first awards in 1950. CIO Sec.-Treas James B. Carey accepted the award on the CIO president's behalf.

In his presentation address, Reuther referred to this year's conference theme, "Needed: A Moral Awakening in America," and said that the selection of Murray as the recipient was especially appropriate in terms of the meeting's ethical emphasis.

"No one in public life today is more unselfishly dedicated to serving the people of America. No one has worked harder at applying basic moral values to bring about a solution of the economic, social and political problems facing America," Ruether declared.

Lambasting the steel industry for not realizing that "in a free society there is no substitute for moral and social responsibility," he said that in the current steel crisis, "Murray is performing a great public service in demonstrating that steelworkers and workers generally need to make progress with the whole community."

Accepting for Murray, Carey declared that "Pres. Murray would, of course, tell you today that you paid tribute not to him but to the great organization he leads. Pres. Murray's humility cannot, however, conceal the fact that much of the CIO's greatness derives from his own extraordinary leadership.

"Rarely does history produce, as it has in Philip Murray, a labor leader with so balanced a fusion of calm wisdom and inspiring militancy. If ever there was a moral reawakening in modern industrial America it came with the birth and early development of the CIO.

Emphasizing that the CIO grew because of its "spiritual crusade" against injustice, Carey added:

"IT IS TO this moral awakening' and to this tradition of selflessness and sacrifice for the common weal that Pres. Philip Murray would say the League for Industrial Democracy is paying tribute today."

The citation declared that Murray has "helped powerfully to revolutionize collective bargaining procedures in our giant corporations, to advance the living standards of the masses, to improve labor and social legislation, to promote racial and religious amity, and to strengthen the cause of democracy and of human freedom in this and other lands."

U. S. Attorneys Says Not Even duPonts Are Above The Law

ASSISTANT Atty. Gen. H. Graham Morison reminded the Chamber of Commerce at its annual meeting in Washington last week that not even the duPonts are above the law.

Morison, chief of the Anti-Trust Div. of the Justice Dept., mentioned Delaware's first family in charging that defendants in recent anti-trust cases have made unwarranted attacks on the motives of the government.

His charge grew out of the pending suit charging that the duPont family, through two family holding companies and stock acquisitions, controls the duPont Co. and through it General Motors and the U. S. Rubber Co.

Recently the government asked 186 members of the family to appear in court and give any grounds they might have why their interests cannot adequately be represented by Pierre S. and Irenee duPont. The duPonts thereupon declared publicly that the government was "going too far" by charging criminal action to minor children.

Morison told the C. of C. that the government's move was designed solely to protect the interests of the 186 persons involved, so that if any of them felt Pierre and Irenee were not representing them properly, they could tell the court about it and ask to have their rights safeguarded.

"As a matter of fact," he said, "it would have been unfair not to include these persons, for such failure would entail an adjudication of their rights . . . without granting them an opportunity to be heard by the court."

Minor members of the family play an "important role" in holding title to duPont stock which is held in trust by their parents. So long as it is voted to further activities which the government charges violate the anti-trust laws, he explained, "minors qualify as class defendants the same as their parents."

Sewell Avery Beamed—Then Things Started Popping

SEWELL AVERY beamed happily—for him, that is—on the 100 or so Montgomery Ward stockholders who gathered in Chicago last week for their annual meeting.

The attendance was sparse. At times in the past, when things were more lively, 300 and 400 shareholders showed.

"This," said Avery, "looks like it will be the dullest meeting we've ever had."

That was when things began to happen.

Before the meeting ended, Avery had come out against employe pensions, other stores, women, and Eisenhower.

The excitement started when Silas Cartland, described by the Wall Street Journal as a stockholder and former employe, introduced a resolution asking management to consider an employe pension.

Avery rejected it. A pension is something for management alone to consider, he declared.

SEWELL AVERY
. . . That ended that.

"The desirability of having money is excellent," he commented. "Giving away money is easy."

But Charles H. Erne, another stockholder, insisted that a pension plan would pay off by giving employes an incentive to work harder.

"Sears, Roebuck employes are happier and more loyal and have brighter faces," he declared. "You have more turnover than Sears."

Then he started talking about truck tires and aluminum wheelbarrows. He tried to buy one of each at the Montgomery Ward store in Middletown, Conn., he said, but had to go across the street to Sears to get 'em.

"We sell tires and everything else," Avery snapped, with his usual charm. "You can spend the rest of your life going into stores if you want to."

Besides, he said, getting back to the pensions, the company has an "informal" plan "based on need." At the end of March it was paying an average of $92 a month to 185 retired employes averaging 29 years of service.

The turnover, he said with what some observers interpreted as a shudder, is the fault of the women. They make up 70% of the firm's employes.

"They move about like flies," he mourned. "We are working shorter hours. We are paying increased wages. And we still can't get the kind of people we want."

That beau geste prompted another stockholder to renew the pension motion.

"The motion is ineffective, a nuisance and it's out of order," Avery proclaimed.

That ended that.

Then another stockholder got to his feet and stoutly maintained that more important than pensions is getting that "drunken sailor crowd out of Washington."

"And the man that can do that is Dwight D. Eisenhower," he asserted.

At this point Avery was credited with smiling.

"I know Mr. Eisenhower," he said softly. "He is a fine man. But he is a soldier.

"The man we want in the White House is one with character, integrity, experience, courage. Above all he must be someone we know—

"Robert A. Taft."

'Doctors Lobby' Defeated In 20-Year Hospital Fight

A 20-YEAR fight by the "doctors' lobby" against a pioneering prepaid health program has been defeated in Oklahoma.

The Elk City Community Hospital - Clinic has defeated a "blacklist" of its doctors by the Beckham County, Okla., Medical Society.

The medical society has given up its discriminatory refusal to admit to membership doctors on the staff of the cooperative hospital.

The victory against the "doctors' lobby" was reported last week by the Cooperative News Service.

The local medical society has reached an out-of-court settlement of a suit brought by the hospital two years ago in an effort to win membership for its doctors.

The Elk City hospital was founded in 1929 by Dr. Michael Shadid, "doctor for the people." The hospital's pay-in-advance medical care program has received widespread support from farm families and the Farmers Union.

The Oklahoma decision was hailed by Jerry Voorhis, of the Cooperative Health Federation of America, as a "long and most important step toward elimination of all discrimination by organized medicine against doctors who associate themselves with consumer-sponsored health plans."

The blind opposition of the American Medical Association to all forms of prepaid health insurance was vigorously condemned by Gov. Earl Warren of California.

Warren, who is a candidate for the Republican nomination for President, wrote in Look magazine that the AMA is "stubbornly resisting social progress."

The Californian warned "we must face the fact that voluntary insurance by itself cannot solve the problem of catastrophic medical costs," and most doctors and patients know it "only too well."

Hospital insurance also figured in a Supreme Court decision announced last week.

The court, in a 7-to-1 ruling with Justice Black dissenting, tossed out a U. S. anti-trust case against Oregon doctors who had set up their own medical insurance plan.

The court majority said its decision was based on the fact that the Oregon Medical Society and county affiliates had abandoned discriminatory practices which were the basis of the government's action.

'Group Libel' Law Upheld By High Court

IN A CLOSE decision, the U. S. Supreme Court last week upheld an Illinois "group libel" law curbing racist propaganda.

The test case stemmed from conviction of Joseph Beauharnais, head of the anti-Negro "White Circle League of America," which circulated petitions seeking Chicago City Council action to bar Negroes from so-called "white sections" of the city.

Beauharnais' propaganda activities figured in the Cicero race riot last year. He was convicted and fined $200 under the Illinois law banning publications exposing any race, creed or color "to contempt, derision or obloquy."

The court upheld constitutionality of the "group libel" law in a 5-to-4 decision, with the majority ruling written by Justice Frankfurter.

In another controversial case, the court upheld in a 6-to-3 decision the "released time" program in New York City public schools. Under this program, pupils are released for one hour weekly for religious classes outside school buildings.

CCG Chief Cleared By Appeals Court

THE CONVICTION of Edward A. Rumley, executive secretary of the reactionary Committee for Constitutional Government, on a charge of contempt of Congress was reversed last week by the U. S. Court of Appeals in Washington.

The charge of which he was found guilty was based on his refusal to give the House Lobby Investigating Committee headed by the late Rep. Buchanan (D. Pa.) the names of persons who bought CCG literature worth $500 or more.

The committee claimed the "sales" of such literature—which is anti-labor, anti-New Deal and anti-Truman administration—were used to cover up donations to help pay for plugging the CCG's tory line.

The Court of Appeals decision was the work of Judge E. Barrett Prettyman, with Judge James M. Proctor agreeing. Judge David L. Bazelon dissented.

Rumley on conviction was fined $1000 and given a six-month suspended jail sentence.

'U. S. Labor Answers Moscow' In New CIO Radio Series

THE CIO took on the job last week of answering some of the Russian lies about American workers and their unions.

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey fired the opening shot in the first of a new series of radio broadcasts entitled "American Labor Answers Radio Moscow" which was heard May 1 from station WCFM in Washington. It will be aired at 7:30 p.m. each Thursday. The programs eventually will be carried by a large number of stations in different parts of the country, he said.

"These programs will reveal the myths and lies spread about America and its working men and women by Moscow's propagandists," Carey said.

"We will nail these lies which Radio Moscow broadcasts day and night, around the clock, 365 days a year."

The first broadcast dealt with the Communists' charges that CIO Pres. Philip Murray, as head of the CIO Steelworkers, had made a deal with the industry not to press his union's demands.

"This lie is easy to refute," Carey said, "because the truth is apparent. It is our belief that America's propaganda campaign can be won because the free countries do have truth on their side while the Communists are practitioners of the Big Lie technique."

Congress Check Asked As 'Tax Bonanza' Grows

IT'S TIME to turn off the "tax bonanza" which has brought U. S. business firms more than $17 billion in special tax privileges—at the expense of individual tax payers.

The Defense Production Administration in the past 10 days has announced two more big chunks of tax benefits.

One was for 255 defense facilities for a total of $366 million, and the other was for 177 plants for a total of $513 million.

The stepped-up flow of "tax bonanza" benefits brought a new protest in Congress, as Rep. Smith (D. Miss.) urged the House reexamine the DPA's tax write-off program.

"This is a matter of concern to every American because the amortization on speed-up is being paid for by the American taxpayer," he said.

"No further tax exemptions should be granted except in the field of direct military supplies."

Smith blamed the "tax bonanza" for a major share of the industrial recession in New England. The program has aided runaway plants moving South.

The "tax bonanza" gives business firms special tax privileges. With DPA certificates, they can write off the cost of new plants in five years instead of the normal 20 or 25 years. That means a hefty reduction in corporate taxes—and a consequent increase in the load on individual income tax payers.

Periodic reports by the DPA on the tax write-off plan reveal:

1. Stepped-up volume of tax certificates issued.

2. The greatest share of the certificates is going to big business firms, with privately-owned utilities currently moving in in the wake of steel firms, oil companies and railroads.

Late last year, the "tax bonanza" total was some $10 billion, and Charles E. Wilson, then defense mobilizer, talked about easing up on the program.

But in the subsequent five months, the "tax bonanza" total has jumped from $10 billion to $17.5 billion.

Of that total, nearly $1.5 billion covers three DPA reports for the three-week period from Mar. 20 to Apr. 10. And well over $1 billion of that chunk went to electric power companies all over the nation. (Many of the same power companies are sponsoring high-powered ads against public power as "socialism" and in favor of "business managed public utilities.")

Ohio Edison $47 million, Indiana & Michigan Electric $41 million, Detroit Edison $33 million, Pennsylvania Power & Light $36 million, St. Louis Cities Services $28 million, Alabama Power $22 million, Georgia Power $15 million. Tax write-offs of from 30 to 65% were allowed.

These follow sizeable benefits to U. S. Steel Corp., Bethlehem Steel, General Motors, Dow Chemical, Esso Standard Oil Co., etc.

'Shipbuilding Famine' Near, Grogan Warns

AMERICA'S shipbuilding industry is dying on the vine, and will "come to complete halt in 1953" unless Congress revises the government's present maritime policy.

That warning was presented by Pres. John J. Grogan of the CIO Shipbuilding Workers to the House Merchant Marine Committee.

He testified in support of Senate-approved S. 241, granting government subsidies for new ship construction, reconversion and remodeling.

Grogan warned that "America faces a grave threat if a shipbuilding famine strikes before Congress passes legislation to assist the industry."

The IUMSWA president pointed out that the flight to foreign flag shipping operations—which has been strongly protested by CIO and AFL seafaring organizations—has been paralleled by a flight to foreign shipyards for construction and repairs.

He said American shipowners, operating on the basis of the "competitive force of starvation," have placed orders in foreign yards for 201 ships in the past three and one-half years and will order "substantial additional construction" in the next few months.

"While foreign shipbuilding is cutting into our shipbuilding industry," he said, "foreign registry cuts into the American merchant marine."

U. S. shipping interests now are placing more shipbuilding orders abroad than at home, Grogan said.

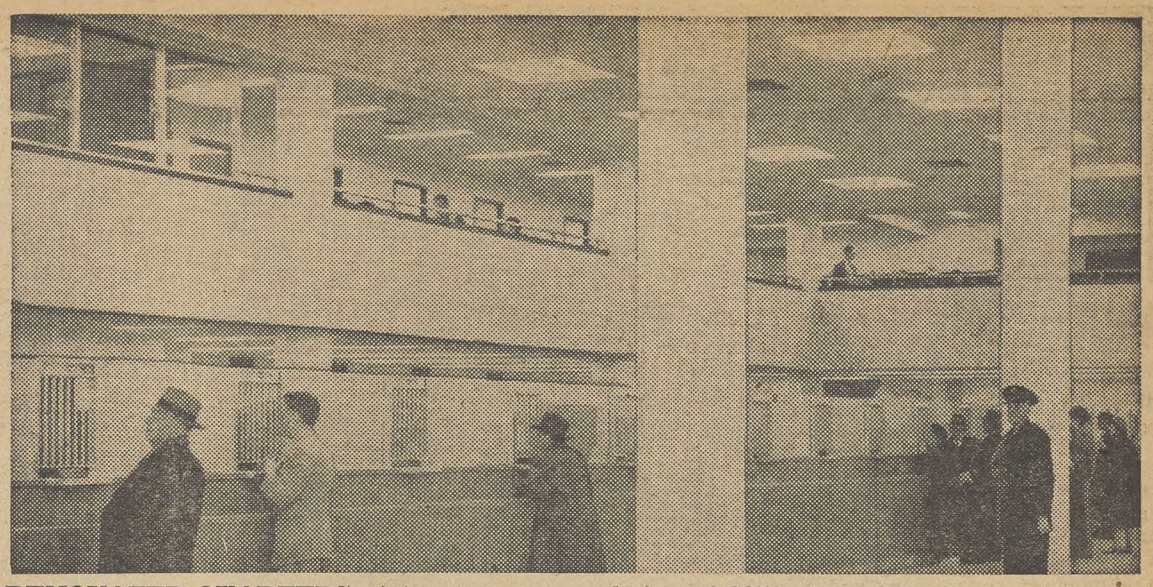
Bethlehem Talks Again Extended

For the third time, CIO Shipbuilding Workers have extended their contract with Bethlehem Steel Co. and Todd Shipyards, covering 38,000 workers in 10 yards.

The contracts, which originally expired last Dec. 31, were extended to June 14. A 20c hourly wage increase heads the IUMSWA's proposals.



RENOVATED QUARTERS of Amalgamated Bank of New York are shown after completion of $250,000 worth of reconstruction to Union Square office.

Labor Bank Gets $250,000 New Look

THE AMALGAMATED Bank of New York has been given a $250,000 new look.

The interior of the bank—which was established 29 years ago by the late Sidney Hillman, first president of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers, and a handful of labor enthusiasts—has been completely renovated.

To celebrate completion of the renovation, a party was held for depositors and personnel, with Jacob S. Potofsky, president of the bank and ACWA, acting as host.

The bank's 20,000 square feet of floor space has been so arranged that it gives 43% more lobby space than before, and additional working space.

The entire bank has been air-conditioned. Other changes include a new board room on the mezzanine, and placing the personal small loan on a platform facing Union Square.

The bank has 9000 depositors, $2.25 million in capital and undivided profits, and more than $39 million in assets.

The Amalgamated was the first commercial bank to install a small-loan department, and fought the loan sharks who were exploiting workers in the needles trades, school teachers, policemen, firemen and other civil service employes.

Scab Drive Against UFW Strike Stymied

A "BACK-to-work" campaign was the latest threat last week directed against 1500 striking CIO Furniture Workers at the Thomasville Chair Co. in Thomasville, N. C.

Despite the move by the company to organize scabs in the plant, polite intimidation of pickets and wide-open anti-picketing injunctions, the strikers were holding firm through the seventh week of the walkout.

UFWA headquarters reported production remains crippled despite management's repeated efforts to spark a back-to-work move.

Three bargaining sessions failed to produce any change in the company's refusal to grant a wage increase.

The UFWA is asking a cost-of-living wage increase for the Thomasville workers, who have received no boost since late in 1950. It cites wage boosts recently won in eight other furniture plants in Virginia and the Carolinas.

More than 60 members of UFWA Local 286 were arrested earlier in the strike, after police threatened to fire tear gas at the strikers.

Additional support for the Thomasville strike fund is requested of CIO affiliates. Contributions should be sent to Thomasville Strike Relief Committee, UFWA-CIO, 101 Fifth Ave., New York 3, N. Y.

Haywood Asks Drive To Save Rent Controls

THE CIO last week alerted its affiliates to fight the all-out campaign of realtors to have local governing bodies decontrol rents.

In a letter to international union presidents, CIO councils, and regional directors, CIO Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood and Vice Pres. Walter P. Reuther, as chairman of the CIO National Housing Committee, wrote:

"Local Real Estate Boards have created a literal bonfire of decontrol actions by governing boards of local communities. They are spending unlimited sums to try to bring about the end of rent control.

"Only aggressive action by CIO affiliated units can save this important stabilization law which affects such a major portion of the average worker's expenditures.

"Write to your congressmen, urging that the existing law be strengthened to permit decontrol of rents in a local community only when the vacancy ratio in low and middle income housing in that community is equal to 10% of the housing supply."

The letter pointed out that unless Congress acts, existing federal rent controls expire June 30. Sections of S. 2645 and H.R. 6546 would extend the present rent control law to June 30, 1954, but the Senate Banking and Currency Committee has failed to act even on these bills pending clarification of other issues.

The CIO wants the present law strengthened. CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey has testified that the system for having federal authorities impose rent control is too complex. He said that "despite repeated requests," the Critical Areas Committee has failed to take steps to control rents in such vital production centers as Milwaukee, Tulsa and Oakland, Calif.

Woman Named To IUE Board

First woman member of the executive board of the CIO Intl. Union of Electrical Workers is Eileen Dooley, business agent of Local 291 in Salem, Mass.

She won a place on the board through election as chairman of the Sylvania Conference Board.

Miss Dooley had been business agent at the Salem Sylvania plant for five years and before that was president of the local. She also is president of the North Shore CIO Council. (LPA)

CITATION from American Federation of the Physically Handicapped is presented to CIO Pres. Philip Murray (center) by Miss Mildred Scott, federation secretary-treasurer. Others in group (from left) are Robert T. Creasey, assistant secretary of labor, Paul A. Strachan, president, and Thomas J. Keating, vice president, AFPH.

New Life Of A Great American

Sidney Hillman: Great American, by Jean Gould. Houghton Mifflin Co. $3.00.

"WE'VE GOT to organize every worker in spite of the officials . . . but we ought to organize ourselves, first of all."

None of the clothing workers listening to the earnest young man knew how this was to be accomplished, but his voice was so full of conviction that none of them questioned the possibility of realizing his vision.

All through his life, Sidney Hillman's voice was full of conviction and his unwavering belief in his ideal served as a source of inspiration to those who knew and loved him.

Seven weeks after Hillman warned the workers to organize, 7000 of them were on strike at the Hart, Shaffner & Marx Chicago plants. The walkout started in the vest makers department when the company tried to cut the rate to 4c a piece.

The revolt was led by a slender 17-year-old girl, Bessie Abramowitz, who later became the wife of Sidney Hillman. Her action and that of five other young girls led to a wave of opposition to tyranny which flooded over the entire city. Plant after plant was struck until 40,000 clothing workers — the entire Chicago clothing market—came out on strike.

So began the great strike of 1910. It marked the emergence of Sidney Hillman as a leader of working men and women in the clothing industry. How he increased in stature and wisdom and became one of the nation's most revered labor leaders is convincingly told in a new biography, "Sidney Hillman: Great American," by Jean Gould.

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

WELL, IT HAPPENED. The steel companies succeeded in obtaining a restraining order against the government, nullifying President Truman's seizure of the steel industry. The CIO Steelworkers, following the old Miners code of no contract, no work, went on strike.

The asinine proposals and threats of using Taft-Hartley are repudiated in fact. The Steelworkers in a sincere effort to reach agreement and avoid a steel stoppage voluntarily postponed strike action for far more than 80 days. They also presented their case to a tripartite board for a period of weeks, and although not getting a number of their demands, agreed to accept the board's recommendations.

This same board stated and maintains that the steel companies can meet the Steelworkers' demands and still retain their high profits. The companies, however, want to gouge the public and increase their profits to more exhorbitant levels. Workers and liberal-minded people everywhere support Pres. Murray and the Steelworkers in this all-out fight.

THE WRITER, along with Pres. Murray, attended the convention of the CIO Textile Workers this past week in Cleveland, O. The huge public auditorium was filled to capacity, and I believe that this was the largest Textile convention ever held. Pres. Murray gave a very descriptive account of the steel controversy.

I also addressed the delegates and called upon them to remember their fine union, and upon solving their internal problems, to devote every effort to building their organization. This union is forced to battle continually the most difficult employers in the country. The health of the industry is not the best and the employers viciously oppose and attack all organizing efforts among southern textile workers. There is no stopping the union. Eventually the entire South in every industry will be organized.

★

EACH WEEK I emphasize the primary purpose of CIO, and I repeat, we all must do our part in organizing the unorganized workers of this country under the banner of the CIO. To resist the cowardly attacks of the captains of industry everywhere, we must continue to build a stronger, more powerful CIO.

The Barber & Beauty Culturists Union held its convention this past week in Atlantic City. The reports are that this union is enthusiastically looking forward to further organizational gains following their recent strike action in New York.

★

NATIONAL DIR. JOHN RIFFE of the CIO Organizing Committee reports the following representation election victories: Cherokee-Dekalb Electric Co-Op, Centre, Ala., eligible 11, CIO Retail, Wholesale Union 8, no union 3; Atlantic Plywood Corp., Florence, S. C., eligible 45, CIO Woodworkers 25, no union 16; Seaboard Mfg. Co., Richmond, Va., eligible 84, CIO Paperworkers 75, no union 2; Cities Service Oil Terminal, Norfolk, Va., eligible 8, CIO Oil Workers 8.

Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShelter reports a representation election victory for the CIO Textile Workers at the Atlas Hosiery Dyers, Los Angeles, Calif., by a vote of 12 to 8 for no union. TWUA Rep. Ned Warner was in charge of the campaign.

Robert Edwards, CIO Gas Coke & Chemical Workers organization director, reports that in a representation election at the Universal Atlas Co., Dayton, O., the workers favored the UGC&CW-CIO by the following vote: eligible 185, UGC&CW 96, AFL 74, neither 2, void 1. Intl. Rep. Henry Atkinson, assisted by Art Alexander of the Dayton IUC, handled this campaign.

CIO Barbers Act Against Rackets, Re-elect Hebert And Push PAC

STEPS to keep their union clean were taken by the CIO Barbers and Beauty Culturists at their fourth constitutional convention at Atlantic City last week.

BBCUA delegates adopted a constitutional amendment barring convicted felons from holding office in either the national or local unions. Persons arrested because of union activities are not denied office under the amendement.

The amendment is in keeping with the 1951 CIO convention action condemning "corruption whether it be in government, in industry or in the labor movement itself."

Adolph Rosenbaum, who was elected third vice president, introduced the resolution. He cited recent charges that underworld elements are in control of some labor organizations.

Other resolutions adopted:

Urged displaying the BBCUA card, called for repealing the Hughes-Bress Law in New York State, urged extension of unemployment insurance to workers in small shops where state laws do not cover them, asked for a federal FEPC, and called for support of PAC and CIO policies.

Ernest Hebert, Lilyan Moscowitz, and Malvina Freedman were re-elected president, secretary-treasurer and first vice president respectively. George Pelletiere was elevated from third to second vice president.

ERNEST HEBERT
Re-elected by CIO Barbers.

Elected to the national executive board were Peter A. Sessa, William Rabinowitz, Charles Rizzuto, Joseph C. Keith, James Lo Pinto and Abraham Greenwald.

A warning that "this year can be a golden opportunity for reactionaries." was voiced by Tilford Dudley, assistant PAC director. He said that union members should redouble their political activity.

He claimed "one third of Congress is evil, crooked or currupt, one third is good and enlightened, and one third lazy and unintelligent."

Dudley urged labor to help elect good congressmen and concluded:

"There is a battle for people and for peace the whole world over. The reactionary tide is rolling right now, and unless you carry the message and do the job, the tide may engulf us."

Robert T. Creasey, assistant Secretary of Labor and former official of the CIO Communications Workers, hit the distorted picture of the steel situation given by most of the press and many magazines, and by advertisements of steel companies and other busniess firms.

Two CIO regional directors, George Craig, of the eastern Pennsylvania region, and Ewald Sandner, of the New Jersey region, spoke.

Craig criticized the steel industry for its inflationary demand for a $12-a-ton steel price increase to compensate it for the proposed Wage Stabilization Board recommendations for the CIO Steelworkers.

Like Dudley, Craig also spoke on the importance of labor's political action and cautioned against pro-Eisenhower sentiments. Sandner pledged CIO support for BBCUA organizing campaigns. Principal speaker at the convention banquet was Secy.-Treas. Frank Marchese of the New Jersey Board of Barber Examiners.

Barbers Get Good Advice

CIO barbers, who chat with their customers, were given some solid advice by Tilford E. Dudley, assistant director of the CIO Political Action Committee, at the convention of the CIO Barbers and Beauty Culturists in Atlantic City last week.

"You are the CIO's missionaries," he said. "Tell the man in the chair why taxes are unequal and prices are high."

He advised the barbers to be discreet and unobtrusive in telling labor's story to their patrons, explaining that "you don't have to put your hands down their throats."

Savings Bonds InterestUpped

UNCLE SAM is going to pay more interest on your savings bonds.

The Treasury began issuing Series E Savings Bonds on May 1 with the interest rate raised from 2.9 to 3% compounded semi-annually and redemption beginning at the end of six months instead of a year.

The new Series E bonds will mature in nine years, eight months, instead of 10 years. Denominations will be the same as the old Series E bonds.

The new rates will apply only to the new Series E bonds or to the old ones extended beyond the original 10-year period. The Treasury also will issue new Series H, J and K bonds.

A pamphlet showing the new interest tables is being issued through post offices, banks, union offiices and employers.

Manual Outlines CIO Community Services Program

A manual for CIO councils and local union community services committees for "developing health, welfare and recreation programs for CIO families and the local community" has been issued by the National CIO Community Services Committee.

Its title is Action! For A Better Community.

"CIO has always cherished the larger philosophy of bringing benefits to the entire community," CIO Pres. Philip Murray said in a foreword.

"The National CIO Community Services Committee represents this larger philosophy of CIO. It reflects the deep desire of the CIO membership to be a constructive part of the community, and to work for a better community for all the people."

Burke Drive On In Toledo

THE CAMPAIGN to elect former Rep. Tom Burke (D.O.), a member of the CIO Auto Workers, to Congress is getting under way in Toledo.

At a membership meeting of the United Labor Committee, Executive Sec. Melvin Zimkowski reported that over 100 precinct committees have been organized in metropolitan Toledo. There is at least one ULC committee working for Burke in the outlying townships of Sylvania, Oregon, Washington and Adams.

Burke, who was defeated by Rep. Reams (Ind.) in 1950, resigned from his post in the National Production Authority last fall to return to Toledo to campaign for re-election.

CIO Asks Quick Okeh For Puerto Rican Constitution

MOVING with a speed rarely found in the 82nd Congress, the House and Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committees last week took the first steps toward congressional approval of the new Constitution establishing local self-government in Puerto Rico.

President Truman sent the constitution, which Puerto Ricans voted 4 to 1 to accept in a referendum, to Congress on Apr. 22 and urged "early approval." The CIO immediately endorsed it, and the House Interior Committee voted Apr. 25 to report favorably H. J. Res. 430, which approves the island Constitution.

The Senate committee held hearings last week, and may vote at any time.

In a letter to each member of the committees, Dir. Nathan E. Cowan, of the CIO Legislative Dept., called for "full" support.

"We know from personal association with our membership in Puerto Rico the deep significance and meaning of the new Constitution to the people of Puerto Rico," Cowan wrote. "Speedy approval of the Constitution by Congress will forge an enduring bond of friendship and good will between them and our own people."

The Puerto Rican CIO Confederacion General de Trabajadores has actively backed the new constitution. CGT-CIO Gen. Sec. Alberto E. Sanchez brands the current drive by the Free Federation of Puerto Rico to influence Congress against approval as "detrimental to the best interests of our relations with the American people."

Drafted by a Puerto Rican constitutional convention, the new constitution establishes the government of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico with three coordinate branches. San Juan is designated as the capital.

LEGISLATIVE power is vested in a 27-member senate and a house of representatives with 51, each elected by direct vote for four-year terms. A governor also will be elected directly for the same term, and judicial power is vested in a supreme court and such other courts as may be established by law.

One feature is a bill of rights, similar to U. S. constitutional guarantees, but extending them by express provisions—in keeping with U. S. law—guaranteeing such things as the right to organize and bargain collectively, to strike, to picket and to engage in other legal activities.

Tornado Victims Ask Assistance

CIO Shoe Workers are asking relief contributions for 126 members whose homes were destroyed by the tornado which struck central Arkansas some weeks ago.

"They are now badly in need of financial aid," said Sec. Treas. Charles M. Catton of the State CIO Council.

Contributions should be sent to O. C. Horton, Committee for Tornado Victims, Box 250, Searcy, Ark:

130,000 Oil, Woodworkers Strike

FOR THE FIRST time in history, CIO, AFL and independent oil unions last week joined in striking the fabulously rich industry for better wages.

Ninety thousand members of several unions—led by the CIO Oil Workers—walked out in support of demands for a 25c-a-hour wage increase, a 6c differential for the night shift and a 12c differential for the "graveyard" shift.

They struck an industry well able by its own financial reports to meet the demands. Seven oil companies were among the 27 firms which did a gross business of more than a billion dollars last year.

Four areas were excepted from the strike, which began on Apr. 30. The walkout, postponed thrice at the government's request, was finally called when wage talks broke down after oil companies refused to participate in WSB "pilot case" hearings.

One area continuing production was California where OWIU-CIO Pres. O. A. Knight, leader of the united union forces, said he had requested local union officials to keep the workers "on the job for a few days more."

"Shutdowns in California would cause an immediate bad effect on the Korean War effort because California refineries are the primary source of naval fuel, aviation gasoline and other oil products used by the armed forces in Korea," Knight said.

"We want to avoid even short shutdowns in California, if possible."

Also unaffected were the North Texas area rigbuilders, who won their full 25c increase the week before.

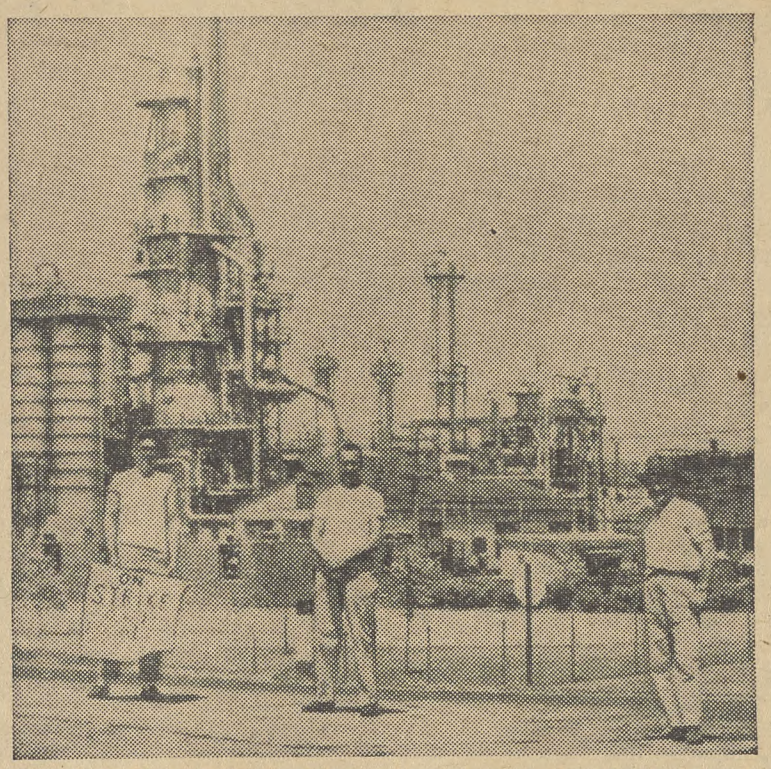
Strike plans were held in abeyance by 1500 OWIU members handling natural gas production in Charleston, W. Va., area, where both sides were reported not far apart.

An OWIU spokesman termed "an absolute untruth" the announcement by Federal Mediation Chief Cyrus S. Cling of a settlement between Standard Oil of Indiana and the independent Central States Petroleum Union for Sugar Creek, Mo., refinery workers.

"There has not been a settlement at Sugar Creek," OWIU said.



CIO OIL WORKERS picket after closing the Rock Island Refinery, near Indianapolis, in nation-wide oil union strike.

Indiana Oil Local Asks Strike Aid

The Indiana CIO Council has asked affiliates to help striking CIO Oil Workers in Whiting, Ind., "as much as you can."

Some 450 members of OWIU Local 513 are on strike against the Carbide & Chemical Co., which is using a blacklist in an effort to prevent the workers getting temporary jobs in other industries.

Contributions should be sent to Sec.-Treas. Rex Marlowe, OWIU Local 513, 6807 Wicker St., Hammond, Ind.

CWA Signs WE Warehouse Pact; Other Plants Struck

THE AT&T has made its peace nationally with the CIO Communications Workers.

The final national settlement sent 5500 Western Electric (AT&T subsidiary) warehousemen back to work in 23 states with wage increases ranging from 11 to 16c an hour and fringe benefits.

CWA Vice Pres. A. T. Jones said that the settlement followed the $4 to $7 weekly pattern established with Michigan Bell and other AT&T operating subsidiaries.

The WE warehousemen were jubilant not only over the benefits won but the defeat of the company's scheme for piece work, incentive pay, and downgrading.

Settlement also was reached in behalf of the comparatively small number of workers at the Queensboro, N.Y., WE plant where telephone booths are made.

But more than 9000 CWA members were still on strike last week. Strikes continued at the Buffalo, N.Y., WE plant, where 1200 were out, and in the Morgantown, W. Va. area, where 3000 phone workers were striking.

A new strike began at WE plants in Winston-Salem, Greensboro and Burlington, N.C., which are engaged in military production. CWA is striking for its "rock bottom" demands of 19c an hour pay raise.

FORTY THOUSAND CIO Woodworkers last week went on strike against 700 logging and sawmill operators in five northwestern states.

The employers did not have a solid front. As the strike entered its second day, two Portland, Ore., firms reached an agreement with the union.

Before the strike began, the big Weyerhaeuser Timber Co., employing 8000 workers, had come to terms with IWA for a 7½c hourly increase, six paid holidays, and other benefits.

The walkout followed two months of negotiations and a strike vote showing that 98% of the membership favored strike action if necessary.

Operators were accused by IWA Pres. A. F. Hartung of "deliberately provoking" the walkout.

IWA had asked for a 20c-an-hour wage increase, a more liberal vacation clause, shift differential pay, three more paid holidays, a leave of absence clause, travel time for loggers, rest periods and minimum crews on power saws.

The employers wanted simply to renew the old contracts, but later most of them, except in plywood, agreed to a 7½c pay raise and three more holidays. They balked at increasing their contributions to the union's health and welfare fund.

IUE Rejects Offer From Westinghouse

THE CIO Electrical Workers — who represents a big majority of the Westinghouse Elecrtic Corp.'s employes—last week rejected the firm's meager pay increase offer.

Robert Nellis, chairman of the IUE Westinghouse Conference Board, said that the offer constituted a less-than 1% increase and "represents simply a continuation of its (Westinghouse) attempt to keep its workers on an economic treadmill."

Nellis said IUE had submitted to the firm "overwhelming evidence that an inequity exists in the Westinghouse workers' wages ranging from 10 to 40c an hour."

In addition to the elimination of the inequities, IUE has submitted proposals calling for a revision of the incentive system, compensation for increased productivity, a bonus for workers not covered by the incentive plan and pay for women equal to that paid men.

Jersey CIOers Going To Demo Convention

Three New Jersey CIO officials have been elected to the state's delegation to the Democratic national convention in Chicago. They are Pres. John Grogan of the CIO Shipbuilding Workers; Martin Gerber, Auto Workers regional director; and Arthur Chapin, civil rights director of the state CIO Council.

IAWOC Gets Pay Gain At Metropolitan

THE CIO Insurance and Allied Workers Organizing Committee is blazing a new trail in contracts for insurance employes.

In a contract with the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., it has negotiated the first guaranteed annual wage for insurance agents working on a commission basis, IAWOC-CIO reported. Agents are guaranteed $60 a week.

The contract also eliminates arbitration and no-strike provisions which are included in most contracts in the insurance field. Full responsibility for settling grievances is placed on the union and the company.

CIO Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood, who is also IAWOC chairman, and Richard T. Leonard, IAWOC secretary-treasurer, called the two clauses "tremendous gains for the agents."

When ratified, the contract will cover 5000 Metropolitan industrial agents in Pennsylvania, New Jersey and New York City.

Other contract gains include a wage compensation "package" averaging $6.25 a week retroactive to last Dec. 3, 11 holidays, a reduction of report days from three to two, and freedom to hold other jobs on Saturday and Sunday provided they do not entail selling insurance.

A negotiating committee representing more than 300 IAWOC agents in Pennsylvania and Delaware is meeting with the Home Life Co., in an effort to gain a new contract.

WATCHFUL WAITING—Stone arch of railroad overpass frames CIO Steelworkers outside the Coatesville, Pa., plant of Lukens Steel Co. Steel workers were back on the job last week, but they are getting "fed up" with management's refusal to grant WSB wage recommendations. A decision by the Supreme Court, barring government action to raise wages in the seized mills, reinforced industry's stand. (See Pages 2 and 3.)

High Court Decision Stymies Steel Parley

SIX MONTHS ago, the men from the mills met in a special convention of the CIO Steelworkers.

They drafted a program for wage gains, the union shop and fundamental contract improvements, and gave it a title of "Twenty-two in Fifty-Two."

This week, the men and women of the steel industry meet again, in a regular convention of the USA-CIO.

And their contract goals still are undecided.

The latest chance for a steel settlement—through direct bargaining at the White House—was grounded by the Supreme Court.

On the eve of the USA-CIO convention, which opens May 13 in Philadelphia, this was the situation:

1. The weekend White House parley came close to success, but not close enough when—

2. The Supreme Court granted steel management's request to forbid any government action to put into effect the weeks-old recommendations of the Wage Stabilization Board for steel wage and contract changes.

3. That ruling, in effect, torpedoed the White House sessions, which were broken off.

4. After the three-day strike, and a short-lived effort by U. S. Steel Corp. and a few other firms to refuse to rehire its workers, the steel workers last week were back on their jobs in the defense vital industry.

5. And there were no negotiations under way toward a settlement.

The situation, said USA-CIO Pres. Philip Murray, "is that the companies are on a strike against collective bargaining, which they will settle only at the expense of the American public" with "a government guarantee of unwarranted price relief."

Murray, after reviewing the deadlock with the USA-CIO Executive Board in a pre-convention meeting in Philadelphia, said the union is ready to resume bargaining.

The board expressed confidence that the steel union's negotiations will be successful in obtaining the WSB recommendations. The board also ratified Murray's end-the-strike order issued 10 days ago.

The strike was called off just before the White House meeting of the President and his assistant, John Steelman, with the union and officials of six major steel producers.

Those sessions were held on May 3-4. They opened with a strongly-worded request by Truman for a settlement, with a warning that the government then was ready "to order changes in terms and conditions of employment to be put into effect."

Under that pressure, the conference began making progress, with industry spokesmen coming up with new proposals on specific issues.

Then, during a recess, word was received of the Supreme Courts decision banning any government action to raise wages in the seized industry. Thereafter, the concrete, detailed bargaining came to an end.

As Murray commented, "it would appear that since the Supreme Court's ruling, the companies changed their attitude and became more adamant in their refusal to negotiate a contract."

Now the Supreme Court will begin hearing arguments on the steel seizure case, with the prospect that it might be weeks before it reaches a decision.

The high court's rulings which snarled the steel situation came in two cases.

One was on the industry's effort to block a government wage increase order. This move for an injunction was turned down by the U. S. Court of Appeals, but the higher court unanimously granted the order.

The other was the government's appeal from Judge David A. Pine's decision in U. S. District Court that Truman's steel seizure order was unconstitutional and illegal. Effectiveness of this decision had been stayed by the appeals court.

The Supreme Court agreed 7 to 2 to consider the government's appeal from Judge Pine's decision invalidating seizure—a decision which will not now become effective until, and unless, the high court upholds his ruling.

"A serious question as to the correctness" of Pine's opinion was voiced by the five-man majority of the Court of Appeals.

The appellate judges, in a memorandum issued last week, denied Pine's argument that there is an "utter and complete lack of authoritative support" for the legality of presidential seizure of the steel industry. They cited an 1871 Supreme Court decision to the contrary.

The high court's action in blocking government wage action was strongly protested in a "friend of the court" brief filed by CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg.

The CIO brief said that the injunction, which later was granted, would leave the union "in the middle and holding the bag, with no employer with which it can bargain." The brief warned approval of the injunction "would constitute an intervention on the side of the companies in their dispute with the union."

And that is how it worked out—the high court order on the side of the steel companies stymied peace efforts at the White House.

'They Fight For Chance To Survive'

From all sections of the labor movement, CIO Steelworkers are receiving support.

Pres. Daniel Tobin of the AFL Teamsters said "I hope the steel workers win. They are fighting for a chance to survive."

The Trade Union Council of the New York Liberal Party denounced the industry "for spearheading a movement to deny wage adjustments in line with higher living costs, and to smash unions."

The California CIO Council urged labor "to close ranks" and meet in a National Labor Conference to back the USA-CIO and President Truman in his seizure action.

'Companies Are On Strike,' Murray Says As Talks Break Up

On the break up of White House steel bargaining sessions, CIO Steelworkers Pres. Philip Murray issued this statement:

THE UNION came to the White House at the request of the President of the United States prepared to negotiate a settlement of this long dispute. The companies, however, made no effort to negotiate in good faith.

They merely repeated an inadequate offer made in New York more than three weeks ago and they expressly conditioned this offer upon the government's granting them price increases beyond those allowable under the government's stabilization policies.

The companies' adamant insistence upon a government guarantee of unwarranted price relief resulted in a breakdown of these conferences.

The actual situation therefore is that the companies are on a strike against collective bargaining, which they will settle only at the expense of the American public.

We deeply regret that even at this late date the companies are unwilling to conclude a fair and equitable settlement with the union, and we shall so advise our membership.

'We Can Do No Wrong!' Hysteria At Steel Stockholders Meet

SEVEN HUNDRED and fourteen men and women who own varying proportions of the U. S. Steel Corp. gathered together in the barn-like Union Club in Hoboken, N. J., last week for the annual stockholders' meeting.

The rest of the 210,000 or so people who own the company weren't there. Those who were present had a right chummy little time. Only a couple of discordant notes of reality were injected into the proceedings.

This burden was shared by Mrs. Wilma Soss, of the Federation of Women Stockholders of America, who was invariably shouted down—except when Board Chairman Irving S. Olds ruled her out of order—and Benjamin F. Javits, president of the United Shareholders of America, who was too lucid to be appreciated.

The general tone of the meeting was a mild sort of hysteria. The feeling expressed was that the stewards who were supposed to be running the company on behalf of the owners—the stockholders, that is—could do and had done no wrong.

While Pres. Benjamin F. Fairless lolled in obvious boredom, Olds gave a play-by-play account of the steel industry's running battle with the CIO Steelworkers and President Truman. He made the industry, and especially U. S. Steel, look better than they have at any time since negotiations started last November.

The USA-CIO and President Truman didn't fare quite so well. That was fine and dandy with those present. In fact, one well-dressed lady agreed with Olds so wholeheartedly that she shouted the union and the government were just a "gang of pirates," bent on scuttling the good ship Private Enterprise as represented by U. S. Steel.

The assembled shareholders—Olds had enough proxies in his pocket to outvote the lot of them—began to dislike Mrs. Soss early in the proceedings.

She sought the floor a dozen times during the session, which lasted for a little more than three hours. When Olds refused to recognize her, she just ran down the aisle to a point under his nose and touched off a debate to which the chairman contributed some of the most artistic fist-waving (the non-landing kind) ever seen in Hoboken.

Among other things Mrs. Soss thought the annual meetings ought to be held in the nearby city of New York—which claims a number of conveniences not to be found in Hoboken—at least every other year. She was the only one who did.

She complained that the company's officials are "too old," a stand buttressed before the end of the day by Olds' announcement of his retirement, and called Fairless a "mouse" for rejecting the invitation of the USA-CIO to speak at its special convention last January.

A beefy stockholder roared for her to "sit down." A lady with a red face told her that if she didn't like the company she ought to sell her shares.

Mrs. Soss voted against a resolution upholding management's fight against the union and the government. Everybody else voted for it.

Javits is a brother of Rep. Javits (Lib.-R. N. Y.) and the author of a recent book, How the Republicans Can Win in 1952. In it he advocates a new democratically controlled "economic government" for the U. S. with labor, management and owners represented.

He made the point at the meeting that the government's seizure of the steel industry was "nothing but evidence that something is very deeply wrong" and that "we are now at the turning point."

After receiving a few helpful suggestions from the assembled owners of the company on how to run it, Olds invited everybody to lunch.

Mrs. Soss said the food was dreadful.

'Existence Of Our Unions Is At Stake' Demand Defeat Of The Smith Bill!

WITH A WARNING that "the very existence of our unions is at stake," CIO last week urged all members and affiliates to get into the fight against the new Smith anti-labor bill.

Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president, and Dir. Nathan E. Cowan of the Legislative Dept. in a joint letter asked all affiliates, councils and members to write their congressmen and members of the House Armed Services Committee opposing the bill. The letter:

Under the guise of protecting national defense, reactionaries in Congress are now moving to impose a permanent injunction against unions during periods of national emergency.

The most shackling restraints against labor proposed during the current wave of hysteria sweeping Congress are contained in H.R. 7647, recently introduced in the House by Congressman Smith (D.) of Virginia. It is significant that hearings on the bill have begun before the House Armed Services Committtee within a few days after its introduction.

H. R. 7647 is an amendment to the Universal Military Training and Service Act. It requires the Attorney-General to obtain an injunction, either at the direction of the President or of the Congress, against any strike or lockout which imperils the national defense. The injunction is without limit as to time.

If the dispute has not been settled within 80 days after the injunction is issued, the Attorney General is required to petition the court for the appointment of receivers of the property of both the employer and the labor organization. The receiver of the company's property is specifically forbidden to make any change in the terms and conditions of employment.

While the receivers are in possession, it is unlawful for anyone to instigate a strike, give direction or guidance to any interruption of work, or provide funds for the payment of strike, unemployment or other benefits to strikers.

The receiverships are to continue until the parties to the dispute have reached a settlement or until the emergency ends. One-half of the costs of the receiverships are to be paid by each party.

This is a completely vicious bill. Not one of its many provisions has any semblance of fairness. No employer would have any incentive whatsoever to settle a labor dispute. There would be no settlement in collective bargaining before a strike began, because the employer would know that the strike would be enjoined and none of the union's demands could be realized. There would be no settlement after the injunction and the receivership procedures were invoked because the receiver is specifically forbidden to make any changes in wages or working conditions.

It is urgent that our affiliated units and members write to the members of the House Armed Services Committee and to their own Congressmen as soon as possible, stating vigorous opposition to H. R.. The very existence of our unions and of free collective bargaining are definitely at stake in this fight.

CIO Attacks Smith Bill As Scheme To Kill Unions

THE CIO last week registered a strong protest against "as viciously anti-labor a bill as has ever been introduced in Congress" — the measure sponsored by Rep. Smith (D. Va.) which could keep American workers in perpetual servitude.

In testimony before the House Armed Services Committee, Joseph N. Curran, CIO vice president and president of the Maritime Union, denounced the injunction-receivership bill as a "nefarious scheme for destroying labor unions."

"The day that this bill is passed will be a great day for the Kremlin," he declared. "It will be a sad day not only for the American worker but for the American nation."

He called it "equivalent to abolishing collective bargaining."

The Smith bill was offered as a proposed amendment to the Universal Military Training and Service Act. It provides for a permanent injunction against any strike or lockout which imperils the national defense.

Iron Provisions

If the threatened strike or lockout has not been settled within 80 days, the Attorney General will be required—at the direction of either the President or Congress—to petition a federal court for receivers of both union and employer.

The receiverships would continue until the dispute was settled or the emergency ended. During them, the receiver for the company would not be allowed to change wages, hours or working conditions, while the receiver for the union could not pay out funds for strike, unemployment or other benefits to strikers. Expenses of the receiverships would be shared.

Also, it would be unlawful for any one to instigate a strike or give direction or guidance to any kind of work stoppage.

Finally, government officials and agencies—except the Federal Mediation Service—would

"This bill," Curran told the committee, "is designed, first, to break strikes, and, second, to break unions—by ruining them financially and by turning them over to the direction and control of government administrators.

"It is not designed to promote industrial peace or to secure maximum production. It makes no contribution toward solving the difficult problem of labor disputes during a time of national emergency.

"No person who favors the continued existence in this country of a free trade union movement can possibly support this bill."

He explained that by a free trade union movement he meant one run by the workers and not dominated by the government, such as those under Hitler and Stalin.

"I put it further to you, gentlemen, that a free trade union movement is essential to the existence of a democratic government in an industrial country," he continued.

"It is only through unions which they control that workers can participate in negotiating their wages and other conditions of employment. Without the industrial democracy which unions make possible it is difficult, if not impossible, to visualize the continued existence of political democracy in an industrial state."

In no place in the world, Curran recalled, can political democracy be found without a free labor movement. And, he added, "nowhere that a free trade union movement exists is dictatorship found."

"I believe that this is more than coincidence," he said. "I believe that it is cause and effect.

"And so I think that there is even more at stake here than the continued existence of free trade unions in America: I think this bill threatens the existence of our American democratic system."

Curran foresaw "chaos" in industrial relations if the bill is passed. As it stands, he said, it "simply resolves all of the issues in favor of the employer and against the union."

He bitterly denounced the proposed use of injunctions, which were virtually abolished in labor disputes between passage of the Norris-LaGuardia Act in 1932 and enactment of the Taft-Hartley Act in 1947.

"This bill," he said, "would go much further even than Taft-Hartley in providing for the use of injunctions against unions.

JOSEPH CURRAN
"This bill is designed . . . to break unions."

"It would, for the first time in history, provide for a government-secured perpetual injunction to compel workers to continue to work forever under frozen wages and working conditions."

Smith, the sponsor, was the first witness. His contention that his bill would "encourage" collective bargaining was promptly knocked down by Rep. Price (D. Ill.), a committee member.

Price maintained the proposal might "destroy" collective bargaining by depriving labor of its right to strike and giving management no incentive to negotiate.

Sec. of Defense Lovett, one of the earliest witnesses, told the committee that there is "urgent need" for legislation governing labor disputes in critical industries, but refused to be mousetrapped into completely endorsing Smith's bill.

"National security should never be used as an excuse to undercut the process of collective bargaining," he said, but added that the bill seemed "sound" in permitting the government to move in speedily when the national security is threatened.

Sec. of Labor Tobin, in a letter submitted to the committee by a deputy, said the bill violates "several important criteria" for good labor legislation, and added that it might be used to destroy organized labor.

Vice Pres. John A. Stephens of U.S. Steel, in a letter declining to testify, complained that the bill is not tough enough on unions.

On another front in the far-flung battle in Congress over steel, the House Labor Committee heard Charles E. Wilson, former head of the mobilization drive, urge that the WSB be stripped of its power to act in disputes, and that a new board composed solely of public members be set up in its place. Asked who the public members would be, he said:

"Oh, businessmen . . ."

The WSB's wage recommendations in the steel dispute, he said, were "inflationary."

This was sharply denied before the committee next day by Nathan P. Feinsinger, WSB chairman, who described the package as "fair and equitable under all the circumstances."

Warns Of Chaos

He warned that "industrial chaos" might follow if the board is not allowed to settle disputes, "particularly if there should be no adequate substitute promptly provided." Such a proposal—the Lucas Bill—was rejected by the House by a 217-113 vote last summer, he recalled.

Rep. Gwinn (R., N.Y.), the darling of the far right wingers and the reactionary Committee for Constitutional Government, dropped a bill into the congressional hopper prohibiting industry-wide bargaining.

In it he sets up a series of straw men, including such standbys as "labor monopoly" and "great international unions . . . dictating to their locals," and belabors them lustily. His aim, he contended, is "to return the bargaining to the employes of each employer and thus curb the monopoly powers of our gigantic unions." This, he alleged, would "present widespread strikes."

8 Committees Talking Loudly

Eight assorted House and Senate committees were holding hearings or preparing to investigate some phase of the current steel dispute last week.

Two were weighing important pieces of legislation—the House Armed Services Committee on the labor-enslaving Smith Bill, and the Senate Labor Committee on the Morse Bill setting up procedures for seizing industrial establishments in times of crisis.

Others in the picture were the Banking and Currency Committees in the Senate, and the Joint "Watchdog" Committee on the Defense Production Act.

Defeat The Smith Bill!

The House Armed Services Committee has been considering the Smith Bill—one of the worst anti-labor measures to come before Congress in recent years.

There is nothing good about the bill or about its sponsor, Rep. Howard Smith of Virginia.

The Smith Bill would invite injunctions in every strike situation. It blueprints interference by the courts in strikes. It would penalize unions, regardless of the justice of their demands; and by giving the courts power to place "receivers" in control of their property, it threatens to disrupt them or bankrupt them, or both.

The sponsor of the Smith Bill has made no secret about his hate for labor unions for many years past. He has probably sponsored more anti-union bills than any other congressman.

The Smith Bill did not go to the House Labor Committee; it went to the Armed Services Committee. In the field of labor and management relations, it clearly has little experience.

The House, in a state of hysteria and sloganeering, may act on it soon.

But before that happens, a mighty wave of protest should come from union members across America—a protest against reckless, unthinking bills that can ruin our democratic, free labor unions.

Write — today — to your congressman and to the House Armed Services Committee. Ask that they vote to defeat H.R. 7647, the Smith bill—which would trample your union rights.

Puddin'head

One of Mark Twain's most memorable characters was Puddin'head Wilson. Too bad, however, that Mark could not have lived to use his great literary talents on another Wilson character—Charles E. of GE.

Mr. Wilson—having already offered a half-dozen contradictory reasons why President Truman overruled his suggestion that the steel workers be given a piddling pay raise and the companies a whopping price increase—now turns his great powers of appraisal on the Wage Stabilization Board.

Angered like many another industrialist because the WSB's public members voted for a higher wage boost than he approved, Mr. Wilson wants the whole WSB chucked out —employer members, labor members and public members and all.

What would Statesman Charlie put in their place? A board made up only of "public" members. But what kind of "public" members? Here are Charlie's exact word:

"I'd like to see them men who had business contacts; business men, lawyers, men who had a reasonable understanding of the problem, men who had contact in the field of business."

In other words, Wilson wants the WSB stacked 100% in favor of the corporations.

Mark Twain—even when his imagination was running strongest—would never have dared make Puddin'head look so silly—or so vicious.

Our Last Chance In Asia

THERE IS NO longer any serious question that America must give help to non-Communist Asia, if the rest of that great continent is to be built into a confident, secure bastion of democracy. It is only too clear that unless we act now, and act with wisdom and understanding, Asia may in a few years time be lost to the free world as China has already been lost.

The question is not whether America must help Asia but how. The sincerity of America's belief in our own democratic principles will be put to one of its greatest tests, I believe, in the way we answer this question.

The struggle between Communist and non-Communist forces in Asia today is not basically a struggle of arms. It is a battle for man's mind and loyalties. Although we must at all times be prepared to stop aggression, a stable, secure, democratic Asia will not be won by armed might or even industrial power alone.

It can be won only by giving the people of Asia—all its half-starved, impoverished, disease-stricken millions—not only a better and more meaningful life, but a renewed faith in themselves and in their own culture, and above all a chance to participate themselves in this building of a new future through their own democratic governments.

Has America the vision to help Asia on these terms? I believe we have—if we will reassert one of our own great democratic principles, namely, that the most fundamental long range strength of any democracy lies primarily not in armaments or even in 20th Century mass production machinery, but in the convictions of the people themselves.

It is equally certain that unless we do make this affirmation, and see our aid to Asia in these terms, democracy in Asia will fail and Communist domination will be assured.

The people of Asia have too long been ignored as human beings with human wants, to be approached or won on any other basis.

Specifically, what should America do? Let us take the urgent case of India, which is not only much the largest but also the most critical and pivotal non-Communist nation in all Asia.

India today has a vigorous democratic government. In its four short years of independence it has summoned up remarkable energy, skill and imagination to tackle the overwhelming problems left from centuries of colonial oppression. The most crucial of those problems is to bring food, health and hope to its 350 million people.

The job is a staggering one. Ninety per cent of these 350 million people live in small rural villages, wholly dependent on the land for their food and well-being. Yet their soil is depleted from years of misuse and lack of fertilizer; their agricultural methods are antiquated; their farm implements primitive and ineffective. The life-giving monsoon rains in India are uncertain; irrigation is inadequate.

As a result the villager lives a life of poverty almost unbelieveable to an American who has not seen it with his own eyes . . .

YET IN every sense, basic democratic strength of India lies in the villages. In the intelligence, resourcefulness and self-respect of each village farmer lies the hope of solution to India's greatest problem—the production of enough food.

In the health of every village family lies the hope of stronger citizens to till the fields and carry on the work of the nation. In the literacy and education of the villagers lies the hope not only of individual advancement but of political understanding in the fight against the forces of communism.

The task of strengthening Indian democracy then is securing the participation of the villagers themselves in their own advancement.

It is for this job that India needs American help, for India has neither the capital, the equipment, or sufficient technical skills, or the present food productive capacity to do the job alone . . .

Intelligent aid to Asia . . . will require that we have the patience and willingness to let the Indian people themselves, using our tools and equipment and acting under our inspiration and technical guidance, work out their own advancement in ways particularly adapted to their culture.

On Jan. 4, the U.S. and the Government of India signed an agreement for just this kind of assistance. Under this agreement 50 communities of 300 villages each will soon be established in a village-to-village rural development program of a kind never before tried in Asia or anywhere else.

Myth Of 'Laboristic Society' Punctured

THERE'S A BIG balloon floating over the halls of Congress, in ivy-covered academic towers and in the learned business columns of the press.

The big balloon is the theory America is "a laboristic society."

Said balloon got punctured and deflated in a hurry by Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO general counsel, last week.

The "laboristic society" is a favorite theory of Prof. Sumner Slichter of Harvard Univ. It's quoted frequently in the press. It's an old standby for such a Dixiegop congressman as Rep. Cox (D. Ga.).

And, with the seizure of the steel industry by President Truman, the oratory about "laboristic society, labor dictatorship, and labor despotism" has boiled and swirled as high on Capitol Hill as the Missouri River did over its banks.

But these arguments, said Goldberg, "are all ridiculously overdrawn."

"The fact of the matter," he told the Industrial Relations Research Associates, "is that the overwhelmingly dominant philosophy of the American labor movement is not one directed toward the type of laboristic society envisioned by many business economists, but a belief in, and support of, the fundamental principles of the free enterprise system."

Citing labor's support of anti-trust laws and collective bargaining "with an absolute minimum of government interference," and its opposition to price-raising fair trade bills and subsidy doles to private business, Goldberg said:

"These legislative proposals supported by labor have a common theme: To make our private enterprise system work more freely, and to protect our economic system from the effects of monopoly or cartels.

"They are proposals to protect our traditional methods of business operation from the assault of special business privileges. There is nothing laboristic about them."

Because Goldberg was a participant in the latest White House steel sessions, his address was read to the industrial relations group in New York City by Ben Fisher, CIO Steelworkers international representative.

Of Truman's steel seizure order, Goldberg said, "the action he took was so clearly temporary, so clearly of an emergency nature and so clearly personally distasteful to the President that it is impossible, in good faith, to develop from it any support for the view that the President's action in steel was based on any theory of a laboristic society or can be fitted into a laboristic society philosophy.

"To picture Harry Truman as a power-hungry dictator, as one not thoroughly devoted to our American concepts of free enterprise and private property, is fantasy beyond understanding."

Goldberg cited congressional and political developments as further exposing the "laboristic society" theory.

"In the first place," he said, "there has been no major legislative development since 1938 to extend the structure of the New Deal. If anything, the legislative history of the past 14 years shows—with just a few exceptions— a watering-down of the legislative concepts of the New Deal . . .

"In 1948, for instance, President Truman was re-elected with the strong support of workers. Surely, his election under these circumstances—if the 'laboristic' theorists were correct—should have meant a vast broadening of labor's power and influence in the national community.

"Did it? Was Taft-Hartley repealed? Was the civil rights program enacted? Were new and improved labor laws placed on the statute books?

"The answer, which I personally regret, is in the negative. In this allegedly laboristic society, the liberal coalition in which labor plays such an important role, has been unable—because of the fierce opposition of a conservative coalition in the national Congress and of conservative opposition in the state legislatures—to win any significant reform or legislative advance in four years."

Rather than a "laboristic society," Goldberg continued, "what in fact, we have had in America is a catch-up process." He added:

"Our industrial development for decades outran our social progress. We are still trying to catch up, and the process is slow when it is not stalemated."

At Least We Shouldn't Pay For Utility Ads To Bamboozle Us

SOMETHING is being done at last about the private utility monopolies that soak the public for propaganda advertising that attacks the public.

Gov. Sid McMath of Arkansas has directed the State Public Service Commission to audit the books of the utility companies to eliminate "questionable and political" expenditures from their base rates.

The commission previously condemned the action of the Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. "in using the rate-payers' money to conduct an advertising campaign to increase the rates proposed to be charged the ratepayer by the company."

McMath said "it is not fair that the public, the consumer, should be required to finance advertising campaigns by utilities seeking to advance some political philosophy. Neither is it just that the utility ratepayer bear the costs of excessive 'business' expenditures, involving lavish travel and entertainment expenses, executives' expense accounts and disguised gratuities."

McMath told the commission to look into utility purchase and construction practices to see "whether there has been waste, favoritism, contracts awarded through political influence, unconscionable profits or other improper practices" and that "any costs found excessive should be eliminated from the base rates."

Throughout the nation the utilities have been waging a vicious propaganda campaign via newspapers, magazines, radio, television and other mediums, paid for with the consumers' money, while attacking those same consumers' interests in vital resources as "socialistic."

Tax Curb Petition Qualifies On Coast

The California CIO Council has been successful in its initiative petition aimed at outlawing subsidies from tax funds to Chambers of Commerce and other business lobbies.

With more than 300,000 valid signatures, the Council has qualified a proposition banning such subsidies from public funds. The measure will be on the Nov. 4 ballot.

"For the last time, won't you just forget that you ever had a paper route?"

Blacklists, Bloodshed, Starvation —That's Record Of Steel Barons

Management's attitude in the steel dispute is a continuance of the steel barons' traditional arrogance, says Charles W. Ervin, veteran labor editor and associate editor of Advance, CIO Clothing Workers' publication. Following is a digest of his article in Advance:

THIS WRITER, close to 87 years of age, has watched the battle between the steel barons and the workers in their various steel hells for 60 years—that is, since I was 27 years old—when the strike at Homestead, Pa., took place in 1892.

The revelations before the La Follette Committee on Industrial Espionage were so glaring that they compelled the steel barons to enter into negotiations with their workers, resulting in a plant-wide contract for the first time in the shameful history of the industry. That is, since the barons had broken the influence of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel, and Tin Workers.

The steel barons, however, continued their cruel and arrogant rule. They continued their blacklists, which made it impossible for any worker who dared to revolt against their rule, to earn just bare bread for himself or his family.

Some two or three years afterwards, as a reporter, I followed the troops, ordered out to break a strike at Braddock, Pa.

I was in a barber shop near the plant, where a man had been shot as he was in a chair being shaved. The shot was fired by the thugs hired by the steel barons. This plant was the Edgar Thomson plant of the United States Steel Corp.

A few years passed, and a desperate body of men, exploited to the very limit of human endurance, decided to strike against their cruel employers. This was the steel strike of 1919.

Twenty-two different unions of the AFL were involved. The strikers had no means, and of course the steel barons knew it, and counted on starvation to bring back their workers to be sweated again. This starvation was real and not merely a claim for sympathy.

So desperate was the condition of the women and children, that workers in other industries called a mass meeting in Madison Square Garden in New York. It was a crowded meeting that consisted mostly of the tailors of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America and members of the International Ladies' Garment Workers.

The meeting did not content itself with drafting resolutions of sympathy, but the Amalgamated voted $100,000 for the relief of the suffering workers, and the ILGWU also contributed a large amount.

However, while this did much to relieve the families of the strikers, their organization was much too weak to fight the cruel, relentless steel barons. The strike was lost, and the workers continued to be sweated of their very flesh and bone to the profit of the plutocratic owners of steel.

THAT a union of steel workers was recognized was not the result of any change in the arrogant attitude of the steel barons. It was a change in the attitude of the general public, and the knowledge on the part of the steel barons that their workers were sure to be organized.

What had happened was that the New Deal had brought about labor legislation, which provided that any employer who discharged or in any way penalized a worker for engaging in union activity or joining a union would be compelled to reinstate the discharged worker, pay him the wages that had been lost through his discharge and reinstate him on his job.

The enormous response which came from the workers in the steel mills when the steel organizing committee, headed by Philip Murray, went into action, is ample proof of this.

A few days ago I heard on a radio broadcast one of the steel barons of this day, Clarence Randall, who said that the President's action in the steel crisis was a "corrupt political deal," and that the Wage Stabilization Board had been turned into a political agency that "does not impose ceilings but removes them when Phil Murray" (President of the CIO and the United Steelworkers of America) "calls the terms."

THIS whole statement was so false that I felt I was again listening to Henry Clay Frick of the early days of the U. S. Steel Corp.

Frick was having a row with Theodore Roosevelt, who had attacked the tactics and monopoly of what he called the "swollen wealth" group. Of Theodore Roosevelt, Frick insultingly said: "He got down on his knees before us; we bought him, and then he did not stay bought."

In the late thirties, before the steel barons signed up with the union, I was several times in the territories of Tom Girdler, of Republic Steel. If ever there was a barbarian industrially, Tom was certainly it, on the record.

Only those who know what has been going on in the steel industry for over a generation, as I have, can feel as intensely as I do over the violations of decency in human relations that have taken place during the rule of these steel barons.

As for their "patriotism," my experience would prove most eloquently to me that it is "patriotism" for revenue only, and that the old Roman proverb, with the addition of the last two words, tells the real story of the steel barons of today and yesterday.

This proverb should be emblazoned in electric lights over every steel plant in the country. Here it is: Love of country leads to profits.

Plug Loopholes In Anti-Inflation Law, Carey Says

THE DEFENSE Production Act should be strengthened, its loopholes should be plugged, and inequities should be eliminated, CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey told the House Banking Committee last week.

Striking out at the current drive by big business lobbies to wreck the government's anti-inflation program, Carey warned that "the country cannot afford economic disarmament when danger to our economic stability lurks in the background."

He pointed out that peak levels of defense production are still ahead and said that the recent relative price lull should not delude Congress into thinking that all dangers of inflation are passed.

"It makes no sense to eliminate the fire department after the first blaze has been put out," Carey declared. "We should prepare a stockpile of adequate legislative authority for anti-inflation controls, just as we stockpile commodities to be prepared for an emergency."

RECALLING that seven months elapsed after the start of the Korean war before price controls were finally established, he said the ciuntry is still suffering the effects of post-Korea price rises.

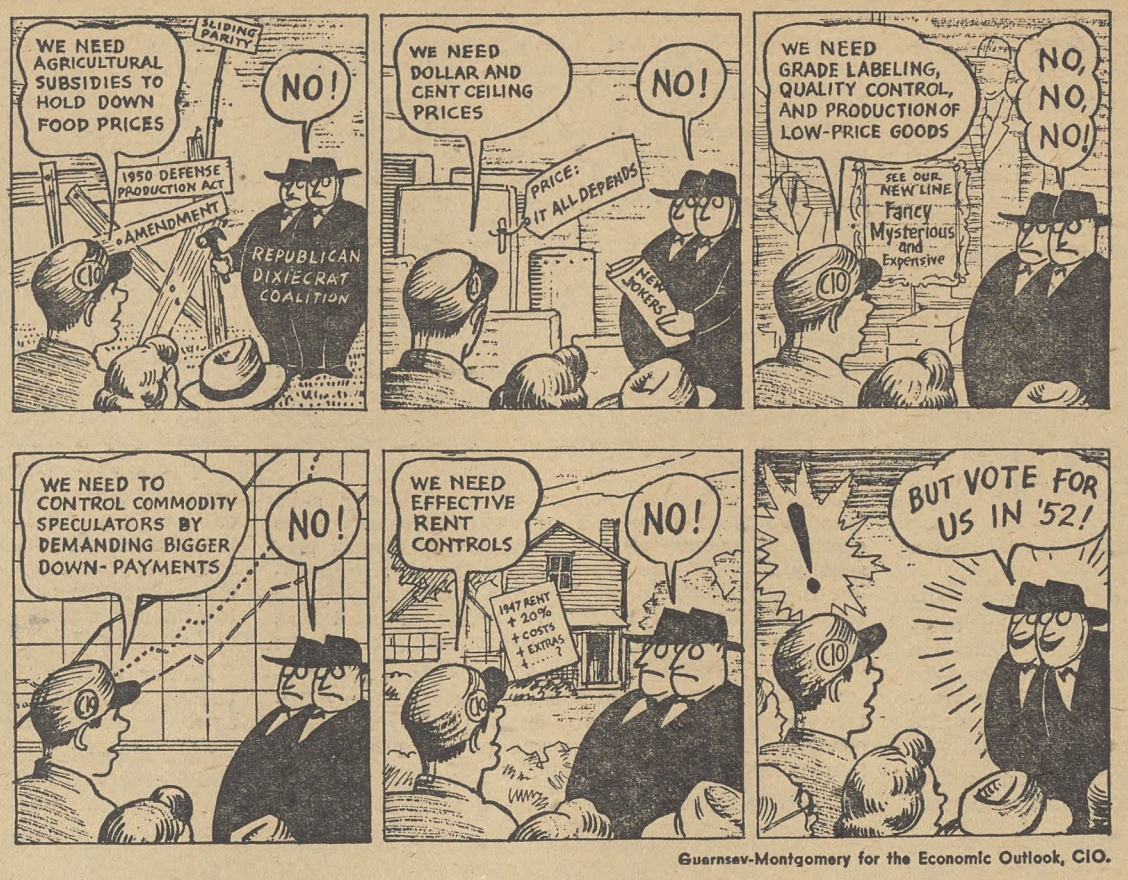
He described the present national economy as being in "uneasy balance." Its high price structure, he said, has reduced the buying power of a large number of families and an aggravation or continuation of this situation cause "a general economic downturn."

Carey criticized the National Association of Manufacturers and the Chamber of Commerce as showing "a complete lack of concern for the needs of consumers." Both have advocated an end of price controls.

He cited Bureau of Labor Statistics figures revealing that the buying power of manufacturing workers' weekly earnings, after taxes, has declined. Carey said this spells danger for our economic health in the long run.

Carey's testimony marked the resumption of hearings by the committee on legislation to extend the economic controls law after its present expiration date, June 30.

It followed by one day the decision of the Emergency Court of Appeals extending the inflationary provisions of the Capehart Amendment to many food items. The Office of Price Stabilization, pointing out that "a big increase in the price of food" will result, has asked the Justice Dept. to appeal to the Supreme Court.



Guernsey-Montgomery for the Economic Outlook, CIO.

Good Advice

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey gave the House Banking Committee this recommendation when asked how to keep the steel mills rolling:

"It's time to stop the lawyers' piddling so the steel workers can do some puddling."

The court upheld the contention of Safeway Stores, Inc., a large food chain, that it was entitled to higher ceilings under the amendment which Sen. Capehart (R. Ind.) wrote into the controls law last year. Heretofore, the effects of the amendment have been limited to price increases given manufacturers and processors.

Under the new ruling, OPS in the future must also lift present price ceilings to cover cost increases of retailers and wholesalers. This means a new pyramiding of costs right down the line to the consumer's pocketbook.

President Truman asked Congress last year to repeal the "terrible" Capehart Amendment The court took note of this and put the blame for additional food price increases under the provision squarely on Congress for its failure to act.

In an exchange with Rep. Cole (R. Kan.), a supporter of the Capehart Amendment, Carey criticized the provision's underlying philosophy. He said it reflected an unsound fear and denied the real strength of the American economy.

"This country has grown great on the basic assumption that wage increases and better quality in a product do not necessaryily require price increases," Carey pointed out. "As Henry Ford made clear, it is possible to give a better product at lower prices and yet pay higher wages and make a higher profit.

"In contrast, Capehart says that every increase in cost must be reflected in higher prices. That simply isn't sound economics."

Turning to the steel dispute, Carey said that the steel companies reflected this same backward approach in demanding exorbitant price increases.

"The steel industry has been getting a very fair share of this country's profits," he declared. "It shouldn't use its workers' just claim to a wage increase to excuse its attempt to gouge the public."

Rep. Multer (D. N.Y.) agreed.

"NO OTHER industry under the price and control laws has gone to get a price increase in advance of granting a wage increase," Multer said. "If that isn't a strike by the industry of the most dastardly kind, I don't recognize a strike when I see it."

Multer suggested that pressure be brought to bear on the Internal Revenue Bureau to deny the steel industry tax deductions for the propaganda advertising it is placing in connection with the steel dispute. The cost of such ads, under present tax practice, is passed on to the public as deductible "business" expense.

Carey favored this suggestion and asked:

"Why should I and every other citizen have to pay for advertisements questioning the government of the United States? In one of these ads, the Steel industry charged that the public members of the WSB were on the payroll of the CIO.

"As financial officer of the CIO I can say unqualifiedly that that's a damnable lie — and I don't think the steel companies should be able to use the taxpayers' money to do what amounts to a Communist job in destroying the American people's confidence in their government."

Besides repeating earlier CIO demands for repeal of the Capehart, Herlong and Butler-Hope Amendments which Congress wrote into the law a year ago, Carey called for repeal of the authority of the Federal Reserve Board to control credit. He attacked particularly Regulation X and W.

"If any credit controls are continued, he said, "they should be administered outside of the Federal Reserve Board by an agency responsive to the needs of the people. The board's regulations have discriminated against small wage earners."

Credit Curbs Relaxed By U.S. Board

THE FEDERAL Reserve Board last week went half way toward giving the American public the same kind of credit treatment it it has given to business.

Under mounting pressure from Congress, the CIO, and consumers, it suspended Regulation W which has kept strict credit requirements on autos and most household purchases.

Henceforth the government will not require a minimum down-payment or insist upon payment within a specified time on these items. Dealers once again can set their own terms.

The board, however, left unchanged and in full effect the equally controversial Regulation X which requires high down payments and limits amortization periods on home purchases. The CIO has demanded its repeal also, on grounds that it discriminates against low income purchasers.

Earlier, the board had also suspended all controls over bank loans to business. These had always been only a mere "voluntary agreement" among the bankers, anyhow, in contrast to the compulsory nature of Regulations X and W.

How Typical N.Y. Family Tries To Make Ends Meet

BUDGET! Budget! Who has got a budget and can live within it in these days of sky-high prices?

What is happening to the work-a-day wage-earner whose income has gone up only slightly or not at all while prices of goods and services—not to mention taxes—have in many instances doubled?

The New York Daily News recently assigned a reporter to canvass the city and find an average family—two adults and two children under age 15—in the $60 to $80 weekly wage group who would submit to examination of their budget and financial status.

The head of the family selected for the study is a member of Local 1-S of the CIO Department Store Workers, which demonstrates that union members are having a tough time making ends meet—whether they live in New York City or Sioux City, Iowa.

Martin Albert, the head of the Budget Family — and its only wage earner—is 36 years old. He earns an average of $73.18 per week as a salesman in a large Manhattan department store. That is his gross pay. His take-home, of course, is considerably less than that. To quote the steel companies, there is "no such thing" as wages before taxes!

His wife, Gertrude, 35, is a former laboratory technician who devotes her entire time to her family and never takes outside employment.

Since the News wished to compare an actual family's costs with the statistical "family" in New York City, as ascertained by the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, a budget family with a clear-cut economy was necessary at the outset.

The reporter found that Albert earned a total of $3805.18 last year and had expenditures of $3582.91, leaving "savings" of $222.27. Rent for the family's modest four-room apartment took a $505 a year bite out of the budget. Utilities and household operations brought the housing total expenditures to $609.48.

Food constituted the major item in the Albert's outlay. Total cost came to $1418.56, or 36% of the family income.

The Alberts say that the real life-saver in their strained economy is the health plan jointly administered by Local 1-S and the employer. With little money to spare for medical expenses, they would face certain disaster were a serious illness to occur or an operation become necessary.

The plan includes the Blue Cross Hospitalization plan for the whole family, entirely financed by the employer. Included in the union's contract, it proved to be a lifesaver when one of the children was in the Presbyterian Medical Center two years ago with a stomach ailment. Her nine-day illness cost her parents exactly nothing.

The union setup also includes the Group Health Insurance, Inc., plan, covering the entire family for medical and surgical benefits. The employer also pays the premiums on this protection.

T-H Foe Wins In Maryland

MRS. STELLA WERNER, who ran on a platform that included repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act, last week decisively won the Democratic nomination for congressman from Maryland's Sixth District.

She received 14,412 votes, more than the combined total of her two opponents. The Sixth District consists of Frederick, Garrett, Montgomery, Washington and Allegany Counties, the latter two being the ones with much industry.

In Montgomery County, which adjoins Washington and is the home of many federal employes, Mrs. Werner led her closest opponent by a three-to-one margin.

Zoll Leads Lobby For McCarran Immigration Bill

By MILTON PLUMB

THE PRIME force supporting the current drive to railroad the McCarran-Walter "Iron Curtain" Immigration Bill through Congress is coming from a lobby manipulated by super-"patriots," right-wing extremists and known fascist and former Nazi sympathizers.

The lobby has worked so effectively and quietly that nearly all congressmen are unaware of its real nature.

The "lunatic fringe" element pulling the strings has kept carefully hidden behind a small number of respectable, if misguided, individuals and organizations associated with it.

In fact, it was Sen. McCarran (D. Nev.), chief author of the measure, who first tipped his hand to show the real nature of his backing.

Welcoming such groups' support, McCarran went so far as to publish in the Congressional Record an endorsement of his bill signed by representatives of the 23 "patriotic organizations" comprising the lobby.

The "patriotic" designation was McCarran's. Persons familiar with the individuals and organizations thus revealed had good reason to question that description.

McCarran's disclosure was the first documented support for rumors on Capitol Hill that the chief lobbyist for the McCarran-Walter Bill is Allen Zoll, a super-"patriotic" rabblerouser whose former American Patriots, Inc., was designated Fascists by the Attorney General.

At the end of the list of McCarran's supporters appears "A. A. Zoll, Society of the War of 1812." No information about this organization is immediately available, although experts on the native fascist and "hate" groups speculate that it may have been set up by Zoll to replace his discredited American Patriots.

On May 2, however, the Baltimore Jewish Times specificially identified "A. A. Zoll" as Allen Zoll. One of the McCarran bill supporters has since confirmed it.

Zoll's present National Council for American Education has been described by responsible educational groups as one of the "most dangerous" of the educational reactionaries. The National Americanism Commission of the American Legion also has cited Zoll's organization as a primary example of anti-Communist "fakers and frauds."

A STUDY by the CIO News discloses that six other members of the coalition lobby supporting McCarran are connected with the extremist right.

These include Dr. Maude S. DeLand and Mrs. Margaret Hopkins Worrell, both of whom signed on behalf of the "Wheel of Progress" organization. Mrs. Worrell also signed for the Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic.

Both were associated once before as members of the American Justice for Tyler Kent Committee. Kent was a rallying point for most American isolationists and Nazi-sympathizers during World War II.

He was arrested by Scotland Yard and convicted and sent to jail for five years for turning vital State Dept. secrets over to the Nazis while serving as decoding clerk at the U. S. Embassy in London. Some 1500 secret communications between Roosevelt and Churchill reached Berlin in this way.

Three other signers, all from the American Coalition, are Gardner Osborn, Mrs. Flora A. Walker and M. H. Thatcher. The organization they represent has been described by an undercover agent as "a Washington super has not been possible to immefactor in the Federal indictments for sedition."

One other backer is Arthur Jack Janelli, of the Regular Veterans Association. This group was recently cited in a survey of veterans organizations as showing "a nativist attitude" of questionable super-patriotism.

Due to the constant renaming that has been going on among the crack-pot fringe which cloaks its real motives behind phony appeals to patriotism, it has not been posible to immediately identify all of the other organizations named as McCarran's backers.

The bulk of them, however, at least have names characteristic of the "front" groups set up by Zoll and others of his ilk to conceal their underlying assault on democratic fundamentals. Only a few clearly do not belong in this category.

Shortly before the Senate began debating McCarran's bill last Friday, the lobby mailed, through the Washington post office, an eight-page communication referring to the endorsement of these 23 organizations. The mailing, unsigned and with no indication of its origin, followed the typical native-fascist pattern of assailing all opponents of the bill as "a small radical minority" under Communist domination.

THE GROUPS thus maligned by the extremist front include representatives of all major religions, the American Bar Association, Americans for Democratic Action and the CIO, all strong opponents of totalitarianism in any form.

These groups have assailed the "totalitarian" concepts of many provisions buried in the 300-page omnibus bill before the Senate and ask that it be returned to the committee for adequate hearings and study.

Unless there is an immediate public protest, however, opponents of the bill, which has already cleared the House, fear that it will pass the Senate.

McCarran last week was said to be log-rolling and vote-trading frantically in an effort to get passage before the Senate realizes just what it's been asked to approve.

'People Are Tired Of Hot Air,' Says CIO Member Of Congress

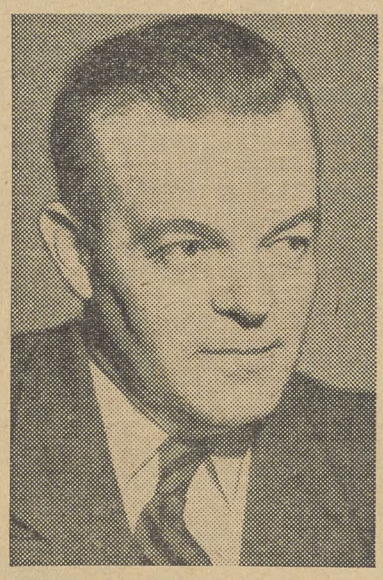
LEO W. O'BRIEN, the only CIO member in the 82nd Congress since his election last month, has already been greatly "surprised" at the state of affairs he's found in Washington.

He promises that he will try to do something about it.

"I don't want to get in the position of being a freshman trying to tell his elders off," O'Brien said, "but a new member often can bring a new and useful viewpoint. I know that I speak for the people back home when I say that they're getting fed up with the investigations and hot air that are today part of Washington. They want action."

O'BRIEN, who was a charter member of the Albany (now Tri-City) Newspaper Guild, is especially well qualified to speak on this subject. He covered the New York State Legislature for a number of newspapers and the International News Service for more than a quarter of a century.

"In all that time," he recalls, "nearly all investigations authorized were on problems and issues that would assist the Legislature in passing laws. There is a great contrast in Washington, where Congress has gone investigation mad. If this keeps on, maybe we'd better just call this capital a super police court."



REP. O'BRIEN
"They're getting fed up."

O'Brien's comments were made after the House had voted the current investigation of the steel dispute recommendations of the Wage Stabilization Board. He opposed that action, saying:

"If we're going to have an investigation of an opinion every time an opinion is expressed, there won't be enough members of Congress around to conduct all the investigations."

What surprised O'Brien most about Congress was his discovery that the two-party system has "vanished." This is a real threat to democracy, he believes.

"Party control brings certain responsibilities," he explained. "In the present situation, the Democrats haven't control, and because of the GOP-Dixiecrat collaboration the people have been deprived of their effective political weapon of retaliation. That is dangerous."

WHILE in Congress, O'Brien will retain his membership in the CIO Newspaper Guild, since he is continuing to write for the Syracuse Herald-Journal. He is happy that this membership, which began in 1937, won't be interrupted.

"When my father died he had a union card, and when I took office I had one," he declared. "I will certainly do everything I can to see that labor isn't kicked around."

In the special election, he piled up a record plurality, getting 82% of the Albany vote and 70% of his district's.

Born in Buffalo in 1900, O'Brien was graduated from Niagara Univ. in 1922 and immediately began his newspaper career.

Last year he won the Sigma Delta Chi award for his radio commentary, as well as the Ohio State Univ. radio award for the second year in a row.—MP.

House Committee Joins In Foreign Aid Slash

THE HOUSE Foreign Affairs Committee last week joined its corresponding committee in the Senate in playing tit-tat-toe with American security by voting a $1 billion slice off the authorization for the government's foreign aid program.

Unlike the Senate group, which made its cut straight across the board in reducing aid for Europe, Asia and the Pacific, the Near East and Latin America by the same percentage, the House committee took its entire bite out of funds for Europe. It also voted only $12 million instead of the $20 million approved by the Senate group for the Intl. Children's Fund.

The House group also voted a requirement that Franco Spain should receive not less than $25 million in military, economic and technical assistance.

Meanwhile, Senate Republicans led by Sen. Knowland (R. Calif.) succeeded in tossing the foreign aid bill into the hands of the Armed Services Committee for further hearings. Dixiegop isolationists thus get another chance to make further cuts in committee before the bill reaches the floor.

It was virtually a straight GOP vote, with Sens. Wiley (Wis.) and Tobey (N.H.) the only Republicans opposed

In contrast to the action taken by his party, Gen. Dwight Eisenhower, a GOP presidential candidate, warned in a telegram that the proposed $1 billion cut will be "seriously felt" in the defense of Europe. He added that the arms build-up "will become more expensive if it is unnecessarily postponed, dragged out and delayed."

Murray Backs Labor Measures In Philippines

A CABLEGRAM urging U.S. support of a fight for pending labor legislation in the Philippines Congress was sent by CIO Pres. Philip Murray last week to Roland Renne, chief of the National Security Mission to that country.

"CIO is deeply concerned by the report anti-union forces are blocking pending labor legislation," Murray cabled. "Considering Bell Report, Benton Amendment, and Foster-Quirino Agreement, we urge you support proposed legislation."

The pending bill includes guarantees of freedom of association and of collective bargaining, defines the responsibilities of union leaders to their members, sets up machinery for union and bargaining representation elections, and establishes a National Labor Relations Commission and a National Conciliation Service.

Decontrol Gimmick

Woods Hits Move To Kill Rent Lids

A WARNING that 53 million Americans face runaway rent boosts if a proposal now pending in Congress is adopted was sounded last week by Rent Stabilizer Tighe E. Woods.

Woods warned the House Banking Commitee that a proposal to limit rent ceilings to designated critical defense areas would wipe out rent lids now in effect in more than 50 large cities.

Result of its adoption, he predicted, would be rent increases of from 50 to 100%—with the greatest increase falling on tenants in lower-bracket rental housing.

Woods urged the committee to recommend a two-year extension of rent control provisions of the Defense Production Act.

He described the critical area rider as "a knockout blow to the general over-all stabilization effort.

"This proposal would affect a third of our population, as 53,800,000 live in cities which would be decontrolled.

"A majority of our major industrial cities, such as Chicago, Philadelphia, Detroit, Cleveland, Boston, St. Louis, Pittsburgh and San Francisco, would suddenly find themselves without rent control."

Woods told the committee that killing of rent ceilings in 10 cities has resulted in rent jumps averaging 23.1% since mid-1949, with "the impact of decontrol on the lower rental brackets" most marked. Rentals below $30 a month jumped from 29 to 62%.

CONSEQUENTLY, the control chief said, "it would not be beyond reason to expect 50 to 100% in the $30 to $50 per month rental brackets in now-controlled cities if ceiling were eliminated."

The proposal to limit rent controls to "critical defense areas"—localities with large population growths due to mobilization—amounts to wiping out the overwhelming proportion of existing rent protection for tenants.

As Woods testified, "the 'non-critical' areas contain about six million rental units as compared to about one million in the 'critical areas'."

The rent stabilizer also said his agency has "stopped the desperate bidding up of rents for scarce accommodations" and has "reduced what we call the 'sore thumb' rents — the especially high rents which have been exacted by the gougers and the greedy."

CIO Action Blocks Coast Housing Move

ACTION by the CIO has blocked a move by the aircraft industry in San Diego, Calif., to get the Labor-Management Manpower Committee there to declare the area so "critical" as to permit the use of military personnel for the production of airplanes.

The fight was aided by the CIO Housing Committee.

San Diego plane manufacturers are behind production schedules because of their inability to attract workers to the area due to inadequate housing facilities.

The committee withheld action to allow servicemen to work partime in private industry.

CIO pointed out that although 9500 defense housing units have been scheduled for construction in San Diego, only 77 have been started and but six have been completed.

The committee agreed in effect that the labor problem is due chiefly to the failure of the Defense Housing Act to provide adequate housing facilities rather than to real manpower shortages.

THE NATIONAL Association of Real Estate Boards' drive to wreck public housing in Los Angeles was given a setback when the California Supreme Court ruled that the City Council could not cancel its $110 million contract with the Public Housing Administration for a 10,000-unit slum clearance program.

A long court battle appears to be in prospect, however, for the realtor-dominated City Council has instructed the City Attorney to seek a rehearing and, if necessary, to appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court.

Meanwhile, it will probably take every step possible to delay resumption of work on the project, halted when the Council withdrew its earlier approval under pressure from the real estate lobby.

Grant Supported For Small Business

The California CIO Council executive committee has urged the Senate Appropriations Committee to vote a $825,000 deficiency appropriation and a $10 million enabling fund for the Small Defense Plants Administration.

Such action, the council said, would help reverse the trend of government defense contract polices which are harmful to small business firms.

Steel Local Urges Grants For Families

THE CIO Steelworkers' convention this week will be asked to approve an allowance plan for raising the standard of living of families with children.

The plan, which will be presented to the convention by USW-CIO Local 2604, Lackawanna, N. Y., calls for the payment of the allowances for each child under 18 years of age by industry, or government, or by industry and government together. The convention will be held at Philadelphia beginning May 13.

The plan is similar to programs in operation in other major countries, the local said in a resolution. The proposed payments would be made for each child as follows: $5 a month under 4 years of age; $8 a month under 8; $12 a month under 12 and $16 a month under 18.

2 CIOers Named

The CIO now has two members serving on the Federal Apprenticeship Committee, the national labor-management policy-recommending body to the U.S. Labor Dept. Bureau of Apprenticeship.

They are R. J. Thomas, assistant director of organization, and John Green, chairman of the CIO Railroad Workers.

Supreme Court Upholds Libel Ruling Against Unfair List

THE U. S. Supreme Court sounded a warning note on publication of "unfair" lists last week when it upheld $6000 in libel judgment against a union group and a newspaper in Paducah, Ky.

Gerald Wise, operator of a Paducah restaurant, had won a $5000 verdict from the AFL Paducah Central Labor Union and $1000 from the Paducah Sun-Democrat. The high court refused to review the judgments.

Before opening his restaurant in June 1949, according to the record in the case, Wise had a non-union employe paint a section of the building's front.

A month-and-a-half later, the Central Labor Union had published in the Sun-Democrat an advertisement it signed, directed to "Members of Labor," stating that Wise's establishment is "unfair to you."

Wise filed suit for $20,000 damages. He claimed the phrase "unfair to you" sounded as if he were "a cheat, a trickster and dishonest," and maintained that nothing in the advertisement indicated he had "trampled on the feelings of the Painters Union."

The verdict, given by a county court jury, was upheld in the Kentucky Court of Appeals. Both the CLU and the Sun-Democrat then appealed to the U. S. Supreme Court. They argued that the awards violated their constitutional guarantees of free speech and free press.

The Kentucky appeals court, in sustaining judgement, specifically stated that it was not deciding if publication of the ad was "libelous as a matter of law."

"What we do declare," the ruling stated, "is that labor unions, as others, may be civilly liable when they falsely charge an employer with being 'unfair,' where there exists no controversy or other circumstances which would reasonably justify the intentional damage of the employer's business."

Kohler Union Votes To Join UAW-CIO

EMPLOYES at the Kohler plant at Sheboygan, Wis., have voted to affiliate their independent union—which represented them 17 years—with the CIO Auto Workers.

The plant was the scene of a bitter strike in 1934 in which an AFL union was broken. Since then the Kohler Workers Association has represented the plant.

Association members voted in a secret referendum 2848 to 1125 to affiliate with the UAW. Their vote was hailed by UAW-CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

The independent union gradually became a bona fide union. Meanwhie, the company has been engaged in harrassing tactics that reached a climax when 12 enamelers recently were fired for refusing to work in the enamel shop when a fan was shut off.

Management refused to take steps to improve the condition. When the men refused to work, they were fired. At a subsequent meeting it was decided that KWA should affiliate with an international union.

A motion was made to affiliate with the UAW then and there—but it was decided to conduct the secret referendum.

Meanwhile, the UAW plans to conduct an organizing drive among the office workers, who voted 52 to 121 against affiliation.

"ALL AGENTS UNITED IN CIO" says banner at New York contract ratification meeting of CIO Insurance Workers. More than 600 agents voted 98% approval of the new agreement with the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. From Left: Richard T. Leonard, Irving Abramson, Simon Helfgott and Jack Goldman, IAWOC officials.

HOW TO LIVE with the Russians and not let them step all over you was explained by Mayor Franz Jonas (front left) of Vienna, Austria, to Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president, on a visit to CIO headquarters last week. Amalgamated Gains Reported To Parley

PRES. Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers reported to ACWA's 18th biennial convention that the union had made phenomenal organizing gains since the last convention.

He told the delegates to the convention, which will open May 12 in Atlantic City, that ACWA has made greater organization gains during the past two years than in any comparable period in the past 20 years.

The union now has 395,000 members, with 20,000 new members joining in the last two years. Five of the largest firms in the clothing industry, which long resisted ACWA, have been brought into the union fold, bringing unionization to 98% of the men's clothing industry.

Since 1950, 7400 workers have joined the union in the cotton garment industry in New England, the South and the Middle West.

A 12.5c an hour increase was won for 150,000 clothing workers and a 10c an hour hike was obtained for 10,000 cotton garment workers.

The report also acclaimed the success of the $1 million Amalgamated union label campaign.

The ACWA executive board reported that many Amalgamated members experienced intermittent unemployment and all have felt "the effects of inflation during this period of defense mobilization."

REPRESSIVE labor laws, the board noted, still restrict the ACWA's effort to organize the unorganized.

While the union's officers have fought for genuine price control to maintain the American people's purchasing power, the report noted, the impairment of that buying power "has been a major factor in the substantial unemployment among the men's apparel and other consumer goods workers in the recent period."

The board said that it sought to meet the increased living costs by wage increases and by extension and liberalization of the union's social insurance program.

The poor condition of the clothing industry was attributed partly to overstocking by retailers immediately after the Korean outbreak.

The board also was critical of Pentagon procurement policies. "In many instances, awards for garments for the armed forces have been made without due regard for the established and experienced producers of these garments," it said.

This policy, the report stated, has resulted in the shutdown of a number of shirt plants in Central Pennsylvania.

Shelley, Havenner Get Re-election Backing Of CIO

TWO VETERAN liberal California congressmen have been endorsed for re-election by the San Francisco CIO Council.

They are Reps. Havenner and Shelley, both San Francisco Democrats.

Because their districts were gerrymandered in the 1951 redistricting by the State Legislature, both lawmakers face tough campaigns.

Havenner will be opposed by Supervisor Marvin Lewis, a Republican, who last year led a city Fair Employment Practices campaign. Shelley is a past city and state AFL president.

CIO Council Sec. Frank E. White also reported endorsement of Rep. McKinnon's campaign for the Democratic nomination for Senator and of four incumbent state assemblymen.

Sen. Bridges Leads Fight To Knife Walsh-Healey Act Enforcement

SEN. BRIDGES (R. N.H.), Senate minority leader, has stabbed in the back the voters who sent him to Congress by helping to drive industry, particularly textile manufacturers, from his own and other New England states to low-wage areas.

Bridges is leading the fight to deny funds for enforcement of the Walsh-Healey Act, which provides for the establishment of minimum wage, safety, health and child labor provisions in government contracts in excess of $10,000.

Bridges apparently ignored completely the fact that all six New England governors have backed CIO's demand that the Secretary of Labor establish a higher prevailing wage for textiles under the act.

Bridges' knifing job was done just as Sec. Maurice Tobin was planning to use the act to halt the flow of millions of dollars of government textile contracts to areas paying lower wages than New England.

Tobin announced his intention of increasing prevailing minimum wages for the cotton textile and the woolen and worsted industries. A hearing on the latter was set for May 15.

Without adequate policing by the Labor Dept's. Wage and Hour and Public Contracts Divisions, however, the secretary's action will be meaningless. Chairman Murray (D. Mont.) of the Senate Labor Committee has pointed out that in the first six months of this fiscal year "almost 60% of the plants investigated were found to be in some way in violation."

As the defense program reaches high gear, the dollar volume of government contracts is skyrocketing. The number of announced public contracts jumped from 2800 per month in June 1950 to 6600 per month by January 1952.

Dollar value reported ballooned from $2.8 billion in fiscal 1950 to $10.5 billion in fiscal 1951, and a total of $8.4 billion has been awarded in the first nine months of the current year.

ACTUALLY, the total is about three times these amounts reported by the Labor Dept., which does not count thousands of Munitions Board contracts of a classified nature for secret weapons.

The annual total of more than $30 billion of secret and non-secret contracts, however, is all subject to the Walsh-Healey Act. The Labor Dept. has sole responsibility for its enforcement.

To handle this increased inspection assignment, the department asked Congress for 150 additional employes. Through internal economies, however, its total request for all public contract operations was actually $100,000 less than had been appropriated for the current year when the workload was much less.

The House "economy" block slashed even the reduced request by $1 million.

In the Senate debate on restoring this amount, Bridges bitterly opposed the proposed action and suggested an even further cut in the enforcement staff. He declared he didn't want Labor Dept. "snoopers" going around the country "and perhaps even getting into filling stations."

Sen. Johnson (D. Tex.), who has introduced a bill to kill Walsh-Healey provisions altogether, interrupted to inform Bridges that "they are already in the filling stations."

Bridges, who sits on the board of directors of many corporations engaged in interstate commerce, presumably must know that this was a complete misrepresentation of the law's provisions.

The truth is that unless a business has a contract with the government amounting to more than $10,000, it isn't subject to the act.

Bridges' opposition was effective in defeating the effort to restore the cut. The bill is now in conference.

There's Plenty Of Gumption Behind The Iron Curtain

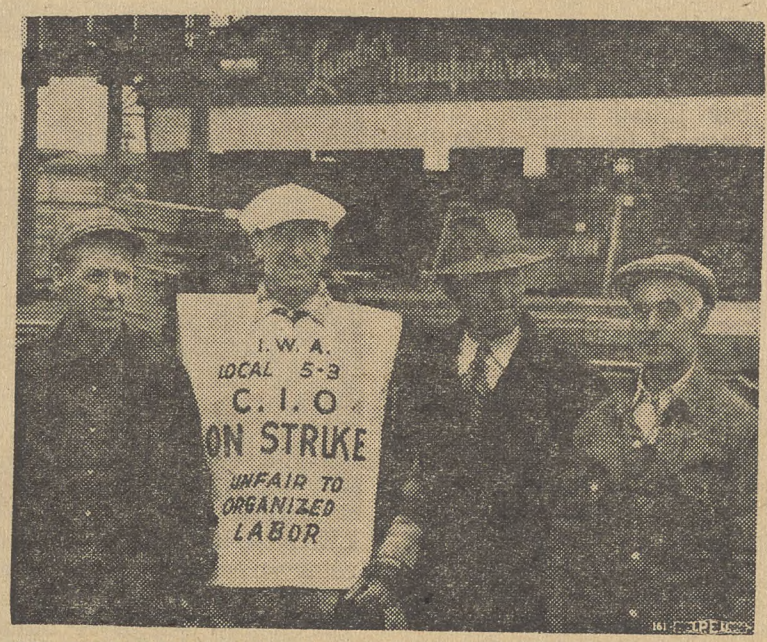
Police carted the proprietor of a Bratislava book shop off to jail, according to word received in Vienna, because she displayed the names of four Russian books on a poster in her window. The poster read:

"We Want To Live."

"Far From Moscow."

"In the Shadows of the Skyscrapers."

"Under a Foreign Flag."



ON THE LINE—Members of the CIO Woodworkers like these in Portland, Ore., have halted operations at more than 700 logging and sawmill operations in five northwestern states. Forty thousand IWA members went on strike after employers refused to grant their demands for wage and contract improvements.

Price Boosting 'Fair Trade' Bill Approved

THE HOUSE, once again giving in to what Rep. Celler (D. N.Y.) described as "swarms of lobbyists," last week okehed a measure permitting manufacturers and retailers to rob American consumers by as much as $2 billion more a year.

By a standing vote of 196 to 10, it passed and sent to the Senate a bill by Rep. McGuire (D. Conn.) restoring the miscalled "fair trade" price fixing laws that have been enacted in all states but Texas, Vermont and Missouri.

Last year, the Supreme Court rendered such laws virtually ineffective by ruling that they did not apply to merchants who refused to sign price fixing agreements.

Under the McGuire bill, a price agreement made between one manufacturer and one retailer would become binding on all retailers even if they refuse to sign similar contracts. It would thus be illegal to sell a product below the fixed amount.

CELLER warned the bill would strike a blow at competition and be against the best interests of consumers.

"This bill does not have the support of any consumer groups," he said. "The CIO, the AFL, the American Farm Bureau and the National Grange, the General Federation of Women's Clubs, are all opposed to the bill."

The lobby favoring the bill was made up chiefly of large manufacturers and chain stores. Many small independent merchants were opposed.

Financial reports filed under the Lobbying Act show that in the third quarter of 1951 alone, the Bureau of Education on Fair Trade got $14,075 from McKesson & Robbins, Inc., the nation's largest drug wholesaler, and $10,000 from the National Association of Chain Drug Stores.

Celler showed the reason for this support by bringing a bag filled with drug store items to the House floor. He explained that he had bought the same 10 name-brand products in Maryland and Virginia, where there are state "fair trade laws," at prices averaging 17% to 25% more than in the District of Columbia where the laws do not apply.

5000 CWA Strikers Get 9 To 18c Hike

ONE STRIKE of the CIO Communications Workers against an AT&T subsidiary was settled last week, two other walkouts continued and a new one began.

About 5000 CWA members won increases from 9 to 18c an hour after an eight-day strike at Western Electric plants at Winston-Salem, Greensboro and Burlington, N. C. Of the 12c average wage hike 7.2c is subject to Wage Stabilization Board approval.

The agreement also provides improved arbitration, better grievance procedures, full seniority in layoffs and greater weight to seniority in promotions in the electronic plants.

MORE THAN 5000 CWA members are on strike. The walkout of telephone employes at Morgantown, W. Va., that began several weeks ago over a backlog of unsettled grievances had spread through almost the entire state in protest against the company's petty tyranny.

At Western Electric's Buffalo plant, the strike of more than 1200 CWA members for better wages and other contract improvements was in its sixth week last week.

Demands for better wages and other pact improvements also were the issues in a strike of more than 700 CWA members at WE's Lincoln, Neb., plant, which began May 6.

NEGOTIATIONS are underway for 15,000 CWA members with other AT&T subsidiaries, including Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. in Washington, and Southwestern, Southern, Indiana, Illinois and Wisconsin Bell Telephone Cos.

CWA last week served notice that it wishes to begin negotiations with AT&T Long Lines for a new agreement to replace the contract which will expire July 5.

JOINT LABOR BACKING for strike of CIO Electrical Workers against Sylvania plant in Shawnee, Okla., was demonstrated at recent CIO-AFL rally in which carpenters, millers, oil workers, phone workers, railroad brotherhoods and Farmers Union representatives pledged backing to fight for standard national contract terms.

Puerto Rican Newcomers In N. Y. Get Warning On Wage Chiselers

PUERTO RICAN newcomers to New York henceforth will find the path made smoother by a new guide, "New York and You," printed in Spanish and addressed particularly to them.

It has just been published as a joint project of the New York office of the Migration Div. of the Puerto Rican Dept. of Labor and the New York Spanish-language newspaper La Prensa. Federal, State and city agencies cooperated.

It will be distributed aboard tourist class airliners leaving San Juan Airport for New York, enabling the migrants to read it leisurely en route, and through the Migration Div. office to islanders already in the city.

The guide contains a foreword from Mayor Vincent Impelliteri welcoming fellow citizens to the city and urging them to make use of the guide. In an introduction, Joseph Monserrat, director of the New York office of the Migration Div., points out some of the problems the newcomers face because of lack of information, and urges full acquaintance with the contents.

The first section of the guide deals with becoming orientated and urges the obtaining of information on housing and job opportunities in all parts of continental United States. It quickly moves into another section concerning New York and Puerto Ricans, including a history of the New York colony and the neighborhoods in which they live. It also warns against sharpers and chiselers.

Labor unions are discussed briefly and their role explained. The Puerto Ricans are urged to take an active part in the affairs of the local they join.

Other sections deal with workmen's compensation, job discrimination, housing, community centers and settlement houses, health and medical attention, what to do in case of an emergency, educational opportunities, the public library system, voting, and churches with service in Spanish.

THE GUIDE was warmly welcomed by Frank J. Muench, regional director of the Wage-Hour & Public Contracts Div., which has had much difficulty with employers defrauding Puerto Ricans of minimum wages or overtime. The division and the U. S. Dept. of Labor first suggested publication of the booklet as a joint enterprise.

"The Puerto Rican attracted to New York by its better wages and promises of a fuller life," he said, "will find assurance of democratic government's interest in his welfare in this friendly booklet . . .

"We are more considerate of our newcomers today—both in offering them a helpful guide and in the growing number of economic rights and benefits guaranteed under the democratic way of life."
